

BERKELEY, CALIFORNIA

This paper is an immediate continuation of the Liberal Christian, and was merged with the Christian Register after last no., bound here. of Chr. Reg. 6th Oct, 1877, p. 2

766
CH9

8 Xn Reg
6077 p.2

THE INQUIRER.

VOL. XXXII.—NO. 1.
WHOLE NO., 1571.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 7, 1876.

$3.20 PER ANNUM.
8 CENTS A COPY.

CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL NOTES.....	1
LEADING ARTICLES:
The Province of Religion.....	2
Matter and Spirit.....	3
Magnanimity Organized.....	4
The President's Message.....	5
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE:
Boston Chit-Chat.....	6
From Chicago.....	7
LITERARY REVIEWS:
Hours of Thought on Sacred Things.....	7
Wanderholme.....	9
Tales from Two Hemispheres.....	9
Three Children's Books.....	9
A Voyage to the Fortunate Isles.....	10
MINOR NOTICES.....	10
NEW PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.....	11
ART AND SCIENCE:
Madame Essipoff.....	11
The American Geographical Society.....	11
OUR BOYS AND GIRLS:
The Shark.....	13
Bertie's Christmas Eve.....	13
SELECTIONS.....	14
JOTTINGS.....	15
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT.....	16

GEORGE BATCHELOR, Henry W. Bellows, John W. Chadwick, Isabel Francis, William C. Gannett, William Potts, E. P. Powell and Minot J. Savage are among the contributors to this number of THE INQUIRER.

THE terrible disaster which occurred on Tuesday night, in the burning of the Brooklyn Theatre, with one or two hundred victims, adds one more to a long line of similar occurrences. This particular case is too recent for judgment to be safely passed upon it; but the question is always a pertinent one, "Must such things be?"

A SIGNIFICANT movement is on foot in our neighboring City of Brooklyn. It is an effort by public-spirited citizens to systematize the distribution of public charity under the supervision of carefully chosen visitors, who shall examine into the circumstances of each applicant, and so prevent, if possible, the gratuitous support of the unworthy and vicious, and promote a judicious co-operation of public with private charitable agencies. One of the most gratifying features of this movement is the fact that Protestant and Catholic, heretic and orthodox, are united in it, and work together in the most perfect harmony.

THE breaking up of such a gallery of pictures as that which Mr. John Taylor Johnston has so carefully gathered must be esteemed a public misfortune. Mr. Johnston has been generous in allowing access to art lovers, and it is to be feared that the auctioneer's hammer may scatter to the four winds a collection of modern pictures which we can ill afford to spare.

Good pictures by the old masters we can hardly hope to procure—they are not to be had by digging in the ground for them, like the relics which General Cesnola has found in Kurium. But good modern pictures are to be had if we will pay for them, and now that it has been found possible to collect enough money to purchase the treasures from Cyprus, is not the attempt worth making to secure these paintings for the Metropolitan Museum of Art, whose gallery they graced so well during the past Summer?

THE condition of the public mind under the present political situation affords the strongest evidence of the value of a free government, even though it be as imperfect as ours. A period of uncertainty, lasting for weeks, in relation to the result of a most important election, during which demagogues have vied with each other in spreading extravagant stories of all sorts, following a campaign in which vigorous efforts were made to fire the public heart with old animosities instead of educating the public conscience in relation to the actual needs of the day, finds the great mass of the community well poised, and only anxious that the moot question may be settled in accordance with law, and in an honorable manner.

THE new speaker of the House began his career last Monday with a violent and indecent attack on the President, addressed mainly to the clap-trap dread of Caesarism, which is most easily felt by those who know least what it means. At a moment like this it was an unpardonable piece of indiscretion and folly, and argues ill for the quiet of Congress and the impartial discharge of the speaker's duties. It looks as if the Democrats meant to try the game of bluster, and to do what they may to make the President as weak as they can at a time when strength is most needed in his office. They miscalculate the effect either upon him or the Republicans of such a game. Nothing will satisfy the country at large at this time but fairness, candor and truth. And the party that shows no disposition to trust in these will find itself weak even in power.

THAT the Republican party, after doing yeoman's service in the demolition of giant wrongs and the preservation of a great nation, is now in mortal peril cannot be denied. Unfortunately the conscience of a party is a movable commodity, and that it sometimes finds itself in the wrong breast is a sad fact. What its members may blindly allow it to do under such circumstances the history of the Republican party of late years may teach us. Its present position and prospects are suggestive of the story of the pair of young pups which were once presented to an Indian. As the story goes, days passed and the youthful canines refused, or neglected, to open their eyes. At length the Indian's patience was exhausted, and, taking the poor brutes by the hind legs, he rapped their little heads against a stump, with such force that the result need not be more particularly specified. Suffice it to say that the eyes were opened. The comment with which he followed the action was—"You'll see now, I guess."

MR. CARL SCHURZ's suggestion, to throw the count of the electoral vote into the hands of the Supreme Court, we do not regard as a happy one. That court has already power greater than that of any other court in the world—the power of construing and interpreting the Constitution and overruling the decision of all other branches of the Government. It is a fearful strain upon its popularity and it is creditable that it has stood it thus far with such fair success. It is vastly important that its precious powers should not be made suspected, and that the capital of influence and reverence it has laid up should not be risked by needlessly increasing its responsibilities. To make changes in the Constitution just now, to meet a case—though confessedly of great urgency—which would throw upon the Supreme Court the immediate responsibility of deciding a question in which the passions of the country and of party are dangerously aroused, would be to imperil the honor and reverence in which that court is now held. We hope no such danger will be run. The Supreme Court may yet have to review decisions in the Presidential election which both Houses of Congress may make against the Constitution. Let us wait until these questions, if they are to arise, come in their natural order before that tribunal. The responsibility would be great enough even then. It would be a fatal mistake to throw any new element of jealousy, or of novelty, into the Senate.

THE immoral suggestion that individual electors might pardonably take advantage of their physical liberty at this crisis to throw votes for candidates they were not chosen to elect—in short commit a breach of trust—was one of the most unexpected of propositions, considering its source, and the most odious of all conceivable means of escape from the difficulty we were in. It seemed additionally disgusting when connected with the name of so knightly and punctilious a gentleman as Prof. James Russell Lowell. Nobody needed his contradiction to discredit the rumors that he was a party to any such plan. That such a notion should have been propounded is a fearful revelation of the state of political morality among its own loudest advocates. The only conceivable palliation for it is that the original plan was to choose electors, not of a ministerial kind purely, but with real choosing power—in which their own wisdom was to be exercised. We should be glad to return to the original idea, but since it has wholly disappeared, and electors are now chosen only and distinctly to record a decision already made by their election, no one without absolute dishonor and breach of solemn trust could do otherwise than fulfil literally the single duty committed to him by his constituents. The country may have made a great mistake in abandoning the old idea of electors exercising their own personal discretion as members of a deliberative college. But if ever this freedom is restored to the electors it must be done formally and publicly, and they must be elected upon that understanding.

THE situation in South Carolina continues alarming. The assembling of riflemen to the number of three thousand and upwards, has a bad look for public order. Meanwhile there has been no distinct breach of the peace. How far the President's policy, of placing a small band of United States troops—400—in the capitol of the State, has provoked this assembling of armed citizens, is a disputed point. Is the sensitive condition of the public mind it was certainly desirable to avoid any appearance of federal interference with State rights and popular sovereignty. On the other hand, an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure. We are inclined to think a better policy at this time would have been to wait for positive offense against the federal constitution before sending United States soldiers into the State, and especially to the capital. We have no doubt of the caution and patriotism of the President, but the condition is so critical that even one with the best intentions may easily err. It ought not to be overlooked that a general persuasion of Gen. Grant's energy and courage and competency to meet open violations of the Constitution and of public order within his legitimate sphere of action has had a wholesome effect in calming treasonable or violent outbreaks in all the regions of disputed election. We cannot but respect Gen. Hampton's pacific and wise counsel to his own party, and those who are not loud mouthed against Gov. Chamberlain seem to have little appreciation of his responsibilities and his perilous surroundings. He seems to us a brave, well-intentioned and not indiscreet man, who is trying to fill one of the most arduous positions with courage and fidelity. We hope with trembling that forbearance and wisdom may yet settle the dangerous strife of parties and races in South Carolina, but certainly there are grounds for great anxiety that serious trouble may come not only to South Carolina, but to the whole nation, from the State that organized and twice already has threatened the nation with disunion. It were better that the whole State were sunk in the sea than that it were left to arouse another civil war through the country.

THE PROVINCE OF RELIGION.

ONE has only to read a book like "The Ancient City," of Coulanges, to see how inextricably interwoven the religious idea was in the earliest times with every part of life. What was there which this idea did not regulate? What domestic custom or relation was there; what matter of property, of acquisition or entail; what social or political or civil custom, for which religion did not have its word and office? And, in this respect, there was but little change, when in due time the original ancestral worship was succeeded by various forms of nature worship. And when these in turn succumbed to the increasing power of Christianity, again appeared the spectacle of a society thoroughly religious, informed in every part with religious ideas, attended by religious sanctions, associated with religious rites. The State and family were hardly less religious than the State itself, and literature was hardly less religious than theology. Like the epics of Homer and the epics of India and the North, the epic of the Middle Age is a divine comedy. Its object and its inspiration are religious. It deals with the divine order and man's relation with it. The sonnets of Longfellow—how beautiful they are!—comparing Dante's great poem to a cathedral are as religious as they are poetic, so paramount throughout is the religious sentiment. With the painter it was not otherwise than with the poet. He subordinated everything to religion. To paint the Christ and the Madonna, the Father, and the Holy Ghost "descending like a dove," the mysteries of the Fall and the Redemption, was his unfailing joy. But everywhere there was the same tendency. The religious sentiment was omnipresent and was all-controlling.

The aspect of our modern life is very different; so much so that it seems sometimes, to casual or careless observers of it, as if religion were going to repeat the fortunes of the idea of personal agency in the control of natural phenomena. The history of human thought has been, in good part, the history of the progressive banishment of the idea of personal agency from the natural world. Province after province has been ceded from the domain of interference to the domain of law. So, in the matter of society and politics and human life in general, province after province has been ceded from the religious to the secular dominion. The secularization of industry, of politics, of law, of literature, of art, is almost a synonym for modern history, as Mr. Lecky has abundantly and eloquently shown in his "History of the Rise and Influence of the Rationalistic Spirit in Europe." It is not to be wondered at that many excellent people, earnest and religious, survey this process with feelings of alarm unmixed with any consolation. To them it seems that, as the idea of personal agency in the natural world is being driven into ever closer quarters, so is religion being driven into an ever narrower corner of the social world. Aye, more, as in the natural world the idea of personal interference threatens to succumb entirely to the idea of law, may not religion eventually succumb to this persistently advancing secularity?

But there are those who cannot sympathize with these regrets and fears, however much they may respect them, and however tenderly they feel obliged to deal with them. These are not less religious than the fearful and foreboding; not less convinced that of all human interests religion is the most central and important; not less desirous and resolved that religion should exert its influence over no petty province, but over the whole of life, and that if the present tendency of things were on the whole a tendency hostile to this consummation, then it would be a consummation devoutly to be deplored and to be strenuously resisted. But that it is thus hostile to religion in the highest sense and to its omnipresent influence they are not convinced, but quite the contrary. They are convinced that this tendency, which from one point of view appears as secularization and as a tendency to dereligionize the political and social and æsthetic and domestic life of man, seen from another and a higher point of view, is a religious tendency, a tendency to make the religion of the future as omnipresent and all-controlling as the religion of the past.

There is a hint of how this can be done in our experience of God's relation to the world of natural phenomena. The Divine Worker banished as personal interference comes back again more potent and more beautiful than ever as the Life of universal law. By this return the aspect of the natural world, which before was growing less and less divine, becomes wholly divine, wholly religious. And so the aspect of all social and domestic life, all art and politics and trade, that has been seemingly growing less and less religious by the secularization of one province after another, becomes at once religious the moment that we recognize that the law of all this also is the law of the Eternal, and that the most religious attitude we can take in the presence of all this, is that of patient inquiry and resolute obedience; patient inquiry into the laws of personal and social life and resolute obedience thereunto. Only as there is this recognition and this attitude, shall religion in these latter days be just as omnipresent, just as all-sanctifying, as it was when "the religion of the hearth," or the nature-worship which succeeded, or mediæval Christianity left no part of life unhallowed by the formal recognition of religion.

Not that the recognition of the future will be as formal as the recognition of the past. Not that poetry is going to choose only formally religious themes, and painting take again to painting the Madonna and the Christ to the exclusion of all other subjects; not that the old alliance is to be struck between Church and State, and political affairs invested with ecclesiastical solemnity, and God and Christ put into the Constitution, and the Bible as a sine qua non into the public schools. We shall have less of all this formal recognition of religion before we have more. The recognition which we shall have is the recognition in every part of life of the law of that part; in the State, of the law of justice; in art, of the laws of color and of form; in industry, of the law of use; in domestic matters, of the laws of health and comfort and stability. The time is coming when we shall not regard Watts' Select Hymns as more religious than the most secular poetry of Tennyson, or a serio-comic picture of "The Rock of Ages" as more religious than a landscape by McEntee or Gifford which fills us full of peace and quietness. The most religious ought to mean the most ideal, the most earnest, the most faithful, the most sincere! The most religious man of business ought to mean, not the man who has the most texts pinned up in his office, or the man who is most regular at the prayer-meeting, but the man who best embodies in his daily business the eternal laws of trade. That teacher should not be regarded as the most religious who opens her school each morning with "religious exercises," so called, but she who best embodies in her teachings the eternal laws of mental growth and acquisition. That painter should not be regarded as the most religious who subordinates his art to formally religious purposes, but he who embodies in it the eternal laws and principles of beauty. Nor is science most religious when it subordinates itself to an established theory of Christianity or the Book of Genesis, but when its gaze is firmly fixed upon the truth, without one sidelong glance to any consequence in extra-scientific spheres. And so we might go on through every department of human activity.

A servant with this clause
Makes drudgery divine;
Who sweeps a room as for Thy laws
Makes that and the action fine.

And the action is not merely fine, but actually religious, as when the little housemaid knew she was converted because she swept under the mats.

We are not playing upon words. We are not trying to make things appear religious which are not so in reality, if haply thus we may becloud a little the exodus of religion from society. If the laws of life all the way through are in deed and truth the laws of the Eternal, then it is by knowledge of and obedience unto these laws that we are most religious. The derivative force of religion is the binding back. And by the apprehension that all life is sacred, and that all laws are God's laws, we do bind back every human activity to its Eternal source and make it thoroughly religious. Henceforth we call nothing common or unclean. Henceforth religion is not something apart from science, art and politics and social well-being, but is deeply implicated in all these things. But to say this is not to say that the occupation of avowed religious agencies is gone. The church and the religious press still have their function—a more important one than ever—to remind us that all life is sacred, to hold each part of life to the law of that part, art to the law of art, science to the method of science, politics to the principle of justice, and to enforce the recognition that in this way, whether consciously religious or not, each part of life becomes more actually religious, sacred and divine than it can be made in any other way.

MATTER AND SPIRIT.

THE mystery of God roots directly in the mystery of a Man; because the clue to it lies in the answer to the twin-question, What is Matter, what is Spirit? and we should not so much as know that there were any Spirit-side if it were not for what happens to each man in his solitary consciousness. The one sole spot in the wide universe where to my sure knowledge there are two sides is—myself; the sole spot in all the universe where to your sure knowledge two sides meet is—yourself. From the depths within, and only from those inner depths, the answer comes to each one separately—comes with overwhelming certainty, "Spirit-side there is in Self, at least." Therefore the mystery of Self holds all the evidence there is upon the mystery of Spirit anywhere.

What follows from this evidence of Self? The Materialist's belief is that Man is but a part of Nature; nothing in one which is not in the other, he says. We agree and take him at his word—Nothing in Man which is not in Nature.

But then what is there in the Man? To find out, we surely do right to study, not the outside Nature, but the Man himself. Physical science, pointing to the mechanism of his nerve and brain-cell, asserts, "No thought without vibration, no feeling without force." Again we heartily assent. The microscope may even show the vibration that corresponds so absolutely to each thought, and we shall but be glad to hail the marvel. But it will still be simple fact to also own that the microscope which peers to the vibration never shows that thought to which it corresponds, that the test-tube never shows the feeling. More than this: microscope and test-tube never reach the faintest sign that anything like thought or feeling exists there to be shown. Beyond vibration, beyond the chemical reaction, the silence seems a perfect silence. And yet—here is the point—we know that in that silence lies a world! the world of Consciousness, where the voice is lifted up that says, "I feel, I think, I remember, I rejoice, I know the Ought, I know shame, and I know love and trust." These voices are real phenomena, as real as any that the chemist or the physicist report; are Facts; and the chemist and the physicist do not report the first faint hint of them.

Now then, since Man, as the Materialist urges, is but "a part of Nature—nothing in one that is not in the other"—and, since there lies this unseen world in man, are we not, by our friend's own word, compelled to turn around and face the wide universe of Matter and greet something that corresponds to Man's Consciousness in it? Yes; in all reason, yes. If physical science bore any witness to the Spirit-side of us and then were ignorant about Soul in the universe, that ignorance might be ominous. But she is as silent about us. Or if our materialist allowed that there might be in us something that is not in the rest of Nature, then too her ignorance about Soul in Nature might be ominous. But that he does not allow. "Nothing in one which is not in the other," he insists. By that insistence, if these two sides, Matter-Spirit, cannot be disowned and cannot be divorced in us, then nowhere can they be disowned or divorced, and the World, too, has a soul. By that insistence, if the formula "No thought without vibration, no feeling without force" be true for Self, as we are learning to believe, its truth becomes reversed, and, being reversed, enlarges past all bounds, until it also reads, "No force, then, anywhere, without its Feeling, and no vibration anywhere without its Thought; all Nature is alive"—like me!

Instead of fearing, let us hope that the Materialist will make doubly, triply sure the statements so much feared by pulpits and by pews; for in his favorite formulas he is making impregnable the foundations of religious faith; is showing that, instead of being the opposites supposed, the two philosophies, "Materialistic," "Spiritual," are really so related that only by becoming one do they become the Truth. "Science and Religion," we are apt to say, as if in some way they were contraries. Nay, save as outside and inside, neither able to exist without the other, are contraries. The science that studies the physics of Nature reveals the matter-side of Man; another science, studying the consciousness of Man, dimly reveals the mind-side of Nature. Each science offers half the key that unlocks the mystery of things; and no thing is so simple that both halves are not needed to turn its lock. Truly it takes sun, pebble and grass-blade to explain the baby; as truly it takes somewhat that hides within the babe to explain them. The Materialist, held to his claims, pronounces the fact of God more surely than any other voice that tries to utter that great name.

For, change the terms a little, and the problem of Matter-

Spirit is the problem called "God." This Soul in Nature, this Spirit-side, this Liveness there that answers to the consciousness in us, is what we mean by "God;" is all we deepest mean. Does faith insist on having a God "personal?" Well, be it again remembered that "person" is a mystery that for ourselves transcends all thought; God's person must needs be a greater mystery yet. But however great, His mystery and ours are one. So the very theologies hint. "God became man," says the Christian, and the Christian's most real deity is this incarnate Lord. "God is a man," says the Swedenborgian. "Man is a world, and the world is a man," said the middle-age Mohammedan poet, meaning nearly the same thing, no doubt. His mystery and ours are one, for His begins in ours, and ours expands till it is lost in His. His endless fascination and our own are, therefore, one. What seek we so in seeking him? Our larger self. How seek we Him? Through deepening knowledge of our self. Tell yourself what you really are and you will know of Him all you wish. If such knowledge fails for Self, much more must it come short in regard to Him. And He forever fascinates because He is the never-found, yet never-lost. To be impatient with our ignorance is folly, and to be despondent over it is impatience. To exaggerate it by dogmatizing that He is "unknowable" is to exaggerate the ignorance—even as a more common kind of dogmatism exaggerates our knowledge. Life's experience, more and more revealing Self, reveals Him in due proportion. It is usually the young who are the sceptics; at least, who are unhappy in their scepticism. And this one clue is worth more than bare thinking in the search for Him. Is He the Perfect Self—then to know Him, "be perfect, even as the Father in Heaven is perfect."

MAGNANIMITY ORGANIZED.

EVER since man began to speculate about the meaning of his career and to care enough about the events of his life to record them, we find him occupied with some of the processes which are essential to the founding or the maintenance of a religion. What he has intended to do or to express by aid of his religion is not always clear. That he has often organized absurdity and attempted the impossible is certain. But the dominant purpose which runs through all his experiments in religion may be discerned and may be described in general terms as the effort to classify his noblest hopes and organize his most magnanimous intentions. His hopes, his fears, and his designs have often been grim or grotesque. His best purposes have often been distorted by hideous superstitions or made useless by agonies of fear. His efforts to improve human life have often been conceived in folly and crippled by ignorance. Still, if one would get at the meaning of the ancient religions he must see, first, that they—the worst of them not less than the best—were the organized expression of that which was noblest in the lives and the hopes of the people.

The purpose which is dominant in the multitudinous forms of religion to-day is the same intention—to express and make effective the very highest thought, feeling and benevolent desires of those who call themselves religious, in whatever fashion. But we have not yet reached the point where any large number of men and women have been willing to organize magnanimity pure and simple, unalloyed with grosser impulses and absurdities. The best men and women have very much at heart the desire to do something which shall express in concrete form their noblest passions, and not only express them with unmistakable clearness, but also make them efficient causes in the redemption of the world from the brutal tyrannies of ignorance, vice, misery and sin.

But the best men and women have not yet learned how grand and successful an undertaking it would be to make the sole basis of their organization their desire to improve the quality of human life. They do not yet clearly see that the only bond of union must be the good which is common to them all, and not the doubtful matters in which they disagree. It has too long been the fashion to overlook the few simple but universal elements which enter into all forms of religion, and to fix the attention on some minor point which distinguishes a few believers from all other men. They do not discard the universal elements, but their call to organization commonly reads, "Let us assemble ourselves together and form an association of which the basis shall be the universal plus ——" Into the blank each writes his unimportant shibboleth, and thus narrows his organization to something less than the universal truth. The new age will come when the plus sign shall be dropped and the sensus communis shall be esteemed the most important thing.

Suppose, for instance, the two great commandments of Jesus, which he affirmed included all that the law and the prophets had said or done, should be made the bond of a new union—would not those two commandments include not only the law and the prophets, but also the theologians and the philosophers, the sectarians and the sects? What divides the religious world to-day but questions about non-essentials? What hinders the welfare of man? Is it some doubt about a mode of baptism or the observance of a sacrament? Is it doubt or ignorance concerning the mode of existence of the Divine Being, or a question about the vicarious atonement? Are not all questions about Unity and Trinity, Episcopacy and Congregationalism, and all the minor questions of ecclesiasticism absolutely trivial in face of the fact that ignorance of the common laws of health, decency and the means of earning an honest livelihood is the prolific mother of drunkenness, sexual vice, and all the crimes which spring from want and unbridled desire? Need any one doubt that when bestial desires have been controlled and intellectual appetites have been developed and the consciences of men have been trained to seek the true and the right at all hazards, it will then be perfectly safe to trust the people to settle for themselves all questions concerning the conduct of the religious life?

In every church, as well as among the multitude of the unchurched, the chief obstacle to piety and the most stubborn opponent of religion is, in plain terms, nothing more nor less than the bestial nature which manifests itself in riotous appetites, in cruel rapacities, in covetousness, ambition and hardness of heart. So long as the lower nature and the grosser impulses have sway, all appeals to the heart and the conscience are wasted breath, while subtleties of interpretation and niceties of belief become ridiculously inoperative.

The time will surely come—and the progress of the world is delayed until it does come—when the first condition of any great improvement of the quality of human life will be seen to be the hearty union of all lovers of their race and their cordial co-operation in so arranging the circumstances which affect the growth of the people that the brutish life shall not overgrow every noble impulse before the character is fixed. This is a work of which no one denies the importance—the work of all charities, all institutions of education, of all those who attempt to comfort the poor, reform the criminal, train the young and stimulate the weak, the ignorant and the vicious to attempt a higher life.

In short, all the practical and most useful work of all religious organization, in all its many forms, comes to the one thing—the effort to fit men for citizenship, for social duties and relations, and, in general, to prepare them to understand and accept each higher obligation as it presents itself. For the life of this world men need a training about which differences of opinion may exist, but they do not coincide with the differences which relate to the preparation for another life. All agree, however, that whoever is well fitted for this life is a better subject for the agencies which shall train him for another. Is it not, then, possible to unite all magnanimous sentiments and benevolent intentions in one grand crusade against the evils in the present life which may be prevented? Would not such a formal acceptance of the claims of brotherhood give the better forces in society an immense advantage in the campaign against the brute which still survives in man?

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

THIS anxiously expected document is disappointing in that it withholds, perhaps prudently, the views of the President in regard to the critical state in which the election has placed the country. Perhaps he has been wise in throwing no new element of official opinion into the cauldron already full enough of conflicting partisan ideas and feelings. There is a rare directness and simplicity in the manner in which Gen. Grant treats his own administration and confesses his inexperience in political life and training when he came into office. The errors which he admits are really largely due to the folly of which the country has again and again been capable, of selecting candidates for the Presidency wholly on the ground of availableness. If we put a man, however distinguished in other respects, who is untrained and unknown in statesmanship or political life, into an office requiring above any in the world the completest and most tried experience in political life, we must expect the consequences which have followed in all cases—rashness, submission to unworthy advisers, obstinacy of opinion, and the selection of weak and dangerous officials in the federal service. Nobody, whose opinion is worth considering, doubts Gen. Grant's integrity and desire to serve the highest interests of the country, and nobody who is candid and truth-loving doubts that the best intentions have not prevented him from bringing the Republican party into disesteem, and our institutions into peril, by the disgraces which his cabinet officers and his civil service list have inflicted upon the record of the last few years. We do not doubt that the consequences of the war, the vast public debt, and the immense taxes it involves, the state of the currency and the depression of business, have produced a large part of the evils which are unjustly charged upon the administration. But the administration has not made these lighter, it has too often aggravated them by unstatesmanlike and injudicious appointments and weak measures. On the whole, it is a fortunate thing that we have nearly done with the present administration, and we can breathe more freely already in the prospect of a change of rulers.

It is impossible to compare the love and gratitude, the enthusiasm and pride, felt in Gen. Grant's great war record, and his position as a chieftain when he acceded to the Presidential chair, with the general coolness of feeling toward him or the satisfaction which attends his exile from office—both reflected in the apologetic and sad tone of the personal parts of his last message—without a melancholy sense of the mutability and indiscriminateness of public applause and the probable result of political elevation upon a military hero's fame. It is clearly a great misfortune to the hero of the great civil war that his noble fame should be heavily clouded by his political failure. But it is more to the discredit of the American people that they should despise or ignore the indispensable necessity of trained statesmanship in the person they put into the Presidential chair. They, and not Gen. Grant, are mainly responsible for the lack of wisdom, power and popularity which have attended their thoughtless choice of a ruler without experience and without statesmanlike antecedents.

A Democratic statesman is, under any circumstances, likely to make a better President than a Republican unbred in political life. If we can have both a statesman and a Republican, as we shall have if Gov. Hayes is elected, it is better still. In Mr. Tilden, if he wins the place, we shall at least have a statesman—for he was selected for his political ability and training—and we can be tolerably sure that he will not make great administrative blunders.

There is nothing in the rest of Gen. Grant's message which is specially noteworthy—except the dead and buried San Domingo question, in which all sorts of improbable benefits are assumed as certain to have followed from the annexation of that island, which he so strongly advised. There is a simplicity and an infatuation in this statement which shows how childlike the President is in his political temperament and vaticinations, and how set in his notions.

We have not lost respect for the President as a man, or a hero and warrior, on account of his failure as a civil ruler. But it seems absolutely necessary to warn the American people against the danger of putting men of great popularity into our highest political seats without regard to the ground on which their popularity rests. Statesmanship is alike the most necessary and the most neglected interest in our public life. Thanks to the Secretary of State, our foreign ministers have been generally creditable to the country during the present administration, but, with a few exceptions, the Cabinet has not been such as to illustrate the ability and dignity and statesmanship of the nation. Let us hope that we are now to enter, under either candidate for the Presidency, upon an administration where each head of a department will be distinguished by the highest fitness and the highest character.

Just as we are going to press, on Wednesday afternoon, the telegraph brings the news that the electoral vote of Florida has been cast by a unanimous vote of the Board of Canvassers for Hayes, the Republican electors receiving a majority of 930 votes. Louisiana and South Carolina have also both been declared Republican, so that unless Congress shall refuse to receive the votes of one or more of these three States, the election of Mr. Hayes must be regarded as finally settled. A rumor that Governor Grover, of Oregon, has refused certificates of election to two Hayes electors lacks confirmation, and would not necessarily affect the result of the election, as the Oregon statutes give the third Republican elector power to fill the alleged vacancies existing.

While the Returning Board of South Carolina has declared that State for Hayes, the news now comes that the Democratic House has at last obtained a legal quorum by the desertion of a member of the Republican House and that the Supreme Court of the State has decided that the former body is the legal one and issued a mandamus compelling the Secretary of State to turn over the returns for Governor and Lieutenant Governor to the Democratic speaker. In the absence of further news, it is idle to speculate upon the probable issue of this latest move in South Carolina affairs; but there is evidently serious trouble at hand.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

BOSTON CHIT-CHAT.

DEAR INQUIRER:—"I believe in the resurrection" of newspapers. And so I am specially glad to welcome the LIBERAL CHRISTIAN, as it comes up out of the shadow in the vigor of rebirth, and with the light of a new life in its eyes.

For purely personal reasons, my joy at the resurrection is modified just a little by the re-christening. Not that I at all question the wisdom of its movement. I trust the managers perfectly for that. But I remember a time, some years ago—bless us, how old some of us young fellows are getting!—when from my safe position within the lines of the old faith, this mission and proclamation from the kingdom of darkness was first wafted to me from the fields of the enemy outside the fort. Yes, the LIBERAL CHRISTIAN was the first Unitarian paper I ever held in my hands and read. And I love the name as that of an old-time helper. I was fascinated by the editorials and contributions of Dr. Bellows, and I took the paper almost wholly for that reason. I thought I ought to know the positions and strongholds of the enemy, so that I could rout him. But truth got the best of it, and I was the one that was routed.

And here I would like to record my solemn warning. I used to be charged with being a dangerous character because I had Unitarian books in my library. I own it now. It was dangerous—to my orthodoxy. And I wish to tell all proposed readers of this journal that it is dangerous to come out into the daylight—unless you wish to be beguiled into error. Even a bat, should he change his habits of life, might find himself so wrought on by his conditions as that he should be able to live like a heretic—right out doors and under the open heaven and in the broad glare of the sun. Truth is very seductive, and if any one doesn't wish to become infatuated with it, he had better keep out of its way.

Thus, for old-time memories, I like the LIBERAL CHRISTIAN. I suppose it is true enough that "a rose by any other name would smell as sweet." And yet the name does almost become a part of the thing after a while. One would hardly like to change his wife's name—the name he fell in love with and married. But no doubt the godfathers have done wisely, and so I take—without a question—THE INQUIRER to my arms.

It has taken me so long to welcome you over the threshold and into my Boston home, that I fear there is little time left to tell you the news. And, by the way, your coming was so sudden, and I have been so busy since the warning, that I am not at all sure that I know what is the news.

When I find out who is to be the next President I will let you know by the first mail. I shall not dare to show my head in a newspaper office until I can solve this sphinx's riddle. Editors are in no condition to be questioned on this subject now. I have heard of several persons who went "up the winding stair" to the editorial sanctum with inquiries on this subject, and "never came down again."

The Rev. Joseph Cook has progressed in his lectures to the point of demonstrating immortality. But lo! the demonstration turns out to be after all only the old and familiar teachings of Spencer and Prof. John Fiske, whom we all supposed dead and buried since they have been so walked over by the "Elephantine" lectureship. But the sad thing about it all is to see the collective theological wisdom of the modern Athens and vicinity so innocent of the teachings of the men they fear and abhor as to take their very doctrines as brand-new revelations from the lips of the new prophet. Nevertheless the grand teachings are preached, though it be by contention; and "therein I rejoice, yea, and will rejoice." Let Cook preach Fiske and Spencer, though in supposed opposition to them; and by and by they will be better understood and received for their own truth's sake.

Moody's Tabernacle is progressing, and on the first of January—to borrow the phrase from the Orthodox and revered old Dr. Shepard, formerly of Bangor Seminary,—the "Holy Ghost is to be imported" in due form. I have already enjoyed the distinction of being prayed for at the meetings in Chicago, and perhaps when they get nearer some effect may be visible. I certainly have no objection to being helped or led into the right way by anybody's prayers. But it does seem to belittle the operations of God's spirit—which, like the wind, bloweth where it listeth—to think it must come and go at Moody's bidding. These revival movements, looked at as natural, are explicable enough, but claimed as supernatural, they are degrading. What kind of God do men believe in, when He is supposed to be either powerless or indifferent to the welfare of His human children, except when some special man is able to rouse Him to interest or activity in human affairs? It is a terrible confession of palsy or unfitness for its work on the part of the regular church machinery.

As for our Unitarian churches, I believe I need record only their usual prosperity. You produce an effect according to the force and prevalence of that to which you appeal. And so long as superstition and passion and ignorant enthusiasm are so common, and the men who are guided by enlightened reason are so few, the words of the old hymn, with a new application, will be true—that "Wisdom shows a narrow path,

With here and there a traveller."

But the first streak of dawn means noontime bye-and-bye. And so we walk toward the light, knowing that in the light dwells that God, "in whom is no darkness at all."

Hoping that THE INQUIRER may find the truth, and lead many souls for many a year into the paths of wisdom, which are paths of life and peace, I end my first chat, and send my first greeting.

SILVUS.

FROM CHICAGO.

JUST now all Chicago is Moody, and Moody is all Chicago, except Bro. Herford, who is trying his best to pick a fuss with the man. By the way, this Brooke Herford will be the most of a Yankee among us, after a time, and a Western Yankee at that. His circular for December is a tremendous placard, with a whole park of artillery pointed at the revivalists, which he intends to fire off Sunday by Sunday.

These peripatetic gospellers stir the soul of a man to the fighting point constantly, and it is hard work not to slide off into a battle with them. There is not so much fault to be found with their manners, as with their pre-supposed theology. All their salvation work is based on a chronically angry God, who has the uncomfortable lot of being in a sad way with somebody all the time. Mr. Moody will show a meagre few of the race how to pacify Him.

How comfortable it must be to ignore all the troublesome questions that wrack men's souls, and just preach right on as if there were no sort of doubt about your creed, and that there never had been.

Mr. Moody fell in by accident the other day with our Judge Booth, each happily ignorant of the other. Moody consistently began to inquire into the Judge's spiritual condition, and was absolutely overwhelmed when the Judge denied not only Mr. Moody's authority, but all supernatural authority whatever. To reduce St. Paul and Luke to the ranks took the underpinning out of the whole Tabernacle.

Financially, Moody is a grand success. He is replenishing the coffers of the papers wonderfully. He is bringing an immense amount of loose change into the city. The Exposition was a comparative failure. He will work a half dozen of the poorest preachers to death, and so be of some permanent value to the churches. As an organizer he does not equal Hammond; but is more generally credited with sincerity. With both, the secret of success is immense physical endurance, a lack of troublesome knowledge and an overflow of zeal. Among those specially prayed for the other day was my evolutionist predecessor, now in Boston. What a prayer test is that! Can Savage be unevolved into seeing the universe as Brother Moody sees it? We will try to have patience in waiting for the answer.

The following from the sermon on Daniel is a fine instance of blooded humor and pathos, a decided improvement on the original story: "They cast him into the den. Daniel slept calmer than ever that night. After he had prayed with his face toward Jerusalem, he took one of the lions for a pillow, and slept sweetly." "He had an angel sent all the way from heaven to tell him that he was beloved of God."

Meanwhile a few of us jog on, sniffing Chicago mortgages and preaching the gospel of the Sermon on the Mount. Robert Collyer has gone South; it was rumored that he was needed at New Orleans as an arbitrator. Sunderland is doing what his hands find to do royally. His new book is as pungent as it is, manly. There is no egotism in it, but an evident earnest desire to do good. The Third Church will sustain another course of conversational lectures this winter. Mrs. Leonowens is the first to appear in the course, Brooke Herford is at his best, and enjoying himself hugely, trying to get the revivalists to come out and settle their differences with him, but the only response he gets is a rattle of small arms among the chapels. When Moody is asked why he does not reply he shrewdly answers, "I've got a better thing."

By the way, we are to have Talmage here, not only as editor, but as lecturer, and it is rumored as a permanent fixture in one of our strong churches. It will be sport to watch the reception the Times will give him. There is nothing that paper so much enjoys as a set of lean intellectual ribs. Everybody is afraid of its free lance, although it is thoroughly courteous to talent or scholarship. The Advance is far from getting rich out of its new combination. It may tide over the hard times by the expedient. But Tupper and Talmage! That is too much for the lively Western Congregation-alists. If there were only some way of introducing a brass band into a religious newspaper, it might work.

Learned, of St. Louis, comes up next Sunday. He is counted on as one of our very best men. Herbert, of Geneva, looked in the other day in his quaint, quiet, cordial style, and said a bunch of good things. They have begun Liberal services at Englewood, and we have to give them a lift occasionally. Two more years, and Chicago will have the money to build up a host of anxious groups of free hoppers.

Our State conferences have been so far fairly successful and bright. We are now in the middle of them—the Ohio Valley and Wisconsin still to come. The best of good wishes for THE INQUIRER.

POWELL.

O WORDS! O WEARY WORDS!

O words, O mocking words,
That most elude when most I need your aid,—
Vague, airy symbols, that to nothing fade,
Words, mocking, mocking words!

O words, O vain, vain words,
Ye changelings that come tottering to my lips
And with your empty shade my thought eclipse,
Words, vain, vain words, vain words!

O words, O idle words,
Thin, sparkling bubbles, how you float along,
And mask the living current, deep and strong;
Words, idle, idle words.

O words, O weary words,
Let me in peace my little hour dream
While life rolls on its great, resistless stream,
Words, weary, weary words!

W. P.

LITERATURE.

DR. JAMES MARTINEAU'S NEW VOLUME.

THE sudden appearance of a new volume of sermons* from Dr. Martineau is a delightful surprise and a great benefaction. His "Endeavors after the Christian Life," which came to us thirty years ago, after passing through six English and some American editions, is yet fresh and more read than when it was new. The religious mind has partly caught up with its advanced positions, and the author has not left them behind him, much as he has elevated his ground and widened his view since. They are still above the level of even the cultivated class of Christian readers, and wait for a full appreciation and influence at a later stage of development in the Church universal. They will never be outgrown and superseded, being so little infected with temporary, sectarian or polemic ideas that there is scarcely anything perishable in their substance, while they are so exquisite in form that they have the self-preserving quality of works of art. They belong as much to literature as to religion, and will be as long studied and admired for their style and fabric as revered for their wisdom, truth and inspiration. And yet this new volume of twenty-five sermons seems a finer and completer product of a ripper spiritual experience and a larger range of studies. It is the rich harvest of the author's "hours of thought on sacred things," gathered in the late autumn of his laborious life. The mild lustre of the harvest moon silvers them with a soft, pathetic sanctity. The strength, the vigor, the high imagination, the poetic feeling, the subtlety, the comprehensive grasp, the profound rationality, the felicity of phrase, the wealth of vocabulary, to which we are accustomed in all that Dr. Martineau writes, are here unimpaired and even exceeded; but there is something more of tenderness, sweetness, trust, hope, charity—something more of spiritual ripeness and the restful confidence of a soul that has conquered full repose and longs to pour the unction of its own peace into the troubled hearts of men.

* Hours of Thought on sacred Things; A Volume of Sermons by James Martineau, LL.D., D.D., etc. London: Longmans, Green, Reader & Dyer. 1276. duo. 344 pp.

Exceptional to the last degree as the mingled intellectual force and delicacy of these meditations is, and gem-like the finishing and phrasing, rare the implied knowledge and complete the metaphysic and scientific training, yet it is the depth of their religious experience that most moves, charms and instructs. In this respect, we know no sermons in any tongue superior to them. For while most preachers preserve their faith and piety by shutting out the light from all quarters but the East, Dr. Martineau has kept his with windows opened to every part of the horizon. He retreats to no cell or chapel to make devotion possible. He takes on no mediæval tone to utter his prayers and borrows no Oriental phrases as the only garb in which faith can venture to clothe its confidences. In the language of to-day he declares his creed; in the light of to-day he sees his visions of God; through the fires of the latest critical furnaces he walks with his faith unharmed; and it is not too much to say that what he affirms and brings home to his readers is a faith not diminished, clipped of wing, or topped of its crown to enable it to pass through the custom-house of modern scrutiny, but a faith as large and lofty, as true to past experiences, wide in compass, and rich in trusts, hopes, and supports as any the Church has known.

There is nothing so rare and precious as the power of holding on to the essence of old creeds, while dismissing their worn and faded accidents. What the old saints have meant, especially what their consenting hearts through ages have meant, is never to be treated with indifference, or to be left out of view in seeking a helpful guide to the sources of spiritual life. Lisp and stammer as they may have done in their forms of utterance, they spoke the accents of the Holy Ghost, and any attempt to articulate a true and vital Christianity, in which their notes find no place, will prove a disastrous failure. There is not a great and long prevailing doctrine of the Christian Church, from the beginning, which will not finally vindicate its claim to essential significance, as part of the consciousness of that great historic reality, the Christian Church. It is, then, edifying to the highest degree to find Dr. Martineau's sermons full of the essence and aroma of the vital pieties of the past, so that we may say that no chord that ever thrilled with music in the hands of any saint have not some echo in his song. What impossible place has a passionate love and adoration given to Christ that Martineau does not understand the reason for it and admit it into his heart absolutely freed from its incredible and irrational form, but living in its essence of devout gratitude and tender reverence? What has been said of sin by the most abject and remorseful saints, in their irrational doctrines of a primal curse on a misery-devoted race, more awful and searching than his unsparing dealing with its lurid shadows and its baleful ashes? What ascetic in his cell has exalted piety to a loftier height? What denouncer of the world or the realm of Satan has exposed its perils and its snares with a more searching insight or a severer Christian test? What vigils have pillar-saints and world-renouncing hermits kept, that he does not prove himself acquainted with their secrets and nourished on their food? We have in these sermons all the sacred experiences, aspirations and pieties of the Church—separated from their old forms of statement—but crystallized anew in terms of fresh thought and feeling, after being dissolved in the crucible of a new era, and a wonderful epoch of divine re-creation, and, although the faith and trust and love Mr. Martineau teaches is not a propositional one, and does not harden into dogmas, it is all the more penetrative and the more satisfying on that account. The cathedral is well in its time and place, with its stained glass and its groined arches and its symbolic shapes, but the temple in the heart is greater still, and it is there that he builds up the shrine, which is richer, fuller, diviner and more truly Christian than any mere representative structure of dogmas and forms could possibly be, were it as old as Notre Dame or St. Clement. We see not how any truly devout reader, of competent culture, could read these sermons and miss anything that is characteristically Christian. Thomas a Kempis is not more devout or more comprehensive. They have the Orthodoxy of eternal truth and wisdom in them; the catholicity of what saints have known always, said everywhere, and in all times and tongues, but never with more searching subtlety, more exquisite refinement, more delicate sensibility. Christians of other schools may, and will, miss old phrases and "articles of belief," but they will find all they essentially meant, and more than they ever expressed, in the finest form of modern suggestion. Liberals will find little of their too common destructiveness and narrowness of sympathy and misappreciation of the past, but it will puzzle the freest of them to discover any bolts or bars for freedom or to show that any of Dr. Martineau's faith or piety is illegitimate or irrational, or due to a belated intelligence. He is equally in the van and in the rear guard, making a way for the foremost, and bringing tenderly up the weakest that have a right to be in the Lord's host. It is the glorious breadth, with the undiminished depth of his faith, that we so much admire; his absolute allegiance to truth, with his worshipful and tender piety, and the breath of the new morning mingling with the fragrance that comes from over the seas of time and savors of the precious ointment broken on the Master's head and the myrrh and spices carried to his tomb.

These sermons doubtless found fit audience when they were preached, but they seem even better adapted to be read. They are hardly sermons in the strictest sense—rather, soliloquies overheard. The meditative prevails over the hortatory; the brooding upon great themes characterizes them rather than a pushing home of settled convictions. They are too delicate in analysis, too subtle in distinctions, too recondite in manner, too elaborate in phrase, too lofty in tone, to be taken in at one hearing, or to hold readily any class of hearers not educated by the preacher himself to his own exactions upon all their powers of thought and to the high nature of his themes. We sometimes feel that the elaboration of his thoughts and his careful fulfilling of his images overloads his style and wearies attention. His command of language and his sensuousness of imagination are both so great that he rarely leaves to suggestion what less fertile and less gifted writers are compelled to resign—and so he does a generous injustice to his reader by asking nothing of his fancy or his filling up. His mind, in the abundance and richness of its imagination, is just as marked as in the depth, subtleness and discrimination of its thought. His weapon, sharp as a Japanese sword, is always diaped like a Damascus blade, and we often study the blazonry when we should be watching the stroke or feeling the blow. Elegance of finish and richness of texture are both too rare to be complained of, especially in a writer the beauty of whose surface never conceals a shallow or covers with its shimmer a turbid or an unconquered stream of thought. But we are bound to say that Dr. Martineau's style, elegant, correct, scholarly and inimitable, full of beauty and energy, is not direct and business-like enough to allow the full measure of his intellectual and spiritual powers their best chance. The very seriousness of his theme is every now and then disturbed with some rippling fancy, some strange and too apt word, that suggests pedantry or untimely purpose, and makes us say that cake and wine are not always welcome. But this is ungracious criticism in the face of such noble powers and gifts as this volume exhibits.

Of the twenty-five sermons there is not one we could spare. The very first is, perhaps, the most original and the most useful of all—"The Tides of the Spirit." Never was the value of custom and period in worship so truly estimated. It ought to be read in every literary circle and be committed to heart by all fancying themselves too religious to need church-going! "The Moral Quality of Faith," the seventh sermon, is full of new, profound and searching teaching, applicable in a rare degree to the delusions of many in regard to the absolute lack of responsibility on anybody's part for any opinions. "The Xth, "Messengers of Change," is another penetrative and suggestive discourse, treating a theme rarely so fully mastered, of the dependence of our blessings for their value on their insecurity and uncertainty. The XIIth, "The Sorrows of Messiah," is a deep call upon our profoundest experiences, for an explanation of the sadness of Christ, and shows the peculiar loneliness of a soul that had nothing between itself and God. It is a mystic discourse, true and solemn, leading us far into the secrets of sorrows that only the purest and greatest can know. "Time to Nature, God and the Soul," No. XVI, gives a fine example of the metaphysics of Mr. Martineau applied to a theme too occult for popular intelligence, but treated by him most originally and profitably, and with equal truth and power. "The Powers of Love" is another masterly sermon; and we skip many others equally worthy of notice.

If Spenser be the poet for poets, Martineau is certainly the preacher for preachers. No minister can afford to be ignorant of this book. And we judge that the higher the culture, the more vigorous and independent the reasoning powers among laymen, or the further they have pushed their scepticism, the more profitable to them the calm, undogmatic, respectful, but searching treatment which spiritual verities receive in this volume.

We commend it both to those who have a believing spirit, and to those who have not, with equal confidence that it will command the grateful interest of all not too empty and thoughtless to recognize its value.

REVIEWS.

WENDERHOLME. A Story of Lancashire and Yorkshire. By Philip Gilbert Hamerton. Boston: Roberts Brothers. 1876.

Mr. Hamerton tells us in his preface to the American edition "that, when the present story was written, commercial reasons prevailed, as they unhappily so often do prevail, over artistic reasons, and the book was made far longer than, as a work of art, it ought to have been." Though since its first publication it has been much abridged, yet a further process of condensation would have been very useful. The book is far too long for the story it tells, which is not quite "enough to go 'round." The plot, such as it is, is not very absorbing, and the incidents are not especially startling or well connected. Having said this, we have touched upon the only noticeable defects of "Wenderholme." As a study of life and manners in the region of Lancashire and Yorkshire, it is admirable—full of strong, vigorous scenes and descriptions. The various steps by which Isaac Ogden goes down to drunken degradation are portrayed with unusual power, and though "Wenderholme" would hardly be called a "temperance story," yet few books designedly written for the purpose set before us so strongly the horrors of drinking. Then we have the money-making, tight-fisted Jacob Ogden and his worthy mother—two of the strongest characters in the book, the ease-loving Stanburne and his clear-headed but not over lovable wife; the Priglys and honest Dr. Bardly and a number of indifferent characters who come and go just as men and women do in real life. It is this life-likeness in spite of the occasional dullness of a chapter, which makes "Wenderholme" such pleasant reading. It is an artist's study of real life and it is full of human nature. Shayton, and Sootythorn and Wenderholme become veritable places to us, quite as real as the towns and villages we have actually known.

It is hardly necessary to say that this novel has much of Mr. Hamerton's grace of style and manner. This in itself would make readable a far poorer novel than Wenderholme.

TALES FROM TWO HEMISPHERES. By Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen. Boston: James R. Osgood & Co.

Those who have read "Gunnar" will recall its wonderful charm of simplicity and freshness. It was like a sweet breath of Spring, full of life and health. It was the same charm we found in Bjornson's still more wonderful tales of "Arne," "The Fisher Maiden," and "The Happy Boy." It was the freshness and joy and tender pathos of a land of simpler habits and costumes than our own, where there was still, we found, the same heart of humanity beating under all. There is much the same charm in these "Tales of Two Hemispheres." Almost all of them are sad, or at least in the minor key, and there may be a certain monotone running through them. In almost all the denouement is tragic, either in incident or in the unhappy mental and spiritual conditions. "The Man who lost his Name" is perhaps the most striking of these tales, and there are passages in it which reveal a more acute and subtle comprehension of psychological states than Mr. Boyesen has elsewhere evinced, with a much stronger realization of the dramatic and even tragic possibilities of life. We even feel that he has slightly overstepped the limits of probability in his seeking for a "picturesque" situation at the close. The poor Halldan freezing to death opposite the window of his beloved is, perhaps, artistically satisfactory, but not likely to have happened. "A Good-for-Nothing" has some strong touches at the close, where the hero returns to his native land only to find that he has outgrown the woman he once loved and that between them lies a great gulf neither can cross. His struggle to be true to what he holds to be his duty is admirably described. "The Story of an Outcast" has some charming pictures of Northern life and scenery. There are passages in this tale which for their beauty and simplicity remind one of "Arne." "Truls, the Nameless" and "Asathor's Vengeance" are tragic in their ending and not so satisfactory as the other tales. But all are full of poetical and delightful touches which lift them far above the ordinary and commonplace, and reading them we feel the breath of a simpler and freer life than our own and are surrounded by an atmosphere of wonder and enchantment.

THREE CHILDREN'S BOOKS.—"Bits of Talk for Young Folks." By H. H. Boston: Roberts Brothers.

This volume contains a number of lively pieces in prose and verse, many of which, if we are not mistaken, have appeared in St. Nicholas and elsewhere. The opening poem, "The Parable of St. Christopher," is a pleasing version of the old, sweet legend. Such brief sketches as "The Expression of Rooms," "A Parable," and "Good Temper" will do something to keep children in the right way. There are stories and poems, too, which will amuse and interest the youngest readers. One of the best of them is "A Christmas Tree for Cats" with a very funny illustration.

"Flaxie Frizzle," (Boston: Lee & Shepard) is the first of a series of "Flaxie Frizzle Stories," by the ever-popular "Sophie May." Flaxie is a funny little girl who gets into all sorts of scrapes and trouble, but generally "comes up smiling," and wins our hearts in spite of her naughtiness. She is not unlike "Little Prudy" or "Dotty Dimple"; and what more need be said to introduce her to the favor of a juvenile audience?

"Roddy's Ideal," By Helen Kendrick Johnson, (New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons) is the third of the "Roddy" stories, of which "Roddy's Romance" was by far the best. This volume recounts the "goings on" of a number of lively children, and some of their performances are rather remarkable. We hardly know what to make of such a chapter as that called "The Ten Commandments" where the children "play church." However, there are some very amusing things in it, as the exposition of the fifth and sixth commandments. As a whole "Roddy's Ideal" does not compare very favorably with his "Romance" but perhaps it is too much to expect three equally good stories of the same general character.

A VOYAGE TO THE FORTUNATE ISLES. By Mrs. S. M. B. Piatt. That New World and Other Poems. By Mrs. S. M. B. Piatt. Boston: James R. Osgood & Co.

We should say that the chief excellence of Mrs. Piatt's poetry is her wealth of imagination. Her chief fault is that her fancy sometimes runs into excessive imagery and occasional obscurity. Often the general effect is striking, but the real thoughts so hidden as quite to escape us.

A Voyage to the Fortunate Isles has been before the public for several years. The longer poem is less satisfactory than some of the short pieces in the volume, like "Sometime," "One Poet's Silence," "At The Play," "His Share and Mine," etc. There is a pensive wailing through most of these verses, and indeed, Mrs. Piatt seems to find it very difficult to take a thoroughly cheerful view of life.

We think there is a decided advance in "That New World and Other Poems." There is a good deal of power in this seven-versed poem and in such lyrics as "Enchanted," "Her Cross and Mine," "The King's Memento Mori," etc. Their greatest defect is an occasional obscurity of expression, or possibly, a real failure on the part of the writer to grasp the central thought and present it clearly.

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES.

Blackwood.

DEAN SWIFT and Lord Macaulay have been the subject of considerable controversy of late. They are contrasted and compared in this number of Blackwood with the view of showing that Macaulay deserved no more honors than Swift, when each is judged by his record, that many faults were common to both and that Swift suffered for what Macaulay was praised. The times having changed, opposition was more tolerated by the party in power during the career of Macaulay than during that of Swift.

"The Woman Hater" is getting into the question of the education of women for the medical profession. The history of this reform at Edinburgh University is graphically portrayed in the language of one of the lady students, represented here as Miss Rhoda. She attacks an old saying thus: "Truth lies in no well. The place truth lies in is the middle of the turnpike-road. But one old foggy puts on his green spectacles to look for her, and another his red, and another his blue; and so they all miss her, because she is a colorless diamond. Those spectacles are preconceived notions, à priori reasoning, cant, prejudice, the depth of Mr. Shallow's inner consciousness, etc., etc. Then comes the observer, open the eyes that God has given him, tramples on all colored spectacles, and finds Truth as surely as the spectacled theorists miss her."

Classical poetry is represented in this number by a brief little gem entitled "A Greek Girl." The recent agitation between the two parties in England in regard to "The Eastern Question;" "The Question of Promotion in the Army;" "Indian Travels," and "The Life of the Prince Consort" are subjects all ably handled.

Westminster Review.

A LONG paper on Indian Affairs is the first thing on turning the cover. The struggle between colonial and home governments is evident in this glance at "recent legislature." The influence of the Secretary of State is still maintained through the exertions of Lord Salisbury, and the Westminster's good opinion is not withheld from that nobleman for his part in the matter. The advice of Sir Henry Rawlinson, in case of war with Russia, in regard to India is rejected and the reasons given.

William Godwin, husband of Mary Wollstonecraft, is the subject of an interesting memoir. The third paper is entitled, "Political Economy as a Safeguard of Democracy." It is highly instructive. The opening sentence is worth looking at. It is quite different from anything Americans heard from England "one hundred years ago." Here it is—"A time has come when even the most sanguine of conservatives or retrogressionists can scarcely conceal from themselves the fact that our national tone of thought, and consequently our national institutions, are steadily progressing toward democracy."

Lord Althorp is next brought forward as the guiding spirit of the Reform Act of 1832.

An article on "Shakspeare's Young Men," is by a lady who begins by stating that, "in the abstract, a young man is not considered less interesting than a young woman."

An able paper on "Political Development and Party Government," is well adapted to this side of the Atlantic, though intended for the other.

A notice of Dr. Hill's "True Order of Studies" appears to have been written by one who does not appreciate it. As a President of Harvard University, and one of the advanced educators of New England, Dr. Hill, as a clear thinker on educational matters, needs no aid from any quarter, and we cannot agree that the work referred to, is either "dull" or "impracticable," and we believe the suggestions it contains are consistent with the experience of the best teachers. Another absurd notice is in reference to a work by Theophilus Parsons, LL.D. The critic says that the great majority of teachers of Swedenborgianism are wholly ignorant and uneducated. Such a statement proves that the writer is not fully prepared to judge. As a class, the leaders of this sect, at least in America, are doubtless quite as well educated as those of most other sects of Christendom.

Rev. O. B. Frothingham's "Transcendentalism in New England" is more fairly treated. Even the Westminster cannot afford to be careless, and it is to be hoped that the influence of such a splendid review will not be marred by such blunders as those mentioned above.

BRIEF NOTICES.

THE latest "Vest-Pocket" volume published by J. R. Osgood & Co. is Emerson's "Nature." It is a good selection, and all who can recall what a great sensation it made on its first appearance will be glad to read it in its present form. It loses nothing with the passing years and is just as inspiring as ever.

SEASHORE AND PRAIRIE, by Mary P. Thacher (Boston: J. R. Osgood & Co.), contains a number of very pleasant sketches of travel and sight-seeing. They are the well-written reminiscences and reflections of a bright woman, who has used her eyes to good advantage, and writes agreeably, if not profoundly, of places and people and books. The sketch of Old York, Water Lilies at Newport, A Mountain Adventure, etc., are very readable. One Hundred Years Ago gives some curious and valuable facts in concise shape. Our Literary Club is an amusing account of an æsthetic club that came to an ignominious conclusion. The book will possess interest for travellers, to say nothing of the "stay-at-homes."

RUBENS' pictures in Antwerp Cathedral are suffering from having been veiled by the clerical authorities from those who did not pay to see them. The Common Council is trying to save them from growing still darker by freely letting the light upon them.

DR. FORBES WINSLOW, of Charing Cross Hospital, London, says that ten thousand lunatics now under treatment in America are sufferers from spiritualism, and that insanity from this cause increases daily in England. This sounds like a very extravagant statement, but there is no question that spiritism does a great deal of harm.

MR. JOHN FRETWELL lectured recently in Montreal on "Transylvania and the East." In a notice of the lecture the Montreal Evening Post says: "While deprecating the cruelties of the Turks, the Speaker thought the peoples of the East have not much to hope for from the Russians. England has many millions of Moslem subjects in India, and she has to be careful neither to exasperate or alienate them by her policy toward Turkey. He thinks that Mr. Gladstone is too exclusively emotional; looks too exclusively on one side of a question, and is incapable perhaps of looking all round it. The poorest use, the lecturer urged, that English men or English money could be put to is to go to war with it."

ONE of those antiquated English customs which at home are prized in proportion to their lack of present meaning, and which have the interest of romance for us, was celebrated on the night of Sunday, Nov. 11, by the parishioners of Loughton in Epping Forest. "Commoners, verderers," and all, with the wood bailiffs of the corporation, after having first dined on a stall-fed deer out of the forest, cut a bough by torch-light to assert their "lopping rights," now 800 years old, which once gave them their necessary wood.

It is a great mistake to suppose that because Miss Powars has left $50,000 to the American Unitarian Association, therefore the money talked about at Saratoga is not urgently needed by the Association. There is no connection whatever between these two "bequests." The Boston Journal says that Miss Powars was a native of Boston, as were her father and mother. She was the daughter of Captain Thomas Powars, who will be well remembered by many of our old residents. Miss Powars was eighty-two years old at the time of her death. By a long life of business and frugality and fortunate investments she was enabled to amass a fortune, the largest part of which has been given to benevolent objects. She was noted for her disinterested acts of kindness to relatives and friends, and led a quiet, useful Christian life. She was formerly a member of Dr. Channing's church, but for some years prior to her death was connected with Dr. Putnam's church.

NEW PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

BOOKS.

From G. P. Putnam's Sons.

THE BARTON EXPERIMENT. By the author of "Helen's Babies." $1.00.

THE CHILDREN'S PARADISE. By Katharine B. Zerega. With Illustrations by Lucy G. Morse. $1.50.

From A. S. Barnes & Co.

THE HISTORY OF LIBERTY. A paper read before the New York Historical Society, by John T. Akin.

From Roberts Brothers, Boston.

THE ROSE IN BLOOM. A Sequel to "Eight Cousins." By Louisa M. Alcott.

From E. P. Dutton & Co.

MILE STONES IN OUR LIFE JOURNEY. By Samuel Osgood, DD., LL.D. $1.50.

THE PARLOR CAR. By William D. Howells.

ART AND SCIENCE.

MADAME ESSIPOFF.

It has become the fashion, of late, to admire everything Russian, from the beautiful stones and royal furs to the splendid musical genius manifested by Rubenstein, and in a lesser degree by Madame Essipoff. The Russians seem to possess the quality which we call originality, a power of conceiving and representing ideas at first hand. Although not a new country, Russia has many characteristics of a new civilization, among others the youthful vigor of thought which disregards historical antecedents and aims at modelling the ideas peculiar to itself. We see this in the Russian Department at the International Exhibition at Philadelphia, in the unusual combinations in the gold and silver work, and the proud preference for following national models in every department of industry. Rubenstein himself seemed like a noble lion, submitting most unwillingly to the iron cage of civilization and shaking his mane in wrath at all social fetters. But, like the lion of old in Æsop's fable, who fell in love with a beautiful woman, this Russian lion yielded to the charms of music, and, subduing his haughty voice, utters in wondrous and mellow tones the praises of his mistress.

Seriously, we see little in Madame Essipoff to remind us of Rubenstein, unless it be the same childlike gravity and composure which was so marked in him. Madame Essipoff's style is more direct and objective than Rubenstein's, but more mechanical, and far less poetical. Like her master, however, she evidently wishes to give the inner meaning of the music she interprets, and like him she is less careful of the clear enunciation of each note than of conveying the general thought. But, while Rubenstein could afford, through the original and subjective quality of his genius, often to slur and sometimes to alter the musical phraseology of the old masters, Madame Essipoff has as yet no such right of genius. We felt the lack of distinct utterance in some of the compositions which she played last Saturday. Few could fail to admire the perfect absence of affectation, the composure of her bearing and the genuine simplicity of her interpretations. She gave them in a straightforward, unpretending manner which showed an earnestness of intention, which may develop into something greater when years have brought experience and ripeness of perception.

We regret that she gave us nothing of Beethoven at the Saturday matinee. The pieces to which she did most justice were the Paraphrase of Rigoletto, by Listz, and an Intermezzo by Von Bulow. There was evidence of strength and delicacy of touch in those pieces which, however, in a measure express themselves. Her rendering of Chopin, in a Fantasie and Scherzo which she gave us, would hardly have satisfied the capricious genius of the composer, who wanders through the maziest labyrinths of unreasonable fancies, suddenly to emerge into the clear sunshine of exquisite melody and natural harmony—as suddenly to flee from the light of day into some dark cavern of melancholy. Perhaps no nature unlike his own can do full justice to his moody meditations, and certainly we cannot blame Madame Essipoff for a failure which is due to difference of nature.

Her playing does not lack sentiment, and she brings out the singing quality of the Steinway piano in an admirable way, but of that commanding quality of genius which takes you captive in spite of all prepossessions we could discover nothing in one hearing. We are aware that this is a somewhat hypercritical estimate of Madame Essipoff's claims to public admiration, and also that the majority prefer the objective style of art. But, when we see what seems to us a merely enthusiastic reception of a musical artist, we feel it due to her as well as ourselves to subject her work to a friendly analysis.

THE AMERICAN GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY.

OPENING OF THE NEW ROOMS OF THE SOCIETY.

The American Geographical Society opened its new rooms, at No. 11 West Twenty-ninth Street, on Tuesday, November 28. A small but distinguished company was present, and the occasion, which was designed to be social and informal in character, was apparently much enjoyed by all present. In the absence of the President, Judge Daly, who was at the last moment prevented by illness from attending, the committee called upon Rev. Dr. Henry W. Bellows to voice the spirit of the occasion. Our report of Dr. Bellows' speech is imperfect, but the following extracts are substantially correct:

No country surely has a greater claim on its people for the promotion and honor of geographical science than America. We are ourselves the product of the noble passion for discovering and exploring the outlying and unknown regions of the earth. But for the sacred instinct that drives man never to submit to ignorance of what can be known, to move back the boundaries that hem in his motion and imprison him on threatening seas and arid deserts; that provokes his curiosity and overcomes his fears when dreams of possible possessions awake in his brooding mind, we should never have had the Cabots, the Amerigo Vespucci and the Columbus, that, under God, called our hemisphere and our country out of the mists of the ignorance of ages into the knowledge of the Old World and the use and possession of the children of the New.

America is the sublime and permanent, the unsurpassable triumph and monument of geographical enterprise. She must partly pay back the debt she owes the faith and boldness of the sons of the other hemisphere, by gleanings what remains of the harvest of geographical research, especially in those portions of the globe more open to her navigators or savans, and contribute it to the general sum of knowledge, which has now become so great, of this long unexplored and unknown globe. Africa, the Poles and parts of Asia still invite her explorations; and we will not forget that Wilkes and Kane and Hayes and Hall and the finder of Livinstone, and latest of all, Schuyler, in his bold and fruitful journey into the regions between Russia and the East, have partly shown what Americans can do to vindicate her claim to be a grateful child of the mother that found and lifted her cradle from the waters.

The study of the earth—and geography includes it all—is perhaps the most grateful and affectionate tribute immortal man can pay his birth-spot! For here, whatever and however much grander his experience of life and being, of nature and divine laws, may become, here he began to be! Here he opened his eyes upon the external universe; here he first saw form and color and grasped substance and welcomed air and light and heat and motion; here he first thought and felt, and looked up at the stars and down upon the flowers, and had his first exquisite taste of the mystery and glory and charm of existence. No other worlds can repeat this ever sacred and memorable experience. He cannot begin, however endlessly he may continue his being; here the thought and the feeling of his Creator first stole into his heart; here he first tasted the fruit of the knowledge of good and evil, and felt the first throbs of love and fear, of hope and of regret. This will ever remain his cradle and nursery—the place where he made his first acquaintance with himself, his race, his Maker, with art and science—and had his first outlook into the starry universe. Here, then, is the site of his first observatory; here the origin of his alphabet of communication with heaven and earth; here the unit of all he knows and can know.

And if there be anything more fitted to arouse our love and reverence for our earth and our devotion to its study, it is the growing confidence which science acquires that its laws, its substances, its revelations, are not of things local and temporary; that it is a sample of a universal texture, made of elements that exist and rule in the most distant spheres; that its laws extend to it from a divine centre, that sweeps into unity all other worlds, and that its knowledges and sciences do not end here, or have their uses superseded or belittled by what is to be learned hereafter, but only carried on, increased and perfected.

The universe is indeed a university; but this grammar-school of earth, with its little museum of wonders and patterns, is stored from the University itself, and conducted under the same head, so that it is truly a preparatory school, whose lessons will not prove unrelated to those higher studies before us in other stages of knowledge. I can believe that the arches of heaven itself may have sung when Newton and Kepler, Laplace and Humboldt entered the abode where what we vainly call earthly science and art are proved immortal and not less honored, but only further known; and it is no profane fancy that the great explorers of earth and sky may celebrate their human achievements and keep the anniversary of the days when they made their first great discoveries even amid the joys and victories of their new abodes.

* * * * * The great commander gathers his battalions under many different colors; sometimes it is the cavalry, sometimes the infantry, sometimes the artillery that has the post of honor in the front. Nay, often each arm in his service is called to wait until slower arms come up—before the advance can be made along the whole line. But He never loses a battle, nor suffers any one of His armies to betray the rest. Science seems just now in the van, but she is there in the common interest, and she will neither take nor hold the enemies' lines—ignorance, sin and poverty—without mingling her colors with all the rest. Let us not envy nor miscall her services nor withhold our own, if we are ranked in a less immediately popular or a less conspicuous corps.

Finally, I congratulate you upon the social features of this new home, these ample and inviting parlors, and the preparations for a festive interchange of minds and hearts in the presence of a high scientific study and amid books of reference and atlases and charts and curiosities, stimulating to conversation and intellectual pleasures. Every such provision for the social wants of intellectual and studious men and women, in this strangely unsocial stage of our intellectual life, in this capital city, where society is mainly frivolous and external, is to be welcomed with applause. Excepting the artists, there is no class of persons devoted to the higher culture of humanity that here appear to have a coherent and mutually dependent life of sympathy and co-operative feeling. Neither literature, poetry, philosophy, science nor theology have any successful social centres, where men engaged in these pursuits are sure to find fraternal sympathy and social relation with their peers. It is complained, I think with justice, that thinking men are isolated, unknown to each other, driven into solitude and an unproductive bachelorhood by a certain unfavorableness to social intercourse which our commercial atmosphere produces. It is certain that a finer spirit exists in other American cities than in our own, in this respect. It is true our clubs do something to obviate the difficulty, but they are expensive and heterogeneous. I trust that these rooms will call together and invite into friendly relations and social intercourse upon a scientific ground all young and thirsting geographers and scientists and all those who find in the purlieus of science relaxation from commercial and professional life. The Geographical Society could hardly do a better service than make science social while others are making social science popular.

ART NOTES.

A PALACE on the Grand Canal, Venice, has been purchased by Mr. Layard, of Nineveh fame, who is now furnishing it with works of art gathered from many lands.

THE next Annual Exhibition of the American Society of Painters in Water Color will be made as usual at the New York Academy of Design, and be opened in January.

THE spire of Rouen Cathedral, which has just been completed, is an iron structure as ill matched as possible with the grand building which it surmounts. About all the good which can be said of it is that it is 494 feet high.

MESSRS. M. KNOEDLER & Co. have reopened their gallery on Fifth Avenue, after having much extended it and completed numerous improvements, which will enable them to make still more attractive what has always been to art lovers one of the most attractive places in the city.

THE collection of paintings now on exhibition at the Leavitt Art Rooms, and to be sold on Friday evening, beside many portraits by the late Charles L. Elliott, contains numerous examples of American art, with several oil paintings attributed to Rubens and Raphael, and a number of studies by Williams, Chavet and others. Among the American artists represented are McEntee, Colman, Kensett Beard, and others.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

THE SHARK.

BY L. E. R.

Oh! blithe and merrily sang the shark,
As he sat on the house-top high,
A-cleaning his boo's and smoking cheroots,
With a single glass in his eye.

With Martin and Day he polished away,
And a smile on his face did glow,
While merry and bold the chorus he trolled
Of "Gobble-em-upsky ho!"

He sang so loud he astonished the crowd
Which gathered from far and near,
For they said: "Such a sound in the country round
We never, no, never did hear!"

He sang of the ships he'd eaten like chips,
In the palmy days of his youth;
And he added: "If you don't believe it is true,
Pray examine my wisdom teeth!"

He sang of the whales who'd have given their tails
For a glance of his raven eye;
And the sword-fish, too, who their weapons drew,
And vowed for his sake they'd die.

He sang about wrecks and hurricane decks,
And the mariner's perils and pains,
Till every man's blood up on end it stood,
And their hair ran cold in their veins.

But, blithe as a lark, the merry old shark
Sat on the sloping roof;
Though he said: "It is queer that no one draws near
To examine my wisdom tooth!"

He carolled away by night and by day,
Until he made every one ill;
And I'll wager a crown that unless he's come down
He is probably carolling still.

St. Nicholas.

BERTIE'S CHRISTMAS EVE.

It was a disappointment, to be sure. Though Bertie was as manly a little fellow as ever lived, he could not keep the tears back as he tied his old knit comforter about his throat with his poor, blue, half-frozen fingers, making it cover as much space on his chill little body as he could; for it had to serve as an overcoat as well, and the weather was freezing cold. There had been so many people going in and out of the store all day that his hands nearly froze to the plated handles; for it was the day before Christmas, and Bertie was stationed at the door in one of the large stores on Sixth Avenue. He was too small for a cash-boy, they had told his mother when she applied to the firm a little while before, with tears in her eyes; but the busy season was coming, and for a very small consideration he might tend the door. Every Saturday night he gave his week's earnings to his mother, and then they went out together and bought a few, a very few, necessities with the money.

They had not always been so poor. Bertie could remember very well when he had warm, handsome clothes, and had lived in a fine house, and had a father as well as a mother; but his father had died, and afterwards all their things were sold, and they gradually became poorer and poorer, until now they hardly ever had enough to eat, and were scantily warmed and clothed.

They had no relatives living, though his mother had often talked to him about his Uncle Egbert, her brother, who, many years before, had gone away to China to make his fortune, which he had succeeded in doing, but who, on his way home, had disappeared and never been heard of again. This had happened about a year ago, and Bertie had nearly forgotten him and the stories he used to hear about the wonderful things Uncle Egbert saw and the beautiful Chinese carving he used to send home. He was so busy, and had so many other and sadder things to think about, poor little boy.

His disappointment on the day before Christmas happened in this way: He was not so wise as most of the boys and girls are now-a-days, who know everything, and until the Christmas of which I am writing had really believed in Santa Claus. The Christmas before, his stocking was not very full, to be sure, but still he found something in it; and until about a week before he had been sure that Santa Claus would bring something especially nice to his mother and himself, and it cost his mother an extra heart-ache to be obliged to undeceive him. For a long time after she had told him, he sat meditatively in his little wooden chair close to the fire until it was time to go to bed.

"I know," thought he, as he covered himself up, head and all, with the scanty bed-clothes, "I will be Santa Claus myself. I will go and buy mother something with my own money. Perhaps I shall have a few pennies left from Saturday night, and they say that Mr. G. always gives the boys a little something Christmas eve; so I will get mother a warm pair of stockings, perhaps, or some thick gloves"; and, with these thoughts, he dropped asleep. But, alas! every cent of his wages Saturday had to go for kindling wood.

"Never mind," thought he. "I shall certainly get something the day before Christmas."

Fancy his disappointment, then, when, instead of the expected present, Mr. G. made a speech to all the men and boys in his employ, telling them that the times were so hard that he could not afford to give them any Christmas remembrance this year; that he was very sorry, but he could not help it. A great hard thing came up in Bertie's throat, and hurt him as he listened, and, in spite of all he could do, the tears well out of his eyes down the bridge of his nose, though he sopped them up so fast with the corner of his comforter that he thought nobody saw them.

But he was mistaken. Two people were watching him, and turned and looked after him as he walked slowly down the store, rubbing his nose sorrowfully. One of these persons was a clerk at the ribbon counter, who was always strongly perfumed with hair-oil and cheap cologne, and wore an immense seal ring and a glass shirt-pin. This one gazed at Bertie's back for a moment, and then remarked to the other: "It's mighty hard on the little chap; old G. is as mean as dirt, anyway"; and departed to purchase a bottle of jockey club.

The other was a big, rough cash-boy, of whom Bertie had always been rather afraid. "Sugar"! was his not over lucid comment, as he rushed down the long aisle after him.

"See here, sonny," said he very hurriedly, as if he had not a minute to lose; "Mr. Paine giv me ten cents this morning, as he knowed we wasn't to have no present, and here's five; it's all right." And, with these words, he disappeared, leaving Bertie staring, with eyes and mouth wide open.

It was some time before he could collect his thoughts sufficiently to realize that the five cents lay in his hand to do what he liked with. He looked for the boy, but he had gone, and all that was left for Bertie to do was to make up his mind as to the most advantageous manner of laying out his sudden acquisition. He turned the five cents over in his palm as he pondered.

"I won't buy anything to eat," he said to himself, "because that will be all gone in a little while; and then mother will make me eat half of it, besides. No! I will go to the cheap store, and see what I can find."

He rushed around to the cheap store, half dreading lest he should find it shut, for it was late ; but it was wide open and full of people, and Bertie found it hard work to get waited upon. He found that there were not many very elegant articles to be purchased for the sum in his possession ; but, after much reflection, he decided upon a small blue heart, which came to exactly five cents. His spirits rose in spite of the cold, as he pocketed his prize and ran home as fast as he could go, for he knew his mother would feel anxious about him. His dear patient mother, who met him at the door with the brave, sweet smile that he knew and loved so well, took off his cap and comforter, and then they drew their chairs as near as possible to the fire, for the room was cold, and drank hot tea without milk or sugar and ate bread without butter cheerfully, for it made them happy to be together.

"I have got some nice beefsteak for our Christmas dinner, with potatoes, and sponge cake for dessert, dear," said the mother, stroking the curly head which lay on her knee.

"Oh, mother darling, won't that be nice?—and you must hang up your stocking too," said Bertie, earnestly.

"I am afraid I shall find it as empty as yours will be, my poor boy," answered his mother. "Santa Claus will skip over us this Christmas ; but perhaps he will come next time."

"Never mind, mother. Do hang up your stocking just to please me ; it can't do any harm, you know," begged Bertie.

"Very well, dear, I will if you want me to," she answered. "And now you must go to bed, for you must be very tired after your hard day's work ; but first you shall help me hang up my stocking."

This arrangement afforded a fine opportunity for Bertie to slip his little blue heart in the toe of the stocking, and a casual observer would never have suspected that it contained anything at all. This done, Bertie went to bed, and in a few minutes slept a heavy, dreamless sleep.

Suddenly he became conscious of an unusual noise in the room. His mother was, and through the half-opened door of the tiny closet in which he slept he saw a tall figure in a long shaggy coat trimmed with fur, with snow on some parts of it. The being had dark hair and a curly brown beard, and looked of gigantic size in the dim light.

"Why, it is Santa Claus!" thought Bertie, hardly daring to breathe lest the vision should vanish. "And oh! he is talking to mother. I will listen to what he is saying ; but I wish I was not so sleepy."

He lay down again in bed, but though Santa Claus and his mother were talking very fast and earnestly, they spoke in low tones, and Bertie could not hear very well. He caught a word now and then, and found that Santa Claus seemed to be telling about a wonderful escape from shipwreck and all sorts of strange adventures. He could see by the shadows that Santa Claus had his arm around his mother, and he heard subdued exclamations, which became more and more indistinct, and finally melted away altogether as the poor little tired boy sank to sleep again in spite of his excitement. Again he was roused, however, by being lifted from his bed, and on half opening his eyes saw that Santa Claus had taken him up in his arms, and was wrapping him in something very thick and warm, while his mother stood by laughing and crying all at once. But it seemed as if nothing could ever wake him up entirely that night.

"Are you Santa Claus?" he murmured drowsily.

"I shouldn't wonder, my boy ; it's all right now ; go off to sleep again. I will take care of you and your blessed mother"; and Santa Claus' eyes glistened as though there were moisture in them, and his voice sounded so kind to Bertie that he felt sure that it was all right, and went to sleep again directly. Not so soundly though but that he was half conscious of being carried swiftly somewhere by horses with jingling sleigh-bells, though he did not know whether they were going through the air or not, and finally being put in a bed that was so comfortable that he hardly had been in it a second before he went off again as sound as a top, and forgot all about Santa Claus and his performances.

He opened his eyes the next morning to find the bright sunlight of a beautiful Christmas morning streaming into the room, which was strange, for his closet had no window.

Why! How! What!

What had happened? He was not in his own little closet at all, but in a great soft bed in a room all filled with beautiful things, and a fire burning brightly in the grate, and over him stood his dear mother ; and—yes—he remembered now—there was Santa Claus himself, only without his shaggy coat.

"Bertie, Bertie, darling, wake up"! said his mother, kissing him. "It is Christmas morning, and a merry Christmas it is for us, dear, for Uncle Egbert has come home"!

"Oh! That is lots better than Santa Claus," shouted Bertie, and threw his arms round his uncle's neck ; and there never were three happier people than "Santa Claus" and Bertie and his mother that Christmas morning.

But Bertie's mother always wore a little blue heart attached to her watch-chain, and seemed to value it more than anything else she possessed.

ISABEL FRANCIS.

SELECTIONS.

WHAT MAPS ARE FOR.

[From Rev. Francis Tiffany's Essay "The Life of To-day the Interpreter of the Life of the Past."]

WE, of to-day, are rapidly emerging from a long period of traditionalism and second-hand rote repetition in the school, the State, the Church, and are beginning to deal at first-hand with nature and life. The teacher is crying, "less of text-books, show the child the thing itself, the flower, the crystal, the fish's heart, the sheep's skull." They begin to feel as Agassiz did when he said once, in substance, in his impetuous way: "Years ago I was teaching geography to a class of children in my native village, and could not get the meaning of a map through their heads. It was so much red, yellow, and line to them. At last I had a happy thought. 'Come round to my house this afternoon,' I said, 'and we will take a walk.' They came, and off we started to climb a spur of the Jura. Then we had God's fresh creation in view. I opened the map and began. 'Now, children, look at that wandering black line. 'There's what it means;' and I pointed to the silver-shining river winding through the plain at our feet. 'Now, children, again, look at those round dots with a name printed over each one of them. There's what they mean;' and I directed all eyes to the spires and houses of the towns and villages in sight. 'Now once more! You see those shaded spaces on the map? There's what they mean;' and I pointed to the glorious Alps. 'These shining rivers, many-spired towns, snow-clad mountain ranges, these are what you are to think about; the lines are only to tell you to do that.' Then the children clapped their hands, and cried, 'O, now we understand a map.'"

Alas! there are a great many maps that even we elders do not understand, and on which we never get beyond the dots, and lines, and shaded spaces to the grand realities they stand for; thinking, in our blindness, the mountains and rivers were made for the map, and not the map for the mountains and rivers. Too often, the New Testament is one of these. We must climb our spur of the Jura, and look off first-hand over God's great fresh creation. For the root trouble with preachers and congregations to-day is, that they do not half believe there is any living human nature left in the world to interpret by. They think human nature once existed, and that there is a record of what it was and what it did, in the Bible, Shakspeare, and a few other books. But Judas is dead; so is Zaccheus, so eager and sprightly once to climb a tree; so, too, Nicodemus, circumspect enough to wait till night-fall before venturing to walk abroad; so Mary committing the unpardonable sin in woman of losing sight of the fact that the

MINISTERS come to the front in the lecture courses to be given this Winter. Rev. W. H. H. Murray is always popular, and will probably regale his hearers with new stories of the wilderness. Rev. Henry Ward Beecher speaks on "The North and South," and must necessarily drop into politics.

A CONGREGATIONAL church at Worcester, Mass., has decided that women should have no voice in church government. They think that "male members should do the voting." This is rather hard upon the faithful women, who, doubtless, constitute two-thirds of the congregation, unless the Worcester church is exceptional.

WE are to have a Trappist monastery near Buffalo, for which establishment works are already on their way from various parts of the world. The strictest rules are to be observed—perpetual silence, vigorous fasts, penances and lengthy devotions. It will be interesting to have this bit of mediævalism right in the heart of our nineteenth century bustle and confusion.

THESE are "hard times" indeed, and the present Winter bids fair to be exceptionally trying. The managers of the Boston Provident Association say that during the twenty-five years of their organization there never have been so many cases of poverty as now. During the present year, about 19,954 persons have been aided, and of this number 17,014 are foreigners.

A PROFESSOR of theology in Dunedin, New Zealand, recently made an unfortunate slip in classing the evolutionists and atheists together. In consequence there has been a lively debate and something of a scrimmage between the theologians and scientists of that region. It would do no harm to say once for all that a man might be a Christian and an evolutionist at the same time.

SOME of the Jewish synagogues look with favor upon certain Christian devices, and the Jewish Messenger would like to see "some Moodyism introduced in the Jewish form of service, some enthusiasm, some life." We would prefer to have the "enthusiasm" without the "Moodyism," and we believe the former is obtainable without the cheap and sensational devices of the latter.

THERE is a popular superstition in Rome that after a cardinal dies three other cardinals fall ill and soon die. A curious verification of this idea has followed the death of Cardinal Antonelli: By the way, it is reported that the Pope is rather nervous about the revelations which may be made by papers Antonelli left behind him, which are said to contain many curious secrets worth knowing.

THERE WAS a grand Thanksgiving dinner at the Hall of the Boston Young Men's Christian Union, with turkey and chickens and all the "fixings." The many young men who were unable to be with home friends greatly enjoyed the occasion. Speeches were made by the President, Mr. Baldwin, Rev. J. F. Locke, Mr. Fred Clarke and others. Eleven States and seven nationalities were represented.

THE monument to Religious Liberty, for the Centennial grounds in Philadelphia, was unveiled and dedicated on Thanksgiving Day. One figure in the marble group is a boy bearing "an undying flame" to symbolize the light of religion that should ever illumine the path of liberty. It would certainly be a matter for congratulation if religion in this country had always cast a clearer light on the religious pathway.

REV. JOHN F. LOCKE, who has been the Librarian at the B. Y. M. Christian "Union" for nearly five years has retired from that position. It is his intention to again assume the charge of a parish. In addition to his ability as a preacher his experience gained at the Union specially fits him to attend to the practical work of a religious society. The President of the Union (at 18 Boylston St., Boston), will be pleased to forward any letters for Mr. Locke which may be sent to his care.

WENDELL PHILLIPS spoke last Sunday morning at Parker Memorial Hall, Boston. The subject of his lecture was "Education." In the course of his remarks he said: "I protest against the whole school system of Massachusetts." Turning to New York, he observed: "The city of New York is given away every year as Morrissey, Kelly and O'Brien direct; yet these men are not Platos." Evidently Mr. Phillips has not lost his power of heavy sarcasm and upright and downright denunciation.

THE Parisians, untiring as ants, are repairing and re-adorning their beautiful, though recently damaged city, against the World's Fair of 1878. As they have a new opera house of vast extent and cost they are next to have the new Avenue de l'Opera which will make away with many an old building. The Hotel Dieu is nearly rebuilt, and projected new streets are causing the demolition of hundreds of buildings. The Parisians are excitable, and will, of course, overdo the thing, but they have also a thrifty, economical way with them and will probably succeed in reimbursing themselves from the foreigners who will go to see their last new Paris.

REV. GEO. A. THAYER, of the Broadway Unitarian Church, South Boston, believes in church organization, in pulpit topics for the times, and in looking after the young people. Among the subjects of Sunday evening lectures announced are the following: "How the Earth was Built," "Man's Age upon our Globe," "Darwinism, What it Means," "The Birth and Death of the Planets." This scientific course will be followed by one on "Life and its Conduct," chiefly aimed at young people. The themes to be treated are, "The Homes We Want," "The Needs of Our Politics," "The Money We Spend," "The Hopes of the Young Men," "The Books We Read," "The Aims of Young Women," etc.

The Inquirer.

Published every Thursday, from the middle of September to the middle of July, in the PARK BANK BUILDING, 214 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

To be in season for insertion the same week, communications intended for publication must be forwarded in time to reach this office not later than Tuesday. No attention is paid to anonymous communications. We require the name and address of every writer, not necessarily for publication, but as guarantees of good faith.

Communications relating to the editorial department of the paper should be addressed to: "Editor of The Inquirer, P. O. Box 109, New York City;" all others to "Publisher," same address.

Subscription Price.

Three Dollars and Twenty Cents per year, in advance. Clergymen, Two Dollars and Twenty Cents. Remittances should be made by Registered Letter or by Post-Office Money Order, or Draft on New York, payable to PUBLISHER OF THE INQUIRER.

Advertising Rates.

Six cents per agate line per week; outside page and page next reading matter, ten cents per line. Special Notices twenty cents per line.

Discount—Five per cent. on yearly accounts amounting to $250 and under $500. Six per cent. on yearly accounts amounting to $500 or more.

Copy for Thursday's paper received until Tuesday afternoon.

Advertisements must be acceptable in every respect.

Office, PARK BANK BUILDING, 214 Broadway.

Address,

THE INQUIRER,

Box 109, New York.

Protestant Leaders.

A COURSE OF LECTURES

BY

JOHN W. CHADWICK,

AT THE

Second Unitarian Church, Brooklyn,
Corner of Clinton and Congress Streets.

1876—77.

LECTURES:

- I. Luther and the Reformation. Sunday evening, Nov. 5, 1876.
- II. John Calvin and his System. Sunday evening, Dec. 3, 1876.
- III. George Fox and Quakerism. Sunday evening, Dec. 17, 1876.
- IV. Wesley and Methodism. Sunday evening, Jan. 7, 1877.
- V. Emanuel Swedenborg. Sunday evening, Feb. 4, 1877.
- VI. Murray and Universalism. Sunday evening, March 4, 1877.
- VII. Thomas Paine: His Relation to his own and later Times in Matters of Religion. Sunday evening, April 1, 1877.
- VIII. Channing and Unitarianism. Sunday evening, April 15, 1877.
- IX. Theodore Parker. Sunday evening, May 6, 1877.

Hour of Lecture, HALF-PAST SEVEN.

Morning Service at 10:35 precisely. Vesper Service, Third Sunday Evening of each Month, with the above exceptions.

Madame Ivan C. Michels,

SHAKSPEARIAN READER.

Accepts engagements for Church and Parlor Readings. Ladies and Gentlemen thoroughly instructed in Elocution. For Terms and Testimonials apply to 33 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

10 PER CENT. NET.

Kansas, Missouri and Iowa Improved Farm First Mortgage Coupon Bonds Guaranteed. We guarantee, as an assurance, that we loan not to exceed one-third of the actual value. In over six years' business never lost a dollar; never delayed a day on interest or principal; neither we nor our customers ever took an acre of land under foreclosure. Send for particulars and references. J. B. WATKINS & CO., LAWRENCE, KAN., or HENRY DICKINSON, Manager, 72 Cedar Street, New York.

Francis & Loutrel,

No. 45 MAIDEN LANE,

STATIONERS, PRINTERS,

Manufacturers of Patent Spring Back Account Books.

All kinds of first-class Stationery, Writing Papers, Desks, Portfolios, Scrap-Books, Expense-Books, Diaries, Ladies' and Gents' Wash Books, Pocket-Cutlery, Cards, Chessmen, Wallets, &c., &c.

We keep everything in our line, and sell at lowest prices.

To Printers: Use our Patent Composition for Printers Inking Rollers. Superior to any in use. Patent Copyable Printing Inks, all colors.

Holiday Music Books!

Two Splendid Volumes for Presents.

THE WORLD OF SONG!

Price in Boards $2.50. Cloth $3.00. Gilt $4.00.

Barely have we issued a book of songs including such a variety of really first-class and popular Vocal Music, 250 pages, full Sheet Music size. Songs by nearly sixty different composers, and among the compositions are many such gems as "Come to me quickly," "Golden Locks are Silver," "My Heart's best Love," "She's a Rosy, she's a Rosy," and Millard's "Whippoorwill."

We publish 19 valuable collections, uniform with the "World" and "Gems." Send for Catalogue of "HOME MUSICAL LIBRARY," and select one or more of its books for Christmas.

GEMS OF THE DANCE!

A Companion to the famous "Gems of Strauss!"

$2.50 in Boards, $3.00 in Cloth, $4.00 in Gilt.

The "Gems of Strauss" had a wonderful success, and this new work is fully its equal, and contains the recent "Strauss" pieces, and many others by Gung'l, Lamothe, Faust, Cotte, Zikoff, and other eminent composers. 222 pages, full Sheet Music size, well filled with Waltzes, Galops, Polkas, Quadrilles, etc.

Either book mailed, post-free, for Retail Price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

C. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 Broadway,
New York.

J. E. DITSON & CO.,
Successors to Lee & Walker,
Philadelphia.

New Works by Prof. F. Hui- DEKOPER!! Now Ready.

JUDAISM AT ROME, B. C. 76, to A.D. 140.
By DR. FREDERIC HUIDEKOPER (President Meadville University, Pa.) 12mo, Cloth, $2.25.

THE BELIEF OF THE FIRST THREE CENTURIES CONCERNING CHRIST'S MISSION TO THE UNDERWORLD. By DR. FREDERIC HUIDEKOPER.
12mo. Cloth, $1.00.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

JAMES MILLER, Publisher,

617 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Books that every Unitarian SHOULD READ.

DR. DEWEY'S NEW BOOK.

THE TWO GREAT COMMANDMENTS.
SERMONS BY REV. ORVILLE DEWEY, D.D. 12mo,
Cloth, $1.50.

ORTHODOXY AND REVIVALISM. Sermons by REV. J. T. SUNDERLAND, of Chicago. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Mailed, postage paid, on receipt of price.

JAMES MILLER, Publisher,

617 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Lectures and Sermons,

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

FIRST SERIES.

- The Education of Conscience.
- Self Respect.
- The Higher Reverence.
- God on our Side.
- Man and the Bible.
- The Best Use of Sunday.

SECOND SERIES.

- The Essential Piety of Modern Science.
- A Rational Church.

Also, WAY, TRUTH AND LIFE, a Biography of N. A. Staples, with sermons, price, $1.00.

For sale by CHARLES P. SOMERBY, 139 Eighth St., New York. Copies sent by mail at the rate of five cents each and postage.

BLVMYER MFG CO
BELLS
CHURCH SCHOOL FIRE ALARM
Fine toned, low priced, fully warranted. Catalogues giving full particulars, prices, etc., sent free.
BLVMYER MANUFACTURING CO.,
664 to 694 West Eighth St., Cincinnati, O.

1877.

Postage Free.

NOW IS THE TIME TO SUBSCRIBE

TO

HARPER'S PERIODICALS.

The success of Harper's periodicals is among the remarkable facts of the publishing business of this or any other age or country.—Christian Advocate, N. Y.

Of these standard publications it is not necessary to say more than that each resumes in itself the history and progress of the time in a certain department; one containing the cream of current literature, a second preserving and illustrating all events of importance the world over, the third anticipating fickle fashion and chronicling its changes, and all commending themselves equally to the reader, no matter of what sex, age, or condition.—N. Y. World.

Harper's Magazine.

That Harper's Magazine has become a literary institution and an educator of the people a half million of readers know to-day.—Boston Transcript.

Harper's Weekly.

Harper's Weekly should be in every family throughout the land, as a purer, more interesting, higher-toned, better-illustrated paper is not published in this or any other country.—Commercial Bulletin, Boston.

Harper's Bazar.

The ladies best appreciate the merits of the Bazar, a weekly devoted entirely to their interests in all its various departments of literature, fashion, and domestic arts. It is an admirably conducted illustrated paper, containing essays, editorials, stories, and general information of a superior order.—Brooklyn Eagle.

TERMS for 1877.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE,	One Year.....	$4 00
HARPER'S WEEKLY,	One Year.....	4 00
HARPER'S BAZAR,	One Year.....	4 00

One copy of either will be sent for one year, POSTAGE PREPAID by the Publishers, to any Subscriber in the United States or Canada, on receipt of four dollars.

HARPER'S MAGAZINE, HARPER'S WEEKLY, and HARPER'S BAZAR, for one year, $10 00; or any two for $7 00; postage prepaid by the Publishers.

An extra copy of either the MAGAZINE, WEEKLY, or BAZAR will be sent gratis for every Club of FIVE SUBSCRIBERS at $4 00 each, in one remittance; or, Six Copies for $20 00, without extra copy; postage prepaid by the Publishers.

Address,

HARPER & BROTHERS, New York.

Subscriptions taken for Harper's Periodicals by Booksellers and Periodical Dealers throughout the United States and Canada.

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY

Manufacture those celebrated Bells for CHURCHES, ACADEMIES, &c. Price List and Circulars sent free.
HENRY McSHANE & CO.
BALTIMORE, MD.

TROY BELLS.

THE JONES & CO.
Old Established Troy Bell Foundry have continue to manufacture those superior Bells which have made Troy celebrated throughout the world. All Bells Warranted Satisfactory. Particular attention given to Church Bells, Chimes and Pells of Bells. Illustrated Catalogues sent free.

Bryant and Longfellow.

A superb life-size portrait of either of these poets will be sent to every subscriber to the ATLANTIC MONTHLY for 1877, who remits $5.00 direct to the Publishers (H. O. Houghton & Co., Riverside Press, Cambridge, Mass.); and for $6.00 the magazine and both portraits will be sent.

The Best Present

FOR PASTOR, TEACHER OR FRIEND
IS THE UNABRIDGED ENLARGED AND CORRECTED
EDITION OF DR. WILLIAM SMITH'S
DICTIONARY OF THE BIBLE,

Published by Hurd & Houghton, New York (The Riverside Press, Cambridge), in four volumes, 3,667 pages, with 596 illustrations. Price in cloth, $26; sheep, $30; half calf, $36. Sold by all booksellers, or can be obtained direct from the publishers.

BRYANT'S

POETICAL WORKS.

A New Illustrated Edition.

1 vol., small 4to.

With 100 Illustrations by Birket Foster, Harry Fenn, Alfred Fredericks and others.

Price, in cloth, gilt edges, $4; morocco, extra, $8; tree calf, $10.

From the Tribune.

"This new and beautiful edition should have a permanent place in every intelligent household in the country. The paper, typography and illustrations are alike excellent, and fitly enbalm the life's work of one of the chief founders of our literature."

from the Philadelphia Inquirer.

"It is not too much to say that, in the United States, Bryant stands in the first rank, to which he was admitted quite early in his literary life, when the decided evidence of brilliancy he had given in 'Thanatopsis' had been more than sustained."

From the Hartford Post.

"In every respect the work is an excellent contribution to the publications of the year, and Mr. Bryant may well congratulate himself on the superb setting which his jewels of thought have been favored with."

From the Northern Christian Advocate.

"What new thing can be said of our laureate? He who has enriched our literature with beauty after beauty during threescore years, whom our Legislature has stooped to reverence, and to whom the people have presented such a tribute of esteem as was never offered to any writer on this continent before, and yet whose writings always came forth spontaneously, unpurchased, needs not to be advertised now."

From the Albany Times.

"His name is classical in the literature of the language. Wherever English poetry is read and loved his poems are known by heart. Others before him have sung the beauties of creation and the greatness of God, but no one ever observed external things more closely, or transferred his impressions to paper in more vivid colors."

D. APPLETON & CO., Publishers,

549 and 551 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.

Established in 1837.

Superior Bells of Copper and Tin, mounted with the best Rotary Hangings, for Churches, Schools, Farms, Factories, Court-houses, Fire Alarms, Tower Clocks, etc. Fully Warranted. Illustrated Catalogue sent Free.

VANDUSEN & TIPP, 102 E. 2d St., Cincinnati, O.

"Choicest Literature of the Day."—N. Y. Tribune.

THE MOST EMINENT LIVING authors, Prof. Max Müller, Prof. Tyndall, Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Dr. W. B. Carpenter, Professor Huxley, R. A. Proctor, Frances Power Cobbe, The Duke of Argyll, Jas. A. Froude, Mrs. Muloch, Mrs. Oliphant, Mrs. Alexander, Miss Thackeray, Jean Ingelow, George MacDonald, Wm. Black, Anthony Trollope, Matthew Arnold, Henry Kingsley, Francis Galton, W. W. Story, Auerbach, Ruskin, Carlyle, Tennyson, Browning and many others are represented in the pages of

Littell's Living Age.

Jan. 1, 1877, the Living Age enters upon its 132d volume, with the continued commendation of the best men and journals of the country, and with constantly increasing success.

In 1877 it will furnish to its readers the productions of the foremost authors above named and many others; embracing the choicest Serial and Short Stories by the Leading Foreign Novelists, and an amount, Unapproached by any other Periodical in the world, of the most valuable literary and scientific matter of the day, from the pens of the leading Essayists, Scientists, Critics, Discoverers and Editors, representing every department of Knowledge and Progress.

The LIVING AGE (in which its only competitor, "Every Saturday," has been merged) is a weekly magazine of sixty-four pages, giving more than

THREE AND A QUARTER THOUSAND double column octavo pages of reading-matter yearly. It presents in an inexpensive form, considering its amount of matter, with freshness, owing to its weekly issue, and with a satisfactory completeness attempted by no other publication, the best Essays, Reviews, Criticisms, Tales, Sketches of Travel and Discovery, Poetry, Scientific, Biographical, Historical and Political Information, from the entire body of Foreign Periodical Literature.

The importance of the LIVING AGE to every American reader as the only satisfactorily fresh and COMPLETE compilation of an indispensable current literature—indispensable because it embraces the productions of

THE ABLEST LIVING WRITERS, is sufficiently indicated by the following recent

Opinions:

"Simply indispensable to any one who desires to keep abreast of the thought of the age in any department of science or literature."—Boston Journal.

"A pure and perpetual reservoir and fountain of entertainment and instruction."—Hon. Robert C. Winthrop.

"The best periodical in America."—Chicago.

"It has no equal in any country."—Philadelphia Press.

"In no other single publication can there be found so much of sterling literary excellence."—N. Y. Evening Post.

"It reproduces the best thoughts of the best minds of the civilized world upon all topics of living interest."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

"Incomparable in the richness, variety and sterling worth of its articles, and equal to several ordinary magazines in the amount of matter presented."—The Standard, Chicago.

"The best of all our eclectic publications."—The Nation, New York.

"And the cheapest. A monthly that comes every week."—The Advance, Chicago.

"With it alone a reader may fairly keep up with all that is important in the literature, history, politics and science of the day."—The Methodist, N. Y.

"The ablest essays, the most entertaining stories, the finest poetry of the English language, are here gathered together."—Illinois State Journal.

"It is the only compilation that presents with a satisfactory completeness, as well as freshness, a literature embracing the productions of the ablest writers living. It is, therefore, indispensable to every one who desires a thorough compendium of all that is admirable and noteworthy in the literary world."—Boston Post.

"Ought to find a place in every American home."—N. Y. Times.

Published weekly at $8 per year, free of postage.

EXTRA OFFER FOR 1877.

To all new subscribers for 1877 will be sent gratis the six numbers of 1876, containing, with other valuable matter, the first instalments of a new and powerful serial story, "The Marquis of Lossie," by GED. MACDONALD, now appearing in the LIVING AGE from advance sheets.

Club Prices for the best Home and Foreign Literature. "Possessed of the Living Age and one or other of our vivacious American monthlies, a subscriber will find himself in command of the whole situation."—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

For $10.50 THE LIVING AGE and either one of the American $4 Monthlies (or Harper's Weekly or Bazar) will be sent for a year, both postpaid; or, for $9.50, the LIVING AGE and Scribner's St. Nicholas or Appleton's Journal.

Address LITTELL & GAY, Boston.

Eau Figaro

Restores to their original color in a few days

GRAY HAIR or BEARD.

Sold by Druggists and Barbers.

E. FOUGERA & CO., 30 North William St., New York, Agents for the United States.

Blancard's Pills

of Iodide of Iron.

Especially recommended for Scrofulous and debilitated Constitutions, etc.

Sold by Druggists. Price, $0.75 and $1.25 per bottle.

E. FOUGERA & CO., Agents, New York.

BALD HEADS

Can be covered with a piece exactly fitted to the Bald spot, so perfect, and with work so ingeniously contrived as to appear each hair just issuing from the skin, the hair being exactly of the same shade and texture as the growing hair; they are so perfect they cannot be detected. Made only at BATCHELOR'S Celebrated Wig Factory, 16 Bond Street, N. Y.

HAIR DYE.

BATCHELOR'S CELEBRATED HAIR DYE is splendid. It never fails. The only true and perfect Dye. Harmless, reliable, instantaneous. No disappointment, no ridiculous tints; remedies the ill effects of bad dyes, leaves the hair soft and beautiful Black or Brown. Sold and properly applied at BATCHELOR'S Wig Factory, 16 Bond St., N. Y. Sold by all druggists.

W. A. Batchelor's Curative Ointment Immediately cures Ring-Worm, Tetter, Itching of the Head, and all Eruptions of the Skin, Face or Body.

W. A. Batchelor's Alaska Seal Oil for the Hair. The best Hair Oil in use.

W. A. Batchelor's Dentifrice for beautifying and preserving the teeth and Gums and deodorizing the breath.

W. A. Batchelor's New Cosmetique, Black or Brown, for tinting the Hair, Whiskers or Moustaches without greasing them. Sold at factory, 16 Bond Street, New York, and by all druggists. Ask for them.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine.

B. T. BABBITT'S BABY SOAP

Only the purest vegetable manufacture. No artificial and deceptive odors to cover common and deleterious ingredients. UNRIVALLED for the TOILET and the BATH. Used in bathing children, will prevent eruptions, keep the skin soft and smooth, contribute to health, and prevent disease. Does away with all powders, chalk or other emollients. A certain preventive of chafing, itching, &c., in babies, the causes of half the crying and crossness of babyhood. Worth ten times its cost to every mother and family in Christendom; packed in boxes of 12 cakes of 2 ozs. each, and sent free by any address on receipt of $2.50. Address, B. T. Babbitt, N. Y.

The Toll Gate! Prize Picture sent free! An ingenious gem. 50 objects to find. Address, with stamp, E. O. Abbey, Buffalo, N. Y. 1491-17

$55 TO $77 a Week to Agents. Samples FREE. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta Maine.

$12 a day at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine.

MISFIT CARPETS.

English Brussels, Three Ply and Ingrain; also, Stair Carpets, Velvet Rugs, Crumb Mats, etc., very cheap. AT THE OLD PLACE.

112 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

Carpets carefully packed and sent to any part of the United States free of charge

SEND FOR PRICE LIST.

J. A. TENDALL.

BROOKLYN ADVERTISEMENTS.

OVINGTON BROTHERS,

246, 248, 250 and 252 Fulton Street,

BROOKLYN.

Fine China and Glass,

Clocks and Bronzes.

MAJOLICA, FAIENCE, GIEN, TORCAY AND WARES

Goods packed and shipped free of charge.

JOURNEY & BURNHAM

HAVE OPENED A SPLENDID STOCK OF

Autumn and Winter Goods.

LYONS COLORED SILKS,

In all the New and Choicest Shades.

BLACK SILKS,

Of the best makes imported, at an extremely low prices.

MOURNING GOODS,

Of every description.

Cartwright & Warner's UNDERWEAR and FANCY HOSIERY in great variety. KID GLOVES, the choicest colors and best in market.

Trimming fringes, new styles, and some Worsted Fringes not to be found elsewhere.

O'BRIEN & COMPANY,

IMPORTERS,

MANUFACTURERS and RETAILERS

OF DRY GOODS,

CARPETS,

CLOTHING,

141 and 143, 151 to 155 Atlantic Ave.

We solicit an inspection of our magnificent assortment in all our Departments—forty-one number—conceded to be the largest, most varied and best selected ever exhibited in Brooklyn, with a stock in value amounting to over half a million dollars.

Joseph O'Brien & Co.,

141 and 143, 151 to 155 Atlantic Avenue.

READY FOR GENTS.

The Centennial Exposition.

DESCRIBED AND ILLUSTRATED.

A graphic pen-picture of its story, grand buildings, wonderful exhibits, curiosities, and days, etc. Profusely illustrated, thoroughly popular and very cheap. Is selling immensely. 5,000 AGENTS wanted. Send for full particulars. This is the chance of 100 years to coin money fast. Get the only reliable history. EDWARD BROTHERS, Publishers, Philadelphia, Pa., Cincinnati, O., Chicago Ill., or Springfield, Mass.

CAUTION. Be not deceived by premature books assuming to be "official," and telling what will happen in August and September.

H. NOVER
FIRE INSURANCE CO.,
NO. 120 BROADWAY, N. Y.
Forty-seventh Semi-Annual Statement.

JANUARY 1, 1876.

Cash Capital.....	$500,000 00
Reinsurance Fund.....	567,717 78
Outstanding Liabilities.....	112,298 14
Net Surplus.....	392,769 20
	$1,592,775 09
ASSETS.
Cash in Bank and on hand.....	$102,756 92
United States Six Per Cent. Bonds.....	598,637 50
Bonds and Mortgages, on first lien on improved Real Estate the Cities of New York and Brooklyn.....	326,025 00
Loans on Call (Market value of Securities, ties, $196,790).....	114,850 00
City and County Bonds.....	230,265 00
Bank and Trust Co. Stocks.....	41,650 00
First Mort. R. R. Bonds at Stocks.....	57,250 00
Balance in hands of Agents and Uncollected Office Premiums.....	99,168 96
Accrued Interest on Bonds and Mortgages and Call Loans.....	7,087 23
Real Estate.....	17,109 49
	$1,592,775 09

BENJ. S. WILCOTT, President.
I. REMSE LANE, Secretary.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

For all the purposes of a Family Physic, and for curing Biliousness, Jaundice, Indigestion, Flat Stomach, Breath, Headache, Erysipelas, Rheumatism, Eruptions and skin Diseases, Biliousness, Dropsy, Tumors, Worms, Neuralgia, and a Dinner Pill, for purging the Blood.

Are the most effective and congenial purgative ever discovered. They are mild, but effective in their operation, moving the bowels surely and without pain. Although gentle in their operation, they are still the most thorough and searching cathartic medicine that can be employed: cleansing the stomach and bowels, and even the blood. In small doses of one pill a day, they stimulate the digestive organs and promote vigorous health.

AYER'S PILLS have been known for more than a quarter of a century, and have obtained a world-wide reputation for their virtues. They correct diseased action in the several assimilative organs of the body, and are composed of obstructions within their range can rarely withstand or evade them. Not only do they cure the every-day complaints of everybody, but also the most formidable and dangerous diseases that afflict the best of human skill. When they produce powerful effects, they are, at the same time, the safest and best physic for children. By their aperient action they gripe much less than the common purgatives, and never give pain when the bowels are not inflamed. They reach the vital fountains of the blood, and strengthen the system by freeing it from the elements of weakness.

Adapted to all ages and conditions in all climates, containing neither calomel nor any deleterious drug, these PILLS may be taken with safety by anybody. Their sugar-coating preserves them ever fresh, and makes them pleasant to take; while being purely vegetable, no harm can arise from their use in any quantity.

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. AYER & Co., Lowell, Mass.,
Practical and Analytical Chemists.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

L. AMAR
INSURANCE COMPANY,
OF NEW YORK.
Broadway, cor. John Street.

Capital, - - $200,000.

ASSETS, JANUARY 1, 1876.

Cash on hand and in Bank.....	$13,269 20
U. S. Bonds, market value.....	304,220 00
Loans on Call, Good Stocks Collateral, 1,000 00
Bonds and Mortgages on Brick Dwellings.....	58,900 00
Bills Receivable for Inland Prem's.....	1,820 65
Premiums in course of collection.....	7,394 70
New York Bank Stocks market value.....	21,487 20
	$408,092 05
Losses unadjusted estimated at.....	$14,300 56

ISAAC R. ST. JOHN, President.
A. B. FROTHINGHAM, Vice Pres't.
WM. R. MACDIARMID, Sec'y.

HOME
Insurance Co. of New York,

Office No. 135 Broadway.

Forty-sixth Semi-Annual Statement,
Showing the condition of the Company on the first day of July, 1876.

Cash Capital.....	$3,000,000 00
Reserve for Re-Insurance.....	1,845,521 47
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Dividends.....	247,326 66
Net Surplus.....	958,868 71
Total Assets.....	$6,051,716 84

SUMMARY OF ASSETS:

CASH IN BANKS.....	$425,946 71
BONDS AND MORTGAGES, BEING FIRST LIEN ON REAL ESTATE WORTH $4,820,000.....	1,922,738 01
UNITED STATES STOCKS (MARKET VALUE).....	2,642,125 00
BANK STOCKS (MARKET VALUE).....	287,467 50
STATE AND CITY BONDS (MARKET VALUE).....	69,250 00
LOANS ON STOCKS, PAYABLE ON DEMAND.....	423,650 00
INTEREST DUE ON 1st JULY 1876.....	181,157 19
BALANCE IN HAND OF AGENTS.....	10,833 34
BILLS RECEIVABLE.....	10,833 34
PREMIUMS DUE AND UNCOLLECTED ON POLICIES ISSUED AT THIS OFFICE.....	13,634 56
Total.....	$6,051,716 84

LIABILITIES.

CLAIMS FOR LOSSES OUTSTANDING ON 1st JULY 1876.....	$247,326 66
DIVIDENDS UNPAID.....	1,400 00
Total.....	$247,326 66

CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.
A. F. WILLMARTH, Vice-Pres't.
D. A. HEALD, 2d Vice-Pres't.
J. H. WASHBURN, Secretary.
T. B. GREENE, } Ass't Secretaries.
C. K. FRANCIS, }

A Dividend of FIVE per cent. has been declared, payable on and after Tuesday, the 18th of July.
New York, 14th July, 1876.

THE NEW JERSEY MUTUAL
LIFE INSURANCE CO.,
NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.

J. H. STEDWELL, President.
R. O. FROST, Vice-President.
C. H. BRINKERHOFF, Secretary.
J. H. CANNIFF, Cashier.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved ($2.00) Receipt Book." Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.
$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. SEYMOUR & Co., Portland, Maine.

ATLANTIC
MUTUAL INSURANCE CO.
NEW YORK,

OFFICE 51 WALL ST.

ORGANIZED 1842.

INSURES AGAINST MARINE AND INLAND NAVIGATION RISKS.

And will issue Policies making Loss payable in England.

Its Assets for the Security of its Policies are more than

TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured, and are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated during the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearing interest until redeemed.

JOHN D. JONES, President.
CHARLES DENNIS, Vice-President.
W. H. H. MOORE, 2d Vice-President.
A. A. RAYEN, 3d Vice-President.

J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

PHENIX
INSURANCE COMPANY,
OF BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Capital.....$1,000,000 00
Cash Assets, Jan. 1, 1876.....2,549,958 77

OFFICES:

Western Union Telegraph Building, BROADWAY, Cor. DEY St., New York.

Brooklyn E. D. Office, 88 Broadway.

The benefits to be derived by the public from Insurance against loss by fire are so great and numerous, when compared with its trifling cost, as to render it an imperative duty on every one to avail themselves of the protection afforded by the PHENIX INSURANCE COMPANY against the destructive ravages of FIRE, which in a few moments may lay waste the fruits of a whole life of industry.

STEPHEN CROWELL, President.
PHILANDER SHAW, Vice President.
WILLIAM R. CROWELL, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED A. D. 1850.

THE MANHATTAN
LIFE INSURANCE CO.,
OF
NEW YORK,

has paid $6,500,000 Death Claims; has paid $4,500,000 return premiums to Policy-holders; has a surplus of more than $1,600,000 over Liabilities; and a ratio of $120 Assets for every $100 Liabilities, by New York Standard of Valuation. It gives the best Insurance on the best lives at the most favorable rates.

EXAMINE THE PLANS AND RATES OF THIS COMPANY.

HENRY STOKES, President.
C. Y. WEMPLE, Vice-President.
J. L. HALSEY, Secretary.
S. N. STEBBINS, Actuary.
H. Y. WEMPLE, } Assistant Secretaries.
H. B. STOKES }

TEAS AND COFFEES

AT WHOLESALE PRICES, In lots to suit customers. SPECIAL TERMS TO CLUB ORGANIZERS and those who devote whole or part of time in selling our goods. Send for new Price List.
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY,
(P. O. Box 5643), Nos. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

"Books Make the Best Presents."

Elegant Books for Children.

By MRS. D. P. SANFORD.

A HOUSE FULL OF CHILDREN.

Small 4to. 31 full-page pictures.....$2 25

FRISK AND HIS FLOCK. Small 4to.
32 full-page pictures.....$2 25

PUSSY TIP-TOE'S FAMILY. Small
4to. 30 full-page pictures.....$2 25

All bound in full gilt, with chromo in front cover, and we can confidently say to Parents and Friends looking for presents for the younger children, Buy any or all of the three books. You cannot get handsomer or better books in this country or in England.

ON A PIN-CUSHION, and Other
Fairy Tales. By MARY DE MORGAN. With Illustrations by Wm. De Morgan. 12mo.....$1 50
"Bright fairy stories with excellent morals."

THE STAR IN THE DUST HEAP.
By the Hon. Mrs. GREENE, Author of "Onshions and Corners," "School-Boy Baronet," etc. Illustrated. $1 50

ONLY A DOG. A Charming English
Story, with 8 illustrations.....$1 50

CHILD PICTURES FROM DICKENS.
Illustrated by S. EYKING, Jr., New edition. 16mo. $1 50
All of Dickens's stories of children are here brought together.

RAGS AND TATTERS. A Story for Boys and Girls. By STELLA AUSTIN. 16mo, illustrated.....$1 00

"Those who have read and enjoyed 'Stumps' and 'Somebody' will not need to be told that the latest product of the same pen is worth reading. It is a capital tale, and the characters are well drawn."—Church Times.

SUNDAY ECHOES IN WEEK-DAY
HOURS. Sixth Series. A Tale illustrative of the Parables. 12mo, 480 pages.....$1 50

SET OF SIX VOLUMES IN NICE BOX, $9.

CHILDREN'S BIBLE STORY-BOOK.

All the Principal Old and New Testament Stories in large type, with 32 full-page pictures. New and improved. 32 pp.

FOR OLDER BOYS AND YOUNG MEN:

THE COLLEGE LIBRARY. By the Rev. F. W. FARRAR, D.D. 3 Vols., 12mo. "ST. WIN-FRED'S," "ERIC," "JULIAN HOME." $1.75 per volume. $5. for set in box.

"Possesses all the charm which made 'School Life at Rusby' so popular, while they impress even more strongly than that famous book the necessity of proper companionship at school, thorough discipline and strict attention to study."—Boston Transcript.

FOR OLDER GIRLS:

LIFE'S AFTERMATH. A Story of a Quiet People. By EMMA MARSHALL. 12mo, 352 pages.....$1 50

* Sent by mail, postage paid, on receipt of prices.

E. P. DUTTON & CO., Publishers,

713 BROADWAY, New York.

1877.—POSTPAID.—$1.60.

THE NURSERY; A Monthly
MAGAZINE FOR YOUNGEST READERS.
SUPERBLY ILLUSTRATED. 25¢. Send ten cents for a Sample Number and Premium List.

JOHN L. SHOREY,

36 Bromfield Street, Boston.

WOOD & DAVIS,

BANKERS.

31 PINE STREET, NEW YORK.

GOVERNMENT BONDS, STATE, MUNICIPAL, RAIL-ROAD SECURITIES AND GOLD BOUGHT AND SOLD ON COMMISSION.

S. D. DAVIS.

Magic Lanterns and Stereopticons

FOR

PARLOR AND EXHIBITION USE.

A fine assortment of Lantern Views from all countries and upon all subjects.

MICROSCOPES AND MICROSCOPIC OBJECTS,

AND EVERY VARIETY OF SCIENTIFIC AND OPTICAL GOODS.

Send for Catalogue.

JESSE S. CHEYNEY,

(Successor in Department of Scientific Instruments to JAMES W. QUEEN & Co.),

1 & 3 BOND STREET, New York.

THREE AWARDS

TO

REED & BARTON,

686 BROADWAY, New York,

FOR

Silver-Plated Goods

AT

Centennial Exposition, Philadelphia.

Extract from Judges' Report:

"An extensive display of Silver-Plated Goods, including all varieties of Household Table-Ware.

"Their Hollow Ware, plated upon White Metal, is of high excellence, with designs in good taste and quality and finish of superior character."

"Their many patterns of Knives, Forks and Spoons are of great excellence."

"Their Historical Vase,

"PROGRESS,"

illustrating phases of the XVth and XIXth Centuries, an original and elaborate composition of striking character and praiseworthy excellence, both in design and execution."

Reed & Barton have been awarded the First Premiums for their wares wherever exhibited, in America and foreign countries, including the World's Fair, New York, 1853.

International Exposition, Chili, S. A., 1875.

SALESROOMS, 686 Broadway, N. Y.

STEARNS & BEALE,

STATIONERS,

BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS,

PRINTING and LITHOGRAPHY,

147 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

(Between Broadway and Nassau Street.)

JOEL W. STEARNS.

WM. P. BEALE.

A. S. BARNES & CO.

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED

BATTLES OF THE REVOLUTION,

with Topographical Illustrations and Professional and Popular Criticisms. By HENRY B. CARRINGTON, Senior
Colonel and Bvt. Brig. General, U. S. A., Professor of Military Science at Wabash University. 800 pp. Royal octavo. Cloth richly embellished, $6. Library style (sheep), $7.50. Half calf, $9. Full Turkey morocco, $12.

II.

PRINCIPLES AND ACTS

OF THE REVOLUTION IN AMERICA. Composed of Speeches, Orations, and Proceedings, with Sketches and Remarks on Men and Things belonging to the Revolutionary Period. By HAZEKIAH NILES, Editor of "Niles's Register." Royal octavo, 822 pp. Cloth, $3. Library Style, $4.50. Half Calf, $5.
"Our young men can hardly go to a higher or better source for both information and inspiration."—Vice President Henry Wilson.

111 & 113 WILLIAM ST., NEW YORK.

Recent Important Publica- TIONS

BY O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

THE RELIGION OF HUMANITY,

AN ESSAY. Price, $1.50. Third Edition—Revised.

"Nobody can peruse this book without respect for the learning, mental honesty and skill in the statement of his convictions, possessed by the author, and for the essential integrity and philanthropic tendency of his spirit."—Springfield Republican.

THE CHILD'S BOOK OF RELIG-ION, For Sunday Schools and Homes. Square 16mo, cloth extra, $1.

STORIES FROM THE LIPS OF THE TEACHER. Re-told by a Disciple. With Frontispiece.
Cloth, $1.

"The Parables are so re-told as to absorb the attention of the reader, and to fasten upon the mind what the writer believes to have been the impression the Saviour meant to convey. It is in style and thought a superior book, and will interest alike young and old."—Zion's Herald (Methodist).

STORIES OF THE PATRIARCHS,
With Frontispiece. Cloth, $1.

"A work of culture and taste; it will be welcome to all ages, and gives the sublimest lessons of manhood in the simple language of a child."—Springfield Republican.

KNOWLEDGE AND FAITH, AND OTHER DISCOURSES. 16mo. Cloth, $1.

A HISTORY OF TRANSCENDEN-
TALISM IN NEW ENGLAND. Octavo. Cloth extra.
With portrait. $2.50.

"A masterly volume."—N. Y. Tribune.

IN PREPARATION:

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN LITE-RATURE; or, THE MESSIANIC IDEA. 12mo. Cloth.

RECENTLY ISSUED:

OCTAVIUS BROOKS FROTHING-
HAM AND THE NEW FAITH. By EDMUND C. STEEDMAN.
12mo. Cloth extra. With portrait. 75 cents.

"Presents in a clear and simple form the essential characteristics of the life and work of the radical preacher."

For sale by all Booksellers, or mailed, on receipt of price, by the publishers.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS,

152 FIFTH AVE., New York.

A New Volume,

BY REV. DR. SEARS.

CHRIST IN THE LIFE.—SERMONS;
With a selection of POEMS.

BY EDMUND H. SEARS.

Author of "The Heart of Christ," "Regeneration," etc. One vol. $1.75. Post-paid.

This day published by

LOCKWOOD, BROOKS & CO.,
381 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON.

Two Copies
7 Tremont Place Association
American Unitarian

THE INQUIRER.

VOL. XXXII.—NO. 2.
WHOLE NO., 1572.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 14, 1876.

{ $3.00 PER ANNUM.
{ 8 CENTS A COPY.

CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL NOTES.....	21
LEADING ARTICLES:
The Brooklyn Theatre Catastrophe.....	23
The Southern Problem.....	24
The Church and the World.....	25
CORRESPONDENCE:
From St. Louis.....	26
From Boston.....	28
From Chicago.....	27
From Washington.....	28
LITERARY REVIEWS:
Flower and Thorn.....	29
The Barton Experiment.....	29
Sunshine in the Soul.....	29
Christ in the Life.....	29
An Anecdote Biography of Shelley.....	29
Washington, a Drama in Five Acts.....	30
MINOR NOTICES.....	30
NEW PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.....	31
ART AND SCIENCE:
"The Wealth of Nations".....	31
Scientific Notes.....	32
Art Notes.....	32
HEARTH AND HOME:
Hidden Springs.....	33
A Colorado Heroine.....	33
OUR BOYS AND GIRLS:
What the Owl Knows.....	34
Nelly's Invitation.....	34
JOTTINGS.....
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT.....

HENRY W. BELLOWS, James T. Bixby, John W. Chadwick, Edward Everett Hale, E. P. Powell, Minot J. Savage, Rufus Sheldon and Edward A. Spring are among the contributors to this number of THE INQUIRER.

THE only new face upon the election is the steady evidence that popular excitement is wearing itself out with the delay, and that the people in all parts of the country are anxious for a peaceful settlement of the question, and with more or less grace are prepared to acquiesce in a decision made on legal grounds, even if moral grounds are not duly covered and met. The Northwest seems, if we may judge from inquiries made at Chicago, to be changing its expectation of Tilden to an expectation of Hayes as the successful candidate. We see less and less reason to fear revolutionary action in any part of the country.

THE letter of Mr. John Welsh in reply to certain severe strictures upon the position of the Centennial Board of Finance relative to the repayment of the government loan of a million and a half, is very pathetic. Certainly many people have felt that the meaning of the act authorizing the loan was clear, but it is possible that they may be mistaken, and the admirable management of the Board of Finance, as distinguished from the many blunders of the Board of Commissioners, entitle it to the respectful consideration of the public. Mr. Welsh at least has earned the right to the esteem and attention of all good citizens.

WHATEVER irregularities there may have been on the part of the Returning Boards in South Carolina, Florida and Louisiana—and we regret to say that the reports which have reached us from time to time since the election have not been flattering to Republican human nature—it does not seem possible that there can be a difference of opinion on the part of reasonably honest and sane persons as to the deliberate villainy of the fraud sought to be perpetrated in Oregon. That it is so strongly suspected that the trick was arranged in the East, and only appears to have mis-carried through the stupidity of the man chosen to perform it, does not make it less depressing. It would be a relief to get rid of certain Republican leaders; but are there not Democratic ones to fall into whose hands would be truly a plunge into the fire?

BUSINESS cannot be expected to improve until politics are more settled. We hope it is not as bad as it seems, but certainly there is little apparent elasticity in it. Last year was worse than the year before, and this is worse than last—if the poor mouth business men make up is any proof. We are glad to believe that things are worse here than in the West. Some excellent effects are following the hard times. There is a general spirit of economy and a more careful paring off of unreasonable charges by butchers and grocers. People who know how can live at a considerable reduction from old prices. There seems less extravagance in costume. On the whole, we suspect the hard times did not come a moment too soon, and have not yet stayed out their full term. If only their lessons could be remembered they might be safely concluded, but it takes a great while to burn them in so that they will stay. We are a wasteful, extravagant people, and we need a severe snubbing to make us mind our pennies.

A RECENT failure (of the merits of which we know nothing) in which, according to a newspaper statement, the assets are reckoned at $25,000 and the liabilities at $180,000, with no private property in the possession of either partner, reminds us of many similar exposures with which the press has teemed during the past few years. Is it not time that the bounds of commercial propriety were a little more clearly marked, the limits made a little narrower within which a merchant may be permitted to make ducks and drakes of the property of others without being considered as having forfeited his reputation as an honest man? It seems to us that there is small prospect of a higher commercial morality until in the field of trade the relations of meum and tuum are a little more distinctly considered, and a somewhat more stringent application is made of the laws which the experience of mankind has found it necessary to establish for the protection of property under other circumstances.

THE Constitution, in making over to the separate States the right of making their own rules in the choice of electors, provides only that a number of electors proportioned to the population shall be chosen, and that those having the highest vote shall be electors, with the single added provision that no federal office-holder shall be eligible. Have the States any right to make provision that in case any ineligible person shall be voted for by a sufficient number, the other electors shall have the power to fill the vacancy thus created by putting in whom they choose, or the man having the next highest vote, or by making the man who may meanwhile have laid down his office their lawful choice? It is doubtful whether this is not unconstitutional. Have not the Oregon Republicans thrown away by their carelessness the only constitutional right they possess, and lost their vote beyond recall? We are persuaded that this point will yet come up, and we have a notion that the people cannot justly claim a right to correct what is due to their own fault and haste and criminal inadvertence. We are none the less ready to entertain this view because it would operate against the party we prefer. The right principle and rule is what honest men are now seeking for and that only.

THE Brooklyn fire, as reported in the papers of the following morning, appeared to have simply destroyed property. Perhaps a few persons had been more or less injured by the rush during the panic; few were prepared for the horror which gradually unfolded itself as hour after hour brought its new revelation of torture and death. Now, at the end of a week it is supposed that those who lost their lives in that sudden burst of flame numbered between two hundred and seventy and two hundred and eighty. In view of this great loss, it is a satisfaction to know that Coroner Simms has selected a jury whose names may be taken as a guarantee that a thorough investigation will be made into the causes of the catastrophe, with some hope of extending greater protection to life in the future.

Under Mayor Schroeder's call, large contributions are being offered toward the relief of the sufferers. The thoroughly organized Brooklyn Guild and Union for Christian Work has been for some time in the field, has collected more than a thousand dollars in money, besides stores, and, through its members and agents, has visited about sixty families who had suffered by the loss of one or more members. Of course many are not in pecuniary difficulties. Through efficient examination, a careful discrimination may be exercised, and relief is extended in cases of actual need.

WE are glad to learn that a public meeting is called for to-day to consider what steps shall be taken to make our theatres, public halls and churches safer in times of fire and panic. Clearly, the owners and managers are not the only responsible parties. If the public acquiesce in and patronize dangerous places, they will never be mended. We wish that the folly of making theatres and public halls over stores and manufactories were abandoned. It is the long flights of stairs that make a chief difficulty and danger. Galleries should connect by outside stairs with the ground, or by inside stairs of a direct kind, not at any point opening into the passages from the main floor. All doors should be unlocked during the performances and should open outward. Water-tanks should be in charge of watchmen who never leave them while the house is in public use. Stages should be separated from the audience-room by brick walls and iron curtains ready to drop by a hand specially kept in guard of them. If these are expensive additions and precautions, let the rates of entrance be raised in proportion to the thoroughness of the security offered. But we do not doubt that managers would find their account in making their houses safe, roomy, and well ventilated without extra charge. There are thousands who would visit concert-rooms and theatres of merit if they knew that they would not be crowded into small chairs with insufficient leg-room, or be stifled by heat, chilled by draughts, choked with gas, or kept in nervous horror by the hopelessness of escaping from narrow stalls and accesses by tortuous stairs, in case of panic and fire. We fear only that the momentary excitement on this subject will decline and fade out before it has effected the remedies required. Let the matter be energetically pushed while the public horror is alive.

It is not at all clear what the course of Congress may be in the application of its right to make the count of the electoral vote. The Louisiana case presents serious difficulties. The exclusion of so many districts by the returning board under evidence of intimidation running far back of the immediate season of election, though morally right, seems to lack color of law. The overcoming of so large a majority as 9,000 for Tilden, by this process, is, to say the least, open to strong suspicions of partisanship in the Board. If the principle of general intimidation at any period of a political canvass (inevitably preventing a free vote) is a proper legal cause for rejecting the vote of a State, or any district in it, we do not doubt that the whole vote of Georgia and Mississippi ought to be thrown out. But this is a reductio ad absurdum. The truth is, we cannot have a perfectly free vote, nor anything approaching it, in the present and unavoidable condition of the Southern States. No such thing is known there, or will be for some time to come. And it is impossible, without violating the whole theory of local rights and legal forms, to enforce it. We have, therefore, to accept the situation and insist upon legal forms if the substance is wanting. It is no worse than the situation forced upon us in the city of New York, where, in a moral point of view, the right and duty of free suffrage are over-ridden by caucuses and bribery and corruption and priest-craft, in a way to utterly baffle the ends sought by a free vote—that is, the election of the candidates really preferred. High officers are not the choice of the people's free will, but of the people's will entangled, mis-directed and overruled by the machine work of professional demagogues seeking only money and place. We bear it and must bear it, because prevention and cure depend upon our maintaining forms of law, whatever other evils prevail, while we use the slow and sure means of education, of political enlightenment and of moral elevation, by which alone universal suffrage can be redeemed from its present disgusting abuses and consequences. The forms of law are our only immediate security from worse evils than bad government and abused ballot-boxes—complete anarchy and fruitless revolution.

ONE of the encouraging circumstances connected with the late election is the evidence that both parties were contending, with some success, for the negro vote. Both have probably used intimidation, but both have certainly used other and less questionable arguments to win black votes. There is every reason to believe that an appeal has been made by Democrats as well as Republicans to the substantial interests of the negro, and there is no doubt that forcible arguments might be used, to which the negro would listen, that he would be better off, as Southern society is at present circumstanced, if the Democrats had possession of the State Governments; that is, if Southern men and not carpet-baggers were in power. We believe the negro has, to a much larger extent than Republicans are ready to concede, felt this argument and yielded to it. We are by no means assuming that the argument is wholly sound, but it is at any rate a favorable circumstance that the negro has had an appeal made to a sense of his own interests, and that both parties are compelled to conciliate him and to promise and to do him some measure of justice.

For we see in his holding the balance of power the beginning of his escape from ill-usage. It will inevitably shortly become the necessity and interest of both parties to treat him as the Irish have been treated in the North, with even more consideration than is their due, by both parties. Their possession of the right of suffrage is the source of an influence and a status which has been of dangerous effect upon the interests of the country, and has mischievously disturbed our legislation in matters of public charity and ecclesiastical endowment, but which has at last secured the Irish and Roman Catholics in a Protestant country a protection and a power they could not have gained on their merits. It is certain that the negroes are to have the advantage of the same law, and it may even have its perilous side. But it will inevitably have its good and useful side, in that it will put an end to cruelty and oppression much sooner than seems to be commonly expected. The color-line must be rapidly eaten into and faded away by the necessity of adding the negro vote to both sides in politics; and it is probable that the effect will be to develop both parties in the South, and to do away with that solidity which is now so much apprehended in the Southern vote. We have not seen this view presented elsewhere in its full importance. We draw much hope from it, and recommend it to such consideration as it merits.

THE BROOKLYN THEATRE CATASTROPHE.

THERE is no language tender and pitiful enough to speak of such a sorrow as that by which the city of Brooklyn has been overtaken; and this, too, though it is impossible for most of us to grasp its magnitude. No one can begin to do that who is not touched by it in his own heart and life. There is no key to such a great calamity as this, admitting us to some decent comprehension of its tragical significance, but personal participation in it. When your own friend is on the sunken steamer or the shattered train and is a victim of the disaster, then you can multiply your pain by the whole list of sufferers, and so get some approximate idea of the whole amount.

But, though we cannot comprehend the greatness of this calamity, we can sufficiently apprehend it to know that it is of colossal size, and of a form and feature that we can scarcely look upon and live. It is not merely that 300 or more people, young and old and middle-aged, have suddenly been swept away from out this breathing world into the stillness of the grave. There is no hour in any day in which death does not succeed to life in more than this number of beating hearts. It is that all the circumstances of this calamity appeal so painfully to our imagination; so painfully that we think enviously of those whom the great deep has swallowed up, of those who, from the decks of burning ships, could leap into the cold but soon oblivious embrace of a more kindly element.

Again, the contrast between the more pleasurable excitement of the hour and the sudden immersion in a real tragedy of inconceivable dreadfulness adds to our thought another element of purest piteousness. And when we write this, we do not dip our pen into the ink of any pious and ascetic terrorist, who needs all he has got to express his own idea of the immeasurable incongruity between any theatrical performance and the transition from this life to another. Doubtless if one could choose his place of death he would not choose a theatre. But, for that matter, neither would he choose a church. There is real sorrow enough in this matter without our manufacturing any out of the rotten shreds of our ascetic piety and superstition. The people who were engaged in seeing and performing the play on Tuesday night were doing nothing base, nothing unworthy, nothing of which they had any cause to be ashamed; nothing upon which heaven might not smile; nothing for any preacher to lift up his voice against. There is many a church in which God has been less honored than at the Brooklyn Theatre that dreadful night; many a church in which human nature has been more degraded. Time was when Christian ministers would have been embarrassed by the multitude of whys and wherefores that would have clamored for the honor of accounting for such a calamity as this. It would have been a special providence of the most obvious and striking character. It would have been the red right arm of God outstretched against the Brooklyn Ring, or President Grant, or Cardinal McCloskey, or Free Religion, or the National Constitution, Godless and Christless; or, likeliest of all, the Theatre. It would have made very little difference that between the event and any of these things, with the exception of the last, there is no obvious connection. In times when theories of special providence were most engrossing it was not considered necessary to show any special connection between the event in hand and the purpose of the Almighty in bringing the event to pass. It was only necessary that God should show in some way that He was very much displeased. It was for the preachers to discover why He was displeased, and they generally discovered that He was displeased with what happened to displease them most for the time being. The Romanists were sure to find in it a sign of wrath against the Protestants. The Protestants were sure to find in it a sign of wrath against the Romanists. At the same time, if there was any obvious relation between the event on hand and some obnoxious institution, so much the better. And, until very recently, the majority of Protestant ministers would have thought any man wilfully blind who should refuse to see in this calamity a judgment against all dramatic representations.

The belief in special providence still holds its place in the prevailing creeds as constantly as ever, but a certain text of Scripture, or at least the spirit of it, has sunk much more deeply into men's hearts: "Who hath known the mind of God or who hath been His counsellor?" and men are getting slower to suggest the wherefore of calamitous occurrences, less confident that they have been entrusted with an infallible interpretation of the will of God. Nobody, we trust, will find in this event a judgment against Cardinal McCloskey or the Democrats or Republicans, and few, if any, will have the hardihood to interpret the event as a sign of God's displeasure with dramatic art, though that some should do so would be entirely consistent, and their failure to do so will show a lack of courage rather than a lack of faith. What a conception of God, that He would consciously and deliberately go about to bring such a calamity to pass, with all its multitudinous horrors of immediate suffering and subsequent imaginative woe! How preferable were Atheism, pure and simple, to belief in such a demon-deity as that!

This change in the amount of confidence with which men hasten to inform us why the Almighty has contrived, or at least permitted great disasters, is not the only one that seriously affects the general estimate of them when they occur. Time was when all the glories of this present life were a mere foil upon which to bring out the glories of another. Time was when any death, however painful, seemed a little price to pay for the immeasurable felicity that awaited the believer just beyond his mortal agony. Time was when all the horrors of that struggling, scorching, suffocating mass of human beings would have been utilized to faintly image forth the horrors of that doom from which the chosen of that mass had been forever saved, to which the reprobate had been consigned forever. They will not be so utilized to-day, we dare believe, by any preacher of religion. It cannot be denied that if we have gained something here we have lost something at the same time. The entire community has lost the easy consolation that it had for every such calamity, when as yet there were no sects or schisms in the Christian Church, and universal baptism was a practical security for universal salvation. To-day the Christian Church is no longer homogeneous. The conditions of salvation are disputed. There is seldom a promiscuous assemblage of which all the sects would unite to predicate a future infinitely preferable to any possible present. Again, whatever faith remains in immortality and its felicities, the faith of men in this present life is so constantly increasing as civilization proceeds and the conditions of life become ameliorated more and more, that the contrast between the life that now is and the life that is to come is far less sharp to-day than it was formerly. It is no longer esteemed an altogether good and blessed thing to get out of this earthly environment. Contempt for this world is no longer a sufficient ointment for the wounds inflicted by the most terrible calamities. And seeing that of all men the rational religionist is most impressed with the amount of good and satisfaction in this present life, and of all men finds himself the most disqualified for dogmatizing about the methods and arrangements of another life, whatever confidence he may have in the great central fact of such a life, there is a sense in which the rational religionist stands more abashed and silent in the presence of a great calamity than any of his contemporaries. Even of those best saved by his own canons of salvation, best saved because least wasted and best used, he dares not predicate a happier state beyond than they enjoy here in this present time. Than this life at its best he can imagine nothing better, and all attempts to picture a better so far seem to him either feeble copies of our present life or weak imaginings of something infinitely less desirable. And yet it by no means follows that he would willingly exchange his attitude for one affording easier access to fountains of immediate consolation for such overwhelming sorrows as this by which we are to-day so parched and withered. Better remoter fountains of consolation than that, to keep up their supply, the total area of life should be drained of its sweet waters. It is a poor business this, of coaxing some poor semblance of a smile into the face of death, by roundly abusing the only life with which thus far we have had any acquaintance. Better believe in this life a little, a good deal, even though to do so makes submission to the inevitable stroke of death a little harder, and affords for such a huge and formless sorrow as this no better palliative than the assurance that life was a blessing to the 300 dead while life was theirs, and the calm hope that death has brought to them no hurt; that an immortal principle survives their physical catastrophe.

THE SOUTHERN PROBLEM.

THE plain mind of orderly parts of the country must be dreadfully confused by the conflicting testimony of honorable men in regard to the state of things in South Carolina. We cannot doubt that Gov. Chamberlain is an honest, brave and truthful man, and he gives us in his inaugural speech an account of things which fully justify his own course and the Republican policy. Gov. Hampton and Senator Gordon, on the other hand, are men of high character, courage and veracity, and incapable of wilfully misstating what they see and know, and they directly contradict most that Gov. Chamberlain affirms. But it must not be forgotten that equally truthful and honorable men, of the highest intelligence, are often blinded by their wishes, interests and hopes, their previous opinions, their very blood and lineage. Gov. Chamberlain is a Northern man, with Northern feelings, and hates slavery with all his heart. Gen. Hampton and Gen. Gordon are Southern men, and have formerly held slaves, and were brought up to think it no wrong, nay, probably still think that a wild fanaticism freed the slaves against true policy, and without a due consideration of the unfitness of the slave to become a citizen. Are honest men of such different antecedents to be expected to see the events in South Carolina in the same perspective, or to be able to describe them in terms that do not disagree, and even contradict each other? Men see what they can see, what they wish to see, what they are looking for, and not what is really happening before their eyes. Their eyes are holden by honest prejudice or judicial blindness. We need not think any of the men we have named liars or wilful deceivers. They are only men with opposite points of view, opposite hopes and wishes, opposite prepossessions; picking out what alone seems to them characteristic of the present condition, each with a magnet for its own metals only. There is quite enough to excuse Gen. Hampton and Senator Gordon's views, or at least to account for them, without assuming that Gov. Chamberlain lies; and quite enough to account for and justify Gov. Chamberlain's ideas and statements without falsifying the motives and representations of Hampton and Gordon.

The facts stated are doubtless true on both sides, but there are facts equally true, which neither side sees on the other. There is great self-restraint on the part of the whites of South Carolina, and there is great violence, too! There is great liberty shown to the negro, and there is great intimidation, too! The condition of things is what it necessarily must be. The wonder is that we should not expect it and allow for it. South Carolina is not to be considered or judged by the same standards that rule in homogeneous States, or States that never knew a great war of races on their soil. We must not expect the purity or freedom of the ballot to be exhibited there as it is in New England or the West, for two generations. If we cannot wait for this, and if the country cannot survive the absence of this purity and freedom so long, we might as well give up all hope of our Union. But it can and will. The people want education upon the essential, inherent, obstinate but not incurable evils connected with the sudden emancipation of four million slaves and their accession to full citizenship. We have boasted and bragged enough of the act to make it logical for us to bear partly the cost of it, which was not chiefly in treasure and blood, but in the risks we assumed in the name of freedom by introducing this crude mass of voters into our political circuit. Unhappily, too, they are introduced where the strain is most dangerous, where they form the majority in States. If any evils less than those we are now beholding were expected, it must have been only by those unread in the history of republics. If the nation went blindly into full emancipation, it may thank itself, and must bear the consequences. Let it not make a world-wide boast of what it has done, and then sit stupidly down to bemoan itself that four million slaves cannot be made full citizens without any trouble or any great political disturbance in the States where they prevail in numbers. For ourselves, we wonder less at the amount and seriousness of these troubles, than that they are not more overwhelming and disastrous. The white South does not behave well towards the negroes, but it behaves better than could have reasonably been hoped. The negroes do not use their citizenship as white people would—unless these be low-grade immigrants—but they use it better than was feared by those who forecast their future on general principles. When the papers talk honestly and thoughtfully about this almost wholly neglected view of the matter we shall be touching bottom and building our expectations more wisely and reasonably.

THE CHURCH AND THE WORLD.

THE church has usually drawn a sharp distinction between the world and itself. Ecclesiastical activity and books have been honored by the church as sacred. The work of the world has been reckoned merely secular and its literature accounted profane. In the language of the Middle Ages, as in the French tongue still, "the religious" signified exclusively those who had bound themselves to live till death apart from their fellow-men. All the good people in those days thought it their duty to go off into wildernesses or to shut themselves up in monasteries, that none of the world's temptations might prevent them from reading "their title clear to mansions in the sky." Having thus drawn all the virtue and piety of the times into secluded retreats and calmly abandoned the world to its fate, they could safely declaim against it as nothing but a sink of iniquity. When a man once related that as he was going to the monastery to put on the cowl he was met by a Dominican monk who bade him go back to the world, for that was the better place to gain spiritual strength, the people declared that it must have been nobody but Satan himself in disguise who could have tempted him by such heretical doctrine.

Monasticism is now, of course, an institution of the past, yet at the present day, and in Protestantism itself, the world is still to the church the subject of condemnation—a thing which the religious man better have as little to do with as possible. Professors of religion still often deem themselves a little flock of sanctified sheep in the midst of a huge herd of vicious goats. They see God-service only in Sunday praise or evening prayer. They believe that they can worship God only in formal tributes in consecrated temples. The busy work of the week, the outflow of human energy and forethought in field or factory, the ministry of commerce, exchanging the products of every soil and clime, the discipline of the mental and moral faculties in household cares and business perplexities—all these are still, in the view of many, things which religion has nothing to do with, except to avoid or withdraw from as much as possible.

Now, here is a radical error. It is a very inefficient method, even for the saving of the virtue of the best, to isolate them from the rest of mankind. None but a weakly and colorless goodness can be gained by any such method as this. While the church is emasculated by this hot-house culture of piety the world suffers still more by the withdrawal from it of all the devouter and purer spirits who should have been its saving salt. Notwithstanding all its trials and temptations the world is, after all, the best place to form the Christian. It is precisely because of these trials and temptations that it affords the fitting theatre to bring forth the higher qualities of the man—what justice, what mercy, what patience, what honesty may adorn him with the priceless pearls of the spirit. Men are not grown in caves. That is the breeding-place of owls. Nor yet in wildernesses. That is the place for sticks and stones.

No hermitage or sanctuary can do for the responsive soul of man what the stimulating contact with the bustling crowd can effect. It is where danger is faced that bravery is learnt. It is where the heart has to cope with active and strong and cunning foes that it learns how to wield with ease the sword of the spirit and wear without exhaustion the breast-plate of righteousness. What are called the secular avocations of life, so far from being inconsistent with a Christian life, constitute the soil in which it can grow most vigorously. A man not merely may engage in them and yet be religious, but he must, precisely because he is religious, earnestly pursue all noble kinds of work which the world has to offer.

It is true, alas! that too much of our business is but a selfish, ungodly scramble—every man for his own gain and advantage. It is true that household cares are too often a miserable drudgery that casts a fatal blight over high aspirations and with petty worries destroys all peace of mind. But it is precisely because they are separated from religion that they drop down to this ignoble plane.

The church, instead of condemning them for this and leaving them in this state, should make it its aim to lift them up and transform them. The church should teach men that there is no condition where the rarest jewels of Christianity can be polished more brightly or serve more usefully than in the rough grinding of daily life. Wherever the current of worldliness runs strong, there the living waters of the spiritual life are especially needed to turn the tide. Wherever injustice has become inveterate, wherever falsehood and inhumanity need to be exposed, there those who claim to be the followers of Jesus should be the first to raise their voices in rebuke, the last complacently to abandon the oppressed and the benighted to their fate, thanking God, meanwhile, that they are not as other men are. God put His spirit, the Bible says, into the workmen who built the Tabernacle, to enable them to fashion all the carved and graven and silver work skilfully. He who would receive the commendation, well done good and faithful servant, must put a divine consecration into all things, into the shoes which he pegs, making them strong; into his mercantile settlements, making them honest; into his treatment of his laborers and servants, making it fair and kind; and thus make all his toil, worship, and every work-day a holy day and the great world at last the bright field of God's glory.

And what is true of the work of the world is true also of its amusements and pleasures. These latter have been even more sternly and generally under the ban of the church. It was well for the pious, in olden times, to labor, if this labor did not soil them with worldly contact. But amusement and pleasure it was sinful to enjoy, even all alone. Every note played on a fiddle, they were sure, only sounded a rogue's march. The possession of a playing-card was a tenuous ticket to the lower regions. Not to go farther back than the times of our Puritan ancestors, we find that dancing at weddings was forbidden, and long hair and superstitious ribbands to tie up and decorate the hair were strongly prohibited. All ornament was a vain show and beauty a Delilah. Every hour of enjoyment here was thought to diminish by just so much the prospect of enjoyment hereafter.

Even to-day, in many of our largest denominations, the church's frown is black against the social dance, the dramatic play, the game of bowls or whist. The church member who engages in any of them is in dire fear of the discipline of the vestry-meeting. The minister who has a healthy taste for athletic sports becomes an object of suspicion. And even for the layman in those sects that have been tinged with the Calvinistic theology, there is a strong, though perhaps vague sense that to enjoy is not to obey, but is trespassing on the borders of sin with dangerous license.

Now, thus to judge without discrimination the pleasures of the world is not the part of true Christianity. There was nothing in Jesus thus unfriendly to natural joy. If there is anything that would never have been ascribed to Jesus, if it was not true, it is his anti-ascetic spirit, his geniality, his approval of every innocent enjoyment of life. We were meant to enjoy Nature's beauties and bounties. Else why were they given? We were meant to take delight in the pleasures of society and social amusement. Else why was our nature fitted to them and made to require them? When an earthly friend seeks to make us happy by some generous gift, to refuse it with distrust or to treat it with neglect is the part of gross ingratitude. Is it any the less ungrateful to frustrate the beneficent intentions of our Heavenly Benefactor?

And not only does it exhibit ungenerousness toward the Good Giver, thus suspiciously to reject His gifts, but it also works injury to man. The nature of man is such that he needs relaxations and entertainments. If he cannot freely enjoy innocent ones, he will secretly or rebelliously grasp at those that are not innocent. To convert harmless things into sins is as mischievous as to robe iniquity in the garb of innocence. He who would guide the feet of the pilgrim successfully through the pitfalls of life must no more blacken the white than whitewash the black.

There is a story of an English monk who was once dining off a pheasant's breast. A fellow monk reproved him for gluttony in indulging in such a dainty. To which the first spiritedly replied, "One man may make a swine of himself over husks, and another may eat a pheasant's breast like a gentleman." It is not the enjoying good things in which sin lies, but in selfish absorption in them—in partaking of them in a bad spirit or under circumstances that are full of danger. David, the Bible records, once danced before the Lord. And so a maiden who trips to the billowy music modestly, temperately, at seasonable hours, with good companions, to promote not merely her own pleasure, but theirs, may to-day, in any of our parlors, again dance before the Lord. There are actors on the stage who have as much a call from God for that work, and put as much religion into it, as any preacher in the pulpit. What the Church should do concerning these and all other amusements which in themselves are harmless is, not to judge them, but to save them. It should take them under its direction, put the Christian spirit into them, separate them from unwholesome companionship and accompaniments, and set them in the midst of safe and salutary surroundings. Those churches that have put into their vestries, side by side with the Sunday school room, the church parlor and kitchen and reading-room, and those Young Men's Unions or Associations that have taken especial charge of the providing of innocent amusement for the young and the homeless, have been doing some of the very best kind of Christian work that has been done of late.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A DAY IN ST. LOUIS.

THIS twin of Chicago is as unlike it as if it had grown in China. It looks toward the Southwest. Chicago has its face toward the East. Liberalism here comes by the way of metaphysics; in Chicago, by the way of a cosmopolitan spirit. St. Louis sustains the only speculative journal in the United States. Hegelianism, through W. T. Harris, has taken captive some of the best minds in the city. There was a small circle that met on Sundays to discuss metaphysics and unroll the Universal, but that died out. Another club has taken its place. The Academy of Science is broader and not at all as thorough. Here you will find our bright and genial Riley, the State entomologist, or, as the Pike legislators call him, "etymologist." He is exceedingly popular with the farmers and horticulturists, and has done as good work in fighting and teaching others to fight insect enemies as any man in the country. I had a hearty shake of hands with him, and then ran in on John Monteith, who was, under Governor Brown, the State Superintendent of Instruction. The time was when he drew as large a crowd to the theatre every Sunday night as Professor Swing now draws in Chicago. But his health went with a crash, and has but slowly been regained. Liberal thought, as well as free schools, owes him a great debt in Missouri.

My mission was to exchange with Learned, and I found his people a snug and busy band; not many of them, but prime in quality, in a cozy, handsome chapel on the south side of the city, at the corner of Lafayette Park. They appreciate the man they have got, and have certainly one of the clearest thinkers and best men in the Western Conference.

Unfortunately, Western Liberalism has a touch here and there of the scalawag, and it is not a pleasant or promising feature of the work. You will find that Mr. Learned's people are intensely radical, but folk of culture and social refinement. The Sunday school was full of the best kind of timber.

Snyder, at the First Church, was running over with good things and sparkling, and we all together met on Monday in the most wonderful of all places—a club of free thinkers, composed of independents of all sects. There was Holland, of the Episcopal, who will have to move over to England to find a broad enough party and elbow room. Such a fellow! I have heard him preach by the hour the most voluble but the most eloquent flow of good English, good sense, good wit and good human fellowship I ever heard. Judge Patterson, too, was there to quietly represent the enlarging band of liberal Baptists. But foremost of all for sunshine and "bon Chretien" was Rabbi Sonneschien. Well, it won't do to tell the secrets of the club; but where is the dear old sectarianism that nursed us in our younger days?

At the Board of Trade, in the new and superb building recently completed, I met a host of warm friends and good souls. It was not a little amusing to hear the unanimous testimony that the revival which swept the city two years ago had left the churches vastly worse off than before. Religious people will learn in time that they must discard charlatans, mountebanks, and travelling preachers, as well as travelling doctors. The Baptist churches of the city are sorely disintegrated. Presbyterianism has suffered, and every sect disclaims any lingering love for Hammond.

I looked down on Snyder's people in the evening of Sunday, considerably sprinkled with my old friends of the "Mayflower," and wondered if after all I were not a Unitarian. A good woman once applied to me to become a member of my old Orthodox church, who said she had been converted in her sleep. She had no religious experience outside of her dream. Well, who can tell just when he gets a good conversion? Coleridge tells us of a sound Protestant who did not dare to lie down after the Catholic Emancipation Act, for fear he should be converted in his sleep. There was —, whom I fished out of very close water communion, now Snyder's Sunday school superintendent, and as grand a fellow as St. Louis holds. It is a promising feature of Unitarian and Liberal churches through the West that more attention is paid to the educational department. They build from the foundation upward. Good-bye, St. Louis! All hail, Chicago! POWELL.

FROM BOSTON.

THE WINN BEQUEST—DECISION OF THE MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME COURT.

THE decision in regard to this bequest has just been given by the Massachusetts Supreme Court. The Court decides that Dr. A. P. Peabody and Rev. E. E. Hale shall be made trustees of the fund, to spend it as they may judge best in the interest of the Unitarian denomination.

This decision of Judge Endicott is satisfactory to every one. It shows, as former decisions of the Court have done, the desire of the Supreme Court to interpret broadly in the matter of trust funds, and to carry out in their decision the evident wish of the testators, however loosely in law that wish may have been expressed.

In this case, Mr. Joshua B. Winn, who died in 1874, leaving a large property, made the following bequest:

"Eleventh, I give and bequeath to John Johnson and E. N. Blake, as trustees, both of Woburn, the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, to be held in trust by them, the income of which I direct shall be paid over to my son Charles B. Winn, in semi-annual instalments, and at his decease to be paid over to his children, or, in case of his decease without issue, to the Unitarian denomination, to be used and disposed of under the direction of the Rev. Edw. E. Hale, of Boston, and the Rev. Andrew P. Peabody, of Cambridge."

Those readers who are accustomed to legal accuracy will see that a bequest to "the Unitarian denomination" has not the precision which is desirable in a legal document. Who and what is the Unitarian denomination? That is a question which a lawyer might ask. In this case Mr. Winn had, it is true, proposed that Messrs. Peabody and Hale should direct the expenditures. But he had not made them trustees for that purpose. Indeed, the only trust he had made was the appointment of two other persons, who were to pay the income of this sum to Mr. Charles B. Winn while he lived, and after his death, if he died without issue, to pay the money to the "Unitarian denomination." But were these trustees to pay the interest or the whole sum?

Mr. Charles B. Winn, the only son of Mr. Joshua B. Winn, was advised by his counsel that the bequest might be void from its vagueness. He determined to make all right in that event, and he put into his will the following clause, which, however, as will be seen, is made unnecessary by the decision of the Court.

"Inasmuch as my late honored father, in his last Will and Testament, bequeathed to John Johnson and E. N. Blake, as trustees, the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, to be disposed of at my decease under the direction of Rev. E. E. Hale and Rev. Andrew P. Peabody for the furtherance of interests therein designated; and inasmuch as the wording of the above-named bequest is somewhat vague and indefinite, and liable to criticism if viewed from a strictly legal standpoint; and inasmuch as on account of these and other reasons the above-named trustees may possibly be unable to carry out and execute the above-named bequest, in which case, as I suppose, the funds now in my hands would revert to my estate; and inasmuch as I am desirous to remove or counteract the effect of any obstacles that may possibly arise to prevent the fulfillment and execution of my late father's wishes in regard to this bequest, if therefore the one hundred thousand dollars, which, in accordance with my late father's Will and Testament I have paid over to the above-named trustees, should at any time hereafter revert to and become a portion of my estate, under such circumstances and contingent entirely upon such event, I hereby give and bequeath the one hundred thousand dollars so reverting, or such portion thereof as may revert to my estate, to the above-named Messrs. Hale and Peabody in trust, to be expended and disposed of by them in the interest of and for the furtherance and advancement of Christianity or Education in any way or manner which they may consider advisable."

FROM CHICAGO.

WINTER dawned upon us Thanksgiving eve and the day was a very merry one, and all the weather since has been delightful. The laughter of the children as they run to and fro with their little sleds makes us glad, and as we listen the years recede and we are children, too, dreaming of the coming Christmas, of plum puddings and shiny new boots and dollies with eyes that wink. What would the world do without a Christmas?

I asked a little girl, a few days ago, who was looking lovingly over some dozen last year's valentines, "what holy day of all the year do you like best?" "Oh Christmas," she enthusiastically exclaimed. "I never want to be quite a woman, for mamma says Santa Claus don't come and put things into grown folks' stockings."

Sometimes we fear, as the cry of hard times reaches our ears and hearts, that Santa Claus will deal sparingly with his gifts this year, whilst many eager little ears will listen in vain for the sound of that famous individual gliding down the chimney; but then when we remember how our charitable institutions are increasing, how many dinners and fairs are given for the Newsboys' Home, the Hospitals and Asylums, how many children even are denying themselves and sharing their treasures with poorer children, we believe that some little ray of gladness will shine into every home on Christmas day.

Robert Collyer says he hopes every family in his parish will give their newsboy a cup of coffee, even if they have to watch to see that he doesn't run away with the spoon; and I believe they will, for "Unity" is a working church and its members are cheerful givers.

For many years that church has been a beacon light whose rays have penetrated many a desolate home. At the time of the great fire many poor families used to plead piteously, "Oh don't send us the Moody Committee, they ask us such hard questions, we would rather suffer. Send us Mr. Collyer. The sight of his kindly face is more than medicine to us, and we are sure to get the money we need."

Many of these families are in trouble still, for the marks of that fire will not be effaced for many a year, but the charities of Unity Church fall about them as silently and sweetly as snow-flakes in the night.

"Why, dear lady," one family exclaimed, "you don't know anything about it. Mr. Collyer used to come to us in all our poverty, even when we all had the fever; he didn't mind that one bit." And now, the highest ambition of some of these people is to be able to have decent clothing that they may go into the open doors of that church from Sunday to Sunday, and hear the voice of the man who preached a new gospel to them of deeds.

There are people who frequent Unity Church for reasons best known to themselves.

A gentleman told me that he did not believe a word of the doctrine preached there, at all, but he went there to hear a man pray who talked with God, as if he were his best and most intimate friend.

A prominent member of Grace Methodist Church went across the way to Unity, one Sunday. Coming out she met an acquaintance, who exclaimed, "What! you here! you must have fallen from Grace," to which she replied, "I feel as if I had fallen into grace to-day, he certainly must have known that I was coming."

An outgrowth of this working church is the Industrial School. A sewing society is connected with it, composed of a band of ladies whose hearts are deeply imbued with the spirit of the work.

They have a Charity Committee who wait upon poor families, regardless of creed, and articles of clothing and money are held in readiness for them.

The Industrial School-rooms are sunny and pleasant, with pictures upon the walls. It numbers eighty pupils at present. They are of the lowest classes, but they are cleanly and content. They learn to do all kinds of useful work. They have a kitchen, and the very poor ones learn to cook their own dinner and put everything neatly by.

I saw a bit of penmanship upon the board that might shame a high-school miss.

The teacher of these children is very enterprising. She watches her flock with as jealous a care as if they were the brightest pets of the city, apologizing for this one and that in a sweet, motherly manner.

She is paid a good salary by the church, but as I looked into that busy hive one morning this week, I thought surely, "the money pays the hand, but it cannot pay the soul."

The influence of this Institution, although in its infancy, is felt far and near. Very many poor families are becoming ambitious and work very hard to get one child at least into this cheerful home. One family, in particular, remarked to a lady, "we don't want our girls brought up to our trade, which is rags and old iron. We want them to be somebody."

During the past week I visited in a physician's family. During the evening I told them all about this school, its progress, of the poor families I knew of, and he cheerfully offered his services to any deserving sick, and they gave me a basketful of clothes. Their parents had recently come to them to spend the Winter, and the doctor said as I bade them "good-night," "See here! I wish you would take our mother with you to this school some day, also to see how and where some of our poor of Chicago live. She has nothing in the world to do and grows desponding and often believes there's nothing in this life worth living for."

So, in due time, I invited the lady in question, and she replied that as soon as Moody went away she would consider it; but after I had related to her the peculiar sufferings of certain families, she grew interested in spite of Mr. Moody, and has since found a new delight in making mittens for little cold hands and planning a bonnet for a well-bread Quakeress, who sobbed so bitterly because she was not able to hear the word of God.

So many people mean to do well, but wait the long years through for an opportunity. Not long ago I was invited to a dinner party by a prominent Congregationalist family. When one of the young gentlemen came in, he remarked, "They've got an Industrial School over at Collyer's church." "Is that possible?" replied one. "Yes; and they say it's in a very flourishing condition; and I tell you we mustn't let them beat us in a work like that. We must have one also."

Some Jewish ladies are establishing a school in the South division, for the purpose of fitting poor children for usefulness in life; so we see how "a little leaven leaveneth the whole lump."

Surely the day is not far distant when many of these helpful schools will be established in our midst, for this is no mean city; hearts grow larger and warmer in a broad, free country like this; even the ladies sojourning in our large hotels catch the spirit and form themselves into Dorcas Societies and sew for the poor.

He who does not know the blessing of giving has not begun to live.

N. H. B.

FROM WASHINGTON.

I MUST congratulate you on the appearance and promise of THE INQUIRER. The public mind at present is absorbed with "President-making." The most sagacious cannot see the result. It is not unlikely that John Sherman may be our next President. In case of failure to elect by the electors and the people or by the House or in any other way before noon of the 4th of March, 1877, the President of the Senate for the time being will be President of the United States. That man will probably be John Sherman. Furthermore, in that event a new election for President will occur in November, 1877.

Have you read Gov. Chamberlain's inaugural address? For touching eloquence it has seldom been surpassed. We of the Unitarian Church of Washington have a special interest in his present position of responsibility and personal peril. His estimable wife, who shares his dangers of assassination in South Carolina, was formerly one of our number. The dark clouds of December, 1860, seem to have returned to shadow our coming Christmas. Nevertheless I believe we shall not wait so long as then for clear skies. We are not to be Mexicanized.

Allusion has heretofore been made to the liberal style of preaching practised by the Rev. Dr. Mitchell, of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church, in this city. He has sometimes been characterized as "almost a Unitarian." It is but justice to say that in a recent course of doctrinal sermons he has avowed Calvinistic sentiments of the most unmistakable kind.

The need of a suitable church in the Capital, where the doctrines of Channing may be preached, was never more keenly felt than now. It is cheering to know that the prospect of such a church is at present brighter than before.

FIFTY YEARS AGO.

To the Editor of the Inquirer:

THOSE who can look back through long experience see that the great insurrection in behalf of Christian morality came from the heart of Calvinistic Congregationalism. Orthodox leaders have confessed in my hearing their grand mistake in scorning the ethical side of religion. Moses Stuart once said to me in regard to moral preaching: "Sir, our folks have got into the other ditch." And no little harm had they done to practical righteousness by denouncing it as "filthy rags."

More than fifty years ago William Ellery Channing rejected the twin Calvinisms—Native and Total Depravity—from his pulpit-preaching, declaring man to be a real child of God and born heir of heaven, asserting that character, not any creed; the life, not the dogma, is salvation! As I heard his glowing utterance at my mother's knee I wondered, because I had no idea how the Church in general slandered God's handiwork, the human soul.

As Channing did not desire to confine this inspiring consciousness to a single sect, as all his latter years were devoted to the philanthropic application of this new faith in humanity, so far from having failed, he has signally triumphed. Had a separate organization of the Channingites, like the Hussites, like the Swedenborgians, arisen, that would have been failure; that would have been just what he did his best to prevent, and what would have given pain to his lowly and generous spirit. But now a leading literary journal declares that the tone of every Christian community has been affected by this vindication of simple goodness; that it has widened the range of religious effort, modified the emphasis of preaching, and even the impulse of missionary zeal. So that this grand impulse of his was blessed of the Spirit precisely as Channing prayed and hoped.

Fifty years ago it was considered "orthodox" to burn Channing's sermons; now twoscore of Orthodox ministers have sought them of me. It was then considered Orthodox preaching to hold up the despairing drunkard as a type of our humanity; now this assertion of mine will be stoutly denied as a calumny. It was then considered Orthodox hospitality to shut out our best ministers from the Communion; now some Unitarian ministers have been invited to preach in Presbyterian pulpits, and some Unitarian religious essays have been issued by Episcopal ministers as their own, and I heard a Methodist minister declare to a ministerial association that Channing's Address on Temperance was the best so far given, to which I rang out a hearty amen.

F. W. H.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF PANICS.

To the Editor of the Inquirer:

THIS sad calamity in Brooklyn should teach us all it can. Behind, and deeper than the great wrong resulting from the want of skill and want of honesty combined, which some are now disposed to charge against the constructors of those fatal theatre exits, is a question of personal character in the audience. Hundreds of times a crowd as great as this has left the theatre in good-natured orderliness. American crowds are generally intelligent enough to be good-natured and orderly. But ignorance, superstition, and panic are nearly convertible terms. Beware of a crowd where they are found during an emergency.

Watch the faces and manners in the streams pouring out of any theatre—first at the exit from the expensive places, then at the cheap gallery door, and estimate the comparative chances of fatal crushing, should a wild cry of death from behind urge them on. How sure you might be that such a herd of rough boys as may at any time be seen packed in the gallery of a popular theatre would increase the risk at their stairway in the Brooklyn proportions of two hundred to two.

What is wanted to make such places truly safer is an innate love of humanity and respect for others' rights—some approach towards a religious faith—all of which is hard to discover in your street Arab and his associates.

But this is by no means a question of wealth and poverty. The writer's experience in ocean voyages, from steerage to first cabin, is, that among the steerage passengers—there from necessity, and not for amusement—there would be found a smaller percentage of meanness and selfishness, as well as of lucre, and, in case of accident at sea, the instances of self-denial and heroism are quite as likely to be found among the poor.

If it could be said of each one in a crowd,

"There was a daily beauty in his life,"

the chances would be few that they would crush each other to death.

E. A. S.

NEW YORK is favored at present with many valuable collections of artistic and useful articles, which, having done their duty at the International Exhibition, are now sent here to be sold. The scattering of these things will enrich many homes, and tend still more to cultivate a taste for the products of a higher skill.

It is understood that the daughters of the late Dr. Sprague are desirous of disposing of his large and valuable collection of manuscripts. Dr. Sprague when a young man was engaged as private tutor to a nephew of Washington, and was thus enabled to become possessed of a large number of letters written by the heroes of the Revolutionary period, the signers, etc. His collection of autographs comprises a great variety of distinguished authors, statesmen and rulers; indeed he seems to have been omnivorous.

THE letter from Dr. Schliemann to King George of Greece, dated Nov. 28, 1876, in which he claims to have discovered at Mycenæ the monuments which the tradition related by Pausanias indicates as the tombs of Agamemnon, Cassandra, Eurymedon and their companions, who were killed, while feasting at a banquet, by Clytemnestra and her lover Egisthus, is as startling as the report of the discoveries previously made by him in the Troad. The further statement that "The treasure alone is sufficient to fill a large museum, and the most splendid in the world," would seem to indicate either an enormous find or an unlimited enthusiasm.

In the new volume of sermons by Dr. E. H. Sears he shows his wit in many such passages as this: "We build cheap houses amid marshes and miasmas, and rent them at high rates to the poor, whose families die off by pestilence. And from the fruits of this slaughtering Christian men lie down in green pastures." And what poetry in this utterance: "Do something. Do something that will bring you within the living stream of Providence, so that it will bear you up in its currents, and, the navies of heaven riding with you, bear you along upon its waves."

LITERATURE.

REVIEWS.

FLOWER AND THORN. Later Poems. By Thomas Bailey Aldrich. Boston: James R. Osgood & Co. 1876.

Quaintness of conceit and daintiness of execution characterize many of these "later poems," though they are not wanting in strength or originality. The opening poem, "Spring in New England" is a fine, stirring piece, but to our taste the short "Interludes" best interpret Mr. Aldrich's genius. In "Destiny," "An Untimely Thought," "Rencontre," and "Identity" there is something fairly startling in the freedom and originality of thought and expression. They remind one of the same author's prose stories, where the most surprising denouements take away our breath. This seems particularly good:

Somewhere, in desolate, wind-swept space—
In Twilight-land, in No-man's-land—
Two hurrying Shapes met face to face,
And bade each other Stand!

"And, who are you?" cried one, a-gape,
Shuddering in the gloaming light.
"I know not," said the second Shape,
"I only died last night!"

Mr. Aldrich has for a long time stood in the front rank of the younger poets, and this volume only shows the same excellencies which marked his earlier productions.

THE BARTON EXPERIMENT. By the author of "Helen's Babies." New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1877.

This is a very different book from its predecessor, which was one of the successes of the year. That was a bright trifle, but the present volume is something more. "The Barton Experiment" has already appeared serially in the Christian Union. It is a temperance story, but a temperance story by a man who believes that cider is as important as talk. (Probably he would say sweet cider.) That he also appears to believe that all beverages containing alcohol are always and everywhere harmful, is not a very serious defect, inasmuch as such belief is aside from the main drift and purpose of the book, which are in every way admirable.

The village of Barton is supposed to be in the Mississippi Valley; and the story opens with a grand temperance demonstration, taking the form of a mass-meeting, where the usual means are employed to stir up a spasmodic excitement which may be taken advantage of to induce the signing of pledges of total abstinence. The progress and immediate results of the meeting are well described, but the purport of the book soon appears in the position taken by one Crupp, a liquor dealer, who gives up his calling and devotes himself to practical reform.

His various efforts to enlist others in active labor, with the more or less complete success with which they are crowned, fill the remainder of the little volume, and they are of a practical character seldom to be found in works of its class.

The several causes which lead to hard drinking and tend to continue it are forcibly put, and temperance reformers could hardly go amiss in taking well to heart the suggestions here so cogently supported.

SUNSHINE IN THE SOUL. Poems Selected by the Editor of "Quiet Hours." Boston: Roberts Brothers. 1877.

When we heard for the first time that the editor of "Quiet Hours" proposed making another little volume of selected poems, we wondered whether she was wise and feared there must inevitably be some falling off from the high quality of that little book which has been to so many a garden of refreshment. But here come the advanced sheets of the new volume, "Sunshine in the Soul," and we are bound to confess that it suffers in comparison with its predecessor only in the matter of quantity, having only 126 pages against 187 in the other. If there is any difference in the average quality of the two volumes, we should say it was in favor of the last, but that comparisons are odious between things so dear, and we have not the "Quiet Hours" to make a careful comparison. Suffice it to say that the present volume is another admirably-selected group of religious poems of the most refined, the most interior, the most heart-soothing and heart-lifting character. In the whole volume there is hardly one conventional word, one word written to some ecclesiastical order, but all is hearty, simple, genuine. We do not like it less because so many of the poems are long-time acquaintances and friends. But we are especially grateful for some that we have never seen before, which will hereafter hold a place among the dearest in our list of favorites. Among these are the poems of Henry Septimus Sutton, of which "How Beautiful to be Alive" is the most sweet and rare, and here are several poems by Wm. Brighty Rands, author of "Lilliput Levee and Lilliput Lectures," a man of lyric genius and brimful of awe and tenderness. We have not seen these before outside his own books, except in Mr. Longfellow's new Hymn and Tune-Book. Here, too, is a twenty years' favorite of Thomas Whytehead's (but not the best stanzas), never before printed in any American selection, but long ago in the little Monthly Journal of the American Unitarian Association. And here are lovely poems by Mrs. Louisa J. Hall and Miss Harriet W. Hall and Mr. Gannett and Eliza Scudder, and besides all these and many other moderns, Gellert and Gerhardt and Herbert and Flemming and Schmolke and others of the olden time and other centuries. We have it in the sheets, but can see that it is going to make a very dainty little book, and it will be a very precious one to many glad or burdened hearts.

CHRIST IN THE LIFE. With poems. By Dr. Edmund H. Sears. Boston: Lockwood & Brooks. 1877.

The previous volume of "Sermons and Songs" met with so warm a reception that it is not strange a companion volume has followed, marked by the same power of spirit, originality of thought, poetry of expression and evangelical tone which gave their charm to the first collection. The present subjects are—Elijah, David, Tibni and Omri, Pilate, the Guard, Resurrection, Conversion, Consecration, Conditions of Progress, Success, Three Advents, Progress, Thrones in Heaven, Peace by Power, Atonement, Trinity, Divine Friendships and Encouragements, besides an admirable lecture on the Saxon and Norman, and a score of poems in perfect harmony with the sermons in earnestness, freshness, beauty and grace, resembling those which have won for Dr. Sears a foremost place among the writers of Christian lyrics.

More biographical matter might well have been given than the brief summary in the preface of a long career of unceasing activity, leaving him the blessed conviction of having accomplished nearly all he had planned, and the longing for that rest from nobly-borne pain which was the prayer of his latter hours.

The three sermons on Old Testament subjects show how much profitable thought a glowing heart can draw from a treasure-house too little opened nowadays. All the discourses show how much this saintly man lived in Jesus' presence, and how it gave him peace and joy, inspiration and guidance.

AN ANECDOTE BIOGRAPHY OF SHELLEY. The Sans Souci Series. Edited by R. H. Stoddard. New York: Scribner, Armstrong & Co.

When we look at the exceedingly beautiful and thoughtful, but somewhat melancholy and feminine face of Shelley, in the portrait prefixed to this biography, we feel an intense sympathy for the sensitive, suffering soul which shows itself in every line. And, even when we read of his strange, erratic conduct and his whimsical fancies, we have the same tenderness for him that we feel for children. For genius is very childlike in such a subjective, intellectual nature, and has the same unconsciousness in its relation to the world and outward things that we see in children; hence the eternal youthfulness which, as a rule, marks and distinguishes the real poet. There is no keen analysis of the genius of Shelley, in this volume, but Mr. Stoddard has not intended to give such a study. He means only to portray the outer life of this singular being and to leave his works to speak for themselves. It is evident that his friends Hogg and Trelawney, who furnish the greater part of the material for this biography, did not thoroughly understand him, but felt the strong influence of his genius and regarded him as exempt from the usual rules of conduct.

Some of their anecdotes, such as the account of Shelley's meeting a poor woman with a little baby, and questioning it as to pre-existence, or the description of his infatuation for making paper boats and sailing miniature fleets on every chance pool of water, are amusing and characteristic, and such is the consideration which he excites that we are in danger of feeling a stronger sympathy with him in his desertion of his first wife than is at all proper, and cannot but laugh at the "good Harriet" and her tedious sister, who were so remote from the ideal world in which Shelley lived. It seems but natural that he should seek the companionship and even elope with Mary Godwin, that cultivated and tender woman, who lost sight of her own dues in loving adoration of the poet. He seemed to her above the world and not amenable to its restraints and customs. At any rate, we can somewhat appreciate his lack of moral perception when we read of his impulsive fits of generosity and his bewildered attempts to live in a world so foreign to his nature.

WASHINGTON. A Drama in Five Acts. By Martin F. Tupper. New York: James Miller. 1876.

Mr. Tupper informs us that this work has been "a very rapid labor of love, but still a labor, and no indolent outpouring of extemporary fancies." The "labor" has been just a trifle too apparent and possibly a few "extemporary fancies" would have been welcomed. But, in all seriousness, we are bound to say that Mr. Tupper's play is a thoroughly respectable performance. He has made good use of his materials—and where history fails him he has drawn upon what we may call his imagination—and the result is by no means a failure. Of course there are no great passages, full of fire and genius; who looks for them from the author of the "Proverbial Philosophy?" But there are a good many sounding lines and some vigor of description and power of narrative, as in John Adams' description of the early battles of the Revolution. Occasionally some of the lines end ridiculously enough, with some American name which does not gracefully round off the rhythm as:

"Welcome, good brother! welcome Benjamin Franklin!"

But "what's in a name?" Doubtless, to all patriotic hearts plain "Benjamin Franklin" ought to sound as majestic as Julius Cæsar or the noble Brutus. Unfortunately it does not. But, Mr. Tupper is hardly responsible for the names of his heroes.

In making Washington's "earliest love" the sister of Benedict Arnold, and in afterwards introducing her as making an attempt upon Washington's life at Valley Forge, Mr. Tupper acknowledges that he has gone slightly beyond historical facts, but perhaps is justified by poetic license. The incident looks somewhat improbable. Of course an occasional Tupperism will burst out upon us and charm us with an old familiar sound. As:

"The man who knows himself
Can bear reproach better than flattery."

Or,

"The well-balanced mind,
However hemmed by adverse circumstance
As in a labyrinth of cactus hedges,
Is always happy in itself."

We cannot say how this national drama would adjust itself to the stage, but there have been worse plays in the theatres, certainly, many far less decent. As Mr. Tupper never aspired to genius, he may be said to have fulfilled his mission as a Proverbial philosopher in composing this very respectable drama.

TROUBADOURS AND TROUVÈRES, New and Old. By Harriet W. Preston. Boston: Roberts Brothers. 1876.

By her translation of Mistral's "Mireio," Miss Preston awakened considerable interest in the poetry of Provence, and her own pleasure has led her to make an extended study of the modern Provençal poets—Mistral, Aubanel, Jasmin and others, and also of their predecessors, the ancient troubadours. The results of this study, already laid before the readers of the Atlantic Monthly, are again published in this pleasant volume, the most attractive portion of which, to our mind, is the last chapter, which treats of the Arthurian legends and the Knights of the Round Table. For us of the work-a-day world, these legends have a special refreshment.

IN THE LEVANT. By Charles Dudley Warner. Boston: James R. Osgood & Co. 1877.

Mr. Warner's lively sketches of Palestine travel have been among the most interesting papers in the recent numbers of the Atlantic. These are contained in the volume before us, together with other sketches of Syria, Turkey, Greece, etc. Where, as in this work, Mr. Warner does not feel bound to be funny under all circumstances, he is an exceptionally pleasant travelling companion, and his natural humor does much to beguile the tedium of passages which might otherwise seem to the practised reader something like a more than twice told tale. "In the Levant," can be safely recommended to those who enjoy a bright and easy style, which does not obscure a sturdy judgment.

It is a pity more care was not taken by the folder,—otherwise the book looks well.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST. By F. W. Farrar, D.D., Canon of Westminster. New York: Cassell, Petter & Galpin, and E. P. Dutton & Co.

We have received from Messrs. Cassell, Petter & Galpin the first four numbers of an illustrated edition of Farrar's "Life of Christ," to be completed in thirty-two parts. It is very handsomely printed, contains a good map of Palestine, and illustrations of places and customs and habits of the people, which are well executed, are, we are told, taken from photographs procured expressly for this purpose, while the copies of coins, medals and antiquities are also made under the guidance of an expert. The edition will in this way have an exceptional value given it.

ROSE IN BLOOM. A Sequel to "Eight Cousins." By Louisa M. Alcott. Boston: Roberts Bros. 1876.

The readers of Miss Alcott's books will hail with delight this latest of her stories. Those who will enjoy it the most are the girls who have grown to their full teens, or even beyond. Indeed, it is not suited to the children of eight or ten, who so eagerly read "Little Women." Rose has bloomed into a purposeful woman, and finds her helper in the sturdy young physician in a way that satisfies the reader as well as herself.

THROUGH PICTURE LAND. LITTLE FOLKS' PICTURE ALBUM. By C. S. Matéaux. London, Paris and New York: Cassell, Petter & Galpin.

Two admirable books for the little folks; each page with its picture and each picture with its story. The pictures vary greatly in merit, but they are all sufficiently good to interest those for whom they are intended, and those in the "Picture Album" are many of them quite effective. In this the letter-press is matter-of-fact and conveys much information in its four-line foot-notes, while the paragraphs in "Through Picture Land" are longer and more lively and frequently venture into fable and fairy-land.

LONG AGO: A Year of Child Life. By Ellis Gray. Boston: Lockwood, Brooks & Co. 1876.

A healthy, cheery book for children, beginning with Christmas and ending with Christmas, and varied with the scenes of child life in the country throughout the year. The author has not altogether avoided words and phrases more adapted to older readers, but there is little which need trouble children among cultivated people, and the volume is decidedly above the average of children's books in merit.

IN THE SKY-GARDEN. By Lizzie W. Champney. Illustrated by J. Wells Champney. Boston: Lockwood Brooks & Co. 1877.

A dainty volume, well printed on good paper and well bound. And the illustrations—most of them pure white on a field of blue—are unique and effective. But, in saying so much, we are afraid we have said all. The book as a children's book can hardly be esteemed a success. The stories are too old for young children and too young for old ones, and the amount of interest they are likely to create for the truths of astronomy may be taken as a negative quantity. There appears nothing harmful in the book, but we shall hope for better things when the writer has thought more and had more practice.

BRIEF NOTICES.

MESSRS. ROBERTS BROTHERS, of Boston, will publish Rev. James Martineau's "Hours of Thought on Sacred Things," by special arrangement with the author.

LITTLE PEOPLE OF GOD AND WHAT THE POETS HAVE SAID ABOUT THEM, edited by Mrs. Geo. L. Austin and published by Lee & Shepherd, Boston, makes a fresh claim this year upon the lovers of such books. Their name is getting to be legion, but hardly can they be too largely multiplied so that their quality is good. And the quality of this volume is exceedingly fine. Whittier contributes an original poem, and there are many dear old friends and some new acquaintances that will be friends are long from various sources. The illustrations are of various degrees of excellence.

MAGAZINES.

Prometheus.

THIS little magazine is true to its own principles, and that is saying a great deal. The true, the beautiful and the good are the objects of its conserving aspiration. The best methods are to be found here, whether they are to be found by this means or not. Constructive Reform is the ideal on which this substantial materialism is organized. Toleration is also another of its grand principles. It utters a great truth when it declares that "Reformers to be useful must be self-reformers." It believes that the day for despising the forms of thought that have been outgrown is now near its close. The Positivism of Comte is evidently favored by the editor's convictions. An honest spirit of inquiry, free from dogmatic audacity and reckless indifference, is to be welcomed by liberal minds everywhere. "Prometheus" is unchained, with no particular reverence for creeds as such, yet it respects the honest convictions of others and adheres to its own. Such a spirit is wise and ought to succeed in enlarging its influence. Whether the number of cultivated people who can appreciate the articles here presented and at the same time feel sufficient sympathy for its peculiar tendencies to lead it support, will be large enough to maintain its existence, we are not prepared to say. If it lives, it must do good. If it dies, it will die nobly, if it continues to the end as it has begun.

NEW PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

BOOKS.

From Lockwood, Brooks & Co.

CHRIST IN THE LIFE. By Edmund H. Sears. $1.75.
IN THE SKY GARDEN. By Lizzie W. Champney. $2.00.
LONG AGO. By Ellis Gray. $1.50.
STUDENT LIFE AT HARVARD. $1.75.

From Roberts Brothers, Boston.

TROUBADOURS AND TROUVÈRES. By Harriet W. Preston.
A BOOK OF POEMS. By John W. Chadwick. $1.00.
IS THAT ALL? No name Series.

From Harper & Brothers, New York.

A SMALLER CLASSICAL DICTIONARY. By William Smith, D.C.L., LL.D.
AZALEA. A Novel. By Cecil Clayton. 50 cents.
PRACTICAL COOKING AND DINNER GIVING. By Mrs. Mary F. Henderson. Illustrated.
THE GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION OF ANIMALS. By Alfred Russell Wallace. 2 vols.
THE LIFE OF MARIE ANTOINETTE. By Charles Duke Yonge.
THE BOYS OF '76. By Charles Carleton Coffin. Illustrated.

From Warren F. Draper, Andover.

THE BOOK OF PSALMS. A new translation by J. J. Stewart Perowde, D.D. From the Third London Edition. 2 vols. $7.50.

From Scribner, Armstrong & Co., New York.

DR. LANGE'S CRITICAL, DOCTRINAL AND HOMILETICAL COMMENTARY. Schaff. Ezekiel and Daniel.

From Sower, Potts & Co., Philadelphia

LITERATURE FOR LITTLE FOLKS. By Elizabeth Lloyd.

From S. C. Griggs & Co., Chicago.

WHAT TOMMY DID. By Emily Huntington Miller. $1.25.

From Oliver Ditson & Co., Boston.

THE WORLD OF SONG. A Collection of Popular Songs, etc.

From Macmillan & Co.

"IN THE DAYS OF THY YOUTH." Sermons on Practical Subjects by F. W. Farrar, D.D., F.R.S. $2.00.

From Cassell, Petter & Galpin.

THROUGH PICTURE LAND. By O. L. Mæleux.

THE LITTLE FOLKS' PICTURE ALBUM.

From the Unitarian Sunday School Society.

THE DATSPRING, for 1876.

From J. B. Ford & Co.

FOOTSTEPS OF THE MASTER. By Harriet Beecher Stowe. $1.75.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS. By Tullio Suzzara Verdi, A.M., M.D. $1.50.

ART AND SCIENCE.

"THE WEALTH OF NATIONS."

ON Tuesday evening a very good dinner was eaten at Delmonico's in honor of the hundredth anniversary of the publication of the great work which is generally considered at the foundation of the system of political economy now generally adhered to by cultivated people. Consumption being as essential as production in a system which treats of the accumulation of wealth by the aid of human hands, it is undoubtedly in the order of nature and science that the inner man should be duly strengthened, while high things receive their meed of respect, and it is unquestionably proper that none but the best of culinary products should be employed in the process.

On this occasion about ninety gentlemen were present, among whom may be named Parke Godwin, William Cullen Bryant, Prof. W. G. Sumner, David A. Wells, John Bigelow, Cyrus W. Field, Edward Atkinson, Gen. Francis A. Walker, Prof. Henri Cernuschi, Edwin L. Godkin and Prof. Botta.

After about three hours spent in replenishing the fountain of vital force, Mr. Parke Godwin, who presided, addressed the company, and in the course of his remarks, said:

"It is just a hundred years since the work on 'The Wealth of Nations,' the work of an humble Scotch professor, first appeared. I take it that the only conception of the wealth of nations was that of the resources of a prince who could keep armies and fleets, subsidize allies and pension a few poor poets. But that labor was the real wealth, the real source of national power, they hardly conceived. . . . It can hardly be said that the author of this work was the originator of any great and important truth. Many of his conclusions had been anticipated in Italy and in England. But the earlier writers had only discovered the germs of the truth. They had not seen it in its efflorescence. The merit of Smith was that he saw the truth in its intrinsic force, he grasped it in its bearings and relations, and he developed it with such completeness and simplicity that he made it plain to the common apprehension, that he made it the property of men in the common walks of life, and not alone of the student in his closet or the speculator in his school."

Toasts were then responded to by various gentlemen. We can only give brief extracts from a few of the addresses. Hon. David A. Wells said: "Under the light of the teachings of Adam Smith the golden rule of 'Do unto others as you would that they should do unto you' was embodied in the practical affairs of life. People are benefited and never injured by the prosperity of their neighbors; this was the great truth expounded by Adam Smith. There is no class of men that submit quicker to the spirit of the times than the mercantile class, and the spirit of the times always is the aggregation of knowledge."

Mr. Bryant said: "It is now four years since a concurrence of circumstances, to which I will do no more than allude, had the effect of causing a movement in favor of Free Trade, which was then in considerable activity and apparently not without effect on the public mind, to stagnate and almost to sleep. And what years, my friends, were these? Years of languishing enterprise, years of despairing industry, years of strikes, years of contention between the employers and the employed, years which showed the spectacle of laborers by hundreds looking in vain for occupation, and hunger-pinched families shivering in their unwarmed garrets. All this while the protective system, as it is called, has been in full force. Everything is protected—that is to say, everything imported into the country is taxed as it was never taxed before. . . . We have tried the protective system as fully as it is possible; we have tasted its fruits, and they are bitter. Let us now have a season of free exchange. . . . Let me say here that I am in favor of Protection, but protection of a kind very different from that which for many years past has dealt so cruelly with the interests of the country. I am for protecting the consumers—the class whose numbers are counted by millions. I am for protecting this class in its natural and proper right to exchange what it produces in whatever market it can exchange them to most advantage."

Alluding to the "ways that are dark and tricks that are vain," to which the Protective system leads, Mr. Atkinson, of Massachusetts, said the charter of the Pennsylvania Railroad forbade it to build locomotives, although it allowed it to repair them, for fear of interfering with the interests of the factories. This prohibition is, however, got over, by the company considering the brass label on the locomotives to be the locomotives themselves. The great evils here are bad money and bad methods of taxation. The former may be remedied soon, the remedy of the latter is further off, and it now produces the whiskey thief and the dishonest Government official.

SCIENTIFIC NOTES.

[From the Popular Science Monthly.]

IN a balloon-voyage from Cherbourg, in August, two French aeronauts, Moret and Durnof, observed with surprise, at a height of 1,700 metres, that the bottom of the sea was visible in detail, though that part of the British Channel must have a depth of 60 to 80 metres. The rocks and submarine currents appeared with great distinctness. It is suggested that this fact might be utilized, a means being afforded of giving accurate representations of the bottom for the benefit of navigators.

A BERLIN machinist has invented a steam-velocipede. The boiler is heated by means of a petroleum-lamp, and rests on the axle of the hind-wheels.

THE Paris correspondent of the London Times states that, in digging the new basin at St.-Nazaire, animal remains, tools, weapons, and utensils, have been found in a sandy stratum 20 feet below the surface. Last year a dolichocephalous skull was found near the same spot.

DR. MAGNUS condemns the use of blue glasses as a protection for the eyes, and prefers the gray and smoky glasses used in England. He considers blue glass specially irritating to the eye, and says that many birds, reptiles, and amphibians have yellow or reddish oil-drops in the eye to neutralize this blue color and protect the eyes.

[From Nature.]

At a recent meeting of the German Association of Naturalists and Physicians, Dr. Hermes described some interesting characteristics of the young gorilla in the Berlin aquarium. He nods and claps his hands to visitors; wakes up like a man and stretches himself. His keeper must always be beside him and eat with him. He eats what his keeper eats; they share dinner and supper. The keeper must remain by him till he goes to sleep, his sleep lasting eight hours. His easy life has increased his weight in a few months from thirty-one to thirty-seven pounds. For some weeks he had inflammation of the lungs, when his old friend Dr. Falkenstein was fetched, who treated him with quinine and Ems water, which made him better. When Dr. Hermes left the gorilla on the previous Sunday the latter showed the doctor his tongue, clapped his hands, and squeezed the hand of the doctor as an indication, the latter believed, of his recovery. In fact the gorilla is now one of the most popular inhabitants of the Prussian capital. For Pungu, as the gorilla is called, a large glass palace has been erected in the Berlin Aquarium in connection with the palm-house.

It is stated that M. Gessi has discovered a large branch of the Nile, 200 yards wide, with a good current, diverging from the White Nile, 100 miles south of Duffe. It is stated by the natives that it runs in an unobstructed stream into the Nile again, and, if so, water communication may possibly be established between Lake Albert Nyanza and Khartoum. Col. Gordon has discovered a large lake fifty miles in length between Urondogam and Mrooli, a little north of Victoria Nyanza (in 1 deg. N. lat.), from which issues the main branch of the Nile, called Victoria Nile, running from the Victoria to the Albert Lake, together with a branch river which must either join the Sobat river or the Asua river.

A MAGNIFICENT bolide was observed on Sunday night, November 5, at nine o'clock, at Clercy (Aube), in France. Numerous sparks were visible and an explosion was heard, although very feeble, owing to the immense distance at which it had taken place.

ART NOTES.

VARLEY, the English water-color artist, used to say: "Every picture ought to have a look-here."

THE French critics do not think that Turner was great in composition, Ruskin to the contrary notwithstanding.

Quere—which was the finer bravura, Turner's in color on the front or Ruskin's in words on the back of the canvas?

THE deliberate progression of oil-painting is like philosophy; water-color painting is like wit, which loses more by deterioration than is gained in truth.—VARLEY.

MEISSONNIER's picture of Napoleon in the Luxembourg Gallery has lately been injured. The head of Napoleon has been badly scratched, whether by accident or intentionally by some too zealous Republican, is not known.

WHITE's series of drawing models, published by Ivison, Blakeman & Co., are excellent. Each number of the series and each model is accompanied by an explanatory text, which gives a clear analysis of the principles applied in the drawing.

THE Corot in the corridor of the Academy has been a revelation to many, justifying the artist's reputation, which would hardly have been gained by the production of ever so many croquis in grey, like those before exhibited in our galleries. Has any artist so well expressed the tenderness of nature?

THERE is an indifferent display of pictures at the Brooklyn Academy. Half a dozen, perhaps, rise above mediocrity. As the eye seeks a resting-place among the frames, we recollect that Lewes says: "Many mistake aspiration for inspiration." A landscape by J. Wordsworth Thompson is remarkable for its clear daylight effect. Subject, drawing and color are all good. There is a suggestion, but not an imitation, of Lambinet in this work.

It is probable that not all the admirers of the French school of landscape are aware that an English artist was its virtual founder. A French critic says: "Constable's paintings produced an extraordinary effect in France. Their success was such that our great school of modern landscape springs directly from him. The classical school protested." To this Constable himself bears witness in a letter as follows: "Collins claims that at Paris only three English painters are known—Wilkie, Lawrence and Constable. The critics are crying out against the infatuation of the public for them, and say to the young artists: 'What resemblance do you find between these paintings and those of Poussin, which should always be admired and followed as models? Beware of these English pictures; they will destroy the school. There is neither beauty, style nor tradition in them.'"

DURING the last two or three years certain landscapes have been brought over from Munich which represent some new school or branch of a school. These pictures, seen from a distance in a gallery, appear as dead, opaque and colorless spots. A closer view shows that they are made up of sombre greens, muddy browns and greys that make one shiver. There seems to have been a dread of bright and even of clear color—inducing low, turbid tones in the picture and hypochondria in the observer. The palette is economical; the color that serves for a road is repeated on the flank of a cow, and goes out of the picture on the trunk of a tree. A mass of white is often introduced, probably to give value to hypothetical tones. The effect is to make the impurity of the actual more aggressive. The drawing is unequal. Huts, figures and clouds are sometimes well done, while the execution of foliage is almost always very bad. The manifold beauties of a tree—sweep and inflection of line, division and blending of masses, and intricacies of green and grey—are reduced to very low terms, to a stroke or two, a splash in the middle and a spatter at the extremities. Probably this is called generalization. It is quite possible that these pictures represent something better, done by masters, and that we see only the defects and mannerisms of the school in the works of pupils. These at least are imperfect in execution and disagreeable in effect.

HEARTH AND HOME.

[FOR THE INQUIRER.]

HIDDEN SPRINGS.

BY M. J. SAVAGE.

Up on the hillside, far away,
There is a hidden spring
That never sees the light of day,
And where no bird doth sing.

It darkly wells, mid rocks and moss,
Lost in the thicket deep;
Above it trailing creepers toss
And dripping dew-drops weep,

But, down below, its waters run
To feed the roots of flowers;
Where bright birds glitter in the sun,
And sing through happy hours.

It makes a brook where children play;
It clothes the fields in grasses;
Its path is beauty all the way
As down the vale it passes.

The mill-wheels hum along its side;
It builds the busy town,
And deeply, in its glassy tide,
The sweet stars look adown.

How many noblest deeds of men
Flow from the hidden springs,
Shut all away from human ken,
And kept as sacred things,—

The grief-fed springs within the heart,
All clouded o'er with doubt,
Where death our treasures smote apart,
And healing tears gushed out.

The graves of loved ones far away
Up the dim tracks of years,
Still nerve the purpose of to-day
To rise above our fears.

O, many a tender word is said,
And gentle deed is wrought,
In memory of the cherished dead
That live still in our thought!

The orphans, that the mother love
Of childless mothers saves,
May thank the grief that bends above
The newly sodded graves.

And many a man, whose noble fight
For truth has lifted men,
Knows some dead loved one's deathless might
His motive-power has been.

O tear-fed, hidden springs that well
Up from the heart's great deep,
The world its debt can never tell
To those that work and weep,—

That work out in the open day,
That weep when none are nigh;
And only by sweet deeds betray
The heart's sad mystery!

A COLORADO HEROINE.

[From the New York World.]

ON Friday night of last week, in one of the small parks of Colorado, lying among the mountains on the North Platte, there was a curious scene. There in a place fifteen miles away from the nearest neighbor sat a woman, surrounded by her family of seven children, and watching the dead body of her husband. A large fire which she and her oldest boy, a lad of fourteen, had built, threw a ghastly glare over the lonely landscape. The broad sky above and the huge hills around made more intense the sense of desolation and the littleness of humanity, and the murmur of the stream near by and the bark of the fox in the distance were the only utterances of solitude to grief. This woman's story, as told in the Denver Tribune, is one of the most affecting in the strange annals of American pioneer adventure. Her husband, W. H. Ostrom, had come to Colorado from Alabama, and on account of the depredations of the grasshoppers had not been very prosperous. He had prepared a new home for his family in a park on the North Platte, and set out that morning from Pine Grove Gulch for the journey of twenty miles, in a Western wagon drawn by a team of mules, and loaded with his household and his household goods. Toward evening, as he was crossing a small stream at a rough part of the road, one of the mules shied, and the wagon was overturned. It is probable that Ostrom was walking beside it, and flung himself in the way to try and save his wife and children. They were thrown violently out, and he was caught under the overturned wagon and borne to the ground with the cross-bar of the wagon-bed across him and a weight of 1,500 pounds crushing him. His terrified wife found him lying in this way, cool and considerate, but very pale. He directed her in her vain efforts to pry the wagon over, and died within five minutes, even while assuring her that he was not dangerously hurt. The oldest boy was on foot, driving a cow, and came up only in time to join his mother in her attempts to release his father's dead body. With true pioneer readiness and sternness, the team was unhitched and put to drag off the wagon, the corpse was rolled in a sheet, a fire was built, the mules were corralled, and the widow and orphans sat down in their dismal bivouac.

We think a picture of this night-watch of Mrs. Ostrom would be as characteristic of a great phase of American life as any scene that the imagination could conceive of. In her bitter experience, giving us a glimpse of the sufferings of the women of the Western frontier, we have something to suggest the trials and labors of all that hardy generation which pushed slowly on from the Atlantic to the Mississippi, before whom the wilderness receded like the horizon. It is the fault of our time to underrate the rough virtues of the pioneers, and forget the value of their achievements. We are losing sight of the romantic and heroic aspects of their life, in the refinements and luxuries of our own. Her story should bring back old memories to those in the heart of civilization, and teach them what it cost. It was not by enchantment that the log cabin was changed to the brown-stone mansion, the homespun dresses to silks, the emigrant wagons to family carriages. The metamorphosis was rapid, but it was the result of the sacrifice and endeavor of ages heaped into a few years. The Colorado woman, sitting all night in her mournful bivouac, with her seven children around her and the corpse of her husband just outside of the glare of the fire, stiffening in the frost—this penniless widow arousing herself in the morning, taking the dead body on the wagon and retracing her steps toward civilization, is as distinct a type of American womanhood as the gayest lady that attends church in New York to-day. They have different missions; but neither of them should forget that they are sisters.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

WHAT THE OWL KNOWS.

Nobody knows the world but me,
When they're all in bed I sit up to see;
I'm a better student than students all,
For I never read till the darkness fall;
And I never read without my glasses,
And that is how my wisdom passes.

"I can see the wind. Now who can do that?
I see the dreams he has in his hat;
I see him snorting them out as he goes—
Out of his stupid old trumpet nose,
Ten thousand things that you couldn't think,
I write them down with pen and ink,

You may call it learning—I call it wit,
Who else can watch the lady moon sit
Hatching the boats and the long-legged fowl,
On her nest, the sea, all night, but the owl?
When the oysters gape to sing by rote
She came a pearl down each stupid throat.

So you see I know—you may pull off your hat;
Whether round and lofty, or square and flat,
You can never do better than trust to me;
You may shut your eyes as long as I see,
While you live I will lead you, and then—I'm the owl—
I'll bury you nicely with my spade and shovel.

—George Macdonald.

NELLY'S INVITATION.

[From "A Houseful of Children," published by E. P. Dutton & Co.]

"Oh, mother, they are going to have such a nice time! Can't we go into the country just a little while, mother? It's so stifling here? It is, really, mother! Josie says so, and you don't know, because you're sick, and have that big shawl on your chair, if it is ever so hot."

"Well, darling, we must make the best of it; we cannot go away this year, and we must try to be contented and happy at home."

"Oh, dear! I think it is too bad, any way. All the girls are going, every one that I know; and I do want to go so much."

And Nelly looked sullen and unhappy, as might be supposed, with so much discontent in her heart.

The sick mother, with her pale face and close widow's cap, watched her in silence a few moments. Then she said gently, "Nelly, dear, you know why it is that we are poor, and cannot afford things that we used to have; did we not make up our minds, you and I, that we would both try to say, 'Thy will be done'?"

Nelly raised her eyes, and meeting her mother's glance, she sprang upon her lap, and threw both arms around her neck. Big girl as she began to think herself, she was not too large to claim her old place sometimes!

"I know, mother! I did mean to; but it is so hard to have no dear father to take care of us; sometimes I can't feel it in my heart, if I do say it!"

"We must keep on trying, darling; and God will help us to feel right."

And Nelly kissed her mother on both cheeks, and then got down, and set herself about tidying up the room, with a very brisk and cheerful air.

"I guess I'd better take Willy's horse in to him; he will cry if he misses it,"

And away she ran to do this errand.

Mrs. Evers began to talk to Nelly about her mother. She was a kind-hearted woman, but thoughtless, or she would not have spoken so to a child as young as Nelly.

"I declare, Nelly Warner," said she, "I was real frightened when I saw your mother to-day; seems to me she looks very poorly. Pity she hadn't some one to nurse her up, and take care of her. I couldn't help thinking she was going right after your father!"

"But don't you tell her I said so, child!" she added suddenly, noticing Nelly's startled look. "You musn't ever say anything to worry her, but keep her cheerful; do you see?"

She tried to "see," but her eyes were filling with tears.

Nelly wiped them away as she ran home; but her poor little heart was full with this new fear, and with self reproach to think how she had "worried" her mother that very afternoon.

She tried her best to be a help and comfort to her for the rest of the day.

The next morning Nelly heard a ring at the door-bell; and who should come bounding in but Josie and Fanny Spaulding.

"Why, why, girls! I thought you were going to-day!"

"So we were; but Papa can't leave until to-morrow! And we're not sorry a bit; we're glad of it; for only think, Nelly, Mamma wants to take you with us!"

"Yes!" cried Josie, jumping up and down; "she's coming around to see your mother, and ask her; but we ran on first. There she is!"

They ran to open the door, and before Nelly could think what had happened, the whole group were in Mrs. Warner's room, and Mrs. Spaulding was kindly urging her plan.

"Let Nelly go with us; the country air will do her a world of good; and I will take good care of her. I know you will miss her very much, but she will come back such a great strong girl, that she will be a real help to you. Besides, my husband will come out to us every Saturday, returning the first of the week, and if you should feel worse, and want her, we can send her home to you."

The good lady seemed to think she had it all fixed beautifully; and Josie and Fan whispered to Nelly—

"Won't it be splendid? we coaxed Mamma to do it! Won't we have grand times together?"

"You are very kind indeed; I am very grateful to you for your thought for my child," said Mrs. Warner. "Nelly, dear, have you heard? What do you say?"

Nelly went up to her mother's chair, and looked up quietly at Mrs. Spaulding.

"I should like to go into the country ever so much, ma'am; but I musn't leave my mother!"

"But, my dear, if your mother is willing to spare you, you can go!"

"No, ma'am, thank you; mother wouldn't have any one but Bridget in the house if I went away; and Bridget can't love her as I do!"

The child seemed to have made up her mind so firmly that there was no more to be said.

Josie and Fan exclaimed, "Oh, Nell Warner!" in a tone of intense disappointment; but the sick mother felt relieved and thankful.

If Nelly had been delighted with the plan, and anxious to go, she would not have had the heart to refuse her.

But she had had time to realize, in those few moments, how sadly she would miss her; and how anxious she would feel, were her only treasure absent in the care of comparative strangers.

"Well, little Nelly," said Mrs. Spaulding, "we are sorry not to take you with us; but you are a good girl to love your mother so much; and I am sure you will have a happy Summer at home!"

Mrs. Spaulding was quite right in this. Nelly found plenty to do and plenty of amusement, when she had made up her mind to be contented.

And, after a week or two, her dear mother began to grow much better, in spite of Mrs. Evers's doleful predictions.

Soon she was able to go out a little; and then, in a few days more, she and Nelly took a long ride out to the Park, in a car. They took a lunch with them, and spent several hours there; and Nelly was quite sure she could not have enjoyed a day more, even in the most delightful of country places.

JOTTINGS.

THE INQUIRER heartily returns thanks for the many kind words of congratulation and appreciation received during the past week. So far as we have been able to learn, the various changes inaugurated have all been accepted as decided improvements. Our Boston contemporary, the Christian Register, was provoked into one of its funniest and most characteristic greetings by the announcement that THE INQUIRER, in the hope of diminishing the number of funerals of editors and publishers during "the heated term," had resolved to give all its readers a Summer vacation.

REV. M. J. SAVAGE lectured under the auspices of the Boston Amateur Scientific Society, at Christian Union Hall, Boston, on Tuesday evening. His subject was "Moses and Evolution."

If a man wants to die a natural death let him lead a natural life.

It must be a great comfort to Governor Hayes that so many believe he had rather not be President at all than succeed by any injustice.

A DECISION has been rendered by Judge Endicott, by which the Unitarian society, of Woburn, Mass., receives $100,000, bequeathed by Jonathan B. Winn.

ACCORDING to Mr. C. W. Stoddard, it is an inevitable result of a Nile voyage, that one learns to scorn anything so modern as Rome, and the affairs of the last twenty centuries seem rather youngish.

REV. WM. J. POTTER, of New Bedford, has received leave of absence from his pulpit, and will go South for the sake of his wife's health. His pulpit will be supplied during his absence by Rev. Frederic Hinckley.

MR. CHARLES SOTHERAN will address the "First Congregation of the Church of Humanity," at Science Hall, 141 Eighth street, next Sunday evening, Dec. 17th. Subject: "The Relation of Scientific Legend to Recent Verification."

It is said that seats are sold for single Sundays in the hall where the Rev. W. H. H. Murray preaches at a price proportioned to the yearly rentals, and that tickets including reserved seats are sold in advance at one of the Boston music stores.

THE Boston Globe of Monday had reports of sermons last Sunday by John Weiss, on "Our Political Machinery;" by Rev. Dr. Bartol, on "The Patriot and Partisan;" by Rev. M. J. Savage, on "The Transient and Permanent in Human Life."

WANTED—By the Independent Church at Canastota, N. Y., an earnest minister, unmarried. Small salary, but large opening and good following for "the right man." Address J. L. Roberts, Treasurer Independent Church, Canastota, N. Y.

THE Permanent Exhibition at Philadelphia seems likely to prove a success. Many more applications have been made for space than can be granted. The Turkish exhibitors are said to intend a much finer display of goods than in the International Exhibition.

THE New York Municipal Society met on Thursday evening last and signaled its meeting by a vigorous denunciation of certain Municipal abuses. The public will watch its further proceedings

(See next page.)

The Inquirer.

Published every Thursday, from the middle of September to the middle of July, in the Park Bank Building, 214 Broadway, New York.

To be in season for insertion the same week, communications intended for publication must be forwarded in time to reach this office not later than Tuesday. No attention is paid to anonymous communications. We require the name and address of every writer, not necessarily for publication, but as guarantees of good faith.

Communications relating to the editorial department of the paper should be addressed, "Editor of the Inquirer, P. O. Box 109, New York City;" all others to "Publisher," same address.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

Three Dollars per year, in advance. Clergymen, Two Dollars per year. Postage, Twenty Cents per year, in advance. Remittances should be made by Registered Letter or by Post-Office Money Order, or Draft on New York payable to PUBLISHER OF THE INQUIRER.

ADVERTISING RATES.

Six cents per agate line per week; outside page and page next reading matter, ten cents per line. Special Notices twenty cents per line.

Discount—Five per cent. on yearly accounts amounting to $250 and under $500. Ten per cent. on yearly accounts amounting to $500 or more.

Copy for Thursday's paper received until Tuesday afternoon.

Advertisements must be acceptable in every respect.

Office, PARK BANK BUILDING, 214 Broadway.

Address,

THE INQUIRER,

Box 109, New York.

Special Notices.

Among the Exhibitors at the Centennial Exhibition may be mentioned the well known Organ manufacturers of Brattleboro', Vt., Messrs. J. Estey & Co. The "prominent absence" of such a firm from the "list of awards" has doubtless occasioned many questions as to the reason. The explanation is simple indeed. They did not compete. They simply exhibited their instruments on their own intrinsic merits, with no efforts to obtain recognition except from the public.

We cannot too highly commend such a course, as compared with some exhibitors whose sole aim seemed to be not to give the public pleasure in examining their wares, but to obtain the bronze medal.

Enquiry elicits the fact that Estey & Co. are the largest manufacturers and the heaviest exporters of their class, one-half of the entire amount of organs shipped to European markets being from this house.

RICHARD WAGNER, of whose ability to judge there can be no doubt, writes, "The tone of the Estey Organ is very beautiful and noble, and gives me the greatest pleasure. My great friend Franz Liszt is also charmed and delighted with them."

MME. ESSIOFF says, "I can play with exquisite enjoyment for hours on these beautiful instruments."

OLE BULL—"Excel in fine, powerful tone."

MME. LUCCA—"I am surprised at their full, noble and organ-like tone."

RUBENSTEIN—"Tone full, noble and exceedingly animating."

There is no doubt about the meaning of such expressions as these from the leading musicians of the age, and Estey & Co. may well claim to lead the world.

10 PER CENT. NET.

Kansas, Missouri and Iowa Improved Farm First Mortgage Coupon Bonds Guaranteed. We guarantee, as an assurance, that we loan not to exceed one-third of the actual value. In over six years' business never lost a dollar; never delayed a day on interest or principal; neither we nor our customers ever took an acre of land under foreclosure. Send for particulars and references.

J. B. WATKINS & CO., LAWRENCE, KAN., or HENRY DICKINSON, Manager, 72 Cedar Street, New York.

A HELP FOR HARD TIMES.—How to get more from one's work or business, and how to make the most of the products, is very desirable information. A good deal of such information is undoubtedly furnished in the valuable American Agriculturist, whose announcement will be found in our advertisement columns under the heading of "Hard Times." How the saving or extra production of a single small object as an egg a week, or one of several other articles, will pay for that journal, or our own, is well exhibited in the announcement referred to. Read it.

Madame Ivan C. Michels,

SHAKSPEARIAN READER.

Accepts engagements for Church and Parlor Readings. Ladies and Gentlemen thoroughly instructed in Elocution. For Terms and Testimonials apply to 33 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

The Address of Rev. John F.

LOCKE is to the care of W. H. Baldwin, President Young Men's Christian Union, 18 Boylston St., Boston.

NEARLY READY.

Hours of Thought on Sacred THINGS.

BY JAMES MARTINEAU.

ROBERTS BROTHERS, Boston.

with interest, and some hope that it may proceed beyond protest to reform.

THE news of the revival of the Extradition Treaty between the United States and Great Britain will be gladly received and few will object to any amendment of the law which will tend to make its meaning more clear, and protect definitely the right of asylum in proper cases.

"THE Divine Origin of Common Sense" was the subject of Rev. Charles G. Ames' lecture at Spring Garden Institute, Philadelphia, last Sunday evening. On Thursday evening, Dec. 7, Mr. Ames read a paper on "Wisdom in Charity," before the Social Science Association of Philadelphia.

BOSTON YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN UNION.—A service appropriate to "Forefathers' Day" (Dec. 21) will be held next Sunday evening, 7½ o'clock, at the Union Hall, Boylston street, address by Rev. Geo. E. Ellis, D.D. Social singing at close of services. The public cordially invited.

TURBULENCE seems the normal condition of nearly all tropical and semi-tropical peoples. Is it possible that in the barbaric States which form the Southern border of our own country, we may have to look forward to a repetition on a smaller scale of the pronunciamientos and partisan outbreaks with which we have become familiar among the Spanish peoples?

A REVOLUTIONARY outbreak in Mexico is something which is always to be expected, and the present triangular contest does not differ greatly from many which have preceded it. Lerdo, until now the President de facto, and we suppose de jure also, is in the hands of a military dictator Diaz, while the ex-Chief Justice Iglesias holds Monterey and other points in the North. There is a fair prospect for plenty of brigandage and a continuance of the state of chronic disorder to which the country has long been accustomed.

THE stagnation in trade which immediately followed the election still continues, and with slight signs of any decided reaction. Preparations for the holidays tend to keep up a show of business in retail circles, but few are so sanguine as to expect quite the ordinary activity. Money is lending on call in New York at from 4 to 6 per cent. The price of gold has ranged low, because of continued receipts from abroad, and has touched 107, afterward reacting about a half per cent. Silver continues to rise in value in the London market, being quoted on Tuesday at 57½ d., per ounce, which would make the value of the old silver dollar, about 96½ cents in gold.

THE OHIO VALLEY CONFERENCE met at Indianapolis Dec. 6 and 7. Sermons were preached by Rev. Messrs. C. H. Ellis and J. L. Jones, and essays read by Rev. Mr. Ellis on "Unitarian Revivals," by Rev. Mr. Douthit on "What Liberal Christians Most Need," by Dr. Clarke of Indianapolis, on "Individualism," and by Rev. S. W. Sample, of Jacksonville, Ill., on "The Religion of Worldliness." Devotional meetings were held at 9 A.M. on both days, and the Conference closed with a platform meeting on the evening of Dec. 7, addresses by Rev. Messrs. Heywood, Jones, Douthit and Bailey. The Conference was greatly enjoyed by all who participated in its exercises.

REV. ROBERT COLLYER, of Chicago, preached in the Second Unitarian Church, Brooklyn, last Sunday morning, and again to a large congregation in All Souls', New York, on Sunday evening. He seemed in excellent condition, and preached with vigor and effect, although he had been lecturing almost every night in the previous week. What a power a grand physique is in a public orator—a sound, ringing voice, a healthy look, and plenty of reserved force! It is as good as a sermon to look on such a preacher, and his work is half done before he opens his mouth. But Mr. Collyer always has plenty to say that is worth hearing, and there are few who carry so much spiritual earnestness, fine discernment, hearty humanity, or tender feeling for common experiences and common people into the pulpit.

The Best Present

FOR PASTOR, TEACHER OR FRIEND
IS THE UNABRIDGED ENLARGED AND CORRECTED
EDITION OF DR. WILLIAM SMITH'S
DICTIONARY OF THE BIBLE.

Published by HURD & HONGERFORD, New York (The Riverside Press, Cambridge), in four volumes, 3,667 pages, with 596 illustrations. Price in cloth, $26; sheep, $30; half calf, $36. Sold by all booksellers, or can be obtained direct from the publishers.

NEW AND ELEGANT JUVENILES.

LITTLE FOLKS' PICTURE ALBUM.
Companion Vol. to "Little Folks' Picture Gallery." Containing nearly 200 full-page illustrations, with simple Prose. Extra Crown 4to., cloth, Chromo sides, $2.50.

TINY HOUSES AND THEIR BUILDERS.

In this handsomely-finished volume a description of all classes of Birds is given, and their habits are explained in a manner to interest and instruct the young. Fcap. 4to., full gilt, $2.50.

THROUGH PICTURE LAND.

By C. L. MATEAUX. Short Instructive Stories. With over 200 illustrations. Fcap. 4to., cloth extra, with Chromo on side, $1.50.

THE COSY CORNER SERIES.

With a large number of full-page illustrations, very handsome and attractive. Printed on extra paper, and bound in fine cloth black and gold, Chromo side, 16mo 4 vols., each $1.00.

Bright Rays for Dull Days.

90 full-page illustrations.

Chats for Small Chatterers.

90 full-page illustrations.

Pictures for Happy Hours.

90 full-page illustrations.

Ups and Downs of a Donkey's Life.

Over 100 illustrations, full-gilt sides.

CASSELL, PETTER & GALPIN,
596 Broadway, New York.

Send for Catalogues,

A Gift of Enduring Value. THE STORY OF RUTH.

FROM THE HOLY BIBLE. With an Introductory Sonnet written for the book by H. H., and fifteen superb full-page illustrations, after drawings by M. BIDA. Oblong quarto, elegantly bound in cloth, gilt and black lettered.

PRICE, $5.00.

Sold by all Booksellers. Mailed, post-paid, by the publishers,

ROBERTS BROTHERS, Boston.

Holiday Music Books!

17 SPLENDID VOLUMES FOR PRESENTS.

Uniform in Style, Binding and Price,
which is for each Book, in Boards,
$2.50; in Cloth, $3.00; in
Cloth, full Gilt, $4.00.

THE WORLD OF SONG

is the latest Volume of Bound Music, has 250 pages, full Sheet Music Size, and is filled with the best Songs and Duets of the day.

GEMS OF THE DANCE

is the latest Bound Volume of Instrumental Music, 232 pages, Full Sheet Music Size, filled with the best recent compositions of Strauss, Lanner, Zieff, Faust, and other is a companion to the famous "GEMS OF STRAUSS."

Also, Vocal.

GEMS OF ENGLISH SONG,
GEMS OF SCOTTISH SONG,
GEMS OF GERMAN SONG,
WREATH OF GEMS,
SHOWERS OF PEARLS,
OPERATIC PEARLS,

MOORE'S IRISH MELODIES,
SILVER WREATH,

Instrumental.

GEMS OF STRAUSS,
HOME CIRCLE, VOL. I. & II.
PIANIST'S ALBUM,
PIANO-FORTE GEMS.

Also the MUSICAL TREASURE, both Vocal and Instrumental, ORGAN AT HOME, for Reed Organs, and PIANO AT HOME, with Piano Duets.

Either book mailed, post free, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

C. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 Broadway,
New York.

J. E. DITSON & CO.,
Successors to Lee & Walker,
Philadelphia.

J. W. Bouton's priced Catalogue of Illustrated, Fine Art, and Standard Books, suitable for presentation or the library, may be had gratis on application to 706 Broadway.

Fifty pages—300 illustrations, with descriptions of thousands of the best Flowers and Vegetables in the world, and the way to grow them—all for a Two Cent postage stamp. Printed in German and English. VICK'S FLORAL GUIDE, Quarterly, 25 cents a year. VICK'S FLOWERS AND VEGETABLE GARDEN, 50 cents in paper; in elegant cloth covers, $1.00.

Address, JAMES VICK, Rochester, N. Y.

READY FOR AGENTS.

The Centennial Exposition, DESCRIBED AND ILLUSTRATED.

A graphic pen-picture of its history, grand buildings, wonderful exhibits, curiosities, great days, etc. Profusely illustrated, thoroughly popular, and very cheap. Is selling immensely. 5,000 Acqts wanted. Send for full particulars. This is the chance of 100 years to coin money fast. Get the only reliable history. HUBBARD BROTHERS, Publishers, Philadelphia, Pa., Cincinnati, O., Chicago Ill., or Springfield, Mass.

CAUTION. Be not deceived by premature books assuming to be "official," and telling what will happen in August and September.

BROOKLYN ADVERTISEMENTS.

OVINGTON BROTHERS,

246, 248, 250 and 252 Fulton Street,

BROOKLYN.

Fine China and Glass,

Clocks and Bronzes.

MAJOLICA, FAIENCE, GIEN, TORQUAY AND WARES

Goods packed and shipped free of charge.

JOURNEY & BURNHAM

HAVE OPENED A SPLENDID STOCK OF

Autumn and Winter Goods.

LYONS COLORED SILKS,

In all the New and Choice Shades.

BLACK SILKS,

Of the best makes imported, and at extremely low prices.

MOURNING GOODS,

Of every description.]

Cartwright & Warner's UNDERWEAR and FANCY HOSIERY in great variety. KID GLOVES, the choicest colors and best in market.

Trimming fringes, new styles, and some Worsted Fringes not to be found elsewhere.

O'BRIEN & COMPANY,

IMPORTERS,

MANUFACTURERS and RETAILERS

OF

DRY GOODS,

CARPETS,

CLOTHING,

141 and 143, 151 to 159 Atlantic Ave.

We solicit an inspection of our magnificent assortment in all our Departments—forty-one in number—conceded to be the largest, most varied and best selected ever exhibited in Brooklyn, with a stock in value amounting to over half a million dollars.

Joseph O'Brien & Co.,

141 and 143, 151 to 159 Atlantic Avenue.

Eau Figaro

Restores to their original color in a few days

GRAY HAIR or BEARD.

Sold by Druggists and Barbers.

E. FOUGERA & CO., 30 North William St., New York. Agents for the United States.

Blancard's Pills

of Iodide of Iron.

Especially recommended for Scrofulous and debilitated Constitutions, etc.

Sold by Druggists. Price, $0.75 and $1.25 per bottle. E. FOUGERA & CO., Agents, New York.

$55 TO $77 a week to Agents. Samples FREE. P. O. VICKERY, Augusta Maine.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine.

MISFIT CARPETS.

English Brussels, Three Ply and Ingrain; also, Stair Carpets, Velvet Rugs, Crumb Cloths, etc., very cheap, AT THE OLD PLACE.

112 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

Carpets carefully packed and sent to any part of the United States free of charge.

SEND FOR PRICE LIST.

J. A. BENDALL.

A TOWN LOT ABSOLUTELY GIVEN AWAY!

Worth $100.

We offer for Thirty Days, a Town Lot in Mineral City, Grayson County, Texas, FREE, every Lot Given Away Unconditionally.

NO SETTLEMENT OR IMPROVEMENT REQUIRED.

Young Men, Secure a Home in the Finest Portion of the United States, for Nothing.

FACTS AND STATISTICS.

Grayson county, Texas, is in the finest portion of the State, and is traversed by three railroads, and enjoys the advantages of the Red River navigation. Has been settled for THIRTY years. SUMMER THE YEAR ROUND. From the United States statistics of 1870, Grayson county, Texas, produces a variety of production unrivalled in the country, COTTON, TOBACCO, CORN, WHEAT, POTATOES, and all the FRUITS of the SUNNY SOUTH, as well as the growths of harder climates, making the country truly a paradise.

MINERAL CITY is located on a beautiful plat of high, rolling prairie, interspersed with fine timber, in Grayson county, on Big Mineral Creek, an unfailing stream of pure water, and on the Gainsville branch of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad, twelve miles west of the intersection of the M. K. & T. and Texas Central Railroads. The location is beautiful and healthy, and in all respects desirable, having natural parks, good drainage, and abundance of pure water at all seasons of the year.

WHY WE GIVE LOTS AWAY.

The Ohio, Kentucky and Texas Land Company have Large Tracts of the best agricultural and mineral land in Northern Texas. And the time seems to be favorable to throw some of our lands on the market, at prices ranging from $5 to $10 per acre for unimproved, and $20 to $30 for improved lands. We have platted in the midst of our lands the town of MINERAL CITY, and to encourage emigration there we give to any one sending their names to us a WARRANTY DEED in fee simple for one or more lots in MINERAL CITY, the only charge being the sum of ONE DOLLAR to pay the Notary public for acknowledging the deed, and actual expenses. WE DO NOT GIVE EVERY LOT AWAY, but every alternate one. We do not expect that every one who takes a lot in Mineral City will go there, but we do think a great many will, and they will induce their friends to follow, and it will be but a short time until we have a FLOURISHING CITY. And as we own every other lot, it is obvious to all how we are to make money. We make out the deeds UNCONDITIONALLY, not requiring you to settle or improve. Our limit to any one person taking advantage of our liberal offer is five lots.

INSTRUCTIONS.—We will send, by return mail, to any one who will send us, within thirty days from date of this paper, one dollar, with their names written plainly in FULL, a clear WARRANTY DEED to a 25 by 100 ft. town lot in MINERAL CITY, Grayson county, Texas, CLEAR OF ALL TAXES TO JANUARY 1, 1878. Your application for a town lot must in all cases be accompanied by ONE DOLLAR, to pay cost of drawing and acknowledging deed, and registry fee, and mailing and postage. Your lot can then be sold or transferred at pleasure. LET ALL IMPROVE THE CHANCE TO SECURE A HOME. Deeds sent to any part of the UNITED STATES AND CANADAS.

Address all communications to the OHIO, KENTUCKY AND TEXAS LAND COMPANY, 206 Race Street, Cincinnati, O.

Remember this offer is good for THIRTY DAYS ONLY.

Parents, Secure a Few Lots for your Children!

This advertisement will not appear again in the paper.

B.T. BABBITT'S BABY SOAP

Only the purest vegetable oils used in its manufacture. No artificial and deceptive odors to cover common and deleterious ingredients. UNRIVALLED for the toilet and the bath. Used in bathing children, will prevent eruptions, keep the skin soft and smooth, contribute to health, and prevent disease. Does away with all powders, chalk or other smutments. A certain preventive of chafing, itching, &c., in babies, the causes of half the crying and crossness of babyhood. Worth ten times its cost to every mother and family in Christendom; packed in boxes of 12 cakes of 6 ozs. each, and sent free to any address on receipt of $2.50. Address, B.T. Babbitt, N.Y.

EMPLOYMENT.

ANY PERSON of ordinary intelligence can earn a living by canvassing for The Illustrated Weekly. Experience is not necessary—the only requisite being, as in all successful business, industry and energy. Send for particulars. Address CHARLES CLUCAS & CO., 14 Warren St., N. Y.

The Toll Gate! Prize Picture sent free! An ingenious gem. 50 objects to find. Address, with stamp, E. C. Abbe, Buffalo, N. Y. 1491-ly

BALD HEADS

Can be covered with a piece exactly fitted to the Bald spot, so perfect, and with work so ingeniously contrived as to appear each hair just issuing from the skin, the hair being exactly of the same shade and texture as the growing hair; they are so perfect they cannot be detected. Made only at BATCHELOR'S Celebrated Wig Factory, 16 Bond Street, N. Y.

HAIR DYE.

BATCHELOR'S CELEBRATED HAIR DYE is splendid. It never fails. The only true and perfect dye. Harmless, reliable, instantaneous. No disappointment, no ridiculous tints; remedies the ill effects of bad dyes, leaves the hair soft and beautiful Black or Brown. Sold and put up applied at BATCHELOR'S Wig Factory, 16 Bond St., N. Y. Sold by all druggists.

W. A. Batchelor's Curative Ointment Immediately cures Ring-Worm, Tetter, Itching of the Head, and all Eruptions of the Skin, Face or Body.

W. A. Batchelor's Alaska Seal Oil for the Hair. The best Hair Oil in use.

W. A. Batchelor's Dentifrice for beautifying and preserving the teeth and Gums and deodorizing the breath.

W. A. Batchelor's New Cosmetique, Black or Brown, for tinting the Hair, Whiskers or Moustaches without greasing them. Sold at factory, 16 Bond Street, New York, and by all druggists. Ask for them.

$12 a day at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine.

HANOVER FIRE INSURANCE CO., NO. 120 BROADWAY, N. Y. Forty-seventh Semi-Annual Statement.

JANUARY 1, 1876.

Cash Capital.....	$500,000 00
Reinsurance Fund.....	587,717 75
Outstanding Liabilities.....	112,298 14
Net Surplus.....	392,759 20
	$1,592,775 09

ASSETS.

Cash in Bank and Office.....	$102,756 92
United States Six Per Cent. Bonds.....	596,637 50
Bonds and Mortgages, being first lien on improved Real Estate in the Cities of New York and Brooklyn.....	326,025 00
Loans on Call (Market Value of Securities, ties, $136,790).....	114,850 00
City and County Bonds.....	230,285 00
Bank and Trust Co. Stocks.....	41,650 00
First Mort. R. R. Bonds and Stocks.....	57,250 00
Balance in hands of Agents and Uncollected Office Premiums.....	99,163 56
Accrued Interest on Bonds and Mortgages and and Call Loans.....	7,067 22
Real Estate.....	17,109 49
	$1,592,775 09

BENJ. S. WALCOTT, President.
I. REMSEN LANE, Secretary.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

For restoring Gray Hair to its natural Vitality and Color.

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color, with the gloss and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous, and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich, glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co.,

Practical and Analytical Chemists,

LOWELL, MASS.

LAMAR INSURANCE COMPANY, OF NEW YORK. Broadway, cor. John Street. Capital, - - $200,000.

ASSETS, JANUARY 1, 1876.

Cash on hand and in Bank.....	$13,269 20
U. S. Bonds, market value.....	304,220 00
Loans on Call, Good Stocks Collateral.....	1,000 00
Bonds and Mortgages on Brick Dwellings.....	58,900 00
Bills Receivable for Inland Prem's.....	1,820 65
Premiums in course of collection.....	7,394 70
New York Bank Stocks market value.....	21,487 20
	$408,092 05
Losses unadjusted estimated at.....	$14,300 56

ISAAC R. ST. JOHN, President.

A. R. FROTHINGHAM, Vice Pres't.

WM. R. MACDIARMID, Sec'y.

HOME Insurance Co. of New York, Office No. 135 Broadway.

Forty-sixth Semi-Annual Statement,
Showing the condition of the Company on the first day of July, 1876.

Cash Capital.....	$3,000,000 00
Reserve for Re-Insurance.....	1,845,521 47
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Dividends.....	247,326 66
Net Surplus.....	958,868 71
Total Assets - - -	$6,051,716 84

SUMMARY OF ASSETS:

CASH IN BANK.....	$126,946 71
BONDS AND MORTGAGES, BEING FIRST LIEN ON REAL ESTATE WORTH $4,820,000.....	1,922,738 01
UNITED STATES STOCKS (MARKET VALUE).....	2,642,125 00
BANK STOCKS (MARKET VALUE).....	237,487 50
STATE AND CITY BONDS (MARKET VALUE).....	69,250 00
LOANS ON STOCKS, PAYABLE ON DEMAND (MARKET VALUE OF SECURITIES, $547,060).....	423,650 00
INTEREST DUE ON 1st JULY, 1876.....	73,394 63
BALANCE IN HAND OF AGENTS.....	151,157 19
BILLS RECEIVABLE.....	10,833 31
PREMIUMS DUE AND UNCOLLECTED ON POLICIES ISSUED AT THIS OFFICE.....	18,634 56
Total - - -	$6,051,716 84

LIABILITIES.

CLAIMS FOR LOSSES OUTSTANDING ON 1st JULY 1876.....	$245,926 63
DIVIDENDS UNPAID.....	1,400 00
Total, - - -	$247,326 66

CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.
A. F. WILLMARTH, Vice-Pres't.
D. A. HEALD, 2d Vice-Pres't.
J. H. WASHBURN, Secretary.
T. B. GREENE, } Ass't Secretaries.
C. K. FRANCIS, }

A Dividend of FIVE per cent. has been declared, payable on and after Tuesday, the 18th of July.
New York, 14th July, 1876.

THE NEW JERSEY MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO., NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.

J. H. STEDWELL, President.

C. H. BEINKERHOFF, Secretary.

J. H. CANNIFF, Cashier.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved ($2.00) Receipt Book." Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. SPRINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

ATLANTIC MUTUAL INSURANCE CO. NEW YORK, OFFICE 51 WALL ST.

ORGANIZED 2.

INSURES AGAINST MARINE AND INLAND
NAVIGATION RISKS.

And will issue Policies making Loss payable
in England.

Its Assets for the Security of its Policies are more than

TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured, and are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated during the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearing interest until redeemed.

JOHN D. JONES, President.
CHARLES DENNIS, Vice-President.
W. H. MOORE, 2d Vice-President.
A. A. RAVEN, 3d Vice-President.
J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

PHENIX

INSURANCE COMPANY, OF BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Capital..... $1,000,000 00
Cash Assets, Jan. 1, 1876..... 2,549,958 77

OFFICES:

Western Union Telegraph Building, BROADWAY, Cor. DEY St., New York.

Brooklyn Office,..... 12 & 14 Court St.
Brooklyn E. D. Office,..... 93 Broadway.

The benefits to be derived by the public from Insurance against loss by fire are so great and numerous, when compared with its trifling cost, as to render it an imperative duty on every one to avail themselves of the protection afforded by the PHENIX INSURANCE COMPANY against the destructive ravages of FIRE, which in a few moments may lay waste the fruits of a whole life of industry.

STEPHEN CROWELL, President.
PHILANDER SHAW, Vice President.
WILLIAM E. CROWELL, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED A. D. 1850.

THE MANHATTAN

LIFE INSURANCE CO., OF NEW YORK,

has paid $6,500,000 Death Claims;
has paid $1,550,000 return premiums to Policy-holders; has a surplus of more than $1,600,000 over Liabilities; and a ratio of $120 Assets for every $100 Liabilities, by New York Standard of Valuation. It gives the best Insurance on the best lives at the most favorable rates.

EXAMINE THE PLANS AND RATES OF THIS COMPANY.

HENRY STOKES, C. Y. WEMPLE,
President. Vice-President.
J. L. HALSEY, S. N. STEBBINS,
Secretary. Actuary.

H. Y. WEMPLE, } Assistant Secretaries.
H. B. STOKES }

TEAS AND COFFEES

AT WHOLESALE PRICES.

In 10c to suit customers. SPECIAL TERMS TO CLUB ORGANIZERS and those who order whole or part of time in selling our goods. Send for new Price List.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY,

(P. O. Box 5643), Nos. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York,

Books Worthy the Attention OF BOOK-BUYERS AT THIS SEASON.

- SINGERS AND SONGS OF THE LIBERAL FAITH. By Rev. A. P. Putnam, D.D. 8vo. Cloth, $3.
- EZRA STILES GANNETT: A Memoir. By Wm. C. Gannett. 8vo. Cloth. Price, $3.
- RADICAL PROBLEMS. By Rev. C. A. Bartol. Price, $2.
- THE RISING FAITH. By Rev. C. A. Bartol. Price, $2.
- THE LAYMAN'S BREVIARY; or Meditations for Every Day in the Year. From the German of Leopold Schefer. By Rev. Charles T. Brooks. Square 16mo. $2.25. A cheap edition, $1.50.
- THE WORLD PRIEST. Translated from the German of Leopold Schefer, author of "The Layman's Breviary." By Rev. Chas. T. Brooks. Square 16mo. $2.25.
- A BOOK OF POEMS. By Rev. John W. Chadwick. Price, $1.00.
- THE PERFECT LIFE. In twelve Discourses. By William Ellery Channing, D.D. Edited from his manuscripts by his nephew, William Henry Channing. 12mo. $1.50.
- THE CORRESPONDENCE OF WILLIAM ELLERY CHANNING, D.D., AND LUCY AIKIN. 12mo. $2.
- MEDITATIONS ON THE ESSENCE OF CHRISTIANITY. By R. Laird Collier, D.D. Price, $1.25.
- THE CHRISTIAN IN THE WORLD. By Rev. D. W. Faunce. Price $1.25.
- MARGARET FULLER'S WORKS. 6vols. Price $9.00.
- RECORDS OF A QUIET LIFE. By Augustus J. C. Hare. Price $2.00.
- REASON IN RELIGION. By Frederic Henry Hedge, D.D. Price $1.50.
- THE PRIMEVAL WORLD OF HEBREW TRADITION. By Frederic Henry Hedge, D.D. Price $1.50.
- SELECTIONS FROM THE THOUGHTS OF M. AURELIUS ANTONINUS.
- SELECTIONS FROM THE IMITATION OF CHRIST. Two volumes in the "Wisdom Series." Edited with an introduction by the editor of "Quiet Hours." Price 50 cents each.
- CHRISTIAN BELIEF AND LIFE. By Rev. A. P. Peabody, D.D. Price $1.50.
- THROUGH THE YEAR. By Rev. Horatio N. Powers, D.D. Price $1.50.
- QUIET HOURS. A collection of Poems. Price $1.25.
- ANNUS DOMINI. A prayer for each day of the year. By Christina G. Rossetti. Cloth, red edges. Price $1.50.
- REASON, FAITH AND DUTY. Sermons by James Walker, D.D., late President of Harvard University. With a fine likeness. Price $2.00.
- FREEDOM AND FELLOWSHIP IN RELIGION. With an introductory on "The Religious Outlook." By Rev. O. B. Frothingham. Edited by a Committee of the Free Religious Association. 16mo. Price $1.50.

Send for our new Catalogue. Sold by all booksellers, or mailed, post paid on receipt of price by the publishers.

ROBERTS BROTHERS, Boston.

Business Established in 1835.

BOERICKE & TAFEL, HOMŒOPATHIC

PHARMACY AND MEDICAL PUBLISHING HOUSE,
New York: 145 Grand Street. Philadelphia: 635 Arch St. and 125 South 11th St. Baltimore: 135 West Fayette St.
San Francisco: 234 Sutter St.
Keep constantly on hand a full supply of Homœopathic Family Medicine Cases and Books giving plain directions for their use. Send stamp for Catalogue giving description and prices of the various styles and sizes.
N. B.—BOERICKE & TAFEL received the only Centennial Prize Medal awarded at the Philadelphia Exposition for excellence of Homœopathic Pharmaceutical Preparations and Fine Exhibit.

WOOD & DAVIS,
BANKERS.
31 PINE STREET, NEW YORK.

GOVERNMENT BONDS, STATE, MUNICIPAL, RAILROAD SECURITIES AND GOLD BOUGHT AND SOLD ON COMMISSION.

C. D. WOOD.

S. D. DAVIS.

Magic Lanterns and Stereopticons

FOR

PARLOR AND EXHIBITION USE.

A fine assortment of Lantern Views from all countries and upon all subjects.

MICROSCOPES AND MICROSCOPIC OBJECTS,

AND EVERY VARIETY OF SCIENTIFIC AND OPTICAL GOODS.

Send for Catalogue.

JESSE S. CHEYNEY,

(Successor in Department of Scientific Instruments to JAMES W. QUEEN & Co.),

1 & 3 BOND STREET, New York.

THREE AWARDS

TO

REED & BARTON,

686 BROADWAY, New York,

FOR

Silver-Plated Goods

AT

Centennial Exposition, Philadelphia.

Extract from Judges' Report:

"An extensive display of Silver-Plated Goods, including all varieties of Household Table-Ware.

"Their Hollow Ware, plated upon White Metal, is of high excellence, with designs in good taste and quality and finish of superior character."

"Their many patterns of Knives, Forks and Spoons are of great excellence."

"Their Historical Vase,

"PROGRESS,"

illustrating phases of the XVth and XIXth Centuries, an original and elaborate composition of striking character and praiseworthy excellence, both in design and execution."

Reed & Barton have been awarded the First Premiums for their wares wherever exhibited, in America and foreign countries, including the World's Fair, New York, 1853.

International Exposition, Chili, S. A., 1875.

SALESROOMS, 686 Broadway, N. Y.

STEARNS & BEALE,

STATIONERS,

BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS,

PRINTING and LITHOGRAPHY,

147 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

(Between Broadway and Nassau Street)

JOEL W. STEARNS.

WM. P. BEALE.

A. S. BARNES & CO.

HAVE JUST PUBLISHED

BATTLES OF THE REVOLUTION,

with Topographical Illustrations and Professional and Popular Criticisms. By HENRY B. CARRINGTON, Senior Colonel and Bvt. Brig. General, U. S. A., Professor of Military Science at Wabash University. 800 pp. Royal octavo. Cloth richly embellished, $6. Library style (sheep), $7.50. Half calf, $9. Full Turkey morocco, $12.

II.

PRINCIPLES AND ACTS

OF THE REVOLUTION IN AMERICA. Composed of Speeches, Orations, and Proceedings, with Sketches and Remarks on Men and Things belonging to the Revolutionary Period. By HAZELIA NILES, Editor of "Niles's Register." Royal octavo, 522 pp. Cloth, $3. Library Style, $4.50. Half Calf, $6.

"Our young men can hardly go to a higher or better source for both information and inspiration."—Vice President Henry Wilson.

111 & 113 WILLIAM ST., NEW YORK.

Mr. Chadwick's Poems.—

A BOOK OF POEMS.

By JOHN W. CHADWICK.

One handsome volume, cloth, gilt, red edges.

Price, $1.00.

"Those who believe in a variety of Christmas gifts, adapted to the needs and tastes of unlike recipients, usually have a pet offering which will surely be acceptable to many friends of kindred spirit. Sometimes they may be perplexed to decide concerning the favorite book, but this year they may well set their hearts at once upon circulating a little volume entitled 'A Book of Poems by John W. Chadwick.' * * * There is nothing light and trifling; there are no attempts at wit; few flavorings of humor; but there is a certain charm even in the prevailing seriousness. They are not sombre or monotonous, but only uniformly earnest in loyalty to what is deep and true and real. Some other modern poems may be more admired and praised; few will be so gratefully remembered or so fondly loved."—Christian Register, Boston.

Sold by all Booksellers. Mailed postpaid by the Publishers.

ROBERTS BROTHERS, Boston.

Books that every Unitarian SHOULD READ.

DR. DEWEY'S NEW BOOK.

THE TWO GREAT COMMANDMENTS.

SERMONS BY REV. ORVILLE DEWEY, D.D. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

ORTHODOXY AND REVIVALISM. Sermons by REV. J. T. SUNDERLAND, of Chicago. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

Mailed, postage paid, on receipt of price.

JAMES MILLER, Publisher,

617 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

New Works by Prof. F. Huidekoper!! Now Ready.

JUDAISM AT ROME, B. C. 76, to A.D. 140.

By DR. FREDERIC HUIDEKOPER (President Meadville University, Pa.) 12mo. Cloth, $2.25.

THE BELIEF OF THE FIRST THREE

CENTURIES CONCERNING CHRIST'S MISSION TO THE UNDERWORLD. By Dr. FREDERIC HUIDEKOPER. 12mo. Cloth, $1.00.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

JAMES MILLER, Publisher,

617 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

A New Volume,

BY REV. DR. SEARS.

CHRIST IN THE LIFE.—SERMONS; With a selection of POEMS.

BY EDMUND H. SEARS.

Author of "The Heart of Christ," "Regeneration," etc. One vol. $1.75. Post-paid.

This day published by

LOCKWOOD, BROOKS & CO.,

331 WASHINGTON STREET, BOSTON.

THE INQUIRER.

VOL. XXXII.—NO. 3.
WHOLE NO., 1573.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 21, 1876.

{ $3.00 PER ANNUM.
8 CENTS A COPY.

CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL NOTES:	41
LEADING ARTICLES:
Trusts.....	43
Christmas Gifts.....	44
The Minister of To-day.....	45
CORRESPONDENCE:
From Washington.....	46
Down the Seine on Foot.....	47
LITERARY REVIEWS:
Is That All?.....	48
The Poetical Works of Alice and Phoebe Cary.....	49
Modern Physical Fatalism and the Doctrine of Evolution.....	48
THE JANUARY MAGAZINES.....	49
NEW PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.....	51
ART AND SCIENCE:
The Webster Statue.....	51
Art Notes.....	51
HEARTH AND HOME:
Poem—Aspiration.....	52
Mr. Chadwick's Poems.....	52
Life and Thought in our Time.....	53
Muscular Christianity.....	53
George Eliot's Readers.....	54
OUR BOYS AND GIRLS:
The Week before Christmas.....	54
Christmas in Norway.....	54
Christmas Work for Nimble Fingers.....	55
JOTTINGS.....	55
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT.....	56-60

THAT South Carolina still keeps the peace, with her two Governors and two Houses of Representatives, is very creditable. We do not yet see the way out of the muddle she is in. Doubtless the leaders on both sides are waiting for the result of the Presidential election before deciding their policy. It becomes them both to remember that any violence would be fatal to the side that commenced it and for the party that upheld it. And we can only wish that the discretion shown by both Chamberlain and Hampton may be copied by all Northern leaders. The South is at least more peaceful in all its talk than portions of the North.

A CERTAIN German pamphleteer, as we learn from the Pall Mall Gazette, suggests improvements in the preparations and arrangements for making war, which bring out the full absurdity of this time-honored method of settling international difficulties. He proposes that some neutral territory be set aside by the European powers, and devoted entirely to bloodshed. All fighting is to be confined to the official combatants, and civil territory is to be held inviolate. The territory set apart for martial purposes is to be fitted up with the most complete contrivances both to kill and cure; there is to be a training-school for nurses, a college for surgeons; there are to be hospitals, well appointed guard-houses for prisoners, etc. Vast cemeteries and depots for artificial limbs are not forgotten. For the use of these conveniences there shall be a regular tariff of charges, while weapons of all kinds may be bought or hired. A wise provision shall require charges to be paid before battles are fought in all cases, and the surplus of receipts over expenses is to be devoted to the maintenance of the widows and orphans of the fallen.

An address, extremely interesting to all Americans, was delivered on the 14th of November at la Chaux-de-Fonds, by M. Edouard Favre-Perret, member of the jury on watches at the International Exhibition. M. Favre-Perret appears to have been greatly impressed by the development of the manufacture of watches in this country, and sounds the note of alarm to his countrymen, warning them that in all probability they will soon be driven out of the American market, so far as regards trade in ordinary watches. He traces the rapid increase in the production by the American Watch Company at Waltham from 15,000 in 1860 to 250,000 in 1875, refers to the large number of other factories of recent origin, comments on the extreme accuracy which has been reached by the use of delicate machinery and the ease with which missing parts can be replaced, and lays stress upon the cheapness with which the companies can furnish the public with reliable time-keepers. American makers are already actively contesting the European field.

It is noteworthy, however, that the speaker still appears to have little fear of competition in the more complicated varieties of watches. Perhaps the same men who have wrought the work of the past fifteen or twenty years may yet open a new chapter, containing further information on that point.

It must needs be that when any community is placed under a severe strain the weak spots show more decidedly than the strong, however much we may deplore the fact. That a few ninnies should have been found willing to stand out before the civilized world and talk about fighting for the purpose of carrying Mr. Tilden into the White House, was perhaps no worse than was to be expected in a State which has just elected a pair of homespun breeches to be its Governor. That a gentleman accustomed to the refinements of the best metropolitan society, and to association with the founder of the Cooper Union, should allow himself in a vital political crisis, which requires the wisest and coolest counsels for its settlement, to advocate popular mass-meetings throughout the country in favor of the same candidate, after the question has become one solely for judicial arbitrament, is somewhat more surprising. That the proprietor of a daily newspaper, who wishes to extend its circulation, may be found ready to turn a few honest pennies by putting violent and misleading announcements upon his bulletin-board, at the risk of exciting a little more the passions of a few ignorant fools, may be not unnatural, but that private meetings should be invaded, and host and guest maligned because they are supposed not to be consulting directly in the line of the interests of a partisan press, or that a leading newspaper should seek to persuade its readers that a Northern Governor was engaged in transferring materials of war belonging to the State to the South for the purpose of aiding another rebellion, is a little harder to understand.

Gentlemen—Republicans and Democrats—hold your hands a little, and try to keep your heads level. What we people of the United States need now, and what we propose to have, is good government and a reign of peace. Only rest assured that the great law-abiding people propose to settle this matter in the end—propose to walk over any man who stands blowing his party whistle while silent meeting is in order—propose to grind to powder any party which does not conquer by the force of well-settled principles.

WE are confirmed in our conviction that intimidation in the South has not been confined to either party. General Barlow's report is the most rigidly honest and fair-minded testimony we have received from Florida, or from any other part of the country. The cool and guarded way in which personal feeling or private hopes have been eliminated from his report, with the evidence of the painstaking and impartial manner in which details were looked into, furnish a most refreshing example of what absolute truth-lovers and truth-tellers may do to elevate party politics and to serve the country. Given a committee of a dozen men with General Barlow's rectitude, coolness and courage, and we might expect a report as to the vote in all the disputed States which would satisfy the country, let it tell which way it would. Is it quixotic to look for more men like General Barlow in political life? and ought not his high intelligence, honor and bravery to be considered as very high claims to office when the country is suffering from a general suspicion that all men are corrupted by active political life? We have tried General Barlow in several positions. Has he ever melted in any fires of temptation? So far as his record is open to us, his reputation remains unsullied, and should mark him out for high political trust.

We are not among those ready to propose any compromises or concessions of an illegal sort or the surrender of any just advantage of position and right in either party on grounds of fear or dread of consequences to business or order. There is enough of this feeling latent in the trading and the domestic world to make it the duty of thinking men to resist it as a sort of cowardice and folly. Prudence and self-control are great virtues in times of political excitement, bravado and bluff a very dangerous game to play at: calm insistence on the exact right, with a profound deference to law, and a determined resolve to have its advantages, so far as they belong to us, and to surrender to those who have the law on their side, with full submission—this is the way out, which it becomes us to take with a firm, unwavering step, let the timid plead for concessions and compromises as they may.

THERE are said to be 50,000 men out of employ in the city of New York. It is a dangerous condition of things, if it be true. Certain it is that in the country at large there never was so large a force of involuntary idlers, and it furnishes one of the most alarming elements in our political crisis. Brawny men, often young, always hungry and seldom wise, are not in idleness likely to be long out of mischief, and they furnish the fuel for demagogues and political agitators. It is plain enough that the force-party in our present emergency reckon a good deal upon the recklessness and distress of these hungry idlers in their war-talk. "Gov. Tilden," as we heard a gentleman remark, who deprecated all appeal to force, "could have a hundred thousand armed men in Gramercy Park if he chose to snap his finger." This may be extravagant, but it proves at least what is running in the heads of some politicians. It shows, too, that while the people of property and employed laborers are usually soberly opposed to all appeals to force, there is a large class to whom the condition and interests of the country are immensely less urgent considerations than immediate relief from destitution. There are, unhappily, thousands upon thousands who would welcome war as a mere means of employment. They have nothing to sell but their time and strength, and no market for that, and they would hurry round any standard that offered them wages and bread. This is a factor in the problem which must not be overlooked. We may congratulate ourselves on the calmness and reasonableness of all the property-holders and all the worth and intelligence of both parties, but we must not leave out of consideration the peril of this mass of idlers, longing for any change which promises relief, and ready to snatch at revolution if it offers wages or plunder. It must not be forgotten that the distress of the country and the hardships of the laborer were the most successful arguments the Democrats urged in the campaign. True, all fair-minded men know that party-politics or legislation have had little to do with the causing, and can have little to do with the curing, this distress. But as it is not easy to show what it does proceed from, it is not difficult to charge it upon the administration of the Government, and to make the idle and suffering believe accordingly. In this state of things, the mischievous and unscrupulous politicians on either side have a power in their hands which it will require the greatest prudence on the part of the right-minded to prevent them from using. Nothing is so dangerous as public meetings of a campaign sort at this hour. They should be everywhere discouraged. Indiana and New Hampshire have set a bad example in this respect. The meeting in Chicago, although it had an excellent offset in the plain talk of soldierly Democrats who bluntly rebuked the war-spirit, was, nevertheless, a dangerous and unseemly meeting. The Union League Club wrangle, though maliciously exaggerated, was unbecoming and unwise.

All discreet men will do well to remember the recklessness of gaunt hunger and helpless enforced idleness before indulging in careless speech at this crisis.

It is very generally thought that no escape from vexatious consequences on the electoral count in February remains, except by the previous agreement of both Houses of Congress upon the exact rules under which it is to be effected. The House has chosen a good Committee to confer with one from the Senate, if it chooses to appoint one. We assume that it will not have the folly to refuse. But at this present writing no such Committee has been appointed. There are party reasons why the Senate might wish to decline it. It is their role as Republican partisans to claim that the power of deciding the reception of the electoral votes is in the hands of the President of the Senate. It is certain that the enforcement of such a claim will not be submitted to by the House, and it is revolutionary to attempt it. Clearly it was never meant—it is folly to claim that such unwisdom could have possessed our fathers—that the arbitrament of a disputed election of President could be placed in one man's hands, or taken out of the hands of the people's Congress. So far as we have been able to examine the precedents, the President of the Senate is the proper officer to receive and open the electoral returns, but not to count them. "They shall then be counted." Who is to count them? Why, according to precedent tellers appointed by the two Houses. And only upon the report of these tellers can the President of the Senate announce the vote. Suppose the tellers disagree? The two Houses are then to separate, and after discussing the dispute and disagreement of the tellers, come to such conclusions as they can agree upon, in each case of dispute. This, it may be said, is a tortuous and dangerous way to attain the result. And no doubt it is, under present circumstances. But is it as dangerous as to allow the President of the Senate—a party appointment—to make the President by his own rulings? Could the Democrats be reasonably expected not to resist such a course, and would they not have the countenance of sober Republicans in their discontent and obstructive opposition?

There is no way out of the difficulty but by anticipating it, and forestalling angry and dangerous party debate and revolutionary action by the deliberate agreement of the two Houses, through a joint Committee of the wisest and largest-minded men in the House and Senate upon the precise method of conducting the count. It should be strictly after law and precedent, and their whole duty should be to settle what these are. If they go outside of these questions there is little chance of any agreement. And we trust the Senate will not be less wise than the House in its choice of a Committee that possesses the full confidence of men of both parties for integrity and superiority to personal and party prepossessions.

It is a relief to find Congress opposed to any reference of the electoral vote to the arbitrament of the Supreme Court. How that Court—already, unjustly we trust, suspected of political biases, and therefore dangerously weakened in its weight and influence—could be thought of as a fit arbiter in a party squabble to be made for the occasion, passes comprehension. It would be the culmination of our woes to have the only portion of the Government, that is not already actively partisan, made so by a hurried change in the Constitution, which this Court might be afterwards called on to pronounce unconstitutional. Already the Senate and House are mischievously partisan; the President is openly charged with being so; the Cabinet has exhibited in the campaign a dangerous and unseemly tendency to active participation in partisan meetings. In the name of all wisdom, let not the Supreme Court be dragged into this circle. It is encouraging to see that Congress lends no countenance to the plan.

Since writing the above, a proposition has been made to submit to the Supreme Court simply the Constitutional question as to the rights and duties of the two Houses of Congress in relation to counting the electoral vote.

In this form the case comes properly within the purview of the Court. As the final arbiter in all Constitutional questions, it must be reached in the last resort, and undoubtedly it would be better, if possible, to have the law defined before any vital step needs to be taken. The party which defies the ruling of the Court would then appear in its proper colors before the country; but no party would be likely to take that attitude. If such a course as indicated above should be agreed upon, it remains to be seen whether the case can be brought properly before the Court by a formal agreement, so as to give it a technical right to act. In such an emergency, there could hardly be an objection to its uttering an opinion upon a "case stated" when requested, even if it could not be compelled to do so.

TRUSTS.

Trusts for specific and limited purposes are not honorably or morally fulfilled, if by the exercise of "discretion," or any plea of altered circumstances, the end or object is nullified for which they were made and accepted. It is impossible to make a trust in which "discretion" can be wholly excluded; but it is next to nothing in such political trusts, for instance, as those of a Presidential elector and other chiefly ministerial offices, and they are broadly distinguished from trusts in which the discretion is often the most important factor in their responsibility, even when it is not specially anticipated or provided for. Thus, money left to the representatives of certain theological opinions, by earnest partisans of their creed, have yet, by a discretion of the courts, been properly adjudged to the use of their successors, though their opinions had undergone great changes. Legacies have been paid quite outside the testator's trust, when the heirs have all perished before receiving them, but not without a careful attempt to find the most natural claimants. Moneys bequeathed to societies found disbanded and non-existent have been passed over to others nearest like them in design. The law, in its wisdom, willingly allows no trust to be turned against the will and purpose, or out of the direction chosen for it by its maker, although no skill can secure this in all cases, however carefully it is aimed at.

Political trusts are, in many cases, necessarily very discretionary, as in conventions for nominating party candidates. Above all, the Congressional representative's powers cannot be limited precisely. They involve the discretionary element of his private conscience and his intelligence, under lights and conditions which cannot be anticipated. He may rightly neglect party instructions upon particular measures, when the safety of the country seems to demand it, in his best discretion. For he is not merely representative of his constituency, but a member of a national congress, and has duties to his country as well as to his constituents, which they well know when they send him. His constituents may call him to account and reject him, if he speaks or acts against their local interests. They are not bound to know or consider what a national legislator must. But he is acquitted in the court of conscience, and does not break his trust if, feeling the demands of impartial justice and national honor, and seeing that in the end what is best for the country is best also for all parts of the country, and in the end for his own constituents, he exercises his discretion against their wishes, in the discharge of his trust as a representative from a special Congressional district; for he is not alone this—he is a servant of the nation. It is not only the President of the United States who is bound to consider the whole country, but every member of the National Government. The only excuse for any of them, when using their influence to support the party that elects them, is their conviction that it represents a better national policy. It is impossible for honest men not to be partisans, when they have deep convictions that the principles and measures their party favors are vital to the national honor and safety.

But partisans in the sense of acknowledging the duty of covering up the frauds, the follies, the extravagances of the party, under the plea that the end justifies the means, honest men can never be. We do not blame General Grant for showing his colors as a Republican President, but only for favoring Republicans who attempt to cover their private ambitions or cupidities under party professions. He breaks no trust as President in administering his place according to the principles of the party he was elected by, so far as they accord with his original pledges. And he breaks no trust as a Republican by ignoring party expectations or wishes when in his central seat he finds them unfavorable to national prosperity and national honor. We see no parallel between those cases in which the force of obligations pressing from different sources make a freer play of discretion essential and cases like that in which a ministerial act of importance is intrusted to an elector, the people entrusting it having a specific and exactly-defined purpose, and the elector accepting the duty in a clearly and expressly limited sense. It is the dignity of the issue that makes the electorship important, not the complication or discretionary responsibility of the function. The elector is nothing but a public servant carrying a message, with which he has nothing to do except to deliver it. He is dignified for the occasion only to express the people's respect for the office to be formally filled by the electoral vote. But really, if the elector were a machine he could not have less freedom of choice or discretion, for the country, in departing from the original plan, has long since fixed and definitely recognized a new plan, giving a perfectly well-understood and exclusively ministerial function to the elector. If an elector representing a Republican constituency should vote for the Democratic candidate, his change of mind, however honest, or his sense, however strong and clear, of what the country might gain by the change, would not make his act other than a breach of trust. If he felt that peace or war hung upon his vote it would not justify his change. His private opinions, hopes or fears are of no pertinency. His conscience has no responsibility or scope in regard to this special trust, except exactly to fulfil it according to a perfect previous understanding. We do not doubt that there are men elected as Republicans and as Democrats who have changed their minds since their election, and who would perhaps have cast their votes as private citizens in a way opposite to that in which they voted as electors. And they would be unpatriotic cowards if they did not vote as they thought best in their private capacity. But as electors they have no private capacity and no call for exercise of discretion, except such as the death or madness of the candidate they were elected to vote for might force upon them. In short, a Presidential elector is the servant of a special constituency with a specific act to perform, and without any of the functions of a legislator or a judge in doing it. We conceive that nothing but mischief could come from any effort to loosen the conscience of an elector in respect to the duty of an exact interpretation of his function, upon the plea of paying a larger respect to his conscience as a lover of his country and a judge of what it requires of him under his accidental opportunities of shaping its destiny and making its President.

It is upon some similar plea of a higher duty that the humble duty of fulfilling specific trusts exactly is perniciously set aside or overruled, to the ruin of depositors, in savings and other banks. Directors and trustees see grand opportunities of investments, which, if all chances concur, might greatly enrich their stockholders. Their specific duty is to run no wilful risks and accept small profits; their general duty is to study the interests of the bank. They attend to the last in a generous confidence in their own judgment, which is too often a mistaken one. They neglect the specific duty and ruin their depositors and their institution. We want none of this loose interpretation of specific obligations in our electors, and no organ of opinion can by any amount of subtlety make it respectable or otherwise than immoral.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS.

THE first Christmas gifts on record are the gold, frankincense and myrrh which the wise men from the East gave to the infant Jesus. We do not know enough about the childhood of Jesus to be helped much by it in our choice of Christmas gifts for our own children. It is a pity that we know so little. Wordsworth's line,

"The child is father of the man," has so much truth in it, that the manhood of Jesus would not begin to be the riddle which it is, if we knew more about his childhood and more about the gifts that he received along its course. We should like to know what he had for playthings, but can remember only one hint to help us, and that is the story in one of the Apocryphal Gospels about his making sparrows out of clay. We fancy that his playthings, for the most part, were extemporized in some such way as this. He was a lucky boy in that his father was a carpenter. The shop must have been a real god-send to him and his young companions. Of course they made boats and houses and little synagogues out of the refuse chips, and temples, too, as near as possible like the great Temple up at Jerusalem, of which the people who had been there never tired of telling. Perhaps the father sometimes lent a hand on these occasions. Of course he did. We wonder if our children need commiserate the noble boy of Nazareth because the straggling lane which served the village for a street boasted no toy-shop equal to the humblest of the myriad with which our modern cities blossom. We wonder if he didn't enjoy himself more for having to invent and plan a little, instead of having everything prepared for him. Yea, more; we sometimes wonder whether he would ever have come to be or think himself the Christ at all, if his thought had been so dissipated among a multitude of external objects as the thought of children is to-day, if the meagreness of his environment had not driven him in upon himself and his reserves of intellectual and moral power.

But books dispute with toys for the possession of our children's souls, and here again there is no help to be got from the example of the holy child Jesus. There were fewer books than toys in Nazareth. A roll or two of the Law in the possession of the village rabbi served for Mercantile Library, Historical Society, book-stores and everything. Here certainly our children are more fortunate than the little boy of Nazareth. Think of their advantages! There is no end of books for them; some of them written for love and some of them written for money; books of instruction and books of adventure; and picture-books so pretty, and some of them so beautiful, that many a man is "born again when he is old" with looking over them. "Blessed are the eyes that see the things that ye see," say we to our children. Here are learned men pausing amid their vast and wonderful researches to write books for you, and here are artists of the finest culture and the greatest skill doing their best to make you happy. It certainly does look as if nineteenth century New York were a much better place to live in than first century Nazareth. Mary and Joseph never could have tucked away in all manner of queer places any such treasures as we have against Christmas morning, even in these hard times.

But it is possible that we may overrate the difference between this time and that, and imagine ourselves more superior to Joseph and Mary than we really are, and our children more fortunate, relatively to the little Jesus, than they really are. The sources of human happiness are more intrinsic than extrinsic. Human nature itself is the fountain of immortal youth, immortal joy. As the Son said, so says the Father: "The water which I give you shall be in you a well of water springing up into everlasting life." So long as we are young God wills that we be happy. The environment may be ever so mean, but put a child in the midst and it will not seem mean to him. His fancy will clothe it with ideal loveliness; his imagination will people it with ideal forms. If we could all at once annihilate these nineteen centuries that intervene between to-day and the time when Jesus was a boy among boys, playing in the narrow street of Nazareth, and could see him just as he was then and there, tugging at Mary's garment as she goes for water to the spring, making a great show of helping Joseph at his carpentry, sitting crossed-legged on the floor while the village rabbi teaches him the legends and the precepts of his people, sitting at sunset on the flat roof of the house, and seeing the sun drop into the west—if we could travel back and see all this just as it was, we doubt if we should find the future Christ less glad at heart than are our little folks.

Then, too, although there were not story-books to read, there were stories to tell, and a told story is at least as good as a read one any day. We can fancy how the little Jesus was bigger-eyed than in the biggest-eyed of Raphael's Madonnas, or in the "Holy Family" of Carl Muller—so much better than some hundreds of the old ones—when Mary told him story after story out of that famous Bible store, which even now is just as fresh as ever. Has any better story for a child ever been written than that of Joseph and his coat of many colors? And every Hebrew mother had this story written on the fleshly tablets of her heart. Think you the little Jesus didn't say "Tell it again" to that?

"Tell it again!" and though the sand-man came,

Dropping his drowsy grains in each blue eye—

"Tell it again, oh, just once more!" was still the sleepy cry.

The appliances of culture that beset the modern parent anxious to do the best thing possible for the intellectual development of his children are as distracting as the cries of multitudinous hackmen on one's arrival at the Grand Central depot, and the result in either case is apt to be that we put up with the worst accommodations when we might have the best. The swarms of children's books that infest the counters of our booksellers impose a great responsibility upon parents and demand a new development of parental care and conscience. Take books of adventure alone. There are those who would ruthlessly deprive our boys of this whole class of books, but there is something in a boy's nature that craves them as naturally as a duck takes to the water. And there are enough good books of adventure, records of fact or truthful in their spirit, to satisfy the want, if not the wish, for this sort of literature. And so with every sort of book that naturally solicits the regard of youthful minds. Lack of intelligence may prevent well-disposed people from making a right selection of books for their children, but if we are not mistaken, it is not so much lack of intelligence as it is haste and carelessness that stand in the way.

There are gifts suitable to this season which are but poorly symbolized by any outward gift that love can give to the beloved. The New Testament contains but one little story of the first thirty years of Jesus' life, but it is a story burdened with significance. It is the story of his being left behind in Jerusalem and missed by his parents after they had gone some distance on their way back to Nazareth. The story, after telling of his being found in the temple talking with the rabbis, and of the strange reply he made his mother when she told him how his father and herself had sought him sorrowing, ends with the significant expression, "And Mary kept all these things in her heart." That would seem to show a nature reverent of her child, not garrulous about him to others or himself, but with silent expectation watching one by one the petals of his life unfold, with their pure fragrance satisfying her benignant soul. If only one thing could be told of all the childhood and the youth of Jesus, it could hardly be a better thing than this, for there is no gift more suitable for a child than this same silent reverence which Mary here displayed before his growing faculties, "She kept all these things in her heart."

THE MINISTER OF TO-DAY.

As if in revenge for his one-time infallibility, the minister of to-day is the worst criticised man in the community. From gossiping sisters to editorial oracles his character and performances receive their full share of attention. If he has a clear conscience and a large spirit he can afford to smile at and ignore such cavilling. But if he is a weakling, or made a coward by conscience, he can no longer take refuge in the assumed sanctities of his office. The modern world takes him for what he is, and not for what the apostles were. This changed relation again implies changes in the material of the ministry. The most talented young men no longer take kindly to it. Harvard College still in its catalogue puts the divinity students at the head of the professional schools, but we all understand that to be an empty compliment. Somehow the calling is no longer regarded with favor. When a young man nowadays enters the ministry, there are plenty of people to cry out: "What a pity! Why couldn't he have chosen something useful?"

And yet this is a serious mistake. True, the minister has been stripped of much of his former prestige and power. But he has been a gainer and not a loser by the change. The old times will never return for him, and they never ought to. Yet there never was a time when the minister occupied so independent, so influential, and so enviable a position as to-day. He is a freer man to-day, with a wider range of sympathies, a broader culture and a larger field for the exercise of his abilities. No longer obtaining his knowledge of human nature and its needs at second-hand from doctrinal books, or contemplating man through the haze of theological speculation, but entering freely into the currents of modern thought and life, absorbing from them a rational understanding of social forces and spiritual phenomena, and so fitting himself to deal wisely and well with the problems they present. With the removal of so much official dignity and power, has been removed also a dangerous source of worldly ambition and partisan bigotry. If he no longer monopolizes the functions of all the other professions, he is rid also of the arduous duties with which they encumber his daily life, and held him back from a full development of his proper activities. Formerly, too, the minister lived an abnormal life; half ascetic, half autocrat, he breathed a thin, unwholesome atmosphere of suppressed emotion, and social exclusiveness. To-day, he leads, or can lead, a healthy, cheerful, social existence, and this makes him a happier man and of course, a better preacher and pastor. Margaret Fuller said that what the age needed was "a spiritual man of the world." We know no better representative of this coming man than the liberal, cultivated and conservative minister of the nineteenth century.

Moreover, the minister is not only a better and happier man individually, but he exercises a healthier and more lasting influence on the public mind than formerly. Let no one cherish the illusion that the days of the ministry are numbered. On the contrary, its true mission has only just begun. As the sacramental function decays, the prophetic gift rises into notice. The ministry is an outgrowth of the popular need. It is founded on a wise division of labor. There is one social body but many members, yet all have not the same office. The minister is called to a distinctive work imperatively needed, and which no one else can do so well. He disputes the ground with none. He is no longer the rival of any other profession or its pretended superior. He is simply a "fellow servant in the Lord," one of many spiritual forces that labor for the upbuilding of man and the increase of the kingdom of heaven on earth.

The minister is pre-eminently a spiritualizer; an inspirer of men. He labors "to put more soul into this toiling, thinking, throbbing world." His mission is to bring men to nobler aims, purer life, diviner trust. He voices the aspiration of the religious nature of man. He ponders the problems of existence and gives such solutions as he can; solutions not always wise or true, but doubtless the best that can be given. He strives to reconcile human duty with human destiny; to carry the spiritual life through the crisis of worldliness and speculative doubt. He labors to increase light and love among men; to promote the virtues of sympathy, charity and self-renunciation. The other professions may and do tend to accomplish these objects also, but it is rather as incidental to their work than as the special purpose of it. The doctor's object is to cure the body, the teacher's to inform the mind, the lawyer's to secure justice among men. The minister's aim, first, last, and all the time, is to build up character. Like the teacher, he wants men to know, but still more to be. He seeks to ennoble even more than to instruct his hearers. The teacher has done his duty when he has informed the mind of his pupil. The preacher fails unless he moves the will of his hearers. One appeals to the intellect, the other to the conscience. One imparts knowledge as the condition of right living, the other builds up character as its necessary foundation. Both are right, but each needs the other's help. Teacher and preacher must work hand in hand, nay, must sometimes exchange places, as an Agassiz kindled his hearers with moral enthusiasm, and a Martineau makes even scientists his pupils. From this point of view, the ministry, far from being obsolete, takes rank among the most efficient forces in modern society. There are sixty thousand ministers in the United States. Take them away and who shall we put in their places as moral and spiritual teachers? Grant that they are often ignorant, crude and weak, still they are no more so than an equal number of lawyers, doctors, journalists and teachers. Their clumsy but loving hands serve at least to keep alive the people's piety at home, their prayerful breath from Sunday to Sunday rekindles the waning altar flames of devotion, their weekly ministrations of mercy and peace keep warm the human heart of man, amidst the chill atmosphere of worldliness and self-seeking. They are an embodied decalogue, reminding men constantly of those moral truths which they know so well already, but are so prone to neglect. Their voice, in the language of prayer, the nameless struggle and yearning of the human heart; they bring the solace of religious truth and hope to stricken and bereaved hearts. Many a man scoffs at the minister until death enters his household and despair his soul, and the despised teacher of religion is called in to stand by the inanimate form of the loved one, and out of his tender and prayer-filled heart to utter the woe of the bereaved and whisper the sweet consolation of hope and trust in God.

Is it asserting too much, therefore, to claim that the ministry is a necessary and permanent interest in society; that, rightly conceived, it is as noble a vocation as the world can offer, and worthy the full consecration of the powers and gifts of any man or woman?

In spite of its seeming decline in prestige and power at the present day, there never was a time when the minister was so intrinsically respected or exercised so beneficent and lasting an influence on society. The suspicions and flings which one hears directed against the clerical profession are not aimed at what is genuine or vital in the minister, but at the fictitious elements, the conventionalities and artificialities which still hedge him about and repress his natural manliness and growth. This is a period of transition. The belief in the distinctively divine commission of the minister is rapidly passing away. The great majority of the clergy has not discovered this, or is unwilling to admit it. Hence they cling mistakenly to the personal prerogatives and social distinctions which characterized the minister of the past. It is at these artificial things, at the foibles and fripperies of the clergy, that the world laughs. You do not hear men sneer at the culture, the unaffected piety, the self-sacrificing devotion of the minister, but at his long visage, his hypocritical cant, the studied irregularity of his manner, or the conventional cut of his coat. But are these essentials in the make-up of a minister? Who would dare to admit, that religion stiffens and sours a man, or that the devotional spirit needs the crutches of the old ecclesiasticism to enable it to soar upward into the presence of its God? Does divine grace inhabit a white neck-cloth or lurk in the folds of a silken gown? Why should ministers who are "fellow-servants in the Lord," still claim to be a peculiar class in the community, and together with soldiers and convicts enjoy the proud distinction of wearing a livery and travelling on a half-fare ticket? We confess to a great deal of sympathy with the plain common-sense that ridicules such pretensions. There is a deep reverence in the community everywhere for unaffected piety, genuine humanity and earnest conviction. Let the minister depend on these for recognition, and not upon the sanctions of outward position. Let his influence be measured by his own intrinsic worth and manliness. Thus will be restored to him much of the ancient veneration for his calling, that calling which, though like Paul, we fall under the accusation of "magnifying our office," we still must esteem the highest, the noblest in human society.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM WASHINGTON.

To the Editor of the Inquirer :

MR. HALP, in his "Philip Nolan," expresses surprise that so little note is made by historians of the acquisition of Louisiana in 1803. There has recently been placed in the Capitol a statue of Robert R. Livingston. On the scroll in his hand is inscribed "Louisiana." Livingston thus finds a place in the memory of posterity as the statesman most instrumental in securing the purchase of Louisiana. It is because the men of the present day travel in so narrow a circle that real aggrandizement of their country is forgotten. Florida was the fruit of the splendid diplomacy of John Quincy Adams. Mr. Seward made his name immortal by the acquisition of Alaska. And if Congress would turn from the belittling questions which now so occupy its attention to some larger themes, like the construction of a canal across the Isthmus of Darien, the acquisition of an island in the West Indies and a naval post in the Mediterranean, it would only be the fulfilling of the country's destiny. There are enterprises at home scarcely less commanding in importance, such as enlarging the facilities of transportation between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. Both the Northern Pacific and the Southern Pacific Railroads are awaiting Congress for completion.

The Normal School for the Education of Colored Youth, founded by Miss Myrtilla Miner in 1858, which has for a few years been running as a department of Howard University, has now become an independent institution. The committee having it in immediate charge are Rev. C. H. Fay, John M. Langston, Miss Georgiana Boutwell and Mrs. Ellen O'Connor, Secretary. The school is now in successful operation. As Miss Miner received most of her means for founding this school from Unitarians and Friends, some of the readers of the INQUIRER may be interested in hearing of its prosperity. Its friends may learn more of its condition and prospects by communicating with any one of the committee abovenamed.

The Unitarian church in this city has had for preachers this Winter Revs. Messrs. Ware, Sunderland, Collier, Batchelor and Weld. Rev. Dr. Peabody is expected for the next two Sundays. On Thanksgiving day the Universalists united with us, Rev. Mr. Fay, their faithful minister, officiating.

President Grant, as usual, attended on that day the Metropolitan Methodist church. Portions of the sermon were so laudatory of the President as to call forth applause. It was remarked that his countenance changed not in the slightest degree. This characteristic imperturbability of "the grey-eyed man of the White House" is just now giving great confidence to the people throughout the country.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18, 1876.

DOWN THE SEINE ON FOOT.

ONE clear, fallish morning, we four strapped our knapsacks on our shoulders and started in search of the picturesque, our first stage, however, being by a little wheezy steamer, which took us to La Bouille, about ten miles down the river. The scenery was beautiful; here and there a chateau, old or new, rose on the steep, wooded hills that once had limited Father Seine when he was mightier than to-day, or a Gothic spire marked some little village. We passed a vessel flying the Stars and Stripes, and giving unmistakable evidence of having brought petroleum from home, and to the wonderment of our fellow-passengers gave three hearty cheers as we went by. La Bouille we found to be an uninteresting little place, its only raison d'être being that it was a convenient stopping place for those who came, as we did, to visit the Chateau de Robert le Diable, situated on a hill two miles or so away. To one of the three hotels, between which a brisk rivalry evidently existed, we went for dejeuner, and then, leaving our traps, set out for the Chateau. A guide was needed, then a key and a permission, and a fee, and when at last we reached the place we thought it hardly repaid us for all our trouble. Here and there a bit of massive masonry cropped out from a century's growth of grass and underbrush, but there was nothing to give us a hint as to what the character of the architecture had been. We did not see the best parts of it, the subterranean passages and cellars. The present owner had recently been making excavations, which had brought once more to the light many interesting and intrinsically valuable relics, and he permitted no one to visit these portions unless accompanied by himself. Thence we went to the pretty little church of Molineaux, near by. We found its principal charm to be the wooden jube, richly carved by 14th century hands. The venerable sexton was mightily gratified by our admiration of it, and told us how its rich color and high polish were largely due to the constant oiling and rubbing which he had given it during well nigh two score of years. He looked as if he might have said fourscore and ten with equal truth. At La Bouille we found the rapacity of the hotel-keepers largely developed. It was late and there was no town nearer than Rouen, so those at whose house we had stopped asked the most astonishing prices, while their accommodations were really not sufficient for our party. We refused their terms and said we would go elsewhere. "But you can't," said they. "But we can and will," said we, and amidst the ironic bon-voyages of our would-but-couldn't-be hosts we went to hotel number two. There we found no room. Then we went to a hotel opposite the first. They wouldn't take us there because we had been to the rival hotel across the road. Then back again to the first, thinking we would put up with what they could offer, when lo! they wouldn't have us because we had been to the house across the way. Nothing then remained but to have ourselves ferried over the river.

Our hearts were cheered as we stepped ashore by the sight of a well-to-do farm-house, in the low doorway of which stood an old woman. Could she give us something to eat? No, she had nothing, and if she had, had no time to prepare it; she must look after the ferry. Why didn't we stop at La Bouille? We thought it quite unnecessary to explain, and simply glanced toward the other shore. There stood three hotel-keepers, each with an opera-glass to his eyes. They had united in this lost cause, and we could imagine the smiles rippling over their faces as they saw us turn away. The old woman graciously informed us that there was a combination tobacco and grocery store situate in some indefinite spot a good lieu "back," where, perhaps, we would find what we wanted. And so we went "back" a lieu, and after some search found the place—a wee bit of a chaumière; in one end the tobacco shop and café, in the other the grocery store, and above both, in the thatched roof, the sleeping rooms. The presiding genius was a somewhat hard-featured, masculine looking woman, all angles and importance, who knew how to manage her store and her subordinates to her own satisfaction if not to theirs. We uttered our request for food with becoming humility and in our best French. She had nothing. Nothing? Well, there was some cheese and "cidre," and we could get some bread there over the way. And with this short bill of fare we sat down at one of the café tables. Then emboldened by our meal and a cup of strong black coffee, we put the question of beds. More angular and hard featured she became as she uttered a stern negative. She had none to spare. Why didn't we stop at La Bouille? Where could we find a place to sleep other than La Bouille? We were not going back there. There was a town, she said, nine miles farther on, where there was an auberge, but it would certainly be closed when we reached there. It was then after eight and the retraite would sound before ten. There was nothing for it but to go on, and on we went, breaking the evening stillness with many a college song. An hour's walk and we saw a light, and at the door from which it gleamed were told that they would not take us in, but that there was a café just behind the little church, second cottage to the left, where we might be cared for. To it we went. The door was opened to our somewhat peremptory knock by a charming Norman lassie, who referred us to the higher court within, where the family were at their evening meal. The Norman people make their first meal at six or seven in the morning. It consists only of a bowl of coffee, into which bread is crumbed. Then at noon comes the hearty meal of the day with meat and vegetables. At five they have a little bread and cheese. At the close of the evening comes the final meal, of soup and cheese. In response to an appeal, they said they had no accommodations. Had they no room where we could sleep on the floor? "No." The père suggests vaguely, barn and straw. No! the mother would none of us; evidently she thought us but a poor lot. And surely, since she was compelled to judge from appearances, we could not greatly blame her. She said that the last time she had let any one sleep in the barn he ran off with the blankets. Then père asserts his authority. The barn was his and he would let us sleep in it, and, suiting the action to the word, he went to a kind of loft opening off the court at the rear of the house and prepared our bed in the newly-threshed straw. The mother, relenting, brought out two blankets, and we were made really comfortable for the night. We spent an hour in singing, then one after another we dropped asleep, and slept well, except when one of us turned over; then the other three must turn also or be left in the cold. Before morning we came to the conclusion that one small blanket is not large enough to cover four persons on a cool Autumn night. Not a sound broke the night stillness, except now and then the rich liquid note of a nightingale in a neighboring wood. Next morning we were received with more favor by the mother; the blankets had not been stolen, and she was ready to open her heart to us. We sat down in the great chimney-place, on whose hearth a cosy log-fire was blazing, and awaited the preparation of our morning chocolate, watching the pot simmering on the crémaillère and chatting with the family. On telling the story of our evening trials, we were told that there were stringent laws prohibiting any one from giving a night's lodging without special license. It was necessary since '48 to fill out papers, which were only given with the license, and if it was found out that they had acted without the license, a fine of twenty francs and a procès-verbal would be the result. Then, too, very few foot-travellers came to their out-of-the-way place, and they hardly knew what to make of us; rather supposed us to be Germans. It was Sunday morning and all the family were preparing for church. The three bright-looking boys brought out their best shoes, only a little lighter than the heavy wooden sabots they had been click-clacking about in, and made them presentable with the end of a tallow candle. Their faces were made to shine, too, and, proud as princes in their good clothes, they went over with the rest of the family to morning service. The old grand-mère was left at home to watch the great "pot-au-feu" and to see that all things went well. She was an interesting old lady and gave us many a story of the war, how they had lost one year's entire crop and their three horses—and how those they now had must be held quite at the service of the government. As we sat the chant from the little church came to us pleasantly through the open door, and now and then the priest's voice was heard also. We lingered long, talking and listening, then paid our modest bill and set out for St. George-de-Boscher-ville.

H. C. A.

THERE is in Mohammedanism no ideal life, in the true sense of the word, for Mohammed's character was admitted by himself to be a weak and erring one. It was disfigured by at least one huge moral blemish: and exactly in so far as his life has, in spite of his earnest and reiterated protestations, been made an example to be followed, has that vice been perpetuated. But in Christianity the case is different. The words, "Which of you convinceth me of sin?" forced from the mouth of him who was meek and lowly of heart by the wickedness of those who, priding themselves on being Abraham's children, never did the works of Abraham, are a definite challenge to the world. That challenge has been for nineteen centuries before the eyes of unfriendly as well as of believing readers, and it has never yet been fairly met.—Bosworth Smith's Lectures on Mohammed.

LITERATURE.

REVIEWS.

IS THAT ALL? No Name Series. Boston: Roberts Brothers.

The title of this piquant story forestalls all criticism as to its quantity and leaves it deliciously tantalizing in quality. But then we know the ready invention of the writer can give us another dainty morsel when he wills, and we must be content with this appetizing rare-bit. Mr. Howells is undoubtedly the author of this naughty bit of fun and satire. He peeps out of every page in the swift, glancing wit and the keen, humorous estimate of social and private life. We are so sure that the story is the product of his inspiration, that we are almost tempted to be saucy and to tell him that if he thinks to disguise his style he cannot do it, for he has not succeeded in making his friends believe that anybody else can write so charmingly. However, we will pique his unusual reserve by stating that the book may possibly have been written by the author of "One Summer," who has something of the same glancing style.

The story is a good-natured satire on social life in our large towns, and nothing can be more exquisitely and dangerously polite than the relations of the two leaders of fashion in Guilford, Mrs. Andersen and Mrs. Pryor. The former is a strict church woman, the latter a Unitarian, and the fencing is spiritual as well as social. The plot turns upon the protégés of these ladies, the one a young Episcopal divine, with "unexceptionable references" from England; the other a beguiling soi-disant young widow, Mrs. Drown, who certainly must be some relation of Mrs. Farrell in "Private Theatricals," the resemblance is so striking. It would spoil the story to tell how this bewitching little elocutionist talks everybody into submission, or why the comely and saintly Mr. Warburton does not "study the poor" of Guilford as we have a right to expect of him. But we may say how charmingly real and natural are the conversations carried on between the three or four young men and women in the book. The talk is inimitable, never forced or prosy, but as necessary as daily intercourse in real life, only somewhat brighter. The exquisite Col. Pryor, whose fastidious tastes and courtly manners bear the brunt of considerable invidious criticism, is nevertheless charming, even on a hero's sick bed, and we admire him only less than his noble and devoted wife. The charm of the book lies in the style, seemingly careless, but in reality thoroughly artistic, with not a word misplaced, and full of airy lightness and grace.

THE POETICAL WORKS OF ALICE AND PHOEBE CARY. With a Memorial of their Lives by Mary Clemmer. New York: Hurd & Houghton.

It is not unfitting that the songs and ballads and religious poems of these two sisters should be gathered into this handsome volume by their loving friend. Alice and Phoebe Cary, especially the former, were like God's birds who "sing because they must." The elder had, undoubtedly, the true singing gift. Some of her ballads and home poems are as happy and good as can be, springing naturally from a heart that loved God and little children and sympathized with all people in trouble. The poems of Phoebe Cary are less remarkable, perhaps, but are full of a deeply religious feeling, and many of them have sung their way into sorrowing hearts and have given great comfort and cheer. Many a scrap-book and collection contained these genuine poems long before their authors' names became famous. They touched the popular heart and the people have a sure instinct in finding out what they want.

Mrs. Clemmer's memoir is a loving and enthusiastic tribute to the moral beauty and goodness of her dear dead friends. It is written from the heart and scarcely looks to a critical estimate of the literary gifts of the two sisters. We are inclined to the belief, however, that the merits of Alice Cary's poetry have been under, rather than over, estimated. She had the power of telling a story in verse simply and sweetly and in a way that sent it home to all hearts—surely a gift not to be despised. The religious poetry of the sisters is possibly of a lower æsthetic order, but contains deep and true feeling and is scarcely to be estimated by the ordinary critical standard. The volume is elegant in appearance and ought to be popular as a holiday present.

MODERN PHYSICAL FATALISM AND THE DOCTRINE OF EVOLUTION. By Thomas Rawson Birks, M.A. London and New York: Macmillan & Co.

This book is a careful examination of the gospel of the Unknowable, of which Mr. Herbert Spencer is the chief proclaimer, and also of the doctrine of evolution, which statements are pronounced to be "from first to last, a strange conglomeration of confusing thought, error and self-contradiction." In a lengthy discussion of the nature of matter, the relativity of knowledge, the continuity of motion, force, etc., Mr. Birks entirely dissents from the philosophy of modern materialism and rises to "the conception of a First Cause, true, living, and intelligent, who by His powerful, all-creating word has called this wonderful universe into being." A good many pages will be rather dry reading for "the average reader," they are so full of metaphysical discussion. The book possesses genuine value, however, as a careful examination from the orthodox standpoint, of theories and principles which are becoming every day more generally accepted in the scientific world, and are gradually creeping into the minds of many professedly religious people.

HANDY DRAMAS FOR AMATEUR ACTORS. By George M. Baker. Boston: Lee & Shepard. $1.

The average histrionic amateur unquestionably needs pieces adapted to his limited capacity, but we think Mr. Baker exaggerates the artistic deficiencies of the class for which his "Handy Dramas" are written. We confess that we have not been able to read all the eight attempts at plays which are contained in this volume, but none of those we have read show any real dramatic feeling; they are badly constructed and one or two are decidedly objectionable in tone. The language is unrefined, occasionally vulgar, the wit is forced and flippant and the sentiment cheap and commonplace. We should not think these pieces would act well, the themes chosen are uninteresting and the dialogue is very diffuse.

This is a specimen of Mr. Baker's humor:

Bosworth.—Do as I bid you; if he opens his mouth throw him in the horsepond.

Pretzel.—Dot's what you call horsepuddality. I don't like dot.

And this is a sample of his serious writing:

"Bright as yonder peak, my home no longer. Hester, here in this bustling world below I'll rear again our happy home; and though the tempest has beaten about us and darkness obscured our path, with confidence and trust to lead and guide, with strength and courage to subdue [sic], we will journey on."

THE STORY OF RUTH, with illustrations after drawings by M. Bida. Boston: Roberts Brothers.

Among the many beautiful illustrated books prepared for the Christmas holidays, this one is sure to find great favor. The beauty and popularity of the familiar Bible story, the truthfulness to nature and general excellence of M. Bida's sixteen illustrations, and the richness and high finish of the letter press, all contribute to make up one of the most beautiful of the less expensive illustrated holiday books.

AZALEA. A Novel. By Cecil Clayton. New York: Harper & Bros.

A readable but commonplace novel. The heroine, whose pretty name forms the title of the book, is an orphan taken from a Jewish grandfather in Italy and brought up in a quiet English village by a bookish uncle, whose son is the fascinating cousin who wins Azalea's heart and keeps it, spite of the objections and manœuvres of a worldly female cousin. The character of the heroine is that of an earnest beauty unconscious of her charms and bent on high pursuits. The cousin goes to Egypt and India in search of the fallen fortunes of the family, and there is an attempt at a description of Cairo and Calcutta, but nothing very graphic, and we are glad when the cousins are united in love and prosperity and we can conscientiously leave them to their happiness.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES OF MUSICAL COMPOSERS. Urbino. Boston: Oliver Ditson & Co.

A useful book of reference for the musical library of young students. The biographical sketches are fairly written and are in chronological order, but only the principal works of the different composers are given, where a more complete list would be really valuable.

WORLD OF SONG. Boston: Oliver Ditson & Co.

A collection of popular ballads, songs and duets of a comic and sentimental order, with a few good songs to leaven a mass of very ordinary material.

THE PRATTLER. For Boys and Girls. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co.

A very pretty story-book for little boys and girls, full of pictures and short stories with large and small print, and everything to make learning to read easy and attractive. We cannot praise the illustrations, for the wood-cuts are poor and badly drawn, and we think they should be better even for a child's book. The letterpress is distinct and clear, and children will enjoy the numerous pictures of animals.

A HOUSEFUL OF CHILDREN. By Mrs. D. P. Sanford. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.

The chromo on the bright blue and gold binding of this book is so exceedingly pretty that it scarcely needs any comment to insure its sale. This "Houseful of Children" are a very lively set and full of such fun as all children enjoy, with occasional drawbacks from illness and misbehaviour, which gives the book a more serious tone at times than most children like, but the story is far from dull and the advice is excellent.

WHAT TOMMY DID. By Emily Huntington Miller. Chicago: S. C. Griggs & Co.

What Tommy did is what every bright little urchin of four or five years is likely to do. Perhaps Tommy's pranks and droll speeches may suggest some extra touches of mischief to inquiring little hands and eyes, but this is scarcely a recommendation of his history to anxious mammas who are glad if the day goes by with unbroken bones and whole clothes. Other boys' mischief, however, is amusing and not so thrilling as the home article. Tommy is very loveable, which is rather more than can be said for the pictures of his little lordship.

CLASSICS OF BABYLAND. By Mrs. Clara Doty Bates. Quarto. Boston: D. Lothrop & Co., publishers. (Chromo Boards, 50 cents).

Mrs. Clara Doty Bates is the latest writer to give fresh shape to the favorite old stories of "Silverlocks and the Bears," "Cinderella," "Little Red Riding Hood," "Jack and the Bean Stalk," etc. She has told them in easy and graceful verse, and her sister, Mrs. Finley, and one or two other artists, have illustrated them with a multitude of dainty pictures. Nothing handsomer and cheaper can be found for a holiday gift to a child.

LITERATURE FOR LITTLE FOLKS. By Elizabeth Lloyd. Philadelphia: Sower, Potts & Co. 1876.

The other title of this book is "Word Lessons," and it is intended for the instruction of children from eight to twelve. Beginning with very simple verses, it includes most of the classic pieces of poetry suitable for children, who are supposed to commit them to memory. Object and composition lessons are arranged for each stanza, so that the lessons may be short and thoroughly understood. The system seems quite thorough and includes lessons in spelling as well as constant reviews of all that has been gone over. It is somewhat on the Kindergarten plan, but we know nothing of its practical adaptation or usefulness.

THE BOYS OF '76. History of the Battles of the Revolution. By Charles Carlton Coffin. New York: Harper & Brothers.

A handsomely-bound volume, full of illustrations and maps and with lively and graphic accounts of the Revolutionary War. We cannot well tire of the history of our struggles and victories a century ago, and Mr. Coffin has written a book which will be especially interesting to boys and will give a fresh and vigorous coloring to their studies in American history.

THE JANUARY MAGAZINES.

St. Nicholas.

St. Nicholas sends a "Happy New Year" in advance to all his young readers. He certainly does his full share to ensure them a happy and useful year. If they could follow out all his suggestions, they could find no time for weariness or moping. This number is unusually bright and interesting, with less for the very little folks than usual, but full of pleasant employment and amusement for the older children. The opening poem, "The Minuet," illustrated with a very pretty engraving from a picture by Millais, fairly sets one dancing, gliding and courtseying in humorous imitation of the fine old stately dance, for there is the suppressed merriment of "tripping it on the light fantastic toe" of modern times, both in the verses and the picture. Of the other poems, "King Lonesome," by Lucy Larcom, is very graphic; "Gregory Griggs" is a funny little bit of satire, short and telling.

The prose is admirable. The "Stars for January," by Proctor, will interest young and old, and these delightful lessons in astronomy are to be continued through the year. William Howitt sends a good "Letter to a Young Naturalist." "Our Great-grandfather's Books and Pictures," with fac-simile illustrations from the New England Primer, by Horace E. Scudder, make us glad that we live now, rather than in the days of those first efforts for children.

The "Old Time Minstrels" is something in the same style; but the race has evidently improved in the quality and variety of its physiognomy since these distressed looking minstrels chanted their gay or doleful songs.

Budge's "Story of the Centennial" will delight the admirers of "Helen's Babies," but for ourselves we prefer Amalie LaFarge's "Poppets" and Boyesen's delightful fairy tale of "Mabel and I." "Marie's New Years Day" is also very touching, and made our eyes suspiciously dim. And then there is a Russian story, and "The Two Dorothys," charmingly illustrated; the very affecting "Modern and Mediæval Ballad of Mary Jane," designed for shadow-pictures; and many other delightful things too numerous to mention, all preceding "Jack in the Pulpit," the aggravating "Riddle Box," and "The Young Contributors' Department." "The Letter Box" can scarcely contain all the letters of delightful appreciation of the St. Nicholas, and we are certainly all children when we read its captivating pages, which furnish an "Elixir Vitæ" nearer the required article than anything that has ever been offered.

Scribner's Monthly.

Scribner's Monthly opens with a pleasing poem called "Day Dreams." They are those of a quiet New England girl, and have little of the material which is useful to ordinary castle-builders. Mr. Hjalmar Hjorth Boyesen describes "Norway and the Norsemen," and we have the continuation of "That Lass o' Lowrie's." Then two short poems, a complete contrast to each other, one by J. G. Holland for "Miss D.'s Album," the other on "Pan," by R. W. Gilder, written in his powerful but peculiar style. Charles Carroll contributes an article, "Concerning Cheapness," which is more witty than consoling. People are supposed to live on Clarence Cook's "Beds and Tables, Stools and Candlesticks," so it will not do to say that the motto attached to each piece of furniture does not seem to us to render it so much more desirable than such beds and tables as we already know. Probably we are wrong. Mrs. S. B. Herrick writes to botanists of Liverworts and Ferns; and there is also a story called "Papa Hoorn's Tulip," which makes fun of quack scientists, if we may coin a word. The "English Workingman's Homes," and "What Our Churches Cost," are, perhaps, the most instructive and useful articles in this number. These subjects are certainly important as bearing on our social economy. "A Winter on the Nile" is the first of a promising series of papers on Egypt, by General George B. McClellan. Another good article is "John Burroughs," by Joel Benton, and there are besides several stories and poems which we have no space to mention.

Frank Leslie's Sunday Magazine.

This is the first number of a new magazine, edited by Dr. Deems and modelled on the plan of a similar magazine, called Good Words, formerly edited in Scotland by the late Dr. Norman McLeod. The Sunday Magazine is designed for "the rich and the poor, the high and the low, the untaught and the learned," and certainly they are fully supplied with matter both interesting, instructive and amusing. Most of the articles are very short, to make the magazine as varied as possible. Of the longer articles, Dr. Henry C. Potter contributes an interesting account of "A Morning Service at Westminster Abbey," and there is also a full account of the life and home of Martin Luther. Dr. Deems furnishes the "Home Pulpit" with a sermon entitled, "How Old Art Thou?" And there is a special department devoted to religious instruction and the "Prayer Meeting." There are also several stories and poems, and at least seventy-five different articles in the 128 pages of this full magazine. Its tone is decidedly religious; but it aims at being quite unsectarian, and everybody can find something to interest or instruct them in its pages.

Harper's Monthly.

For January is an especially attractive number. There are three illustrated articles of more than ordinary importance. The first, on "Contemporary Art in England," will command attention from many beside those who were able to enjoy the exceedingly interesting exhibit at Philadelphia. The others are entitled, "The Good Old Times at Plymouth" and "A Cruise Among the Magdalen Islands;" and in both the illustrations are well executed. In addition to these and the continued stories, we have an interesting article by Conway on Felicien David, the composer, and the usual assortment of shorter articles. So that holiday readers who obtain nothing else, need not be at a loss for entertainment.

The Popular Science Monthly

For January prints the third of Prof. Huxley's lectures—the one tracing the development of the horse;—gives a sketch of Sir William Thomson, with a portrait, and contains articles on "The Earlier Forms of Life," by Professor Hitchcock; "Theories of Primitive Marriage," by Herbert Spencer; "The Study and Teaching of Biology," by Professor H. Newell Martin; "Science in America," by Professor J. W. Draper; "Mental Overwork," by Dr. Farquharson; "The Medical Profession in Modern Thought," by Dr. Maudsley; "Aboriginal Settlements of the Pacific Coast," by Paul Schumacher; some items "About Sharks," and some facts from a lecture by Professor Tyndall on "The Parallel Roads of Glen Roy." It is really unnecessary to say more to any one who is familiar with the best-known names in modern science, or to one who has any interest in either facts or theories.

The American Naturalist

For December, though not a January magazine, is as good as if it were, and contains, beside other interesting articles, by Allen, Ward, Slack and Cone, a remarkable statement by Alexander Agassiz, detailing some observations made by him on "The Development of Flounders." In this he describes the various stages actually seen by him, of the transfer of the right eye to the left side of the head of the young fish, by direct passage through the tissues. Mr. Barber also contributes a valuable paper, with illustrations, on "Rock Inscriptions of the 'Ancient Pueblos' of Colorado, Utah, New Mexico and Arizona."

THE BRITISH QUARTERLIES.

The London Quarterly Review.

As usual, this review presents great variety in its studies of the times. The villa of Horace Walpole at Strawberry Hill is described minutely. The quaintness of its Gothic antiquity is made to stand forth, enlivened by the honored guests of a century ago. The inventories of furniture and curiosities have all been overhauled to bear witness to the eccentricity and originality of the man who worked so diligently that he might have a quiet place to rest in. We are suddenly taken out of this unique residence, so full of curious adornment and luxuriant refinement, to contemplate the Eskimo sledge-driver in the Arctic regions. His habits, laws, legends and history are as far as possible revealed to us. After studying the features of this democratic race, proud to call itself "Inuit," which means "the people," we are again taken to "the fast-anchored isle," as they called it, to be made painfully aware of its army of beggars. The London paupers, amounting to half a million, in every condition of miserable destitution, are at last to be benefited by a society to prevent that indiscriminate charity which pays a premium to mendicancy, and increases rather than cures the distress of the honest poor. The Society for the Organization of Charity will be doing a noble work if it can succeed in helping the poor to help themselves, as it is trying to do.

The Papal Monarchy is the next subject brought to notice by the publication of two books, one of which, we are told, was unquestionably inspired by the late Cardinal Vitelleschi. Honest Catholics are shocked at the assumption of Papal infallibility, and the proceedings of the Vatican Council have resulted in the publication of the books referred to. The article opens as follows: "Wonders are the order of the day, and the wonder of wonders is not far off. The great lie is beginning to be avowed; truth is extorting confessions at last from Rome."

The pictorial illustrations of the text of Shakspeare executed during the past hundred years are critically examined and passed upon in the thorough and sententious style of The London. The Life of the Prince Consort, by Theodore Martin, has met with the cordial reception which a work sanctioned by Queen Victoria is sure to receive. "The Suez Canal an International Highway," "The Turkish Empire" and "The Eastern Question and the Government," are the titles of three statesman-like papers. The leading English officials concur with the people in admitting the impossibility of allowing a continuance of Turkish misrule in Europe. They are also resolved to stop the march of Russia to Constantinople. They cannot be expected to be contented with the agitators of the opposition led by Gladstone and the Duke of Westminster. They assert that such inopportune rashness in handling the everlasting Eastern Question is an element of weakness in the face of a war that may become general throughout Europe and amount to another Crusade against the infidels, regardless of the terrible consequences that such a religious war must entail. The London is reprinted by The L. Scott Publishing Co., 41 Barclay St., N. Y.

Edinburgh Review.

Each article is filled to the brim with valuable facts. In the case of the native races of the Pacific States of North America, a review of data from various sources gives the history of the inhabitants of North America, from the earliest times to the present white race. A work on the subject of early races by Hubert Howe Bancroft is highly spoken of. But a revelation of the past, of much better authenticity, and much nearer our own day and status of civilization, although more distant geographically, is that in the second article. The secret correspondence between Maria Theresa of Austria, her daughter, Marie Antoinette of France, and the Austrian ambassador, Mercy, at the court of Louis XVI., is abundantly clear, and opens a broad vista into that initial period of the horrible revolution that terminated the careers of so many noble individuals, and was only brought to a close by what Carlyle calls "a whiff of grapeshot," at the order of Napoleon. The transition from gay to sombre, in the history of France, is seen to be by a series of natural conditions, customs and characters. The court intrigues are here exposed, to show the motives of the frivolous yet sincerely honorable French-Austrian who ruled Louis to her own destruction as well as his.

A short article takes us away from the distant past and the times of dire calamity, and brings us to the calmer deliberations of "The Declaration of Paris." The central principle of that great convention is sustained by the arguments of the reviewer. The peace of nations and the rights of neutrals, in our own day, do not long hold us from the past, which, though dim and dusty, contains the most sacred memories of all that humanity has experienced, and is therefore sweet food for the cultivated intellect. In all the past, nothing nobler presents itself in the history of England than the career of Sir Philip Sidney. "Elegies and panegyrics, amounting, it is said, to two hundred in number, were published at his death as tributes to his memory. His career is very briefly touched on, and selections from his writings illustrate his moral character and mental quality. Then, as if diving still deeper into the realm of mystery, and leaving the surface of the present almost out of soundings, we come to Dr. Smith's Dictionary of Christian Antiquities. Early history, rites, ceremonials, and religions are brought forward, with Greek text, to prove what the English never can. Amidst the calendars, festivals and liturgies of early times, we suddenly touch the hidden spring of modern thought, and are dropped down at once before the remarkable "Daniel Deronda" of George Eliot. The usual notices of this author's writings all tend in one way. It remains for the Edinburgh to turn the tide of praise, and mildly venture to find fault. The fault is said to exist, though even this staid review says it cautiously.

BRIEF NOTICES.

IN Poems of Places, Scotland, (James R. Osgood & Co.) Mr. Longfellow gives us a generous selection of descriptive pieces. Of course the great Sir Walter and the poet dear to the heart of every Scotchman, Robert Burns—the immortal ploughman—are represented by many poems. Indeed no collection of Scotland's gems could be very interesting without many selections from these authors. But Wordsworth, Hogg, Moore, Motherwell and others also find a place and give a pleasant variety. The first volume passes, alphabetically, from Abbotsford to Foyers.

VIKING Tales of the North (Chicago: S. C. Griggs & Co.) contains the sagas of Thorstein, Viking's son and Fridthjof the Bold, translated from the Icelandic by Rasmus B. Anderson and also Tegner's Fridthjof's sagas, translated by George Stephens. These sagas are full of the wild Northern spirit, and though not fully enjoyed by one unfamiliar with Icelandic and Scandinavian literature, are, nevertheless, interesting both in their narration and their revelations of a life and natural history of which we have little knowledge. Tegner's poem is founded on the two sagas and his work is pronounced to be "the very heart of Scandinavian poetry. It has been translated into nearly every European tongue and into some of them many times."

ST. NICHOLAS, Volume III.—November, 1875, to November, 1876 (Scribner & Co.), makes a very handsome holiday book. And how full it is of treasures! What cannot a child find in it for delight and wonder! Here are long serials—"The Boy Emigrants," by Noah Brooks; "Windsor Castle," by Mrs. Oliphant; "Talks with Girls," and T. B. Aldrich's "Cat and the Countess." Here are amusing sketches and stories and poems by Louise Alcott, H. H., Mrs. Diaz, Donald G. Mitchell, Susan Coolidge, Miss Hale, Mrs. Thaxter, G. P. Lathrop, Mrs. Whitney and hosts of other friends of children. The illustrations are alone "worth the price of admission." The funny rhymes and jingles are capital features.

The puzzles and letters and scrap box are crammed with good things. In and through all is seen the admirable taste and judgment of the experienced editor, Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge, who might well be canonized by the children as their patron saint. Parents would do well to remember this bound volume of St. Nicholas about Christmas time.

NEW PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

BOOKS.

From Noyes, Snow & Co.

LONG LOOK HOUSE. By Edward Abbott.

From E. P. Dutton & Co.

THE GATES OF THE EAST. A Winter in Egypt and Syria. By Henry C. Potter, D.D.

From Lee & Shepard.

HANDY DRAMAS FOR AMATEUR ACTORS. By George M. Baker. $1.00.

THE HANDY SPEAKER. By George M. Baker. $1.00.

From J. B. Ford & Co.

FOOTSTEPS OF THE MASTER. By Harriet Beecher Stowe. $1.75.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS. By Tullio Suzzara Verdi, A. M., M. D. $1.50.

From Harper & Brothers, New York.

MADCAP VIOLET. By William Black.

PETER THE APOSTLE. By Rev. Wm. M. Taylor, D. D.

HOUSEHOLD EDITION OF DICKENS' WORKS. Pictures from Italy, Sketches and American Notes.

SHADOWS ON THE SNOW. By B. L. Farjeon. 35 cents.

FROM DREAMS TO WAKING. By E. Lynn Linton. 25 cents.

JOSHUA HAGGARD'S DAUGHTER. By Miss M. E. Braddon. 75 cents.

ART AND SCIENCE.

THE WEBSTER STATUE.

In a Barclay street window is a Parian-ware statuette of Daniel Webster, signed "T. Ball, sculp., Boston, Mass, 1853." Other copies of this are familiar in sundry American homes. Now that years have obliterated the partisanship inseparable from a living statesman, that great head looms up in heroic proportions in our own Central Park, and the little study, improved almost as much as enlarged, stands a memorial statue in bronze on one of the choicest sites our country could afford. But when a portrait statue of an orator is to be made the sculptor meets with difficulties from the first. If the orator himself were to pose on a high pedestal no larger than cask-head, in such a position as he might assume during an impassioned phrase, and keep it unchanged, he might look well enough for one moment, but after that his appearance would be apt to grow uncomfortable, ludicrous even, in the ratio of his action being more or less decided. In other words, the instant that the pose were kept longer than it would be during his speech, his own discomfort and the absurdity of his appearance would be on the increase. The graceful, the impressive speaker would, while standing thus, look unlike himself.

This granted, it is easy to understand why, if the man himself caused this effect, a fac simile of him in wax (although with real clothes and hair and glass eyes, all so well made that any one portion would be indistinguishable from the corresponding part of the living man) would not look like him after the first glance. We have all experienced the uncomfortable feeling that such figures produce on us, and a Mme. Tussaud exhibition can never quite escape the ridiculous.

Very far removed from this is the work of an able sculptor, and the best authorities agree that mere fac simile of nature is not art.

In the first place a public statue must be a pleasing and more or less decorative object, whether placed on a building or isolated. It should be a work of art. Like Donatello's St. George or Ward's Militia-man, both bespeaking soldierly alertness, or the great figure of Liberty designed for our harbor, with her steadfast earnestness, a public statue should express and perpetuate some ennobling idea or some form of beauty and poetic interest. Where the fruits of a human life have been such that the personal influence for good will still live in the hearts of the people, through a portrait, how proper to erect a memorial statue.

But especially if there are still those who remember the individual, it is very important that the statue should represent the figure and bearing as well as the face, or it is no portrait.

Two fellow-soldiers were standing before the new Seward statue recently. Said one: "Why, don't you remember down in Washington, Ned, when Lincoln and Seward came and shook hands with us, how Seward was a short man with a big head?"

"Yes," said the other, "and how Lincoln had a long, lank figure like what they have given here to Seward. Now if they could change heads, so as to put this of Seward's on the thick-set body of the Lincoln statue over in Union Square, and that head on this tall body, we should see them much more as they looked standing there together."

These men did not care how well the books or scrolls or boot-heels were modelled; they wanted a portrait—the expression of the individual.

While a powerful orator is speaking, even those beyond the reach of his voice feel the magnetism of the situation, watch with strained attention every movement, and catch enough spirit from his bearing and gestures to join with a will in the cheers of the audience. He is, in fact, as he stands before them, an impressive and inspiring sight. How shall the sculptor preserve this impression for the future? If he were given the task of making a statue typical of the orator he would have difficulty enough; it requires great artistic qualities to succeed in an abstract idea, and avoid both tameness and imitation. Even the remnant that is left to us of Greek art covers so large a field that originality of treatment was nearly abandoned by modern sculptors, who have produced till lately little else beyond weak attempts in "classic" style. But to make what will meet the idea of a work of art, beautiful in itself, and also a portrait which is to keep alive individual greatness with the public, there are limitations which are only helps to success when properly treated, but otherwise sad stumbling-blocks.

It is very encouraging to see progress, and so far as the personal impression of the great Webster is concerned, this statue of Ball's is a success. That it is still, far from being perfect as a statue, no one probably knows better than the sculptor himself, for there is evidence from his work that he has pondered and labored most earnestly, and must have clearly felt his difficulties.

Given, a heavily-built, remarkably large-headed man, of a period just long enough ago to make his clothes look old-fashioned, not old enough to be quaint, picturesque or classic, how shall the artist make a Work of Art?

Dignity and beauty in a figure, especially in sculpture, have been found to depend greatly on an elegant length of leg below the knee. Shall the sculptor model [his Webster with classic legs? No, he has been true to facts, but has so managed his composition as to be true both to Nature and Art by some happy expedients.

ART NOTES.

In every man there is a poet who dies young.—St. Beuve.

In a poetic system there must be room for all, and art must be all-embracing.—A. W. Sch'egel.

TURNER avoided solid color except in sketching. He said that water-color painting would be totally ruined and lose all its individuality and beauty by the bad practice of mingling opaque and transparent colors.

At Knoedler's gallery there is a very fine Firmin-Girard. The subject is, "The Flower-Market of Paris." The canvas, which is large, is full of well-dressed figures and of masses of flowers, all serving as the subjects of most brilliant, harmonious and finished coloring. Every one will admit that it is a marvel of skill, even if he does not admire the school which it represents.

In a recent essay Hamerton says:—"There has never been an instance of a great artist suddenly arising in a community outside of artistic tradition. We speak loosely of artists who have lived in isolation, but the really isolated artist has never existed. This is so true that it is true even of the specialities of art. An accomplished landscape painter could never be formed where there had not been a previous landscape painting to prepare the way for him, and educate him, even although the community were rich in sculptors and figure painters."

ART has no end but itself. It is the spontaneous expression of an intellectual need, differing from all other needs of human intelligence. It presents itself as a phenomenon independent of every external hindrance. It is neither the true, the good, the right, the useful, nor any one of the absolute moralities. It is self-sufficient, self-centred; it is art and nothing else. Being free from every external aim, it follows that the art of a race is the quintessence of the race and that the art of an individual is the quintessence of the individual.—Vitet.

It is a pleasure to find in the Johnston collection at the Academy, a Boldini—a landscape with figures—which is not sensuous to the degree of being sensual. In the two pictures by this artist in the Loan Collection, there was no overt indelicacy, but there was an innuendo, hard to account for perhaps, but most certainly felt. The woman on the garden seat was no lady, and the silhouette figures relieved against the background of blueish green foliage were hatefully vulgar. But the picture now at the Academy is pure and very beautiful.

How often must it be said that art is not imitative, but representative? The truthfulness of a work of art depends, not upon the number of facts it contains, but upon the consistency and harmony of its relations. Are the relations of form and color in the picture, of character and incident in the drama, correspondents of relations in nature or life, actual or potential? If so, then it is as natural as art has a right to be. Realism can go no further without loss of the original, poetic and human elements, and that which should be emotional becomes curious only. If that is the highest art which gives the most facts with the greatest precision, then a reflection in a mirror would be the best landscape, and a wax-figure the best statue. In the highest work the artist is first, nature second. When we see a landscape we call it a Kensett, not Lake George. It imports more that the picture is a Knauss than that it is a group of figures.

If perfect illusion in form and color or in the drama could be attained, we should have only duplicates of nature and the realm of the ideal would not be extended. The works of artists would be re-statements of facts, and the humanities would perish. Truisms all, but forgotten in half the judgments that are pronounced.

HEARTH AND HOME.

[FOR THE INQUIRER.]
ASPIRATION.

BY ALICE WILLIAMS BROTHERTON.

"The flower out of reach is dedicated to God."—FAMILIAR PROVERB.

THE longing spirit strives and strains
Beyond its finite tether,
Unmindful of Earth's cares and pains
Upreaching ever—Whither?
"The flower which blooms beyond our reach,
To God is dedicated;"
And each aim unfulfilled may teach
Its lesson consecrated.

When shall we say our work is vain?
Cease, soul, this blind bewailing!
It may be that our greatest gain
Is hid in this same failing.
If it should prove a deadly snare,
This boon for which we're sighing,
The Love which hears our frenzied prayer
Is kindest in denying.

Our thwarted aims, defeated strife,
Have their appointed mission;
And we shall see, beyond this life,
The spirit's glad fruition:
All which we would yet cannot be,
We are in Life immortal;
And longing is the golden key
That opes the Future's portal.

CINCINNATI, OHIO, Dec., 1876.

MR. CHADWICK'S POEMS.

[William C. Gannett, in the Boston Commonwealth.]

HERE comes the little book at last for which friends not a few have waited long. We know of more than one "scrap-book" where many niches can be emptied, now that the poems that used to fill them have been thus clustered. It is a volume of health and happiness and trust set a-runing in musical verse—a book of so much sunshine that we wonder where the shadows are in the writer's life. It seems high-noon alway. The only sadness that the poet knows is Death, and that is turned to gladness by his trust; and the trust is the child's confiding in One who is the Heart of all the goodness that he sees and knows. Delight in nature, delight in friends, delight in God, are the moods, three in one, which move him, and the delight escapes so easily and naturally into verse that the book seems full of voluntaries. As you feel that nothing is so natural as pleasant weather, nothing so easy as June in June, so, in reading Chadwick, you almost believe that, give one health and an eye for beauty and a loving heart, and he cannot help being religious and a poet! The poets to whom he seems most akin are Whittier and Faber; but Whittier with a boy's pulse in him—the delight of trust rather than the thoughtfulness of trust; and a Faber without any church to mould and paint his faith. Read "A Song of Trust," "Another Year," "All for Each." The sense of God in the joy, or the beauty, or the mystery, or the tragedy, is so near that, let the poem start with a bird's-nest or a barnacle, it becomes a psalm as it goes on and rounds into a prayer at the end.

But we believe that the uniqueness of the book, that special value in it which will make homes feel that they cannot spare their own copy, yet must have a copy to lend and give away, lies in the twenty poems about the "Elsewhere land." We doubt if any one has said more tenderly and strongly what many want to hear, to help their sorrow or their unbelief. As friend by friend has passed away, his love treads back so firmly to the theme that we see behind the lines not the thought, Immortality, but a face as of one dead who is immortal. We do not wonder that friends wrote him, fearing that he needed sympathy himself, when he printed "Sadness and Gladness," the poem beginning—

There was a glory in my house,
And it is fled;
There was a baby at my heart,
And it is dead.

It is not only utterly tender, but among its simple rhymes it holds the great argument for trusting in God's tenderness. In equally simple verses called "Where?" lies his way of questioning, Does Death end all? For all it is so touching, it holds the gist of the ponderous argument; or, rather, the poem, "Why this waste?" puts the question, and puts it very passionately—the other answer it. "Death and Spring" tells how Nature's unsympathy with sorrow, her cruel gladness around death, is her best sympathy. "No More Sea" tells how real, how home-like, the strange land, be it of earth or elsewhere, grows when friends have crossed the sea to it. "The Two Waitings" will make some mother kiss the page through tears. The two sonnets, "Recognition" and "Identity," seal "our love" as the secret of all friend-discoveries yonder, and no less of the discovery of ourselves.

But, though the thought looks so often and so lovingly thither, there is no turning from the wonder and the joy of this world and its life. On the contrary, this is the feeling ever—

The time is short; the more the reason, then,
For filling it as full as it can hold
With thrills of beauty, yearnings for the truth,
And joys of love and labor manifold.

Then should it chauce, as we would fain believe,
Life's glory waits us in some other sphere,
Its first great joy shall be we did not miss
God's meaning in the glory that is here.

LIFE AND THOUGHT IN OUR TIME.

[Rev. J. B. Harrison, in a Vineland paper.]

I AM aware that only a very few people wish to learn anything, except how to get the largest reward for the least work possible; or as employers, how to obtain the greatest amount of work for the least possible pay; and generally how to escape the doom of toil. But we shall be compelled to learn some things in this country by sharp discipline if we refuse to learn willingly and dutifully. The universe was here with its laws before we came. We cannot change the moral order of the world (though men are still trying, and from time to time think they have accomplished it). We shall be obliged to learn what this moral order is, and to conform our life to it very strictly.

So many people think there must be some good in a printed book, and therefore waste the money which they need for food and home comfort and education, in buying worthless books, that there is great need that students, clergymen and readers generally should make their knowledge of books of some use to those who have but little time to read and who are bewildered and imposed upon by the multitude of titles inviting their attention. The life and light of the world are largely in good books, for in them is recorded and preserved the results of human experience. And it is impossible for a race or nation to advance very far in civilization, or to succeed at all in our time, unless the leaders of its people acquaint themselves with these lessons of the past and walk by their light. These results and lessons are found in the history of nations, and in their vital and noble literature.

It is time for true men to arraign the enormous selfishness so frequently exhibited by what calls itself culture in this country. Many men of wealth and leisure, with good books and time to enjoy them, show themselves completely indifferent about the culture of the "common people" or "laboring classes." What they call their culture withdraws them from sympathy with their less-favored fellows. Such men talk contemptuously of all efforts or plans for the increase of knowledge among the people, and many of them avow that they do not believe the "laboring classes" are capable of improvement. These dilettanti have to learn that if the working people cannot become intelligent, dutiful and in a true sense prosperous, we shall all go down together.

Again many persons are now claiming attention and respect as leaders and teachers of the "laboring people" who are themselves—these speakers and writers—grossly ignorant of what has been done and learned and written in connection with the matters in which they assume to be guides. They are not earnest or serious enough to task themselves to any real study or examination of any subject. Many of them despise knowledge and depend upon what they call intuition as the source and authority of their theories. The simple truth bearing upon this matter is, that teachers need knowledge, and that there is no good in speeches or sermons or books, unless the men who make them have something to say, and know something of what they talk or write about.

MUSCULAR CHRISTIANITY.

[Dr. J. G. Holland, in Scribner for January.]

THE two great men of the Brooklyn pulpit are splendid men physically, and they never could have been the powers they are had they been otherwise. Dr. Chapin and Robert Collyer, though fine and strong in intellectual fibre, are not so exceptionally remarkable in that particular as to account for their long, strong hold upon the public mind. The two Boston preachers who draw the largest crowds, Mr. Phillips Brooks and Mr. Murray, are men of entirely exceptional physique—hard to be matched anywhere in the world, for size and strength. It is an inspiration to look at them. Their presence is magnetic. They exercise a charm which can only come from complete manhood—the equipoise of thought and intent with voice and might. If we turn to our own city, and see where the crowds are, we shall find them at Dr. Hall's and Dr. Taylor's. Mr. Hepworth's church, too, is usually a crowded one. It is no dishonor to these men to say that the people do not flock to them because they preach the best sermons to be heard in New York. There are a dozen pulpits furnished with as good brains as these. The simple truth is that if they were called upon to preach with a slender physique and a weak voice, their crowds would leave them. They are large, strong, healthy men. America does not produce enough of these, and so we were obliged to import some of them. The Brick Church has called a pastor from London, and he is one of the same kind—strong enough not only to do an immense amount of pastoral work, but to preach without fatigue, perform the duties of a professorship, take charge of school matters in his own district, and carry through all the side work that comes to a man in his position. The church went for that man simply because it could not find him here. It is no dishonor to our theological institutions to go out of the country for such men, because America does not raise enough of them for her own use. When we produce them in sufficient numbers, we shall not be obliged to import them. And when we fully comprehend the fact that the body has quite as much to do with pulpit usefulness as the heart and the mind, and that one of the first conditions of that usefulness is high physical vitality, we shall give physical culture the attention that it demands, and ultimately raise our own preachers.

GEORGE ELIOT'S READERS.

[From the Atlantic for January.]

I was talking not long ago with a lady of a literary turn about Daniel Deronda, and got myself into her good graces by saying that George Eliot's vast popularity was a mystery to me. She agreed with me that fashion had a great deal to do with it, and said, "I have drawn up a classification of the novelist's admirers, which seems to explain her wide influence." I transcribe this table for you:

First Class. People who exalt George Eliot simply because she's a woman who writes thoughtful books.

Second Class. Men who wish to ingratiate themselves with women belonging to the first class.

Third Class. People who are disappointed in life, or unwell, and accordingly like her gloomy views. Also happy people, who find her bitterness tonic, and young women who go to parties too often and want sadness in their novels, to suit the reaction that comes of sitting up late.

Fourth Class. This contains two varieties: first, those who never read philosophy and like to get a smattering of clumsy philosophic words in a novel; and second, those who never read novels, but are attracted by George Eliot's because they look like philosophy.

Fifth Class. The skippers.

Sixth Class. The intellectual aristocrats, who say that no other novelist introduces persons who know everything and are like the most cultured men and women of the day.

Seventh Class, Myself. (I do truly admire George Eliot's strength, though I do not like her books. There are some things so large that they don't leave much room for likes or dislikes. They shove prejudices aside just as a great steamer displaces more tons of water than a small one can.)

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

THE WEEK BEFORE CHRISTMAS.

[From the "Children's Paradise," by Katharine B. Zerega.]

CHRISTMAS is a glorious time,
Honored oft in prose and rhyme;

But no poet old or young
Praises of the week has sung

That precedes the happy day
Set apart for praise and play.

Too numerous to all narrate
Some of its pleasures I'll relate.

Quickly running to and fro
Through the crowded streets we go;

Now in this store, now in that,
Choosing colors for a mat.

Spending all our precious store,
Wishing that we had some more.

Buying toys of every kind
To amuse the infant mind.

Woolly lamb, and life-like cow,
Dogs, that plainly say, "bow-wow."

Talking dolls, and dollies dancing,
Dolls on horses gayly prancing.

Then our parcels home we take,
But with inward fear we quake

Lest some bright inquiring eye
Bundles stray perchance espy.

Faces gay and faces serious,
Open smiles, and smiles mysterious

Greet us now on every side,
Doors no longer open wide.

Every one her needle plies
While each happy hour flies;

Words like these are often heard
From each little sewing-bird:

"Do you think Aunt Mary knows What I'm making for her, Rose?"

"Oh! how pleased dear Charlie'll be,
When these slippers he will see!"

Then the dressing of the Tree,
Oh! delightful mystery!

Box and bundle every size
To bewilder infant eyes;

In the parlor vanish all,
Room forbid to children small.

Expectation on tip-toe
Through the week we gaily go.

And as Christmas eve draws near,
Parents, friends and children dear,

Gleeful girl and boisterous boy,
With their hearts brimful of joy,

Cheerily in chorus chime,
"We have had a happy time!"

CHRISTMAS IN NORWAY.

[From Scribner for January.]

THE great festival of the year in Norway, as among all Germanic nations, is Christmas. Whether it owes all its sanctity to its association with the birth of the Saviour is, however, an open question; for many customs still kept alive in the remoter valleys seem to point beyond the beginning of the Christian era, to the time when the Norsemen ate horse-flesh in honor of Odin and Thor and Frey. The festival, as the retaining of the old name indicates, is as yet strongly tinctured with reminiscences of the old pagan Yule. Tracing the character of Christ and his apostles as they appear in many popular marchen and legends, the conclusion lies near that the people have, consciously or not, transferred much that was dear to them in the old gods to the new deity, and thus, by a sort of compromise between the old faith and the new, have produced a divine type which is, at all events, sufficiently national to appeal strongly to their Norse hearts. This nationalizing of one's divinity is, of course, not peculiar to Norway; it would have been more singular if Norway had shown no trace of it.

The preparations for the Yule-tide, in the way of provisioning the house, would, to American eyes, look perfectly enormous. Baking and brewing and butchering keep the whole household busy during the last three weeks preceding the festival. And the fact that the process is repeated year after year probably proves that it is necessary. Every man, woman or child who comes within a stone's throw of the house during the holidays (which last until a week after New Year) must be invited in and urged to eat and drink without regard for comfort. Even the birds are to have their share of the Christmas joy. As soon as the church-bells have "rung in the feast" at five o'clock in the afternoon of Christmas-eve, the father of the house takes his richest sheaf of oats or barley and attaches it to the end of a pole, which is nailed to the gable of the barns or the store-houses. The mother and the children stand by enjoying the sight of the happy birds fluttering around the sheaf, while the father will perhaps quote the passage about God's care even for the sparrow, wherefore it is right that the sparrow, too, should rejoice on the day when Christ was born.

Among the many evening visitors which are sure to drop in to taste the Christmas brew, some are apt to be disguised by grotesque masks, and otherwise fantastically accoutred. These are called Yule-bucks, possibly because the most common mask may have been that of a goat or some other horned creature. At present I do not know that any special kind of disguise is preferred. The rule seems to be, the more grotesque the better.

The German custom of having poor children wander about on Christmas-eve, carrying a large lighted star of canvas, representing the star of Bethlehem, prevails also in Norway. No one can hear their shrill, tiny voices in the snow under his window, singing the dear familiar carols, and refuse them their well-earned penny.

CHRISTMAS WORK FOR NIMBLE FINGERS.

(Olive Thorne, in the Independent.)

MANY pretty gifts can be made of colored cardboard, with strips of gilt edging and embossed pictures, which come in sheets all cut out, and in many cases gummed on the back. The first two of these articles can be bought at any first-class paper-store, and the last at a stationer's or a book-store.

To make a frame for a small picture, photograph, water-colored chromo, or engraving, first prepare the picture thus: Cut a piece of common pasteboard—part of an old box will do—exactly the size of the picture, and sew a loop of braid or cord on the back to hang it by. If glass is desired, procure also a piece of clear glass of the same size. Now lay the back, loop down, on the table. On this lay the picture face up, and finish with the glass, and bind the three together with paper gummed over the edge, or with narrow ribbon or strip of cloth. Next take of a delicate drab or light gray cardboard four strips, one inch and a quarter wide, and long enough to cross each other at the corners of the picture and leave their ends projecting two-inches. Lay these on the picture: so as to get them exactly the size and exactly square. At the point where they cross each other fasten them with two or three stitches. Cover the crossing with an embossed picture—a flower is prettiest—and gum the frame to the binding of the picture. These colored embossed pictures—perhaps you call them Decalcomanie pictures—are very pretty and cheap.

Little vases to stand on a shelf and hold matches, or filled with dry sand, to hold a few delicate grasses, autumn leaves (mounted on broom-splints), or ferns, are easily made. Take for the base a large button-mould or piece of stiff cardboard, cut round or oval; cut a strip of colored cardboard long enough to go around the standard and lap over a half inch, as high as you wish it. Gum it in the shape of a cylinder over a broom handle, or anything the right size, and hold it firm till dry by winding soft cotton thread or yarn around it very closely. When dry, gum it to the standard by means of three or four strips of paper bent in the middle and fastened half to the inside of the cylinder and half to the standard with glue or gum. Then ornament with narrow gilt edging at top and bottom, and gum a bright picture on the front. Black cardboard with a picture is the prettiest.

A combined pincushion and handkerchief box or jewelry box is very pretty and easy to make. Take a good-shaped cigar-box, whose cover has a hinge of cloth. Make for the top a cushion on a piece of board the size of the cover. The cover of another box is just the thing. Make your cushion by cutting pieces of old flannel, the first six the size of the board, the next smaller, and so on till you have a pile well rounded up on all sides. Now cover with any pretty silk or velvet, and fasten the edges tightly on the under side of the board (you can sew them across from side to side). When done, lay it on the top of your box, and fasten it by four small screws put through from the under side of the cover. Around the edge put plaited ribbon, fringe or gilt edging. Line your box, cover and all, with delicate-tinted glazed paper, and cover the outside with other colored paper, with gilt edging at top and bottom, and an embossed picture or flower on each side.

JOTTINGS.

BOSTON YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN UNION.—A Christmas service will be held next Sunday evening, at 7½ o'clock, in the Union Hall, Boylston street, conducted by Rev. J. F. W. Ware. Social singing at close of services. The public cordially invited.

THE children of the Northfield, Mass., Unitarian Sunday school held a fair on Thursday evening, Dec. 14, and realized nearly $50. Most of the articles sold were made by the children themselves. The proceeds are for the purchase of books and pictures for the Sunday school room.

LONDON despatches of Monday report a serious colliery explosion in the South Walés Company's pit near Newport. The full extent of the disaster has not been discovered, but seventeen bodies have been recovered and many miners who were rescued alive had been seriously and some fatally injured.

REV. E. P. POWELL, of the Third Unitarian Church, Chicago, will soon publish a volume on "The World's Great Protestantisms," a course of lectures which he is now delivering before his own people on Sunday evenings. He will also about the same time publish a series of discourses on "The Religion of Evolution."

OUR Boston friends are said to have taken to telegraphing in fac-simile by some ingenious application of zinc plate and pencil point. If they would telegraph fac-similes of some of their best Cambridge men to various parts of the country—not forgetting Washington—the favor would be duly appreciated by many.

AMONG the sermons preached in Boston last Sunday and reported in the city papers of Monday morning, were: one on "A Revival of Loyalty the Need of the Country," by Rev. C. C. Carpenter; an address before the Young Men's Christian Union, on "The Work and Glory of the Pilgrims," by Rev. Dr. Geo. E. Ellis; the third sermon in the series on Social Problems, on "Poverty," by Rev. M. J. Savage, and a discourse by Dr. Miner on "The Danger to Free Institutions from the Roman Catholic church."

THE disastrous fire at the Brooklyn Theatre has drawn the attention of municipal authorities all over the world to the question of providing adequate safeguards in public buildings, and especially in places of amusement, and as the necessity of reassuring the public constrains them, managers seem disposed to take such measures as are deemed necessary to more fully equip the buildings under their charge. There is no doubt that in this case, as in many others, the flower of safety will be plucked from the nettle danger.

THERE was a peculiar similarity in the storms which visited a large part of our territory on Saturday, the 9th, and Saturday the 16th. Each was accompanied by an exceedingly violent gale, indicated by wide and sudden fluctuations of the barometer, and by a rapid change of the temperature to intense cold. The latter storm, however, brought in its train much snow and rain, with all the exquisite delicacy and grace in the burdened trees, and all the extreme disagreeableness of the burdened streets to which in this climate we are so thoroughly accustomed.

DURING the past week gold has ranged rather higher than during the preceding, having gone up to 108, reacting to 107½, while silver has ranged rather lower than before, going down to 57d. per ounce in London, and reacting to 57½. The effect of the passage of the Bland Silver Bill by the House, if any, appears to have been fully discounted. Money is a little more active in the New York market, as is usual toward the close of the year, call loans being made at from 4 to 7 per cent. The holiday trade is at its height, and retailers in certain classes of business appear to be as busy as bees; but other kinds of trade remain about as dull as heretofore, with an indisposition on the part of dealers to make any active movement at present.

GEN. WILLIAM F. BARTLETT died at his home in Pittsfield, last Sunday after a lingering illness. General Bartlett was born in Boston and graduated at Harvard University. He was about thirty-six years of age. In the war of the Rebellion he made a conspicuously brilliant record. During the last two years he has exerted a good deal of influence in politics, though he has never consented to take an office or a nomination for office. By his eloquent, manly and timely address at the celebration of the Centennial of the Battle of Lexington, which sounded the key-note of the expressions of friendship and good will between the North and South, he made a national reputation. Last year he was nominated by acclamation for the office of Lieutenant-Governor of Massachusetts, on the ticket with Gov. Gaston, but declined to serve.

THE Christmas and New Year's Festival for poor and worthy children, which has been given for several years by the Union, will be held this year on Saturday afternoon, Dec. 30th, in Union Hall and Franklin Hall, on Boylston street. Care is taken to invite only those children who are needy and worthy, and for whom the Christmas season brings no other festival. The children are supplied with articles of clothing according to their special necessities, and also with books, toys, refreshments, etc. The festivals in previous years, have been the means of affording much happiness and comfort to the recipients, and much joy and satisfaction to those ladies and gentlemen through whose kind and liberal donations and valued personal assistance the annual festival for poor and worthy children have been held.

REV. CHARLES G. AMES seems to be meeting with the very best sort of success in his effort to spread reasonable views of religion among the working men of Philadelphia. A private correspondent writes: "As I have sat listening on Sunday evenings to our good Mr. Ames at the Spring Garden Hall, for now six weeks, I have thought how you would rejoice, could you see the promise in that movement of a new day for Liberal Christianity in this great city. The audience steadily increases. Last evening there must have been between six and seven hundred, and so still you could hear a pin drop. Such hearty congregational singing! And his lectures, so full and running over with the inspirations of genius, so profound in thought, so deep in devoutness and walking with God. I feel like one who has long watched for the morning and now sees it dawn.

CHRISTMAS SERVICES.—At the church of the Messiah, New York, a special service will be held at 11 A.M. on Christmas day, when Rev. W. R. Alger will preach. The congregation of All Souls' church will unite with the congregation of the church of the Messiah in this service. The Sunday school of All Souls' church will celebrate Christmas by a special service in the church at 3 o'clock next Sunday afternoon. The church will be dressed with evergreens, and Dr. Bellows will make the usual Christmas address. All interested are cordially invited to be present.

At Unity chapel, Brooklyn, Christmas will be celebrated by a special service on Christmas eve.

At the Second church Mr. Chadwick will preach a Christmas sermon next Sunday A.M., but there will be no further celebration of the day.

At the church of the Saviour the usual Christmas services will undoubtedly be held, but we have received no notice of the celebration.

THE Massachusetts teachers will hold their thirty-second annual Convention in Springfield, Mass., beginning on Tuesday evening next, Dec. 26th, with an address at the Opera House by W. T. Harris, of St. Louis, upon "The Educational Significance of the Centennial Exposition." The association meets at nine o'clock, Wednesday morning, the 27th, in the High School Hall, where, after the preliminaries of organization, there will be discussions upon "The Metric System," opened by William F. Bradbury, master in the Cambridge High School, "The Reformed Spelling," opened by Rev. Dr. Thomas Hill, late President of Harvard University, and "The Elements of Expression in Speech," opened by Prof. Moses T. Brown, of Tufts College. The high school, grammar school and primary school sections of the association have separate meetings, in the afternoon, in different rooms in the high school building. Distinguished foreigners are expected to address the association in relation to the progress of education in their own countries. All the hotels of the city offer board to delegates at special rates, and it is expected that all the important railroads of the State will grant free return tickets. The headquarters of the directors of the association will be at the Haynes House.

The Inquirer.

Published every Thursday, from the middle of September to the middle of July, in the Park Bank Building, 214 Broadway, New York.

To be in season for insertion the same week, communications intended for publication must be forwarded in time to reach this office not later than Tuesday. No attention is paid to anonymous communications. We require the name and address of every writer, not necessarily for publication, but as guarantees of good faith.

Communications relating to the editorial department of the paper should be addressed, "Editor of the Inquirer, P. O. Box 109, New York City;" all others to "Publisher," same address.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

Three Dollars per year, in advance. Clergymen, Two Dollars per year. Postage, Twenty Cents per year, in advance. Remittances should be made by Registered Letter or by Post-Office Money Order, or Draft on New York payable to PUBLISHER OF THE INQUIRER.

ADVERTISING RATES.

Six cents per agate line per week; outside page and pages next reading matter, ten cents per line. Special Notices twenty cents per line.

Discount—Five per cent. on yearly accounts amounting to $250 and under $500. Ten per cent. on yearly accounts amounting to $500 or more.

Copy for Thursday's paper received until Tuesday afternoon.

Advertisements must be acceptable in every respect.

Office, PARK BANK BUILDING, 214 Broadway.

Address,

THE INQUIRER,

Box 109, New York.

Special Notices.

Protestant Leaders.

A COURSE OF LECTURES

BY
JOHN W. CHADWICK,
AT THE

Second Unitarian Church, Brooklyn,
Corner of Clinton and Congress Streets.

1876—77.

LECTURES:

- I. Luther and the Reformation. Sunday evening, Nov. 5, 1876.
- II. John Calvin and his System. Sunday evening, Dec. 3, 1876.
- III. George Fox and Quakerism. Sunday evening, Dec. 17, 1876.
- IV. Wesley and Methodism. Sunday evening, Jan. 7, 1877.
- V. Emanuel Swedenborg. Sunday evening, Feb. 4, 1877.
- VI. Murray and Universalism. Sunday evening, March 4, 1877.
- VII. Thomas Paine: His Relation to his own and later Times in Matters of Religion. Sunday evening, April 1, 1877.
- VIII. Channing and Unitarianism. Sunday evening, April 15, 1877.
- IX. Theodore Parker. Sunday evening, May 6, 1877.

Hour of Lecture, HALF-PAST SEVEN.

Morning Service at 10:35 precisely. Vesper Service, Third Sunday Evening of each Month, with the above exceptions.

Madame Ivan C. Michels,
SHAKSPEARIAN READER.

Accepts engagements for Church and Parlor Readings. Ladies and Gentlemen thoroughly instructed in Elocution. For Terms and Testimonials apply to 33 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

J. W. Bouton's priced Catalogue of Illustrated, Fine Art, and Standard Books, suitable for presentation or the library, may be had gratis on application to 706 Broadway.

Lectures and Sermons,

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.
FIRST SERIES.

The Education of Conscience.
Self Respect.
The Higher Reverence.
God on our Side.
Man and the Bible.
The Best Use of Sunday.

SECOND SERIES.

The Essential Piety of Modern Science.
A Rational Church.
Economy and Waste.

Also, WAY, TRUTH AND LIFE, a Biography of N. A. Staples, with sermons, price, $1.00.

For sale by CHARLES P. SOMERBY, 139 Eighth St., New York. Copies sent by mail at the rate of five cents each and postage.

The Address of Rev. John F.

LOCKE is to the care of W. H. Baldwin, President Young Men's Christian Union, 18 Boylston St., Boston.

New Publications.

SCRIBNER FOR JANUARY

Is specially notable not only for the excellence, but for the great variety of its contents and the beauty of its illustrations. Among the more noteworthy articles there is an illustrated paper on

"NORWAY AND THE NORSEMEN," by PROF. BOYSEN, an Americanized Norwegian, of Cornell University. GEN. McOLLYN's interesting series of Travel-Sketches begins with

"A WINTER ON THE NILE,"

in which he discusses the Khedive's army and system of internal improvements, etc. CLARENCE COOK, in his paper on HOUSEHOLD AND HOME DECORATION, takes up such practical matters as bedroom furniture, open fires and furnace heat, gas and kerosene lights, blue and white china. MR. BARNARD's paper,

"THE ENGLISH WORKINGMAN'S HOME," describes the Shattisbury Building Association in London, with illustrations of houses for workmen.

"WHAT OUR CHURCHES COST US," shows us the relative cost of church-work.

Other illustrated papers are: a sketch of John Burroughs (with portrait); "Liverworts and Ferns," by Mrs. S. B. Herrick; "Day Dreams," a poem of New England life, and "Papa Hoorn's Tulip," an extravaganza with laughable silhouettes by Howard Pyle.

Dr. Holland's Novel,

"NICHOLAS MINTURN,"

gives us bright and breezy discussions of various themes on board an ocean steamer, followed by a collision and shipwreck, the story of which is most graphically told.

In a light vein are "My Friend Moses," by John Habberton, author of "Helen's Babies," a talk "Concerning Cheapness," by Charles Carroll; and "Ghosts," a short story by Isabella T. Hopkins.

"THAT LASS O' LOWRIE'S" is fully sustained in interest and power.

There are poems by R. H. Stoddard, "H. H.," Dr. Holland, Charles de Kay, R. W. Gilder, and Constantina E. Brooks.

In "Topics of the Time," Dr. Holland discusses "The Chinese in San Francisco," "The Moral Value of Physical Strength," and "The Disease of Mendicancy." "The Old Cabinet" is about "Charlotte Bronte," "Savage Life in the City," "American Authors and English Critics," "Pictures," and "Essipoff." "Home and Society" is given up to the third of the "Letters to a Young Mother." "Culture and Progress" has a new feature in a regular letter from London on "English Books." "The World's Work" and "Bric-a-Brac" are excellent, and the whole constitutes almost a model number of this unrivalled magazine.

15 MONTHS FOR $4.

To new subscribers who wish to get the opening chapter of "That Lass o' Lowrie's," we will send 15 numbers for $4, beginning with the magnificent Midsummer Holiday number (Aug. '76), and ending with Oct. '77. $4 a year; 35 cents a number. Postage prepaid.

SCRIBNER & Co., 743 Broadway, N. Y.

Ready for Christmas.

SUNSHINE IN THE SOUL. Poems
Selected by the editor of "Quiet Hours."

This is the third volume in the "Wisdom Series;" first volume, Selections from the Thoughts of M. Aurelius Antoninus; second volume, Selections from the Imitation of Christ. The three pocket volumes are neatly bound in cloth, red edges. Price, 50 cents each.

SAPPHO. A Tragedy in Five Acts.

By Franz Grillparzer. Translated by Ellen Frothingham. Square, 18mo. Cloth, red edges. Price, $1.

GOETHE'S WEST-EASTERLY DIVAN. Translated, with Introduction and Notes, by John Weiss. Square 18mo. Cloth, red edges. Price, $1.25.

Sold by all Booksellers, Mailed, postpaid, by the publishers,

ROBERTS BROTHERS, Boston.

New Publications.

Dr. Walker's Sermons.

REASON, FAITH AND DUTY. Sermons preached chiefly in the college chapel. By James Walker, late President of Harvard University. With a new portrait engraved on steel expressly for this work. Square 12mo. Price, $2.

"Although for the most part preached in the college chapel, these sermons are applicable to every kind of hearer, and even the noble one on 'The Young Man's Dream of Life,' which might seem to belong only there, from its title, rises above a mere college atmosphere, and may well do for its readers what it did for some who heard it, in altering and deepening their views of life and duty, forever."—Salem Gazette.

A BOOK OF POEMS. By John W. Chadwick. Price, $1.

A second edition of this deservedly popular work is just ready, the first having disappeared immediately. Sold by all booksellers. Mailed, postpaid, by the publishers.

ROBERTS BROTHERS.

READY DECEMBER 20:

MARTINEAU'S

Endeavors After the Christian Life.

A neat 12mo. volume of 460 pages, and sold at the low price of $1, with the usual discount of 20 per cent. to clergymen. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price.

The Christian Register says: "We are glad to learn that the Unitarian Association will soon publish a new edition of Martineau's 'Endeavors After the Christian Life,' an admirable volume which has been too long out of print. In 1866 Dr. Martineau revised this book, and was relieved and surprised to find how little it had been thrown out of tune by the altered pitch of thought and sentiment." "Appealing mainly to the simplest trusts and aspirations of the human heart, it is compensated for having nothing new upon its pages by having so much the less that is liable to grow old." We trust it will have a large sale in our country, thus blessing a new generation of fortunate and grateful readers."

American Unitarian Association,

7 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON, MASS.

NEARLY READY.

Hours of Thought on Sacred THINGS.

BY JAMES MARTINEAU.

ROBERTS BROTHERS, Boston.

Miscellaneous.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.

Established in 1837.

Superior Bells of Copper and Tin, mounted with the best Rotary Hangings, for Churches, Schools, Farms, Factories, Court-houses, Fire Alarms, Tower Clocks, etc. Fully Warranted. Illustrated Catalogue sent Free. VANDERBURG & TICE, 102 E. 3d St., Cincinnati.

SHEPHERD'S PATENT

DESK SLATE.

The most attractive, amusing and instructive article you can give to children. Parties buying for Sunday Schools should not fail to see it. For sale by all Stationers and Toy Dealers.

O. C. SHEPHERD, 176 and 178 Centre St., N. Y.

New Publications.

THE YEAR BOOK

OF THE

Unitarian Congregational CHURCHES FOR 1877.

With Calendar adapted for use throughout the country, and containing the usual amount of denominational information, will be published December 23.

Price 20 cents; for which a copy will be sent to any address, postage paid. Packages of ten or more, 15 cents a copy.

Members of the Association will receive a copy without charge.

American Unitarian Association,
7 TREMONT PLACE, BOSTON, MASS.

Holiday Music Books!

17 SPLENDID VOLUMES FOR PRESENTS.

Uniform in Style, Binding and Price, which is for each Book, in Boards, $2.50; in Cloth, $3.00; in Cloth, full Gilt, $4.00.

THE WORLD OF SONG

is the latest Volume of Bound Music, has 250 pages, full Sheet Music Size, and is filled with the best Songs and Duets of the day.

GEMS OF THE DANCE

is the latest Bound Volume of Instrumental Music, 232 pages, Full Sheet Music Size, filled with the best recent compositions of Strauss, Lemoine, Elko, Faust, and other is a companion to the famous "GENES OF STRAUSS."

Also, Vocal.

GEMS OF ENGLISH SONG,
GEMS OF SCOTTISH SONG,
GEMS OF GERMAN SONG,
WEALTH OF GEMS,
SHOWERS OF PEARLS,
OPERATIC PEARLS,

MOORE'S IRISH MELODIES,
SILVER WREATH,

Instrumental.

GENES OF STRAUSS,
HOME CIRCLE, VOL. I. & II.
PIANIST'S ALBUM,
PIANOFORTE GEMS.

Also the MUSICAL TREASURE, both Vocal and Instrumental, ORGAN AT HOME, for Reed Organs, and PIANO AT HOME, with Piano Duets.

Either book mailed, post free, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

C. H. DITSON & Co.,
711 Broadway,
New York.

J. E. DITSON & Co.,
Successors to Lee & Walker,
Philadelphia.

4 Months for a Dollar!

St. NICHOLAS for January, with its cheery greeting on the cover, its exquisitely beautiful frontispiece, the wonderful variety in its pages, and its

FUN FOR THE NEW YEAR,

Will charm everybody both old and young.

Among the more notable papers will be found a "Letter to a Young Naturalist," by William Howitt, the poet, and "The Stars for January," by Professor Proctor, the astronomer.

ST. NICHOLAS FOR JANUARY,

Will also contain a paper by Horace E. Scudder, "Great Grandfather's Books and Pictures," with fac simile reproductions from the "New England Primer" and Webster's old "Spelling-Book." "Budge's Visit to the Centennial," by the author of "Helen's Babies," and "The Modern and Medieval Ballad of Mary Jane," with silhouette drawings by Hopkins, will be found amusing and entertaining. Besides "HIS OWN MASTER," by Trowbridge,

There are Shorter Stories and Poems, Rhymes and Non-sense Verses, Historical Sketches, a Fairy Tale, Comical Pictures, Pages for Very Little Folks, &c., &c. In short, this is the NEW YEAR'S NUMBER of that magazine of which "The London Daily News" said, "We wish we could point to its equal in our own Periodical Literature."

Send one dollar for a trial subscription, beginning with the November number, and including the splendid Christmas Holiday number, with William Cullen Bryant's "Boys of My Boyhood," and the New Year's number, with William Howitt's "Letter to a Young Naturalist," and the February number, which will have

"A TALK WITH AMERICAN BOYS,"

By TOM HUGHES, that earnest, honest, strong-hearted Englishman, who is known all over the world as "the friend of the school-boy."

Subscriptions received by all booksellers. Sold by all news-dealers. $3.00 a year; 25 cents a number.

SCRIBNER & CO., 743 Broadway, N. Y.

"Choicest Literature of the Day."—N. Y. Tribune.

THE MOST EMINENT living authors, Prof. Max Muller, Prof. Tyndall, Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Dr. W. B. Carpenter, Professor Huxley, R. A. Proctor, Frances Power Cobbe, The Duke of Argyll, Jas. A. Froude, Mrs. Mulock, Mrs. Oliphant, Mrs. Alexander, Miss Thackeray, Jean Ingelow, George MacDonald, Wm. Black, Anthony Trollope, Matthew Arnold, Henry Kingsley, Francis Galton, W. W. Story, Aberbach, Ruskin, Carlyle, Tennyson, Browning and many others are represented in the pages of

Littell's Living Age.

Jan. 1, 1877, the LIVING AGE enters upon its 132d volume, with the continued commendation of the best men and journals of the country, and with constantly increasing success.

In 1877 it will furnish to its readers the productions of the foremost authors above named and many others; embracing the choicest Serial and Short Stories by the Leading Foreign Novelists, and an amount, Unapproached by any other Periodical in the world, of the most valuable literary and scientific matter of the day, from the pens of the leading Essayists, Scientists, Critics, Discoverers and Editors, representing every department of Knowledge and Progress.

The LIVING AGE (in which its only competitor, "Every Saturday," has been merged) is a weekly magazine of sixty-four pages, giving more than

THREE AND A QUARTER THOUSAND double-column octavo pages of reading-matter yearly. It presents in an inexpensive form, considering its amount of matter, with freshness, owing to its weekly issue, and with a satisfactory completeness attempted by no other publication, the best Essays, Reviews, Criticisms, Tales, Sketches of Travel and Discovery, Poetry, Scientific, Biographical, Historical and Political Information, from the entire body of Foreign Periodical Literature.

The importance of the LIVING AGE to every American reader as the only satisfactorily fresh and COMPLETE compilation of an indispensable current literature—indispensable because it embraces the productions of

THE ABLEST LIVING WRITERS, is sufficiently indicated by the following recent

Opinions:

"Simply indispensable to any one who desires to keep abreast of the thought of the age in any department of science or literature."—Boston Journal.

"A pure and perpetual reservoir and fountain of entertainment and instruction."—Hon. Robert C. Winthrop.

"The best periodical in America."—Theo. L. Cuyler, D.D.

"It has no equal in any country."—Philadelphia Press.

"In no other single publication can there be found so much of sterling literary excellence."—N. Y. Evening Post.

"It reproduces the best thoughts of the best minds of the civilized world upon all topics of living interest."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

"Incomparable in the richness, variety and sterling worth of its articles, and equal to several ordinary magazines in the amount of matter presented."—The Standard, Chicago.

"The best of all our eclectic publications."—The Nation, New York.

"And the cheapest. A monthly that comes every week."—The Advance, Chicago.

"With it alone a reader may fairly keep up with all that is important in the literature, history, politics and science of the day."—The Methodist, N. Y.

"The ablest essays, the most entertaining stories, the finest poetry of the English language, are here gathered together."—Illinois State Journal.

"It is the only compilation that presents with a satisfactory completeness, as well as freshness, a literature embracing the productions of the ablest writers living. It is, therefore, indispensable to every one who desires a thorough compendium of all that is admirable and noteworthy in the literary world."—Boston Post.

"Ought to find a place in every American home."—N. Y. Times.

Published weekly at $8 per year, free of postage.

EXTRA OFFER FOR 1877.

To all new subscribers for 1877 will be sent gratis the six numbers of 1876, containing, with other valuable matter, the first instalments of a new and powerful serial story, "The Marquis of Lossie," by GEO. MACDONALD, now appearing in the LIVING AGE from advance sheets.

Club Prices for the best Home and Foreign Literature. "Possessed of the LIVING AGE and one or other of our vivacious American monthlies, a subscriber will find himself in command of the whole situation."—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

For $10.50 THE LIVING AGE and either one of the American $4 Monthlies (or Harper's Weekly or Basar) will be sent for a year, both postpaid; or, for $9.50, the LIVING AGE and Scribner's St. Nicholas or Appleton's Journal.

Address LITTELL & GAY, Boston.

10 PER CENT. NET.

Kansas, Missouri and Iowa Improved Farm First Mortgage Coupon Bonds Guaranteed. We guarantee, as an assurance, that we loan not to exceed one-third of the actual value. In over six years' business never lost a dollar; never delayed a day on interest or principal; neither we nor our customers ever took an acre of land under foreclosure. Send for particulars and references, J. B. WATKINS & CO., LAWRENCE, KAN., or HENRY DICKINSON, Manager, 72 Cedar Street, New York.

OUT-SELLING IMMENSELY—THE Centennial Exposition.

DESCRIBED AND ILLUSTRATED.

The only complete, richly illustrated, low price work, 750 pages, only $2.50. Treats of the entire history, grand buildings, wonderful exhibits, curiosities, great days, etc. The best chance of 100 years to coin money fast, as everybody wants this work. 1,000 agents appointed first four weeks, 5,000 wanted. For full particulars address quickly, HUBBARD BROTHERS, Publishers, Philadelphia, Pa., Cincinnati, O., Chicago, Ill., or Springfield, Mass.

CAUTION.

Be not deceived by premature books assuming to be "official," etc.

EMPLOYMENT.

I want 1,000 agents to canvass for the COMPLETE HERBALIST and GROWING WORLD. I will give such terms and furnish such advertising facilities that no man need make less than $20 per month and all expenses—no matter whether he ever canvassed before or not. Address DR. O. PHELPS BROWN, 21 Grand Street, Jersey City, N. J., and full particulars will be sent by return mail.

TROY BELLS.

THE JONES & CO. Old Established Troy Bell Foundry continue to manufacture those superior Bells which have made Troy celebrated throughout the world. All Bells Warranted Satisfactory. Particular attention given to Church Bells, Chimes and Pells of Bells. Illustrated Catalogues sent free.

BLIMYER MFG CO
BELLS
CHURCH, SCHOOL, FIRE-ALARM
Fine toned, low priced, fully warranted. Catalogues giving full particulars, prices, etc., sent free.
BLIMYER MANUFACTURING CO.,
664 to 694 West Eighth St., Cincinnati, O.

MARVELOUS.
The success of agents with the magnificent new combination of THE ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY. Let no agent fail to send for particulars at once.
Address, CHAS. CLUGAS & CO.,
14 Warren St., New York, or
112 Monroe St., Chicago.

$55 to $77 a week to Agents. Samples FREE P. O. VICKERY, Augusta Maine.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine.

BABBITT'S TOILET SOAP.

Unrivalled for the toilet and the bath. No artificial and deceptive odors to cover common and deleterious ingredients. After years of scientific experiment the manufacturer of B. B. Babbitt's Best Soap has perfected and now offers to the public THE FINEST TOILET SOAP in the world.

Only the purest vegetable oils used in its manufacture. For Use in the Nursery It has No Equal. Worth ten times its cost to every mother and family in Christendom. Sample box containing 3 cakes of 6 ozs. each, sent free to any address on receipt of 75 cents. Address B. T. Babbitt, New York City.

PRINTING PRESSES FROM $10 TO $350
SEND 10 CTS TO
W. J. EDWARDS, 36 CHURCH ST. NEW YORK.

$12 a day at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine.

MISFIT CARPETS.

English Brussels, Three Ply and Ingrain; also, Stair Carpets, Velvet Rugs, Crumb Cloths, etc., very cheap, AT THE OLD PLACE.

112 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

Carpets carefully packed and sent to any part of the United States free of charge.

SEND FOR PRICE LIST.

J. A. BENDALL.

BROOKLYN ADVERTISEMENTS.

OVINGTON BROTHERS,

246, 248, 250 and 252 Fulton Street,

BROOKLYN.

Fine China and Glass,
Clocks and Bronzes.

MAJOLICA, FAIENCE, GIEN, TORQUAY AND WARES

Goods packed and shipped free of charge.

O'BRIEN & COMPANY,

IMPORTERS,

MANUFACTURERS and RETAILERS

of DRY GOODS,

CARPETS,

CLOTHING

141 and 143, 151 to 159 Atlantic Ave.

We solicit an inspection of our magnificent assortment in all our Departments—forty-one in number—conceded to be the largest, most varied and best selected ever exhibited in Brooklyn, with a stock in value amounting to over half a million dollars.

Joseph O'Brien & Co.,

141 and 143, 151 to 159 Atlantic Avenue.

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY

Manufacture those celebrated Bells for CHURCHES, ACADEMIES, &c. Price List and Circulars sent free. HENRY McSHANE & CO., BALTIMORE, MD.

The Toll Gate! Prize Picture sent free! An ingenious gem. 50 objects to find. Address, with stamp, E. C. Abbey, Buffalo, N. Y. 1491-ly

BALD HEADS

Can be covered with a piece exactly fitted to the Bald spot, so perfect, and with work so ingeniously contrived as to appear each hair just issuing from the skin, the hair being exactly of the same shade and texture as the growing hair; they are so perfect they cannot be detected. Made only at BATCHELOR'S Celebrated Wig Factory, 16 Bond Street, N. Y.

HAIR DYE.

BATCHELOR'S CELEBRATED HAIR DYE is splendid. It never fails. The only true and perfect dye. Harmless, reliable, instantaneous. No disappointment, no ridiculous tints; remedies the ill effects of bad dyes, leaves the hair soft and beautiful Black or Brown. Sold and properly applied at BATCHELOR'S Wig Factory, 16 Bond St., N. Y. Sold by all druggists.

W. A. Batchelor's Curative Ointment

Immediately cures Ring-Worm, Tetter, Itching of the Head, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Face or Body.

W. A. Batchelor's Alaska Seal Oil

for the Hair. The best Hair Oil in use.

W. A. Batchelor's Dentifrice

for beautifying and preserving the teeth and Gums and deodorizing the breath.

W. A. Batchelor's New Cosmétique

Black or Brown, for tinting the Hair, Whiskers or Moustaches without greasing them. Sold at Factory, 16 Bond Street, New York, and by all druggists. Ask for them.

HANOVER FIRE INSURANCE CO., NO. 120 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Forty-seventh Semi-Annual Statement.

JANUARY 1, 1876.

Cash Capital.....	$500,000 00
Reinsurance Fund.....	587,717 75
Outstanding Liabilities.....	112,298 14
Net Surplus.....	392,759 20
	$1,592,775 09
ASSETS.
Cash in Bank and Office.....	$102,756 92
United States Six Per Cent. Bonds.....	596,037 50
Bonds and Mortgages, being first lien on improved Real Estate in the Cities of New York and Brooklyn.....	326,025 00
Loans on Call (Market Value of Securities, ties, $136,790).....	114,850 00
City and County Bonds.....	230,265 00
Bank and Trust Co. Stocks.....	41,650 00
First Mort. R. R. Bonds and Stocks.....	57,250 00
Balance in hands of Agents and Uncollected Office Premiums.....	99,163 56
Accrued Interest on Bonds and Mortgages and Call Loans.....	7,067 22
Real Estate.....	17,109 49
	$1,592,775 09

BENJ. S. WALCOTT, President.
I. REMSEN LANE, Secretary.

This standard article is compounded with the greatest care.

Its effects are as wonderful and as satisfactory as ever.

It restores gray or faded hair to its youthful color.

It removes all eruptions, itching and dandruff. It gives the head a cooling, soothing sensation of great comfort, and the scalp by its use becomes white and clean.

By its tonic properties it restores the capillary glands to their normal vigor, preventing baldness, and making the hair grow thick and strong.

As a dressing, nothing has been found so effectual or desirable.

A. A. Hayes, M.D., State Assayer of Massachusetts, says, "The constituents are pure, and carefully selected for excellent quality; and I consider it the BEST PREPARATION for its intended purposes."

Price, One Dollar.

Buckingham's Dye FOR THE WHISKERS.

This elegant preparation may be relied on to change the color of the beard from gray or any other undesirable shade, to brown or black, at discretion. It is easily applied, being in one preparation, and quickly and effectually produces a permanent color, which will neither rub nor wash off.

Manufactured by R. P. HALL & CO.,

NASHUA, N.H.

Sold by all Druggists, and Dealers in Medicines.

LAMAR INSURANCE COMPANY, OF NEW YORK. Broadway, cor. John Street. Capital, - - $200,000.

ASSETS, JANUARY 1, 1876.

Cash on hand and in Bank.....	$13,269 20
U. S. Bonds, market value.....	804,220 00
Loans on Call, Good Stocks Collateral.....	1,000 00
Bonds and Mortgages on Brick Dwellings.....	58,900 00
Bills Receivable for Inland Prem's.....	1,820 65
Premiums in course of collection.....	7,394 70
New York Bank Stocks market value.....	$1,487 60
	$408,092 05

Losses unadjusted estimated at $14,300 56

ISAAC R. ST. JOHN, President.
A. E. FROTHINGHAM, Vice Pres't.
WM. B. MACDIARMID, Sec'y.

HOME Insurance Co. of New York, Office No. 135 Broadway.

Forty-sixth Semi-Annual Statement, Showing the condition of the Company on the first day of July, 1876.

Cash Capital.....	$3,000,000 00
Reserve for Re-Insurance.....	1,845,521 47
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Dividends.....	247,326 66
Net Surplus.....	958,868 71
Total Assets - - -	$6,051,716 84

SUMMARY OF ASSETS:

CASH IN BANKS.....	$426,946 71
BONDS AND MORTGAGES, BEING FIRST LIEN ON REAL ESTATE WORTH $4,830,000.....	1,922,738 01
UNITED STATES STOCKS (MARKET VALUE).....	2,642,125 00
BANK STOCKS (MARKET VALUE).....	287,457 50
STATE AND CITY BONDS (MARKET VALUE).....	69,230 00
LOANS ON STOCKS, PAYABLE ON DEMAND (MARKET VALUE OF SECURITIES, $547,050).....	423,650 00
INTEREST DUE ON 1st JULY 1876.....	73,694 53
BALANCE IN HAND OF AGENTS.....	191,157 19
BILLS RECEIVABLE.....	10,833 34
PREMIUMS DUE AND UNCOLLECTED ON POLICIES ISSUED AT THIS OFFICE.....	13,694 56

Total - - - - $6,051,716 84

LIABILITIES.

CLAIMS FOR LOSSES OUTSTANDING ON 1st JULY 1876.....	$245,926 63
DIVIDENDS UNPAID.....	1,400 00
Total, - - - -	$247,326 66

CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.
A. F. WILLMARTH, Vice-Pres't.
D. A. HEALD, 2d Vice-Pres't.
J. H. WASHBURN, Secretary.

T. B. GREENE, } Ass't Secretaries.
C. K. FRANCIS, }

A Dividend of FIVE per cent. has been declared, payable on and after Tuesday, the 18th of July.
New York, 14th July, 1876.

THE NEW JERSEY MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO., NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.

J. H. STEDWELL, President.
O. H. BRINKERHOFF, Secretary.
J. H. CANNIFF, Cashier.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved ($2.00) Receipt Book." Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. BRINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

ATLANTIC MUTUAL INSURANCE CO NEW YORK, OFFICE 51 WALL ST.

ORGANIZED 2.

INSURES AGAINST MARINE AND INLAND NAVIGATION RISKS.

And will issue Policies making Loss payable in England.

Its Assets for the Security of its Policies are more than

TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured, and are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated during the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearing interest until redeemed.

JOHN D. JONES, President.
CHARLES DENNIS, Vice-President.
W. H. H. MOORE, 2d Vice-President.
A. A. RAYEN, 3d Vice-President.
J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

PHENIX INSURANCE COMPANY, OF BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Capital..... $1,000,000 00
Cash Assets, Jan. 1, 1876..... 2,549,958 77

OFFICES:

Western Union Telegraph Building, BROADWAY, Cor. DEX ST., New York.

Brooklyn Office..... 12 & 14 Court St.
Brooklyn E. D. Office..... 98 Broadway.

The benefits to be derived by the public from Insurance against loss by fire are so great and numerous, when compared with its trifling cost, as to render it an imperative duty on every one to avail themselves of the protection afforded by the PHENIX INSURANCE COMPANY against the destructive ravages of FIRE, which in a few moments may lay waste the fruits of a whole life of industry.

STEPHEN CROWELL, President.
PHILANDER SHAW, Vice President.
WILLIAM E. CROWELL, Secretary.
ESTABLISHED A. D. 1850.

THE MANHATTAN LIFE INSURANCE CO., OF NEW YORK,

has paid $6,500,000 Death Claims; has paid $4,500,000 return premiums to Policy-holders; has a surplus of more than $1,600,000 over Liabilities; and a ratio of $120 Assets for every $100 Liabilities, by New York Standard of Valuation. It gives the best Insurance on the best lives at the most favorable rates.

EXAMINE THE PLANS AND RATES OF THIS COMPANY.

HENRY STOKES, C. Y. WEMPLE,
President. Vice-President.
J. L. HALSEY, S. N. STEBBINS,
Secretary. Actuary.
H. Y. WEMPLE, } Assistant Secretaries.
H. B. STOKES }

TEAS AND COFFEES

AT WHOLESALE PRICES.
In lots to suit customers. SPECIAL TERMS TO CLUB ORGANIZERS and those who devote whole or part of time in selling our goods. Send for new Price List.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY,
(P. O. Box 5645), Nos. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

New Publications.

OSGOOD'S NEW BOOKS.

THE SKELETON IN ARMOR.

By H. W. LONGFELLOW. Superbly illustrated by MARY A. HALLOCK and other artists. Beautifully bound, $5.00.
"For a Holiday Present, or for a keepsake for a friend or sweetheart, it is the exact thing that a refined taste would choose."
 —N. Y. Christian Intelligencer.

CHOICE HELIOTYPE BOOKS.

Each containing 24 full-page Heliotype, with descriptive letter-press. Large 4to. Tastefully bound. Price of each $10.00.

GEMS of the DRESDEN GALLERY.

GEMS of the GRAY COLLECTION.

THE TITIAN GALLERY.

GALLERY OF GREAT ARTISTS.

"Elegant gift books for the holiday season, having a superior and permanent value. Either of the four is a book that any person may rejoice to own, and the four together, costing less than an indifferent painting, constitute a collection of examples of the highest achievement in art which not long ago few could hope to possess without lavish expenditure."—Boston Advertiser.

ILLUSTRATED POETS.

LONGFELLOW, WHITTIER,
 LOWELL, TENNYSON,
 MEREDITH, SONGS OF THREE CENTURIES.

Finely illustrated, beautifully bound. $5.00 each.
 $3—Tasteful Gift Books.

"LITTLE CLASSIC" EMERSON.

Complete in 9 pretty volumes. $1.50 each. In box $13.50. $3—A noble gift.

"LITTLE CLASSIC" HAWTHORNE.

Complete in 22 tasteful volumes, each with new Vignette. $1.25 a volume. Set in box $28.75. $3—A royal Gift.

HOLIDAY LONGFELLOW.

LONGFELLOW'S Poems, with nearly 300 illustrations by the most famous American and European artists. 8vo. Finely bound, $10.

*For sale by all Booksellers. Sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, by the Publishers.

JAMES R. OSGOOD & CO., Boston.

Business Established in 1835.

BOERICKE & TAFEL,

HOMŒOPATHIC

PHARMACY and MEDICAL PUBLISHING HOUSE,
 New York: 145 Grand Street. Philadelphia: 635 Arch St. and 125 South 11th St. Baltimore: 135 West Fayette St. San Francisco: 234 Sutter St.

Keep constantly on hand a full supply of Homœopathic Family Medicine Cases and Books giving plain directions for their use. Send stamp for Catalogue giving description and prices of the various styles and sizes.
 N. B.—BOERICKE & TAFEL received the only Centennial Prize Medal awarded at the Philadelphia Exposition for excellency of Homœopathic Pharmaceutical Preparations and Fine Exhibit.

WOOD & DAVIS,

BANKERS.

31 PINE STREET, NEW YORK.

GOVERNMENT BONDS, STATE, MUNICIPAL, RAILROAD SECURITIES and GOLD BOUGHT AND SOLD ON COMMISSION.
 C. D. WOOD. S. D. DAVIS.

Magic Lanterns and Stereopticons

FOR

PARLOR AND EXHIBITION USE.

A fine assortment of Lantern Views from all countries and upon all subjects.

MICROSCOPES AND MICROSCOPIC OBJECTS,

AND EVERY VARIETY OF SCIENTIFIC AND OPTICAL GOODS.

Send for Catalogue.

JESSE S. CHEYNEY,

(Successor in Department of Scientific Instruments to JAMES W. QUEEN & Co.),

1 & 3 BOND STREET, New York.

THREE AWARDS

TO

REED & BARTON,

686 BROADWAY, New York,

FOR

Silver-Plated Goods

AT

Centennial Exposition, Philadelphia.

Extract from Judges' Report:

"An extensive display of Silver-Plated Goods, including all varieties of Household Table-Ware.

"Their Hollow Ware, plated upon White Metal, is of high excellence, with designs in good taste and quality and finish of superior character."

"Their many patterns of Knives, Forks and Spoons are of great excellence."

"Their Historical Vase,

"PROGRESS,"

illustrating phases of the XVth and XIXth Centuries, an original and elaborate composition of striking character and praiseworthy excellence, both in design and execution."

Reed & Barton have been awarded the First Premiums for their wares wherever exhibited, in America and foreign countries, including the World's Fair, New York, 1853.

International Exposition, Chili, S. A., 1875.

SALESROOMS, 686 Broadway, N. Y.

STEARNS & BEALE,

STATIONERS,

BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS,

PRINTING and LITHOGRAPHY,

147 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

(Between Broadway and Nassau Street.)

JOEL W. STEARNS.

WM. P. BEALE.

Messrs. Little, Brown & Co.

have in preparation, uniform with Dr. Smith's Dictionaries

A DICTIONARY OF CHRISTIAN

BIOGRAPHY, LITERATURE, SECTS AND DOCTRINES.

From the Time of the Apostles to the Age of Charlemagne. By Various Writers. Edited by Wm. Smith, D.C.L. and Rev. Prof. Wace, M.A. To be completed in 3 vols.

This work is designed to give a comprehensive account of the Personal, the Literary, the Dogmatic and the Ecclesiastical Life of the Church during the first eight centuries of Christianity, and, in combination with the Dictionary of Christian Antiquities recently published, it will afford, it is believed, the most complete collection of materials for the Church History of that period which has yet been published, either in England or abroad. It is mainly Biographical; and, without claiming to afford a complete onomasticon of the Christian world, an endeavor has been made to render available for practical use all the materials furnished in the great standard books of reference on this subject, such as Tillemont, Baronius and Ceillier. The writings of the Fathers have, at the same time, been independently studied; and the latest results of modern inquiry taken into consideration. Among the writers, in addition to other well-known divines and historians, are some of the most distinguished authorities at our universities, such as Professors Lightfoot, Westcott, Swainson and Cowell, of Cambridge, Professors Bright and Stubbs of Oxford, and Prof. Salmon of Dublin, while foreign and American scholars have also co-operated in the work. Special and minute attention has also been paid to the Church History of England, Scotland and Ireland; and this branch of the subject has, it is hoped, been worked out with a thoroughness never before attempted.

Mr. Chadwick's Poems.—

A BOOK OF POEMS.

By JOHN W. CHADWICK.

One handsome volume, cloth, gilt, red edges.

Price, $1.00.

"Those who believe in a variety of Christmas gifts, adapted to the needs and tastes of unlike recipients, usually have a pet offering which will surely be acceptable to many friends of kindred spirit. Sometimes they may be perplexed to decide concerning the favorite book, but this year they may well set their hearts at once upon circulating a little volume entitled 'A Book of Poems by John W. Chadwick.' * * * There is nothing light and trifling; there are no attempts at wit; few flavorings of humor; but there is a certain charm even in the prevailing seriousness. They are not sombre or monotonous, but only uniformly earnest in loyalty to what is deep and true and real. Some other modern poems may be more admired and praised; few will be so gratefully remembered or so fondly loved."—Christian Register, Boston.

Sold by all Booksellers, Mailed postpaid by the Publishers,

ROBERTS BROTHERS, Boston.

Books that every Unitarian SHOULD READ.

DR. DEWEY'S NEW BOOK.

THE TWO GREAT COMMANDMENTS.

SERMONS BY REV. ORVILLE DEWEY, D.D. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

ORTHODOXY AND REVIVALISM. Sermons by REV. J. T. SUNDERLAND, of Chicago. 12mo, Cloth, $1.50.

Mailed, postage paid, on receipt of price.

JAMES MILLER, Publisher,

647 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

New Works by Prof. F. Hildekofer:—

Now Ready.

JUDAISM AT ROME, B. C. 76, to A.D. 140.

By DR. FREDERIC HILDEKOEFER (President Meadville University, Pa.) 12mo, Cloth, $2.25.

THE BELIEF OF THE FIRST THREE

CENTURIES CONCERNING CHRIST'S MISSION TO THE UNDERWORLD. By Dr. FREDERIC HILDEKOEFER. 12mo, Cloth, $1.00.

Sent, post-paid, on receipt of price.

JAMES MILLER, Publisher,

647 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

1877. POSTPAID. $1.60.

THE NURSERY; A Monthly

MAGAZINE FOR YOUNGEST READERS. SUPERBLY ILLUSTRATED. Send ten cents for a Sample Number and Premium List.

JOHN L. SHOREY,

36 Bromfield Street, Boston.

THE INQUIRER.

VOL. XXXII.—NO. 4.
WHOLE NO., 1574.

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 28, 1876.

$3.00 PER ANNUM.
8 CENTS A COPY.

CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL NOTES.....	61
LEADING ARTICLES:
The Eastern Question.....	62
The Living Past.....	63
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE:
From England.....	64
From Boston.....	65
LITERARY REVIEWS:
A New Hymn Book.....	66
Student Life at Harvard.....	68
Epochs of Ancient History.....	69
Minor Notices.....	69
ART AND SCIENCE:
The Relation of Laymen to Science.....	69
Art Notes.....	71
HEARTH AND HOME:
The Grandfather's Blessing.....	71
Forefathers' Day.....	72
Winter.....	73
OUR BOYS AND GIRLS:
Eighteen Seventy-Seven.....	74
The White Lady.....	74
OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE:
The Wisconsin Conference.....	76
From Chicago.....	77
JOTTINGS.....	77
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT.....	78

GEORGE M. BEARD, Henry W. Bellows, William M. Bicknell, John W. Chadwick, George W. Cooke, E. P. Powell, C. C. Shackford, Henry M. Simmons and S. Alfred Steintal are among the contributors to this number of THE INQUIRER.

THE holidays, with their good cheer and good wishes, with happy, smiling faces among old and young—the holidays are here, and they bring these things now as ever, notwithstanding political entanglement and business depression, public embarrassment and individual uncertainty. Here and now, as everywhere and always, the bonds of union are stronger than the tendency to separate, and the everlasting claims its ascendancy, despite the self-assertion of the partial and transient, and each draws a little nearer toward consciously keeping time with the rhythmic throb which in the last analysis beats through all that is. In the hope and with undoubting faith that very slowly, little by little, inch by inch, the world draws nearer to the light, we look forward with a steady and confident gaze, and wish for all our readers "A Happy New Year."

WE witnessed a private experiment at Wallack's Theatre on Wednesday last of the power of a solution of tungsten, soda and silica, applied to scenery, whether canvas or wood, for the purpose of rendering it unflammable. A heavy jet of flaming gas directed for some seconds upon a piece of canvas or rope or wood thus prepared failed to fire it, and when at last it charred it by a few minutes' steady application, the fire had no tendency to spread, but simply burned a harmless hole through the substance. This anti-phlogistic has long been known and used. It is cheap, unpatented and of easy application. A hundred dollars would pay the whole cost of making Wallack's Theatre secure against fire from any such cause as accidental interior draughts or catching from necessary lights or carelessness of performers and servants behind the scenes. Among the precautions within easy reach, this certainly should be made compulsory.

MR. HEWITT seems to have lost his wits latterly, and goes tearing around quite after the fashion of the traditional bull in the china shop. His last rush at the New York Post Office is one of the most spasmodic and ill-considered that he has made. Certainly the inviolability of the mails cannot be too carefully guarded, and the slightest breath of suspicion should be sifted through such a mesh as would intercept the most infinitesimal atom of fact. But the reputation of Postmaster James, among all New Yorkers, is such as to make a sputter like that of Mr. Hewitt decidedly dangerous to the sputterer, and the gentleman's management of the case, supposing his suspicion to have been either well or ill founded, has been about as ill advised as any that it is possible to conceive of as possible to a full-grown man.

Our statement last week relative to the appointment of the House section of the joint committee on the electoral count was somewhat premature. The appointments have since been made in both branches of Congress, those on the part of the Senate being really more fairly representative, and on the whole more satisfactory, than those on the part of the House. Little actual progress has since been made either in Washington or by the committees acting in the South. Meantime the fiery Northern editors, whose voices were still for war—between some other people—seem to have been somewhat appeased by the voice of the turkey which has been heard in our land, and we breathe a little more freely. President Grant favors the redoubtable Logan for senator from Illinois, and also, they say, brother-in-law Casey for senator from Louisiana. The Inter-oceanic canal project re-appears in a report from a commission appointed by the President several months ago, the report favoring the Nicaragua route at a supposed cost of one hundred millions—probably an under-estimate.

THE price of gold has varied very little since our last issue, the range having been only about $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent., and the rate at the close 107 $\frac{1}{4}$. Silver has been lower again, and fluctuates rapidly. We subjoin a table from the London Economist showing the range, month by month, since the first of the year:

In January.....	between..	56 $\frac{1}{2}$	@	54 $\frac{1}{2}$
In February.....	..	54 $\frac{1}{2}$	@	53
In March.....	..	54 $\frac{1}{2}$	@	53 $\frac{1}{2}$
In April.....	..	54	@	52
In May.....	..	54	@	52
In June.....	..	52	@	50
In July.....	..	51 $\frac{1}{2}$	@	49 $\frac{1}{2}$
In August.....	..	53 $\frac{1}{2}$	@	50
In September.....	..	52 9-16	@	51 $\frac{1}{2}$
In October.....	..	53 $\frac{1}{2}$	@	52
In November.....	..	55	@	53 $\frac{1}{2}$

During December the price has risen as high as 58 and fallen as low as 56. This freedom of movement one would suppose sufficient to gratify the most fastidious admirer of an unstable currency. The rate for call loans on Wall street remains about as before, from 5 to 7 per cent. A fairly active holiday business has been transacted, the general impression being that the sales have been as numerous, but for smaller amounts, than for the years immediately preceding. Transactions through the banks, &c., do not indicate any great falling off in the amount of general business transacted as compared with former years, notwithstanding which the complaints of utter stagnation continue about as frequent as heretofore.

THE situation at the Golden Horn is again extremely critical, if we can place any reliance upon late dispatches, which state that "reports are current that the Turkish Council of Ministers decided yesterday to reject the proposals, and that in the event of war the Porte will arm its Armenian, Greek, Bulgarian and Christian subjects." And under date of 26th, "The Marquis of Salisbury will demand to-day from the Sultan his acceptance of the proposals agreed upon by the Powers. Should the Sultan refuse, Lord Salisbury is instructed to leave Constantinople and order the British fleet to quit Turkish waters." It is not unlikely, however, that these dispatches are at least premature, and that a good deal more talk will take place before such a crisis is reached. Nevertheless the new Turkish Premier is reported to have said to the English Ambassador that the Turks came into Europe few in number, and likewise few in number would they leave it; and there is no doubt that such a saying, true or false as reported, indicates the feeling of many of the followers of Islam, and that such are not disposed to be pushed much further without taking a stand.

Meantime the new Constitution has been proclaimed in Constantinople, and Turkey has nominally ranged herself alongside the Western Powers as a constitutional state. All individuals are declared equal before the laws, primary education is made compulsory, legal proceedings are to be public, confiscation, statute labor, torture and inquisition are prohibited, and all sorts of good things are promised. "Great is Allah! and Mohammed is his prophet!"

It would seem that all good citizens who are not totally befogged by partisanship must be of one mind about the contest now going on between the House of Representatives and the Western Union Telegraph Company. Had not General Butler been allowed to root at will in times past, Republicans of the most orthodox connections might be a little more free to criticize without feeling internal twinges than they can now be, and probably the present contest would never have arisen. Nevertheless it has been long known that the question whose ox was gored was an important one to be considered in making up one's mind, and that frequent conversions result from a sudden realization of the force of that homely proverb. If it is possible that the law will actually stand the infamous construction placed upon it by the House, there are certainly few people who will not applaud the determination of the Directors of the Western Union to institute speedy cremation, except where specific request shall be made to the contrary, in application of the principle that dead men tell no tales.

There is little of privacy now left in the lives of any of us, and that little seems destined to grow smaller yet. Is there no sanctity beyond the reach of the professional partisan? That it is eminently desirable that we should know that other professional partisans have not been stimulating fraud, we are free to admit and roundly declare. But there are some very desirable things which may yet cost much too high a price for an economical people. Let us not lose sight of the fact, either in this matter or in the question—who shall be President?—that there is a day after to-day, and that there are lasting rights of more importance than temporary advantages.

We trust that many of our subscribers will carefully read the able and instructive annual report of Secretary L. M. Morrill to the House of Representatives. It is an admirably clear and upright and downright document. He explains some of the alleged discrepancies in the account which last year brought very serious attacks upon the book-keeping of the department, by showing that they are only apparent, and due to a necessary method of reckoning from different dates in different statements which seem to cover the same returns, but do not. It is pleasant to know that the National debt has been reduced since its highest point, Aug. 31, 1865, $656,992,226.44. It is now $2,009,000,000. This is a greater reduction than the law required. The sinking-fund account was expected to yield only 433,000,000; the reduction effected is 223,000,000 more. This is certainly hopeful. Twenty years at this rate and by the present process would extinguish the whole debt, an enormous relief to our federal taxes. The Secretary is very emphatic in his demand for no flinching from the return to specie payments in 1879. He thinks it entirely within the power of the Government to resume, by a reasonable sale of our bonds, which are now five per cent. above par in foreign countries. He is just as clear, although not quite as positive, about the law that gold and not silver is the measure of value, and that we are morally bound to pay our debt wholly in gold. The trade dollar is almost wholly out of use, though still coined in small quantities. The demand for silver change still employs the utmost activity of the mint, but the pressure is no longer beyond its power. The paper postal currency is almost done with, as all must have practically discovered. The exports exceeded the imports by $79,643,481, against an excess of imports of over $19,000,000 last year, a gain of $120,000,000 including merchandise and precious metals. Imports of merchandise have decreased over $72,000,000 this year and about $30,000,000 last year, as compared with 1874. This is certainly encouraging.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

THE all-absorbing interest of our home politics diminishes the attention given to the Eastern question, which is now commanding such notice in Europe. It is very observable that religion has no such political importance in America as it has abroad. It is common to assume, indeed, that religion originated and controlled our national origin, but it did so in no such sense as that in which it has produced and governed the nations or races that are now, with religious impulses on both sides, threatening to drive all Europe to arms. Probably religion never dominated any people in all history—not even the Jews—as it did and does still the Mohammedans. In all countries where their faith prevails it is a political constitution as much as a religious creed. A religious war is the most natural field for national activity in any Mohammedan country, and those who leave this out of account misunderstand the origin and danger of the Turk's readiness to encounter great odds, with small chances of success, in carrying out the strongest passion of his heart. But if religious fanaticism inspires him, it is our duty to acknowledge that Christian fanaticism, of a kind we have happily lost all sense of, burns in the souls of all the Greek church, whether in Greece itself or in the Christian provinces in Turkey and in Russia. Greece, the original birthplace of Christian literature and the country that first made Christians anything more than a Jewish sect, has never lost its heroic and passionate if somewhat blind love of the Christian religion. It hugs its old creeds and symbols and usages, and is always ready to fight for the faith. Mohammedan tyranny and bigotry have aroused in Greece and all her children in faith a bigotry of their own, Christian in name and form, and not without the nobility of self-sacrifice and intense conviction. This feeling, by inheritance and natural growth, exists in Russia to an extent apparently uncontrollable by the government.

While we are thinking the difficulties of the Eastern question chiefly diplomatic and political, the real truth is they are chiefly religious—the difficulties of preventing neighboring peoples who cordially hate each other, backed by great powers that are in sympathy with their hatred, from going into wars of race and oppugnant faiths. It looks at present as if diplomacy might avert the war that threatens. But we are not confident that it will. And if it must come, it will be a long and desperate one and spread far and be fatal to millions. We must say that we are not so purged from all preferences of a theological kind, as not to have distinctly Christian sympathies in this matter. If the Turks are a finer race than the modern Greeks, as some think, they have only so much the more power to spread their faith, which is in its nature intolerant, insolent, depressing to womanhood, and incapable of favoring political freedom. It might be better for the children of the Greek church, even with Russia for their chief, to drive the Turks out of Europe and give Mohammedanism a final exit from European territory, than for one more Christian to be slaughtered in the unhappy provinces that have lately rebelled.

If war cannot be prevented and Russia restrained in her rising religious feelings, it will be at least some satisfaction to be able to hope and believe that one fanaticism may conquer another of a much more hateful character. We shall deplore war; for religious wars, especially between the Crescent and the Cross, have ever been bloody and terrible; but we are not sure that the time has not come for removing that fearful fatalistic faith out of the world's way, particularly out of the path of Christian civilization. The Greek church owes more than it knows in zeal and vigor, and in superstition too, to this enemy that has always been on its flanks. We cannot but think that Western Christianity ought to desire that the Greek church, by being relieved from its Mohammedan foe, may have a chance of dropping some of its hostility to Western ideas and feelings. We have never seen any reason to think the Greek church even as enlightened as the Roman. In some of its theological traditions we believe it nearer the truth; but what can the torch of truth do in the hands of blind men?

Long flirting with the Greek church must make a somewhat divided feeling in the English hierarchy at present in regard to Russian prospects. As politicians, they must dread Russia's advance upon the Dardanelles; as religionists, they must desire it. But, happily, England is not governed by priests. And America is still more fortunate in her freedom from religious hatreds or their mixture with her politics. The only fears we ever had from Catholic fanaticism are clearly much allayed. The Catholic church has either grown wiser or more prudent. She disclaims any desire to meddle with our political creeds, and in this sets an example that our Protestant tinkers with the Constitution might well follow. By the time they get God "enacted" into the Constitution, the Catholics may want to "enact" the Virgin "in." But at present both are quiet.

THE LIVING PAST.

It so happens that the word survival is a favorite one with two of our most eminent investigators of natural phenomena and human life. Mr. Darwin patiently argues, if he does not triumphantly prove, that natural selection and the survival of the fittest are related to each other as cause and effect. Mr. Tylor has, with equal patience, in his history of primitive culture, described a survival of quite another sort, and furnished us with the most copious illustrations. His survival—"survival in culture," as he calls it—is the survival of forms of speech and action in a higher stage of civilization that have originated in a lower. And it is astonishing what a cabinet of curiosities he is able to unlock with just this simple key. Our daily speech preserves innumerable fossil customs, just as the rocks preserve the fossil forms of animals. We are continually saying and doing things which are unconscious reminiscences of laws and customs which lost all vital relation to society hundreds and thousands of years ago. Some people are always talking about signs. It is a good sign to do this, and a bad sign to do that. Now, there is not one of these signs which has not a venerable ancestry. Time was when they were no laughing matter, but as real and terrible as life and death. Our children's games, our nursery rhymes, and so on, are an inheritance from the remotest ancestors. A great deal of this survival is like the survival of rudimentary organs among animals. These rudimentary organs, which now perform no function whatever, and are sometimes a positive hindrance, were once vital and essential factors in the general organism. But they are so no longer. Here, then, we have an exception to the rule that the fashion of this world passeth away. It does generally, but not always. Sometimes it lags superfluous on the stage for generations and for centuries.

But this survival is the exception. The survival of Darwin, the survival of the fittest, is the rule, and not only in the limited sphere in which he cared to apply it, but in the wider sphere of universal human history. "History," says Dr. Bartol, "is God's revelation of what He cares for; and the hope of the race shines and shoots forth from the low and bad customs it has outlived and left behind—idolatry, witchcraft, feudalism, the Inquisition, and arbitrary rule. . . . The noble affections of human nature, quietly persisting, demonstrate their right, their destiny to survive the depraved ones, with all their noise."

"The evil that men do lives after them;
The good is oft interred with their bones."

Not oftener than the evil; not so often, either, in the way of recollection, as Marc Antony meant, or in the way of persistent influence. It is good, and not evil, that is the knot-grass which it is impossible to root out of the garden of life.

Once war was universal and perpetual upon the earth, but it is so no longer. Once robbery was the only method of acquiring property. Thieving, as distinct from robbery, was a disgrace, but labor a worse one. Now the robbers are pretty nigh extinct, and though the thieves are still numerous, thieving is not respectable, and industry alone is honored. Once polygamy and polyandry were the order of the day; now we are in a fair way to make the former criminal in Salt Lake City. Yes, the survival of the fittest is the rule. See how the poor books and poems and laws become obsolete; how the good ones live a perennial life. Never fear for Shakespeare and Homer, for Plato and Epictetus, for the apostles and evangelists and prophets. "The animosities are mortal," said Christopher North, "but the humanities live forever."

The dead past is a favorite theme with orators and poets.

"Let the dead past bury its dead" sings Longfellow, and does not sing amiss. But if there is one thought that modern science is pressing home upon the imagination and the heart of man more powerfully than any other, it is that there is a living past, which calls for our profoundest admiration, gratitude and awe. There is a living past, we say, not merely there was once a living past. This no one fails to perceive, except it be some narrow-minded bigot of progress as intolerable as was even any bigot of superstition. But not only was there once a living past, a past of living men and living thoughts and living energies and hopes and sanctities, but even now there is a living past here in the midst of us, and many of us know it not. No wonder; for its august shape is covered with a veil woven from out the air and sunlight of to-day. The living Past—it is the Present. The Present is the living Past. No figure this of rhetoric or poetry, but sober, scientific truth. Had the past been an iota different from what it has been, the present would not be what it is. It is so with the universe; it is so with our individual lives. Well might Shakspeare say, "What a piece of work is man!" To think what marvellous epitomes we are of all the days that have delighted us, of all the influences that have affected us! They are not dead, but sleeping, we can say of an infinite variety of past experiences, and at the least touch of that finger which we call the association of ideas they laugh out in their sleep, or wake up and greet us with the look so long unseen, the tones so long unheard. The geologist tells us that coal is so much buried sunlight—sunlight that was organized in the leaf and wood of ancient forests, and that the process of combustion is but the liberation of the sunlight, the awakening of the sleeping beauty. So in our hearts and brains is the buried sunlight of old days, their joy and sweetness, and it flashes out again in our present speech and action. So in the brain and heart of universal man are stowed away the joys and sorrows, the heroisms and fidelities, the aspirations and achievements of innumerable ancestors. What a world of new and higher meaning the perception of these laws gives to that phrase of the apostle, "Christ formed in you in the hope of glory." This is the living Christ—he that is living now. How good it is to read there in the New Testament of him who gave "good gifts to men," gifts that make all our Christmas giving seem so poor and slight! But if that record of him could be forever obliterated, and the name and fame of him forever blotted from the thoughts and memories of men, his life is so built into ours that he would still be almost as great a power as ever, working in us unconsciously, but working mightily; and just as true as ever would be this tribute of Carlyle to his perennial influence: "He walked in Judea eighteen hundred years ago; his sphere-melody, flowing in wild, native tones, took captive the ravished souls of men, and, being of a truth sphere-melody, still flows and sounds, though now with thousand-fold accompaniments and rich symphonies, through all our hearts, and modulates and divinely leads us."

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM ENGLAND.

THE most prominent event of the past week has undoubtedly been the National Conference which was held on Friday last in the St. James' Hall, London, to discuss the policy of England in the Eastern Question. In these days of telegraphic communication your readers will no doubt have just as much information as we have here, or at least as much as they want about the feeling of the country, on the important question whether England is to go to war in defense of Turkey, or to throw her weight in the scale of Russia to secure for the Christian population of the Turkish provinces the common rights which make life, we will not say pleasant, but endurable. If we had any doubt as to the way the liberal thought of the country were going, last Friday's meeting would have decided us. Never since the most active period of the great Anti-Corn-Law days, if even then, has such a gathering been seen under one roof, and certainly at no time has there been such a list of names published as conveners of a meeting for a political, philanthropic or religious purpose, as that in obedience to which there met last week in London the delegates from all parts of England. From the Peerage we find among others men like the veteran Earl Russell, the Duke of Westminster and the Earl of Durham from the House of Commons; there were forty-five, including men like P. A. Taylor, A. J. Mundella, J. Chamberlain, Prof. Fawcett, side by side with moderate liberals like Lord Arthur Russell, the Rt. Hon. W. N. Massey, the Hon. P. Leveson Gower. The Episcopal church was represented by men like Canon Liddon, Stopford Brooke and Dr. Elliot, the Dean of Bristol, to pick out representatives from various schools, while dissent gave its quota in Newman Hall, Dr. Raleigh, R. R. Saffell and others. Literature was represented by Anthony Trollope, Carlyle, Justin McCarthy, Freeman and others. Law and Medicine gave good names; the great mercantile names of the country, the seats of learning, the schools of art all contributed to this unexampled list of men who felt that it was time that a decided voice should be heard to call our government from the dangerous course it seemed to be pursuing. And if the call was weighty the response must have surprised and gratified the conveners. More than a thousand delegates put in an appearance at the Hall, some appointed, like those from Manchester, by public town's meetings called by the Mayors, some sent from political associations, some from religious societies, but all representing a greater or less amount of strong conviction in the community. The platform was full of the conveners, and they appointed speakers, and long before twelve o'clock, the time fixed for the beginning of the meeting, the galleries and the body of the hall were well filled, the former to the utmost of their capacity, while the latter, being reserved for delegates, might perhaps have held one hundred to one hundred and fifty persons more. The enthusiasm was very great when the Duke of Westminster took the chair, but was overwhelming when Gladstone took his place near him. You know the Duke of Westminster is said to be the richest man in England. He was the President of the morning sitting. The Earl of Shaftesbury, who presided in the afternoon meeting, represents the religious world, so that two of the most potent factors of public sentiment, wealth and religion, were fairly honored in the choice of the Chairman. They tell a story about the Duke of Westminster, that when he was presented to the last Sultan but one, (they have succeeded one another so rapidly of late that I hope I am not losing count) the Prince of Wales told his royal guest that the Duke's wealth exceeded his immeasurably. "Why, then, don't you arrest him, have his head cut off and confiscate his property?" was the characteristic remark of the Chief of the Faithful. Whether the story is true or not there does not seem much love lost between the Duke and the Turkish power. I need not say anything about his speech, which you will no doubt have read long before this reaches you, if you take any interest in the matter, but he gave the right ring to the meeting and spoke with decided aversion of the country being allowed to go to war in behalf of the Turks. The deliberations of the Conference were announced to be directed to different theses drawn up with great legal accuracy to point out how the irremediable character of the Turkish Government was proved by its own deeds, and how all claim for support had been deliberately sacrificed by its normal cruelty and treachery; while the conduct of the Christians called for sympathy, and the fear of Russia was not to be made a pretext for upholding the gravest tyranny the world has ever known. Point after point of this programme was dwelt upon by the speakers, who, taken all in all, maintained a very high level of eloquence. It is perhaps not a bad thing for men who really can speak to feel themselves limited, as were the speakers on Friday, to ten or fifteen minutes. They give you all their good things, one after another, without any padding, and some of the men succeeded most admirably. Henry Richards, the member for Neerthyr, and well known as the Secretary of the Peace Society, first moved the meeting to the boiling point, the audience jumping to their feet, waving handkerchiefs, umbrellas and hats in their excitement, as he declared that no war would break out if the powers of Europe were agreed, as they would be if England were not held back by selfish fear. And as speaker after speaker denounced the dread of Russia as unworthy of the nation, and insisted upon the duty of postponing all considerations to that of righteousness and justice, they found themselves sustained by the cheers which rose with a warmth rarely if ever shown in the calm atmosphere of a London meeting. The list of speakers was well drawn up; all classes and well-nigh all professions were represented. If I were to pick out the most successful speakers I think I should name Mr. Richard, G. O. Trevelyan, the nephew and biographer of Lord Macaulay, the Bishop of Oxford, Mr. Bryce, the Professor of Law at Oxford, Canon Lidddon, whose persuasive voice it was a perfect pleasure to listen to while he was speaking sentiments, with which even a heretic like your correspondent could entirely agree, and though last not least, Mr. Gladstone, who never in my hearing spoke with greater power and conclusiveness, and who held the meeting in unbroken interest for an hour and three-quarters after it already had been listening to speeches for five hours and a half. It is always a mooted point in England whether he or John Bright is the first of English orators. I confess to a belief in the one I hear last, so just at present I am a Gladstonian. I only hope that John Bright may soon give me an opportunity of changing my mind, as I have often done before. And, now that all is over, we must quietly wait to see whether our Government is daring enough to set public opinion at defiance; if they do Mr. Fawcett's threat, that the Liberals in Parliament will use every constitutional means of withholding supplies, may have to be enforced; and the usages of the House of Commons give a strong and united minority the power to carry out the threat evidently made, after deliberation, by a man not likely to alter his mind hastily. Whatever happens, the next session of Parliament, which begins on the 8th of February, will be as lively and as warm a one as your next Congress will probably be.

The Unitarians of England—may I not say of the world?—have lately lost one whose name has indeed been an honored name in all our churches. The venerable Dr. Beard has passed peacefully into his rest. The blank he leaves among us, few who have not been actively at work in England can well estimate. I have seen a list of sixty of his publications, a catalogue which does not contain many of the separate sermons, pamphlets and tracts which were unceasingly flowing from his truly prolific pen. A statement like this would lead most people to think that his attention must have been almost entirely devoted to literary labor. He was, however, equally active as a preacher, as a schoolmaster, in the beginning of his career, and as a tutor at one of our ministerial training institutions during the last twenty years of his active life, while no great public question of a liberal character ever was started in Manchester in the promotion of which he did not take a lively and energetic part. He was of a truly genial and loving disposition, and is mourned for as a friend by all who were privileged to know him, while the inner circle, to whom the whole affectionate nature of the man had been revealed, are strengthened to bear the loss, which nothing can replace, by the widespread sympathy shown for them, and by the many proofs of reverent love for the departed which have been given on every side. After a life of self-sacrificing labor and successful achievement, the infirmity of age compelled him to withdraw from public activity about ten years ago, but in his retirement he continued to take a lively interest in everything which concerned the church to which his heart and intellect had ever been devoted: and at the last, without pain or struggle, he entered into his rest. He was followed to the grave by very many friends, the Rev. Wm. Gaskell, with whom he had been on intimate terms of brotherly friendship for about fifty years, conducted the service in the most impressive manner, and preached his funeral sermon in the beautiful chapel which has been built, chiefly by Dr. Beard's exertions, at Sale.

Dr. Beard was a decided Unitarian, but his strong faith in the definite doctrines of the faith he preached never narrowed his sympathies, which were wide as the needs of humanity. He was an old worker in the anti-slavery cause, he took an energetic part in our free trade struggles, but after the interests of Unitarianism I think no cause was nearer to his heart than that of popular education. Very soon after his settlement in Manchester he originated a movement which secured the advantages of the old endowed Grammar School for the people of that great town instead of confining it to a very limited section of the people; he was one of the founders and active promoters of the National Public School Association which tried to procure for England the advantages which your common school system gives to the United States, and the work he and his coadjutors did thirty years ago had great influence in preparing the public mind for the system of national education which the Elementary Education Act of 1870 has given us. Among his most useful books have been those which he contributed to Cassell's Educational Series, to aid students who could not attend school or college in advancing in knowledge and culture. He has been an indefatigable worker, but of him it may well be said, "he has seen of the travail of his soul and is satisfied."

Some of our friends in South Wales have been greatly tried lately by an act of legal oppression. The congregation of Llyn-Rhydd-Owen held their chapel upon lease from a conservative landlord. He is a young man, only just of age, and not very energetic himself, but his agent is a very active politician, to whom the liberalism of the minister and congregation has been offensive for years. Many of the worshippers of the congregation have been evicted from their farms on account of their voting for liberals, but now the further step has been taken of depriving the congregation of their chapel and burial-ground, nominally because of the non-fulfilment of some of the clauses of the lease, really because of the liberalism which it has fostered in the district. You can readily imagine how warm the sympathy is towards the Rev. W. Thomas and his people, and subscriptions are rapidly flowing in which will enable them to erect a chapel of their own, in which they may worship God according to their conscience, none daring to make them afraid. It is still uncertain whether suitable land can be procured, for in a neighborhood where all the landowners are conservative it is often very difficult to obtain a spot on which to build a dissenting chapel. Deeds are still not unfrequent in which land is sold with covenants excluding dissenting chapels, public houses and other nuisances. You will perhaps see from this why some men in England are in favor of juster laws about land, not believing that it ought to be in the power of any individual to prevent the free worship of his fellow-men, even though he be the wealthiest of the wealthy.

S. A. S.

MANCHESTER, Dec. 13, 1876.

FROM BOSTON.

THE recent change in the style of the Liberal Christian and the assumption again of the old name of THE INQUIRER, is not a matter of indifference to those of us who, for a generation, have followed with interest the fortunes of our religious journals. For one, I cordially welcome the new paper, so beautifully printed, so conveniently cut and stitched for the reader, with its large, fair type, its broad columns, and its clean pages. And I no less congratulate its readers on the evidences of the new prosperity with which the opening year begins, on the freshness, vigor, range of topics and the new life which seems to be palpitating through and through every department.

The Christmas season in Boston has been one of unusual spirit and cheerfulness, in spite of the hard times, the political complications, and the uncertainties of the future. The stores have been fairly brilliant with holiday goods in variety and beauty never before surpassed. The whole globe has contributed to the richness and wealth of the display, and never were windows more tempting or more fascinating. An eager throng of purchasers have made the streets all alive with their busy plans of happiness, carrying joy and blessing to ten thousand homes.

On Saturday evening (Dec. 23d), there was a delightful dedication service of the new Putnam Chapel, recently built on the grounds of the First Religious Society in old Eliot Square in Roxbury.

The new associate pastor, Rev. John Graham Brooks, has inspired his people to the building of this Chapel for Sunday school, charitable and social purposes, and it is a model for all such structures. The large rooms below contain every convenience for effective work by the ladies of the parish, and the beautiful chapel, with its ample seats for four hundred people, its attractive yet simple decoration, its rich painted central window, its atmosphere of homeliness, refinement and comfort, make it a notable building in the religious and social life of this part of the town.

The services of dedication were full of interest to those who, with such spirit and loyalty to the new pastor, have builded for the future of their church. Dr. Putnam's word was one of generous sympathy with the new methods which have made this chapel a necessity to the young life of the parish, although he could not fail to say that for his time in the work of the last half century the old meeting-house was all-sufficient. In a tone of tender appeal, which was the more pathetic and eloquent for its very feebleness, he enjoined his people to see to it that the pathway between the new chapel and the old church be well trod, and that being led up to it, the children be made to feel that the church was to be to them the crown of all good things.

That Mr. Brooks should so soon have inspired his people to the erection of so noble a building, and with furnishings and adornments so fitting, as one of the methods of quickening the young life of his parish, is the best possible guarantee of the future usefulness and power of his ministry.

We had the pleasure of a Christmas service in Mr. Hale's church on Christmas day, with a sermon by Dr. Bellows, which was a noble exposition of the divine applicability of Christianity to all times and races and conditions of men.

A little book has recently been issued from the press of Roberts Brothers, quite pertinent to the new year, entitled, "Sunshine in the Soul." It will find eager purchasers at its very trifling cost, in all who have learned to love its companion, "Quiet Hours." No more lovely books of devotional poetry were ever issued from the press. A rare poetical insight has guided the compiler of these hymns in making a selection of the choicest of those that have become embalmed in our memories, while every exquisite verse which the devotional spirit of more recent times has given to the world is included here also in this rare collection.

These two books should find their place next the Bible as for our highest moods. "Sunshine in the Soul," so fitly named, is full of good cheer and joy for all whose lives have been darkened by any shadow.

W. H. R.

BOSTON, December 26th, 1876.

LITERATURE.

A NEW HYMN-BOOK.

THE first collection of hymns with music used in our Unitarian churches was, we believe, the "Hymn and Tune Book for the Church and the Home." This collection, issued in 1868, by the American Unitarian Association, has been largely adopted by our societies. It is now proposed to revise the work, and to send forth a new edition, which shall contain the improvements suggested by eight years' use. This matter seems to be one which should excite more attention than it has thus far received. If any considerable proportion of the claims so often made for "Unitarian Literature" be well founded, we should have in our churches a hymn-book of high literary merit. Each new book should certainly be an advance upon all its predecessors in point of style and matter. Any collection appearing now, and put forth as a desirable denominational standard, should be a work of which cultivated Unitarians would have reason to be proud.

The basis of all suggestion toward a revised hymn-book is the present edition. The first attempt, as it were, to meet a new demand of our churches, for a book of tunes as well as a book of hymns, it is not my desire to subject it to a hostile criticism. Its faults would have been in a large degree avoided had it been compiled more publicly. It was a great improvement on any book then in general use in our churches. It has deservedly displaced nearly all earlier collections. The acknowledged need of revision in so short a time after its first appearance is sufficient evidence that some error was made in its compilation. The work was not done by a proper number of hands and heads. It bears the impress too strongly, we think, of one mind and teaches too narrowly one conception of religion. Upon numerous points of taste we should also differ with the compiler, and we should make alterations for a revision in many minor matters.

To begin at the beginning, the title of the first division of the book is "Sabbath and Sanctuary," to which, in the Classified Index, "and General Homage" is added. The section contains a large number of hymns, nearly all well-known and favored among us. It makes a good introduction to the whole work. But the title seems to me to betray one of the chief faults of the collection—a critical spirit not sufficiently minute, or better perhaps, a lack of thorough poetical sensibility. We can hardly conceive a poet making a collection of religious poetry to be sung in our Unitarian churches, and prefixing to its first division this title, "Sabbath," (do we acknowledge any such day as the Sabbath?) "and Sanctuary," (what does that mean in the mouth of a Unitarian Congregationalist, who, if he was well brought up, went to a "meeting-house" in his early days, and has never got any farther toward ritualism than a "church" as yet,) "and General Homage," (the hopelessness of these last words only serves to remind us of an Americanized German's translation of Schiller's Prosaic Works, as he was pleased to render the opposite of poetical).

The title of the second division is open to objection from those who think it more modest not to say very much, in the old and catalogue-like style, about the "Attributes of God." A better heading than "God's Attributes and Providence" could easily be found for the hymns in this section. The narrow formality of the title indicates the character of too many of the hymns. The noble and inspiring idea of the Divine Immanence in Man and Nature finds slight recognition here. The conventional and irreligious manner of speaking of God as "a magnified, non-natural man," out of which we are, happily, fast growing, marks many selections. Our modern feeling of God's presence in Nature is scarcely quickened by this hymn of Watts:

"The Lord Jehovah reigns;
His throne is built on high;
The garments he assumes
Are light and majesty."

Surely the poetry of late years would yield several hymns of the highest order which should here displace verses that are poor in expression, thin in sentiment, and weak in thought. Compare who will the fine hymn, "God of the earth, the sky, the sea," with its halting, straining successor, "Yes, God is good, in earth and sky."

The title of the Third Section, "Devout Aspirations and Affections," is also too formal and too suggestive of a desire to catalogue the pious sensibilities, to be in place in a book of poetry. And if, as we believe, all good hymns are properly prayers in verse, there is no justification for a separate section claiming to be especially devotional.

The Fourth Section, under the heading, "The Word and the Spirit of God," confounds, on the other hand, two classes of hymns which should be kept distinct, those referring to the Bible, and others referring to the ever-present Spirit of God. The confusion is well illustrated by the placing in the same division of T. H. Gill's stirring hymn, "Our God, our God, Thou shinest here," and Barton's "Lamp of our feet whereby we trace." The whole section is thus confused. Many Unitarians would decidedly object to ranging on a like level of uniqueness the Bible (the Word, as it is put; a Word, we should put it) and the Spirit.

Under "Christ, his Life and Work" (another dry designation) are some of the best verses in the book, and some of the poorest also. Some hymns have no poetical merits which can be claimed as outweighing their theological perversity. What shall we say to these verses (No. 380):

"Thus doth the eternal Spirit own
And seal the mission of His Son;
The Father indicates His cause,
While he hangs bleeding on the cross.
He dies: the heavens in mourning stood;
He rises, and appears with God:
Behold the Lord ascending high,
No more to bleed, no more to die."

With how much sincerity will Unitarian Congregations sing (No. 417):

"May the dear blood once shed for me
My blest atonement prove;
That I from first to last may be
The purchase of thy love,"— or (No. 434, entitled "Our Merciful Judge"):

"Lord, ere the last dread trumpet sound,
And ere before Thy face we stand,
Look Thou on each accusing word
And blot it with Thy bleeding hand"!!!—

or (No. 564):

"Just as I am, without one plea,
But that thy blood was shed for me."

In Section Sixth are a number of hymns which an exact classification would place among those, further on, referring to the Future Life. "Christ's church and Kingdom," Jesus himself called it the "Kingdom of God." We do not think the compiler made a logical or theological improvement in his alteration.

The next section stands in much need of re-arrangement. The heading is not felicitous. "A New Year" can hardly be called a "Christian occasion;" indeed what are "Christian occasions apart from "Christian ordinances," with which they are combined here?

"The Christian Life" leaves out virtues which should have received special attention; but of this more hereafter. Two slight points we notice. Chas. Wesley's beautiful hymn, "Saviour, refuge of my soul," has been altered to "Father, refuge of my soul," but the heading stands still "Christ a refuge;" and Phebe Cary's "One sweetly solemn thought" is marked "Anonymous."

The Ninth Division, "Miscellaneous," should, in our opinion, be broken up, and its hymns be appropriately distributed in the other divisions. No fitter place can be found for the patriotic selections than under the "Christian Life." Whittier's "O Thou, whose presence," and Holmes' "O Lord of hosts," would appear too special in their occasions to be longer retained.

To leave now this minuter criticism: the poetical tone of the Hymn and Tune Book is not so high by far as it should be. We are aware that not all hymns which read well, sing well too. Many favorite and standard hymns derive most of their influence from the tunes to which they have happily been joined. New hymns of merit, which will run well to music, are not produced in numbers every year. But gradually the stock of such pieces is increased, and, as fast as it increases, the new hymns of poetical excellence should displace the old doggerel. This rule, indeed, should not be applied to the exclusion of verses which through association have acquired a high and wide influence among us. But many very mediocre and slightly known hymns in the Tune Book should be left out to make room for far superior poetry, which will fit the tunes just as well or better. Watts, Montgomery, Doddridge and Newton were too much favored by our compiler. The vigorous and strongly simple style of Tate and Brady in other hymns should not oblige us to retain "Ye boundless realms of joy," than which a higher note of universal praise has many times been struck. The author of "America," whom "Fate tried to conceal by naming him Smith," would never have emerged from obscurity by writing hymns like "Spirit of God, thy churches wait," or "Sister, thou wast mild and lovely." The high but narrow spirit of Cowper is heard too often. The monotonous "Elim," offering a thoroughly ecclesiastical idea of religion, does not in all places "refresh" our emotions. The laborious muse of H. K. White has not struggled through the 159th hymn without exciting our compassion and amusement. Boddome falls, in hymn No. 346, far below his own level in the very next piece. H. W. Longfellow's "All is of God," is not a good hymn; its conclusion is even impotent; indeed he has never, except in the "Psalm of Life," equalled his brother, who seems to have a peculiar gift in this line. We should be glad to see many more of the latter's compositions than the Year Book contains.

It would be no difficult matter to select a large number of hymns of the first order with which to displace much that is at least mediocre in our present collection. Such hymns as Nos. 145 and 189, for instance, appear to have derived their chief inspiration from the Dictionary of Rhymes; and we should certainly restrain Doddridge's "redundant river" (No. 314) from flowing at such length. Where is a nobler Christmas hymn to be found than Rev. Dr. Hedge's "Twas in the East, the mystic East"? What collection of Unitarian hymns is complete without those strong verses of Higginson, "No human eyes Thy face may see" and "To thine eternal arms, O God"? Here are a few others which occur to us as most suitable: Rev. Dr. Frothingham's "Remember me the Saviour said," "The journey is too great for thee," "One Father, God, we own"; Rev. Dr. Furness' "Here in a world of doubt," "Holmes' "Lord of all being, throned afar"; Weiss' "A wondrous star our pioneer"; S. Longfellow's "A voice by Jordan's shore!" "I look to Thee in every need," "One holy church of God appears," "Tis winter now; the fallen snow"; Johnson's "Life of ages, richly proved," "City of God, how broad and fair"; "W. C. Gannett's "The Lord is in His holy place," "He hides within the lily"; Chadwick's "Eternal ruler of the ceaseless round," "Not, Heavenly Father, that we ask or hope."

The excellence of the hymns taken from the Breviary makes us ask if there may not be a few more of the same high quality. From Herbert, Trench, Whittier, T. H. Gill, F. T. Palgrave and Emerson a number of impressive hymns could be gathered. On the visitation programmes of the Cambridge Divinity School may be found several original hymns of great merit, among them one by E. R. Sill, author of the fine hymn, "Send down Thy truth, O God." We believe that not a few would rejoice to see in a hymn book two poems of A. H. Clough; that noble prayer, "Qui Laborat Orat," beginning "O only source of all our light and life," and "Noli Aemulari."

Not only in the section "Devout Aspirations and Affections," but elsewhere, the Hymn and Tune Book expresses too exclusively what we may be permitted to call the feminine features of piety—submission, resignation, passive virtue, for example. These are a part of piety, indeed, and only a part. Resolute, stirring hymns, like "Father! hear the prayer we offer," "Tell me not in mournful numbers," "Hast thou mid life's empty noises," express a piety as true as this, "I would be treated as a child, and guided where to go." The first kind is slightly represented in the Tune Book; the second kind predominates to excess.

In revision, then, a special effort should be made to introduce hymns which shall stir the blood with a little of that power which rings through Luther's psalm, "A mighty fortress is our God." Such are some of those above named; and in addition, Burleigh's "Abide not in the realm of dreams," S. Longfellow's "Go forth to life, O child of earth," "O still, in accents sweet and strong"; and Johnson's "God of the earnest heart," and "Onward, onward."

It is well to sing of peace and resignation again and again, but there are those among us—

"The eager hearts, the souls of fire,
Who pant to toil for God and man,
And view with eyes of keen desire
The upland way of toil and pain;
Almost with scorn they think of rest,
Of holy calm, of tranquil breast."

Our book is extremely deficient in hymns inculcating the intellectual virtues—fidelity to fact alone, perfect honesty to one's self and to others, sincerity to the uttermost, confidence in God as largest light, boldness, entire conscientiousness in matters of conviction. Such virtues, I mean, as Arthur Hugh Clough so finely illustrated in his life. His caution—

"Play no tricks upon your soul, oh, man!
Let fact be fact, and life the thing it can,"— is never obsolete, and never were the virtues of the intellect needing more to be emphasized than now.

Hymns which recognize the large illumination of God's world made in modern days by science are lacking in this book. Palgrave's verses on "Love and Law" would give any one who reads them a deep impression of "the essential piety" of knowing as much as we can about a universe whose structure is divine.

Childish and conventional ideas of heaven crop out in many hymns. A large number of them might well be spared for Mr. Chadwick's "Not, Heavenly Father, that we ask or hope an idle heaven beyond the sea of death." If any one make objection that these ideas still prevail, we reply that one office of a hymn-book is to educate and to strengthen the spiritual tendencies of the time. But we Unitarians are certainly not anxious for a Sabbath "that ne'er shall end," whose "songs of peace and joy" shall "be our blest employ eternally." Nor do the ideas expressed in hymns Nos. 508 680 and 681 at all correspond with the tenor of Unitarian teaching. We are more disposed to smile at than to long for Doddridge's

"No midnight shade, no clouded sun,
But sacred, high, eternal noon."

When he speaks of heaven as "this desert road," "these realms of woe and sin," and cries,

"Fain would we leave this weary road,
And sleep in death to meet with God," he is religious on a low plane if he is really religious at all; and we do not sing his words without danger of falling into cant. So when we sing of "this lonely vale of tears," and "the emptiness of things below," we are untrue to the spirit of the most genuine faith of our day. Our ideas of the relation of the Ethnic religions to Christianity are scarcely expressed in hymn No. 70, on "Gentiles in the Temple," or in Pope's most artificial and hollow "Rise, crowned with light, imperial Salem, rise." (Why was this inserted, and his "Universal Prayer" omitted?) An eminent theologian indeed sings (339),

"So truth lent many a ray
To bless the pagan's night;
But, Lord, how faint, how cold were they,
To Thy one glorious light!"

But we have learned to know and estimate heathen religions a little better since his day, and can find a fitter strain in which to sing of God's witnesses in every nation than this of Tommy Moore.

The writer desires no narrow limits for devotional poetry, but would welcome valuable hymns of all kinds. Many of the hymns of Watts, the Wesleys, Newton, Montgomery, the Moravian, are his favorites. He would gladly see some of the best revival melodies, with a right phrasing, in our hymn-books—such, for instance, are the "Ninety-and-nine," and "The old, old story." But we should remove from our books all expressions of belief we have outgrown, and if the hymns will not bear such pruning, omit them. We would have a book whose devotional tone should be high, full and noble, proceeding from a faith that is at once broad and earnest, deep and joyous, intellectual and full of feeling. Such revision as he has hinted at would give us a book that would educate us into a manly, womanly, generous piety, neglecting neither action nor devotion, but with wide sympathy giving utterance to every healthy feeling of the soul. Such a work would not produce upon one looking it through that depressing effect which the writer has felt in examining carefully the book in use, with all its offences against poetry and liberal religion and its straitened ideas of piety.

The music needs revision, as well as the hymns. It has struck the writer that space is now lost by the repetition of several tunes, that an indication at the foot of the pages of appropriate tunes other than those at the top of the page would be of assistance, and that a Metrical Index is now lacking. A better classification of the hymns in the body of the work would render the Classified Index in its present length quite superfluous.

N. P. G.

REVIEWS.

STUDENT LIFE AT HARVARD. Boston: Lockwood, Brooks & Co. 1876.

It is difficult to tell how much of the interest of this volume of 518 pages is due to the subject and how much to the author's treatment of it; how much it might touch a Harvard graduate and his set, and how little an average reader. As a story it has no striking merits; as a detailed account of the social life of the students in these days at Cambridge, it possesses great and indeed painful interest. No doubt the young ladies of the neighborhood will find a charm in it, since it shows how much their attractions influence collegiate life at Harvard. The belles about Boston will see themselves in full force in these pages, and will have new flutters of the heart as they recall the class-days of the last decade. We suspect that the puppy-loves of college boys seldom come to such serious results as the author has developed out of college flirtations, but collegians are several years older now than in our day, and their love-making may be more dangerous.

The picture the book gives of student life at Cambridge is not an encouraging one for parents with thin purses or Puritan consciences. It would drive most scrupulous mothers and prudent fathers into painful doubts whether Harvard were not a perilous place to trust their boys in. The amount of hazing and peril to eyes and limbs, of whiskey and wine-drinking, of smoking and swearing, of idleness and folly, here described make the college seem rather a scene of wild frolic and vicious indulgence than of hard study and sober morals. And this is all the more alarming, because the author evidently honors virtue, temperance and hard work, and shows how some of his characters escaped temptation and improved their time and opportunities. He cannot be supposed to have wilfully exaggerated the evils he deplors. He is not, seemingly, a fault-finder and not a narrow ascetic; has no theories to push and no animosities to indulge. He is quite broad, too, in his notions of a young man's proper life, and expects it to be impulsive, muscular, fond of pleasure, sensitive to woman's charms and at the same time self-restrained, capable of solid and persistent study, high-toned and pure.

It is with this broad brush that he paints in the picture of Harvard life, and what frightens us is to see how many ugly shadows there are on the canvas! Indeed they prevail. The Harvard student he describes—there are fine exceptions—is, as a rule, an idler, a toper, a smoker in vile excess, smasher of furniture, a spendthrift, a contemner of his teachers, a hater of necessary restraints, and an unwilling prisoner under a four years' sentence to Cambridge. This is so utterly unlike anything we remember that we doubt its truth. Not that everything the author states may not be strictly founded in fact. But we suspect a total suppression of the unpicturesque, uneventful, undramatic facts, which really must constitute the largest part of the real history of Harvard collegians—the sober, steady application of the average man, with his respect for rules and professors, his in-door life, his economy, and his freedom from noisy vices and bad habits. Certainly boating, flirting, smoking and whiskey-drinking cannot employ or characterize four-fifths of the students. They have neither the money, the leisure nor the taste for these things, and must have too much sense and love for their professed object, a good education, not to say too good a parentage and previous moral training, to be led into the frivolities and vices and cruelties that are here made so prominent.

We should be very sorry and very slow to believe that any student at Cambridge spent or lost in gambling $20,000 a year, or ran up in three months a bill of $300 for cigars, or treated his visitors usually to whiskey, and we consider it a very poor service to his Alma Mater for any graduate to fasten these enormities upon her name.

For ourselves, we do not accept this story as in the least an account of the average and characteristic life of the college. It describes the deviltry, dissipation, idleness and festivity of a few college "swells" and the equally exceptional character of a few heroic students and exalted moralists, but of the average life and character, the average temptations and employments of collegians at Cambridge, we get no true idea, but rather, we suspect, a very mistaken one. The book is more serious than its pretensions or its merits would make it; for it is either a solemn call to public judgment upon Harvard student life, or a thoughtless misrepresentation of it for story-telling effect.

EPOCHS OF ANCIENT HISTORY. The Athenian Empire. By George W. Cox, M.A. New York: Scribner, Armstrong & Co. 257 pp. 12mo.

The author, in relating the oft-repeated narrative of Athens versus Sparta, has applied the most recent methods to an old subject. The struggle is looked at as an attempt on the part of Athens to introduce a system of government "for which the world was not ripe." To the patriotic student of history this combat between popular freedom and a conservative oligarchy is full of interest. The downfall of Athens is a warning that republics must ever remember and study. The sound logic here applied to its analysis and the terse simplicity employed in repeating the story of the Confederacy of Delos and the Peloponnesian war, are the very things needed to make the experience of this glorious epoch of the past available for the guidance of the present.

The clearness with which human character is here depicted is remarkable. The heroes of ancient Greece stand out before us in all their grandeur and all their frailty. The customs and traditions of the past are reproduced with vivid fidelity, and notable incidents are re-enacted before us.

The chronological tables, maps, and marginal notes are very convenient accessories. The work is admirably adapted to the needs of the times, and bears evidence of thorough and competent authorship.

LIVING TOO FAST; or, The Confessions of a Bank Officer. By Wm. T. Adams. (Oliver Optic.) Boston: Lee & Shepard. New York: Charles T. Dillingham. 1876. 251pp. 12mo. Illustrated.

The intensity of this story is very great. The situation is ever trying to the sympathies as well as horrifying to the sense of justice. A thoughtless, rash, and extravagant young husband goes headlong to ruin, and not a hand is able to snatch him from the inevitable consequence, until, just at the close of the volume he is rescued in a style entirely unlooked for, because unreasonable. His honor is sufficiently untarnished in the eyes of one who knows of his crimes to justify a partnership between the criminal and one of his victims, a man of integrity and clear insight. There is also much that is improbable in the fact that the defaulter changes from honesty to dishonesty and back again at intervals. He is shocked at deception in some cases, adopts it readily enough in others, and then is full of temporary sensitiveness to the immorality before considered justifiable. But there is much to admire in the story. The lessons of good morals are needed. Economy, temperance and truthfulness are seen to be essential to continued success. The teachings are clearly and attractively given.

HOW TO SING; or, The Voice and How to Use it. By W. H. Daniells. New York: S. R. Wells & Co.

This is a small book, which deserves notice for its good tone and wise teachings. Its aim is to give the true principles of all art—earnestness and simplicity; it advocates no particular school of instruction, such as the Italian or German, but considers the only true method of training the voice, either alone or with a teacher, to be: 1st, to gain a thorough understanding of the position of the vocal chords and different registers of the voice; 2d, to sacrifice all straining after effect to the gaining of purity of tone and clear articulation. Mr. Daniells' explanations are very clear, and we can recommend his book as useful to young students in the vocal art.

WINWOOD CLIFF; or Oscar the Sailor's Son. By Daniel Wise, D.D., Author of the Glen Morris Stories. Boston: Lee & Shepard, Publishers. New York: Charles T. Dillingham. 1876.

Dr. Wise has been a prolific writer of stories, all of them, we believe, very well intended, but not very realistic. The boys may be interested in reading them without very clearly recognizing their own pictures. Calculated to do little good, they probably will do as little harm.

ELEMENTARY GERMAN COURSE. By Adam E. Schulte, Teacher of German in the Public Schools of the City of New York and Instructor of French in the Evening High School. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1876.

A vocabulary of fifty-two pages, though one of the last things in this book, strikes one as of the first importance. The book is evidently intended to be used with the aid of a teacher, as there are no explanations of the lessons except such as are afforded by a Table of Contents.

The absence of Preface or Introduction of any kind is a peculiarity of the book. Stereotyped apologies may well be spared, but an idea of what the author considers desirable to a proper reading of his book is generally valuable.

The occasional full-faced type for terminations in paradigms and to mark a class of words, is an advantage to both eye and brain. This is well seen in the exercise on page forty-five, in which the derivatives of national names are arranged in columns opposite their primitives.

It is pleasant to see Roman print used in place of German text in school books of this class. Its general introduction would render the acquisition of a profoundly philosophic literature a far less difficult task. So many of the European nations have adopted the alphabet of Rome that Germany can hardly be expected to hold out much longer.

WE BOYS. Boston: Roberts Brothers.

This is a jolly, rollicking description of boy-life at school, at home and at play. Whl Bradley and Bob Brown are not small Sunday school saints, but "regular boys," who are up to any sort of mischief. At school they are given to snapping peas and beans at improper times—if it is ever proper to snap peas—and at home they are not always "mother's comforts." But after all there is no great harm in the young scamps, and we enter very readily into all their sports and trials and invariably laugh with them and at them. Indeed, the funny side of things is constantly presented and the funny side is not artificial or silly, but genuine boyish fun and frolic. The "boys" and those who have not forgotten their youthful feelings will do well to read this veracious chronicle of Bob Brown and Will Bradley and their comrades.

BRIEF NOTICES.

SCRIBNER, ARMSTRONG & Co. have published a beautiful pamphlet, an account of the presentation of the Bryant vase to Mr. Bryant in June last. For frontispiece there is an engraving of the vase which doesn't give a very adequate idea of its beauty.

THE latest venture in the newspaper field is The Evolution, a weekly review of politics, religion, science, literature and art. The Evolution is a handsomely printed sixteen-page paper, resembling more than any other American journal we know of, both in its purpose and its external appearance, THE INQUIRER. Mr. James D. Bell, a journalist of ability and considerable experience, is the editor, and Mr. Asa K. Butts, formerly of the Index, the publisher. The Evolution begins well, and has our best wishes for its success. The subscription price is $5 per annum.

ART AND SCIENCE.

THE RELATION OF LAYMEN TO SCIENCE.

A SHORT time since a prominent theologian, speaking of the remarks of the Nation on clergymen as scientific men, observed in a tone half humorous, half satirical, "according to that authority I have no right to say it snows."

It was snowing at the time, and as I walked out in the storm the query arose in my mind how far is the Nation not right in the controversy which it has recently invoked? Admitting that the professor had a right to say, "it snows," how much further could he rightfully go in expressing opinions in regard to the nature and origin of snow and the science of meteorology in general? Would he have a right, as a layman in science, however accomplished he might be in theology or metaphysics, to write a book like Prof. Tyndall's on "Forms of Water," in which he should take issue with all the experts in meteorology and physics?

The subject is not so simple as those who have been recently discussing it on one side or the other seem to suppose; it is but recently, indeed, that it has been seriously debated, and the facts and arguments that are brought by the disputants have opened, as it would appear, a new vein of thought.

The suggestions I have to present on this subject are these:—First. In their relation to any specialties in science all men are laymen who are not authorities in that specialty, clergymen no more and no less than others. In the days of Plato and Aristotle this was not true, and even at that time, and even many centuries subsequently, there was no specialty in the sense in which that term is now employed. The human race was divided into two great classes—scholars and the masses—and the scholars were supposed to know everything. But at the present time, with the enormous and varied differentiation of knowledge and the admitted impossibility of mastering more than one or two of the special departments of human learning, no man can or should profess to be authority on everything; and however accomplished one may be in any specialty, as theology, or physics, or physiology, that accomplishment does not justify him in regarding himself as an authority in other specialties to which he has given no attention, as astronomy, or geology, or medicine. In respect to these sciences he is a layman.

Secondly, a layman may rightly have a private opinion on any special topic in science, and he may privately express it even when he has no right to publish that opinion or to try to publicly enforce it.

This distinction is of the highest importance, and is fundamental in this discussion; but it does not seem to be generally understood.

Thus, years ago, when the "mind reading" excitement was at its height in this country, an editorial appeared in one of our best-known religious weeklies endorsing the claims of Brown, the leading actor in those performances, and conceding in full that that young man had, as he alleged and advertised, omniscient power, to this degree at least, that he could read the secret thoughts. On reading this article I wrote to the editor, stating that the physiological explanation of "mind reading" had already been discovered and published, and was not disputed by physiologists; that what he supposed to be mind reading was really muscle reading, and was fully in harmony with the known laws of involuntary and unconscious muscular motion. The editor, a clergyman of unusual acuteness and logical power on subjects with which he is familiar, replied that he, with his assistant, a man whom it was hard to deceive, had investigated the phenomena and had decided that my explanation was only in part correct; and he further declared that he had the same right to his opinion that I had to mine. To this I replied, that while in private he had a right to entertain and express an opinion adverse to the conclusions of experts in regard to this subject, he had no right, scientific or moral, to express that opinion publicly; and I further stated that if he was not content with the authorities who had up to that time investigated the matter, there were others to whom I could and did respectfully refer him. Whether the editor was convinced of this reasoning, or not, I do not know; but from that time to the present I have observed in his paper no pleas for the delusion that he had once so warmly advocated.

This experience illustrates, as it seems to me, the whole principle. The editor was not to be blamed for not knowing how to experiment in that difficult department of physiology; he was not to be blamed for his incapacity to comprehend the explanation given by physiologists; he was not to be blamed for privately questioning the conclusions of those who supposed they had solved the problem; his fault consisted solely in this, that he, a non-expert in that matter, publicly combated the views of those who, however inferior to him in other respects, were experts on that special subject.

Thirdly. Laymen have a right to instruct other laymen in science, but in doing so need to exercise the highest caution, both in obtaining facts and drawing inferences from them. The errors which most easily beset one who attempts to write or lecture on scientific specialties are these:

1. Regarding provisional or partial conclusions as permanent and complete. Into this mistake the highest authorities frequently fall; how much more those men who do not profess to be authorities at all. In astronomy, in physics, and in chemistry, which have reached the organized stage of science, there is much that is indisputably established, and has stood the tests of time and of many authorities; yet even in these sciences there is much also that is doubtful, varying and provisional. Those facts in these and other sciences that are, or are supposed to be, established, and have been generally accepted for a quarter of a century or more, are usually taught in our schools and in books for the young; on themes of this kind there is little occasion for discussion, and very little is said about them in conversation, newspapers, in the pulpit, or on the platform. Under this head come the Copernican theory, the theory of gravitation, and a number of well-known laws of chemistry and physics. The discussions of science into which laymen enter relate almost always to doubtful or disputed, or at least difficult points, and usually to sciences such as the physiology of the brain, biology, and so forth, that have not yet fully attained the organized stage, but are in what I call the territorial stage, not yet entirely occupied and appropriated by experts, and on which any intelligent layman feels qualified to stake out a claim. In these sciences, and particularly in the physiology of the brain, there is far more of the provisional and partial than of the permanent and complete. These subjects are, however, so fascinating in themselves, and so closely connected with religion and morals and all that is most dear to the world, that they present a very tempting field for laymen.

2. Selecting and emphasizing those facts and opinions that favor preconceived belief and ignoring others. Experts themselves are chargeable not unfrequently with this tendency; it is hard for the human mind to entirely escape it; but laymen are sometimes, if not usually, led to the investigation of science for the express purpose of establishing some belief; their object is not the finding of truth, but of facts to prove what they hope to be true. Only those in whom both the emotional and the reasoning nature are powerfully disciplined can resist the temptation to shut the eyes when unwelcome facts appear. To the seeker after truth, to one who aims to make himself an authority in any realm of human knowledge, no fact need be unwelcome; but laymen, when they enter the scientific field, particularly in cerebral physiology and biology, usually deceive themselves if they suppose that it is the truth without regard to consequences that they are after.

Laymen can and should do good work in the popularization of science. Editors, for example, have the opportunity, which it is their right and their duty to improve, to present before the people the most recent discussions of the leading investigators in the various branches of science; such discussions furnish materials for most entertaining and instructive comment; but in attempting to decide dogmatically difficult scientific questions they may go too far, and sometimes they do serious harm by fostering the unscientific spirit in society.

A noteworthy fact in the history of science during the past few years is that the most successful popularizers have been original investigators themselves. Thus Darwin, Helmholtz, Tyndall and Huxley, all of whom are original workers in their respective departments, have done more for the diffusion of their own discoveries than any number of laymen. When they speak they speak authoritatively, even when they proclaim but partial truths. The labors of these men do not enable us to dispense with the efforts of laymen in the same direction, but they serve as guides to laymen who desire to act as mediums through which scientific researches and reasonings may be brought to the attention of the people. They may make mistakes, both in observation and in deductions from observations, but they are, on the average, more trustworthy authorities than those who must take all their facts second-hand.

GEORGE M. BEARD.

ART NOTES.

WHEN a figure is beautiful it is by virtue of the idea contained in it.—OERSTED.

AFTER all, is it necessary that a picture should first be didactic, sentimental, humorous, or in some way human; and after that beautiful in color? Is not art advanced if Alvarez, "mixing color with brains," discovers new tones, contrasts and harmonies?

AT Knoedler's there is a brilliant picture—an interior with figures—by A. Simonetti. It belongs to the school of color pronounced and emphasized. In these pictures the chief end of man and woman is to be crimson, orange or blue. Still let us be thankful for beautiful color, when we can get nothing else.

CALAME's Temple of Pæstum, in the Seabury collection, should be seen and studied by all who condemn finish in detail on the plea that it can be had only with loss of breadth.

In this beautiful picture there is certainly no lack of this quality, yet sedge and weed are carefully drawn all across the foreground, and the sky is full, not of suggestion, but of cloud-forms, painted one by one and finished.

THE Pre-Raphaelites published a weekly magazine called The Germ. This was the motto on the cover:

When whoso merely hath a little thought
Will merely think the thought which is in him—
Not imaging another's, bright or dim,
Not mingling with new words what others taught;
When whoso speaks, from having either sought
Or only found, will speak—not just to skim
A shallow surface with words made and trim,
But in the very speech the matter brought;
Be not too keen to cry, "So this is all!
A thing I might myself have thought as well,
But would not say it, for it was not worth!"
Ask, "Is this truth?" For is it still to tell
That, be the theme a point, or the whole earth,
Truth is a circle, perfect, great or small!

Rather corduroyish, that poetry, and somewhat confusing. The three cardinal points of Pre-Raphaelitism were: the rejection of beauty or non-selection; imitative finish of the details from nature; equal completion of all parts of the picture.

HEARTH AND HOME.

[FOR THE INQUIRER.]

A CHRISTMAS PICTURE.

THE snow lay white on Christmas eve,
New spread around the cottage door;
But cheerily the fire-light fell
Within, upon the sanded floor.

Bright sprigs of holly decked the walls
And graced the clock upon the shelf,
That ticking softly seemed to tell
Of quiet comfort in itself.

The old man dozed beside the fire,
The children slept with breathings low;
While Mary watched for him whose step
Would now be muffled in the snow.

But, as her infant boy woke up
And nestled fondly on her knee,
The father came and saw within
The fairest picture he could see.

While entering gladly with him there
The Pastor stood and kindly smiled,
Said he: "'T is well, on Christmas eve,
To greet the Mother with her child."

"I watched a star that shone so bright
It seemed to point the way to go."
Then, as he pressed the Grandfather's hand,
He said: "And here's the wise man too."

"I passed the hall on yonder hill
Where, all in luxury and ease,
The Squire and lady dwell; but still,
No picture there my eye could please.

"I saw no happy infant boy,
As here, upon his mother's knee;
No fair Madonna on the wall
Could bring the Christ child near to me.

"Dear friends, if with the holy Babe
Came peace and gladness to the earth,
Should not the angels still seem near
At every lowly infant's birth?"

Thus, as he spoke, the good man turned,
And tenderly he read to them
The blessed story, always new,
Of Christmas eve at Bethlehem.

RIPPLE.

THE GRANDFATHER'S BLESSING.

BY BERTHOLD AUERBACH.

[Translated for The Inquirer.]

I WILL relate to you how it was that a death early made me acquainted with life. But I well know that I cannot give you the whole: I cannot describe the tone which was most thrilling, the expression of the eyes and the mouth, so heart-moving. What we have to tell of those who have been dear to us is only a shadow, for they themselves are wanting to complete the picture. What we inherit and what we transmit is only a scanty sediment of a rich and manifold life. Thou art not dead, noble grandfather, whose countenance was the dwelling-place of wisdom. How thou now livest as a spirit, what is now the garment with which thy being is clothed, I cannot comprehend; thou standest before me as thou didst live among us, as thou didst go out and come in with thy loving influence.

In silent, starry nights, like this one which now rests over the earth, you often sat with us on that bench in front of the house, and I nestled in your lap while you told us of the joys and sorrows of the world.

How would I rejoice could I now make all men your listeners, and plant your words deep in their hearts! But can a tree tell about that ray of sunlight which welcomed its first unfolding life? And yet many of your words echo in my soul like a sound that is going forth from a living and present existence.

When you said once, "All good comes from God," I replied, thinking of "goodies," "but, grandfather, doesn't the confectioner make them?" Then you took me up on your knees and explained to me how God distributes His goodness through the hands of men, so that they may love and help one another; and if they loved each other, they loved also God, who inclined their hearts one towards the other.

Would that I could clearly unfold what a stir it made in my soul when I first heard of the stir that was making in the great world around. Napoleon had been defeated, the allies were pursuing him, and our quiet village suddenly was called upon to play a small part in this world-wide history.

When the soldiers quartered upon us first came to the house, we children crept away to the stable, but we were sent for and put to bed in clear daylight. I shall never forget how I lay in the afternoon in the little back bed-room, and heard people swearing at a distance in an unknown tongue. It seemed to me as if they were not human beings. They had, indeed, voices like men, but they did not speak like them nor understand what was spoken to them.

As we had Russian soldiers quartered in our house, and one whom we called "Flederwisch" (goose-wing), from his great beard, was always wanting to kiss me, and I held him in abhorrence, my grandfather said to me: "The Russians are human beings as we are, and you must love them too; but that's no reason why Flederwisch should kiss you." Flederwisch was very urgent for my beautiful cousin Magdalena to go with him to a dance. He stormed and raged like a madman because she had been hidden away somewhere out of the house. We children, in mortal fear, covered ourselves up in the bed-clothes. My grandfather rose and went with my father into the sitting-room. As they told me afterwards, Flederwisch remained awhile perfectly still, and held the point of his drawn sabre downwards, when he saw my grandfather, with his venerable countenance and his raised hand enter the room. But this emotion of reverence lasted only a moment in the soldier, who raised his arm, struck out wildly with his sabre, and hit my grandfather in the forehead. He at once fell, and my father, seizing Flederwisch, threw him on the floor, and cried out for help. They hastened to his assistance, and the soldier was bound fast. My grandfather was now placed in the arm-chair. His wound was not dangerous, as the sabre had only grazed his forehead. We children, who had jumped out of bed, stood round him weeping until he was able to speak. Flederwisch received the next day fifty lashes, the pain of which he soon got over, but my grandfather bore a scar over the right temple for the rest of his days.

In the still Summer afternoons, when every one was in the field, I often sat with my grandfather on the stone bench under the linden in front of the town-hall. I had charge of my little sister, who long ago went to live with him in the home above. The old Martin would frequently come and sit down with us; I see him now, as he sat there bent forward with both hands squeezed between his knees, neither he nor my grandfather talking much. But sometimes Martin would inveigh against everybody in the village, and make them out to be, every one of them, no better than they should be. He used to say at the same time: "I speak everything out straight and plain." On one such occasion my grandfather said to him: "Say it out straight and plain in regard to yourself, and see how that sounds!" Whenever Martin came, after having been away to some distant place, my grandfather would generally say to me: "Go home now, put Marie into my lap, and lead out the goat."

My grandfather liked goat's milk, and so we kept a goat in addition to our eight cows, and to look after it was my duty. And when I was holding the goat by a rope as it browsed on the tender foliage along the hedges and hill-sides, I would often think: "Ah, that makes good milk, and it will taste nicely to grandfather," and then I felt perfectly content. Sometimes when I was pasturing the goat on the hill-side, grandfather would join me and tell me all sorts of stories. It is strange that one of his comparisons now remains fresh in my memory. He said to me once, and I myself had taken notice of the fact, that the goat wastes more than it eats of the tender shoots and foliage which are given to it as fodder in the stable; while on the other hand, when it is getting its own food from the bushes, it eats up stick and stem, all that it has bitten of, although sometimes it has to reach and stretch far up in order to do it. And this was like many people who were more economical, and enjoyed their food much more, when they had to get it themselves, than when they found it already furnished without any effort of their own. My grandfather was in sight for some time as he walked through the meadow; he stepped slowly but erect, and would occasionally stop and loosen with his foot a stone that lay in the path. The good old man! He liked to remove obstacles from the way of other people, that they might go forward without hindrance.

Whenever I saw him at a distance, my feelings rose in joyful emotion, and I began to carol and to shout, so that my goat would often stare up at me in amazement and then take to browsing again. Often I had to wait too long before my grandfather could creep to where I was, and I would fasten the goat to a tree or strong bush, run towards the old man and lead him by the hand. Sometimes he would let go my hand, and I had to carry into the road the stone which he had taken from the meadow path. And how happy we then were as we sat there together!

My Uncle Adam has told me that there was a time in his younger days when he was given to night revelling, and often did not go home until very late. It might be long after midnight, but there was grandfather sitting up reading or smoking his pipe. Then Adam must sit down with him and talk of all sorts of good subjects, during which his father would look at him quietly and penetratingly. He never said a word about his late hours and dissipation, never appealed to him on the score of his own rest being broken; and Adam has told me that the thought of having to converse with his father, and meet freely and openly his gaze had kept him from committing many a sin, into which the wantonness of youth and the merry company he was in were likely to mislead him. And he also returned home earlier than he would otherwise have, for he did not want to keep his father up waiting for him.

(To be continued next week.)

FOREFATHERS' DAY.

THE ANNUAL CELEBRATION BY THE NEW ENGLAND SOCIETY.

THE annual celebration of this day by the New England Society of New York is always an interesting and usually a brilliant event. It did not fail this year to be specially characteristic and successful. There was a good deal of expectation, a full company, a considerable collection of notable speakers, and a hearty sympathy with their natural and patriotic references to the circumstances of anxiety in which the country is placed. Reverence for law, as the root of the English and the American political mind, was duly emphasized and earnestly applied to the existing embarrassments of the nation.

George William Curtis was the leading orator, and had the special toast of the day for his theme. He is so practised a public speaker, and so noted for his elegance, grace and finish, as well as for his patriotism and acquaintance with public affairs, that a good deal was expected from his speech. And certainly he did not disappoint his audience, who were enthusiastic in their applause. We venture to think, however, that they were somewhat too easily pleased, and that it was not a striking example of a true after-dinner speech. It showed somewhat too plainly the marks of the file, was too evidently prepared under a weight of responsibility on account of the importance of the counsel which he felt called upon to give, and lacked spontaneity, nature and heat. We humbly think the model on which it was built is not a good one. We are confident that Mr. Curtis would do better on such occasions if he did not try so hard and tried another way. We only ask what we know he is competent to give us.

Edward Everett Hale followed in a much more spontaneous fashion, and with vigorous and almost homely strength, in a speech which both amused and instructed his audience. He dwelt perhaps a little too long on his respectable hobby, "The Old South," and had a somewhat too manifest eye to business, in seeking to enlist the New York sons of New England in his worthy enterprise. He overshot the mark by drawing too long a bow, and only saved himself by an audacious piece of inventive extravaganza about his 128 great-great grandparents. It is very hard to keep the exact limits of burlesque, especially for professional wags.

It was unlucky for all other wits that Mr. Samuel Clemens (Mark Twain) should have exhibited his humor in its highest perfection in his twenty-minute speech on the "New England Weather." It was a side-splitting piece of fun, given in a true Connecticut drawl—which seems perfectly natural to Mr. Clemens—and with an unsmiling face, that kept its gravity in the midst of the explosive laughter that made the audience one great guffaw. As a piece of high art on a low plane, it would be difficult to find anything better. Every sentence ended with a surprise and a snap, which was produced by such artful simplicity that the sting of a voiceless mosquito is hardly a greater effect from the smallest and most unexpected of causes. And when towards the close of his skilful nonsense and cool-toned extravaganza he introduced a serious passage descriptive of the beauty of the New England ice-storm—a passage exquisitely wrought and deliciously contrasted with all before and after—we felt "this is indeed fine art, which only a touch of genius could originate."

Dr. William M. Taylor, of the Tabernacle, preceded Twain in a speech mainly serious, but with fine gleams of Scotch humor in it, and so sincere, earnest and heart-brewed that we are sure it touched the company as nothing else did all the evening, not with the disposition to noisy applause, but with genuine emotion. It was a real speech from heart to heart, and gave expression to the more serious sensibilities of all true pilgrims. We thoroughly enjoyed the speech, and loved the man for it, he was so truly present in it, and there was so much of him to be there.

Commodore Nicholson said a few sensible words for the navy in a sailor-like way, proudly and professionally, and with brevity and enough grace. Rev. John Cotton Smith followed with a fair speech, not wanting in matter or manner, with a broad church doctrine for its base and a hearty and generous plea for the valuable influence of the New England clergy. It was a well-rounded effort—too long, and without any very striking effects—but apposite and cordial, and without a mite of "church" pretension. His anecdote of the moderator and the candidate was effective.

We must not forget a capital retort Mayor Wickham made upon the New England complainants against the administration of our city government. He came prepared to show that all the chief departments of the municipal government were presided over by men of New England origin, and that they themselves—the New Englanders—were chiefly to blame if things went badly. We think he forgot to say how many of their underlings are of foreign extraction. We had paid our annual taxes into the hands of two Germans that very morning, and Hibernian countenances were thick all around. But the Mayor's hit was telling, and unanswerable without a preparation equal to his own. He probably counted on getting off with his guns before the shot could be brought from the armory of the civil list of officials that would certainly have broken them up.

Dr. Loring followed, but we could not wait to hear him. The occasion was a success, if any dinner of our New England Society can be called such where Mr. Joseph H. Choate does not speak. He was present and provokingly silent, but he looked eloquent and witty, for he carries about the redolence of his numerous triumphs in that field and others.

We have dwelt longer than either custom or the importance of the occasion may seem to warrant upon the merits and defects of the speeches made at this New England dinner; but public dinners are getting to be common in America, and dinner-table oratory is an important element for good or evil in the public taste. It is time to hold it to some standard of critical judgment, and we think men of substantial claims will not think themselves wronged by frank and fearless treatment of their efforts on such an occasion.

PILGRIM.

WINTER.

Nor in vain is the cold of Winter. Humanity, in this latitude, has a wonderful tendency to rise above the depressed and downcast mercury. In this province, as in others, what presses down in one place is upward pressure in another. Valuable is the outcome of Winter. This aspect of the case is highly worthy of notice. There is, in this season, an eye out that is wide awake for business. In the country smoothly slip through swamp and wood, across pond and stream, what of burden is waiting to go to mill, to market, to replenish the wood-pile or, in general, to move from one point to another, escaping the hard rub of grit and sand. The sun for making hay, and the snow for a great many other purposes. Easily now glide the sleigh runners to more distant neighbors, and the threads of friendship, unravelled and dropped, what time the sun runs high and the brow sweats with farm-work, are knit again and made as good as new.

What an influence, intellectual, moral, social, does this wand, the earth's inclined axis, exert! If the stern and chilling months could be sent away at our bidding, as a fierce dog from the door-yard, and it were July and equatorial heat all the time, what lassitude would creep into the Anglo-Saxon and his institutions. He, who knows all things, knows it were good there should be a time when, in our towns and cities, fields and enclosures, white and shaggy Winter may lie down—the frozen and only soil out of which much that is tender and humane, stern and manly, will grow. The period of short days and long nights steps in ahead and closes with the traveller against too much travelling, too unbending ease, too abandoned dissipation on the lawn, in wood and field, at Newport and the White Mountains. Humanity wants and will have a very full civilization, like ours—the note and harmony of New England character, of Scotch and English character, French, Swedish and German turn of mind. So these countries are the region, yearly, of fields browned and bleached, of ice-clad lakes and rivers; thus is drawn East and West this belt of smartest men, greatest intelligence and best society.

As the man comes about once a year to tune the pianos and organs, straightening up the weak and flattened notes, restoring the music to its true tension and ring, so Winter makes his yearly round to give the right strain and quality to the minds of the people, impart force to the spirits, give due vigor and harmony to the whole life that had flattened away, half a note or more, through the exhausting labors of the past hot season. Thus the powers are set to a full resonant key—a higher pitch given to the moral and social nature.

When the year is inverted, as Thompson's Seasons term it, then it is that vitality and strength, out of rich and abounding nature, run to men and women, rosy cheeks and robust character, and not to fruits and flowers, bulbs and foliage. A climate continually warm and soft, in one direction or another, unnerves the faculties—gives us Cuba and Congo instead of Massachusetts and New York. Where tight houses, the warmth of thick clothing and well-piled fires are not needed for comfort, there the soil opens up, not so much into learning, moral elevation and resolute manhood, as into the teeming life of hippopotamus, crocodile and luxuriant flora.

Winter is the time for reading up what has been accumulating. It is the time that sees—most useful occupation—the studious with book in hand, instead of asleep beneath a spreading palm as in Guatemala or Borneo. This is the space, as the earth goes sidling round the orb of day, when boys and girls, by books and snow-storms are schooled to self-assertion, knowledge and good, fibrous fortitude. Many a lad has taken valiantly to the cold weather preparation and found it excellent for stamina in the make-up of the farmer, editor, merchant and stirring citizen. In other words, within our parallels the season of frost and climatic gloom but names the tropic months, wherein come forth the buds and flowers of mental activity, social sprightliness and religious fervor.

It is an easy thing to one whose mind soars above bull-fights, beer-gardens, Sunday saloons and the like, to set out through the crisp air and help make the religious meeting when there is abroad singing birds, springing grass, warm zephyrs and summer dresses. Then a walk to church unmuffled, with unmuffled companions, is a pleasure. But quite a different thing is it, and an evidence of ardor, determination and moving capabilities, to sally out churchward when the cold slant of the sun's rays so easily typifies many a man's slant feelings towards home fires during holy time. When low degrees in the air do not benumb they carry a spur to the soul's motions. And here is no small measure of moral seed-corn—to use another figure—the planting of persistency, godliness, sacred liberty, enlightened rule and industries.

When December skies and those that follow cap the landscape, with special fitness and benevolence are marshalled out the tender feelings—tender towards the exposed, the destitute, the unfortunate—sufferers by fire, panic and general poverty. More beautiful, then, than silks and ribbons, equipage and all that wealth can buy, is the little boy in the street taking the poor little girl under his cloak, too thin and small even for one.

If Winter and rock-ribbed hills set to growing in human nature the spiritual above the animal, the noble, energetic and godly, then let there be ice and the protruding ribs.

W. M. BICKNELL.

"GEORGE ELIOT'S READERS."

To The Editor of the Inquirer :

To the seven classes of egotists defined in your Atlantic excerpt, will you add another class of a different sort?

Simple-minded people, who see that she combines in her novels about all which different modern novelists try to get into their works in their several methods, and which she finally produces in her own way. I do not mean that she combines all technical qualities, plot, diction, realism of life etc., but that she sets forth the substance in her own fashion. Defective she certainly is, and the whole ideal novel does not appear in her finished result, but is this nineteenth century rounded and complete? Does the novel ever rise above its time? It is interesting to compare the Atlantic criticism with much of the twaddle written about Shakspeare.

CASAUBON.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

"77."

DING, dong! Ding, dong!
Seventy-six will soon be gone;
Seventy-seven's coming on,—
Ding, dong! Ding, dong!

Tell us, year, before you go,—
Ding, dong! Ding, dong!
Why at last you hurry so,
Though at first so very slow?
Ding, dong!
Can't you wait a little longer,
Till the baby-year gets stronger?
Ding, dong! Ding, dong!

Why can't years come back again,
Just the same as they have been?
Ding, dong! Ding, dong!
Big folks say 't would never do,
None would live the past anew;
But I'd like it,—wouldn't you?
Ding, dong! Ding, dong!

Just the same? No, I must be Better with each year, you see,
Old year! Don't you pity me?
Ding, dong! Ding, dong,
Ding!

—St. Nicholas for January.

THE WHITE LADY.

It was the day before Christmas, and it had been snowing, snowing, hard all the morning; so that when Harry, Dora and Nellie came home from school, they found the ground all covered with beautiful, soft snow.

It had hardly snowed once all Winter, and the children had planned all manner of nice things which they would do as soon as the first snow came.

It seemed so beautiful it should have come to-day—to-day, of all days in the year, when it would have been hardest to have settled down to any quiet, in-door play. The hours seemed so long which lay between this afternoon and to-morrow morning.

Besides, if they stayed in the house, they were almost sure that they should guess some of the secrets which mamma and Santa Claus were stowing away in all the drawers and closets. Then, too, they would most surely have been obliged to peep through the key-hole of the library door, so very anxious were they to see what could be in there, which had made mamma lock it up so tightly all the week.

But now, thanks to this dear, kind snow, Harry would be able to do something which they had all talked and thought about doing for a great many weeks.

Harry felt sure he could make a figure out of snow which would look just like a little white girl when he had dressed it up in some of Dora's clothes. So the children set to work, Harry rolling and pounding the snow which Nellie and Dora brought to him in their little wagons. They worked away very busily for a long while, but it was not such an easy thing to do as Harry had thought it would be, and perhaps the "White Lady," as Nellie christened her, would never have been finished if Uncle Charley, who spent all his time in making men and women out of white marble, had not looked out of the window, and seeing Harry's trouble, came down into the garden to help them. He only seemed to give a little pat here and a push there, when, behold, there she stood, looking just like a real little girl, with Nellie's summer hat on her head and Dora's new lunch-basket hanging by its blue ribbons on her round, white arm.

"Now what shall we put into our White Lady's basket?" said Harry when all was finished. "Oh! I'll tell you," answered Uncle Charley after an instant's pause; "you see your White Lady is a kind of Christmas Fairy, who can do all manner of wonderful things. Now each of you shall tell me what you most wish for in all the world. I'll write the wishes down on these slips of paper, then we will fold them all up, drop them into the White Lady's basket, and to-morrow morning we shall see which wish she thinks the best, for that will be the one she will grant."

"Oh! how splendid! how nice!" cried the three children, jumping about like so many grasshoppers. "Me first, please Uncle," and Harry pushed to Uncle's side and whispered in his ear, "I wish that I had a great, big drum, with a flag painted on the side and two real long drumsticks." "There, that will do, Harry," and Uncle Charley wrote the wish down and gave the paper to Harry, who folded it carefully and dropped it into the basket hanging on the white Lady's arm.

Nelly came up on tip-toe, and throwing both her arms about her Uncle's neck, said very low indeed, "I wish I had a lovely, long, red sash just like the one Flora wore to my party; oh, do you think the White Lady will give it to me?" "Wait and see, dear," said Uncle Charley, handing Nellie the paper on which he had written her wish.

"Come, little one, it is your turn now. What does my little girl wish for most?" said Uncle Charley, as he drew Dora to his side and bent his ear close down to her lips. Dora hesitated a moment, and then whispered very softly, "Uncle Charley, do you know, Alice Lane thinks Santa Claus don't know about her, because she's so poor. Do you think the White Lady would bring me a beautiful dolly for her?" "We will see, dear, but put your wish into the basket quickly, for it is growing dark and cold, and it is nearly tea-time." So the children hurried in to take their tea, hang up their stockings and go to bed, leaving the White Lady standing quietly outside with the three wishes tucked away in the basket on her arm.

Harry, Nellie and Dora slept so soundly that they did not hear Santa Claus come down the chimney, nor see the blue and red stockings grow fat and round. With the first ray of Christmas sunshine they awoke and sprang quickly out of bed, with little cries of delight as they spied their treasures.

The first thing which little Dora saw, lying close beside her stocking, was a beautiful wax dolly, with golden curls and blue eyes, while a piece of paper was pinned on her lovely pink silk dress, on which was written these words, in large letters, "For Alice Lane, with the White Lady's love." So poor little Alice had indeed a "merry Christmas," and it made Dora very happy to see her friend so glad, while Nellie and Harry both thought the White Lady very kind. As soon as they were dressed, the children all ran out into the garden to see the White Lady and thank her for the doll, but no White Lady was to be seen, only a little heap of snow with a hat and basket half buried beneath it.

E. A. O.

SELECTIONS.

SEEK FIRST THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

From Dr. Martineau's "Hours of Thought."

WHAT means does Christianity afford of blessing the secular and spiritual extremes of character, and by union of these opposites, completing the healthful circuit of our moral power? Hitherto it seems to have kept them wider apart than ever; and while the minds at either end appear to have some force of reason, it is in the one case reason degraded into too gross a sense; in the other, raised to too ethereal a sanctity. There is no juster complaint against human exaggeration than this. And, strange as it may seem, the errors of the two parties, however contrasted in result, is one and the same. They both feel, what the language of Jesus emphatically states, that there is some sort of opposition between the living for worldly and living for spiritual good. But they altogether mistake the nature of this opposition. They fancy it to consist in this: that the two orders of pursuit have quite different spheres of work; that what the secular man does the religious man must avoid; that the quest of temporal advantages is one kind of business, taking our industry with an appropriate set of occupations; the quest of heavenly sanctity another kind of business, prescribing occupations almost perfectly distinct. Accordingly, there are employments which this pernicious moral superstition has branded with an equivocal mark of irreligion; and other employments which are supposed to constitute the substance of the true Christian obedience. The provision and government of house and home, the daily meal, the social hour of recreation or of mirth, the transaction of private business or the control of public affairs, the enlargement of knowledge, the practice of art, the pursuit of truth—in short, all the characteristic engagements of the citizen, the merchant, the politician, the student, are conceived to lie upon the secular side of human life, and to constitute our temptations to evil rather than our opportunities for good. On the other hand, works of charity to the needy and visits of conversion to the guilty, the exercises of private devotion and of public prayer, the contemplation of saintly examples and the accumulation of Scriptural impressions and unearthly thoughts, direct and broad conversation about things invisible and comparisons of inward experience, are supposed to constitute the religious staple of life, from which every distraction is a humiliating concession to the low and shameful necessities of a fallen nature. Hence the popular conception of heaven wholly excludes all idea of activity and thought and admits nothing but a perpetuity of positive worship. Hence, too, when a man of this narrow religion becomes entangled in affairs of the world he carries into them no clear, calm feeling of sacred obligation to guide him in the path of noble uprightness, but rather a conscience half flurried to find himself there at all, amid things too profane to come within his province of duties; his faith can make nothing of such sinful materials, except resolve to escape from them as fast as it can; and need I say that one who, with this feeling, gets, with no small stake at issue, into an unmanageable devil's world, is very apt to let Satan have his own way, in despair of battling with him on his own ground? And hence, finally, he who with such a belief is determined never to capitulate, has no resource but the hermit's; to quit the scene of human energy and abandon the cares for subsistence and going about some diviner work, expect the ravens to come and feed him, while he sits still. This he calls a trust in Providence, though it is manifestly a contempt of the established course of Providence, and a trust only in that which would directly violate it. He calls it a quest of the kingdom of God, though it is a flight from the realm of allotted duty and a renounced allegiance of natural obligations. He calls it an emancipation from all thought of the morrow, yet it is plainly the surest way of filling the mind with real anxiety about "the meat that perisheth," and of engaging the whole religious affections, as in a gamester's play, in the precarious question of its failure or supply.

... In what, then, consists the opposition between the pursuit of natural and the pursuit of spiritual good? The desire of physical supplies and the aspiration after the kingdom of God? It lies in this: He who seeks after "what he shall eat and what he shall drink" is one whose chief conscious aim is to get such things; he who seeks first the kingdom of God, is one whose chief conscious aim is not to get them unworthily.

The one throws his whole reflective and directing powers into the work of instinct, madly enhancing yet intellectually guiding its intensity, infuriating the chase, yet giving it precision, and turning the innocent tendency of the creature into the clever passion of the demon. The other applies his thoughtfulness to the control of his instincts, and the establishment among them of the true divine subordination of the lower to the higher. He never quits the helm to feed the fire; to steer the good ship, and not to double the tension of the steam, is the allotted office of his skill. He knows where his real danger lies, not in having appetites so weak as to need provocatives, but in not duly feeling the humble place they occupy; in sinking down, down among them out of sight of the higher principles of action, in absolutely forgetting, in the delirium of pursuit, the noble possibilities stretched along his upper range of powers, and deceived by mere mental light, lapsing into moral darkness the most profound; with eye, like Lucifer's, for ages fallen from heaven, so accustomed to lurid fires and crimsoned streams that the white and virgin beams of the morning star and all the cool silence of the skies are unimaginable quite. In thus confining himself to the regulation of his natural aims and the studious guardianship of the divine rights, so apt to be forgotten, of their highest ranks, he exercises a genuine trust in Providence, the very trust which Jesus enjoins. . . . The Christian trusts his natural appetites to find him all needful physical goods, believing them neither an over provision nor an under provision; he lets their amount alone, and directs all his conscious aims to a higher point, the maintenance of the nobler affections in their loftier place. . . . The more unconscious (i. e., without thought) our pursuit of physical good, the better for the ends of life; the more distinct and conscious our pursuit of moral and spiritual good, the nearer are we to the kingdom of God. The whole energy of our will may be bent on the maintenance of a divine order, proportion and harmony, among the principles of action. This may be our sole earnest concern; the engagement of heart, in favor of which we may resign all thoughts for the morrow of time, or even, I would add, the morrow of eternity.

OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE WISCONSIN CONFERENCE.

THIS oldest of the local Unitarian conferences of the country held its nineteenth session, Dec. 12 to 14, with the church at Kenosha. Ignoring limitations, however, as the liberal faith should, it gratefully welcomed several delegates from the neighboring Chicago Conference. The meeting showed the diverse elements that are uniting in the liberal work. Only ten ministers were present, yet among them were emigrants from England, Wales and Scotland, as well as from the Baptist, Methodist, Congregationalist, Episcopalian and Presbyterian churches. But with all their past and even present diversity of opinion the meeting showed a rare harmony and community of spirit.

Rev. G. E. Gordon, of Milwaukee, opened the Conference Tuesday evening with a sermon on Jesus' place in the growth of religion. The next morning Rev. J. L. Jones, fresh from another missionary tour in Southern Illinois and Indiana, and aglow with his usual ardor for the faith, read a ringing paper on "Our Mission." Next in order Dr. Kerr, of Rockford, gave an eloquent address on "The Methods of Estimation in the Recognition of Truth." Dr. K. holding truth to be not so much a definite thing, as an upward tendency, recognizes it in all faiths; and hence his position, although sometimes a little indistinct, is one of rare tolerance and charity. Then came Brooke Herford, whose healthy looks alone are themselves a benediction, with an excellent sermon on "Inspiration." Finally E. P. Powell, whose direct speech and manner inspire one with a thorough contempt for all "crookedness," closed the day with a very scholarly lecture on the "Age of Jesus."

Thursday morning Mr. Gordon captivated his hearers, and what is better, turned them all into would-be reformers, and made them feel that religion ought to be nothing if not practical, by a paper on "Prison Discipline," explaining the "mark system" and its effects on convicts. In the afternoon Rev. R. L. Herbert, of Geneva, whose keen tongue and pen were once the pride and are now the terror of the orthodox Welsh, gave a very original and pleasing sermon on "Self"; and Rev. J. N. Pardee, late of Jackson, Mich., followed with a fine one on "Immortality." Rev. J. T. Sunderland fitly closed the Conference with a strong sermon portraying "The Better Religion Coming."

Mr. S. Y. Brande, of Kenosha, acted as President of the meeting. Rev. G. Fisher, of Monroe, so long the faithful Secretary of the Conference, was present, but had given himself no place on the programme. During the session he received a telegram announcing the death of Prof. Copeland, formerly of the Whitewater Normal School, since of Indianapolis, a young man of great promise in the fields of science and of liberal thought, and who had taken part in the last meeting of the Conference. The sad news called out from Rev. J. L. Jones a touching tribute to his memory and appropriate resolutions were passed.

The following officers of the Conference were chosen for the following year:

President, Z. G. Simmons, Kenosha; Vice-Presidents, Fenner Kimball, Janesville; A. A. Roberts, Baraboo; Secretary, J. Fischer, Monroe; Treasurer, G. E. Gordon, Milwaukee.

Among the resolutions adopted was the following:

"Resolved, That with grateful memories for the Liberal Christian and its faithful work, we welcome its successor, THE INQUIRER, with our approval and support; and that we recommend THE INQUIRER to our churches and to those wishing a liberal religious paper."

The Conference was an entire success. The variety and ability of the papers and of the discussions on them, and the earnestness and devotion shown throughout the meetings, aroused in the hearers new zeal for the cause; and the first band of delegates from Racine were completely taken by surprise in finding that there still remained for them so good a thing as these Conference meetings.

H. M. S.

FROM CHICAGO.

THE one uppermost question in Chicago is the dullness of trade. The moral sense of the nation, perhaps, needs reviving by a tight pinch of natural providence. There were some things of the heroic sort done after election that we are likely to be compelled to ignore. Doing considerable knavish, sharp practice on the supposition that the people will endorse it in order to keep Democrats out of power, is presuming more than is safe. The line that divides the parties is about as imaginary as a parallel of latitude. It is a growing conviction here that bulldozing must be cured by some other means than throwing votes out of the ballot-box. Meanwhile, the pressure financially is simply getting to be unendurable. The churches are not suffering directly so much as indirectly. This is the season for immense literary activity, but there is an unusual dullness. The Philosophical Society is steadily at work, with good attendance but diminished membership. A New Science Association has been formed. But the Sunday Lectures have failed to pay. Mrs. Leonowens drew good houses for the McCormick Hall Course and for the Third Unitarian, but not paying audiences. Julia Ward Howe was in the city yesterday, but was not heard from simply because "lectures will not pay expenses." Parsons, in the Sunday Course, delivered one of his brilliant and witty lectures to a meagre audience. Prof. Prichards is here again with his own famous "Matter King" and "Matter Queen."

Savage's first volume on "The Religion of Evolution" is drawing the attention of the most careful thinkers. There was a Religion of Astronomy, then a Religion of Geology. There is a Religion of Evolution. "Facts and the laws of facts" must lead to deductions that can be classed as pertaining to religion.

Some of us, following the Irishman's example, "just dropped up" to see the Wisconsin fellows, last week, at Kenosha. The Chicago parsons did the preaching for them; but the essays, all keen and to the point, were by Jones, Kerr, Gordon, and Herbert. Sunderland closed with a capital sermon on "The Better Religion Coming." Gordon has made a special study of Prison Reform and gave an excellent resumé of the work of McConochie and Count Montesinos. It was discussed with spirit. The ratio of criminals is increasing at such a rate that no question can be of more practical value. The Kenosha Church is run by a copartnership of Simmons's. One Simmons does the preaching; and the other Simmons, besides running one or two dozen banks, stores, farms, etc., does the paying. It's a case of "My Double and how he did me," and he does it grandly.

The return of Dudley to Milwaukee is notable. He is called to a Congregational Church, and making no compromise of his independence, he accepts. He is a capital fellow, with a head made up of strong points. The liberal religious element is slowly drawing together over sectarian lines. The time ought not to be distant when we shall generously fraternize. Our churches are too much isolated; and the day has come when our old friends across the border give us a kinder judgment. Well, God bless every brave heart that looks light-ward. Since I have been in Chicago one Presbyterian, two Congregationalists, and one Baptist have said to me, essentially, that they were wholly alienated from the Orthodox faith and would occupy Unitarian pulpits if called to them. Prof. Swing is doing a grand work in liberating his followers from bigotry. Cautious, and well understanding his position, he makes few mistakes, and preaches a large-hearted gospel that brings men nearer together. It is a good thing to know the men on the other side and be able to feel with them. I am glad that I was one among them and cannot forget the trials of a soul that is outgrowing its birthright creed. We are glad to see the INQUIRER start out in a spirit of good fellowship for all inquiring minds rather than as the organ of a clique.

POWELL.

JOTTINGS.

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS' second marriage is just proved by a document discovered in the Royal Library at Madrid.

REV. F. S. THACHER, of West Newton, will supply the pulpit of the Unitarian society in Berlin, Mass., for the next three months.

A MAMMOTH Sunday School Convention has been determined upon for next July, at Loveland, Ohio, to supply for ten days a park, museum, music school, normal school for teachers, and daily meetings. Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky, Tennessee and West Virginia are to be represented.

THE Chrystie street synagogue has done itself special honor. Abraham Greenthal was refused the privilege of paying for his pew because a receiver of stolen goods. He was still allowed to attend worship; but Abram is not satisfied. He appeals to the judge of the Court of Common Pleas to restore his rights.

FRANCIS XAVIER has perfected the arrangement for a La Trappe monastery, three miles from Buffalo, for this most severe order, who sleep upon the floor, eat only bread and vegetables, worship at midnight, dig their own graves, and observe perpetual silence. The brethren are selected from Turkey, Ireland, France and Belgium.

REV. DR. ADAMS, in his earnest eulogy of the secular press as a far greater power than the pulpit or the religious journal, forgets that the daily journal perishes with the day, while the religious paper is preserved, is read in the family, and often handed round to friends, and never dismissed with a glance at the stock column, as many merchants treat the "daily." E. E. Hale extolled this advantage of the "weekly" at the Christian Register dinner-party not many years ago, and with great effect.

A VERY beautiful application of Scripture was made lately at the funeral service of a Newburgh gardener, whose first name was John. The dying man was a victim to his love of flowers. In his last hours he turned to his weeping wife, and said, "You would not cry, dearest, if you only saw the splendor I see now!" and these assurances he repeated again and again. So over his lifeless form the minister began the reading of the Scriptures with, "And I John saw the holy city coming down out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband."

HARLEM.—At a meeting of the Fourth Unitarian Society of the city of New York, held after service, Sunday morning, Dec. 17, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, The Rev. William T. Clarke, who has been pastor of this society for the past eight years, has tendered his resignation, and

WHEREAS, This society, at a special meeting called for the purpose of considering the subject, unanimously declined to accept his resignation, and

WHEREAS, Our pastor, after the regular service last Sunday morning, eloquently and forcibly presented his reasons for declining to withdraw the same, and expressed his unalterable determination to sever the pleasant and harmonious pastoral relations which have existed between us for so many years; therefore

Resolved, That our late pastor is not in the slightest degree responsible for the apparent discouraging condition of this society, inasmuch as the present financial embarrassment and ill-success of this enterprise can be traced directly or indirectly to circumstances and conditions which it has been impossible for him or the society to control.

Resolved, That we herewith record our appreciation of the high intellectual and spiritual teachings which it has been our privilege to enjoy during the past eight years.

Resolved, That the sincere and heartfelt thanks of this society be and hereby are cordially tendered to the Rev. William T. Clarke and his estimable family for the many kindnesses we have received at their hands, and it is our earnest prayer that Heaven's choicest blessings may constantly attend them.

Resolved, That we shall ever cherish the memory of the years that we have passed in each other's society and communion, and shall ever look upon them as among the happiest of our lives.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to our late pastor, and also for publication in THE INQUIRER.

(Signed)

E. A. PRICE,
B. S. RAYNER,
C. A. SHOREY, } Committee.

Since Mr. Clarke's resignation a committee on the supply of the pulpit has been appointed and Sunday school and the usual morning service have been held without interruption. Rev. John Andrew, of Newark, preached on the 17th, and last Sunday an appropriate Christmas service was conducted by Mr. John A. Bellows, of Montclair. During January a special course of Sunday evening services will be conducted by Rev. Drs. Bellows and Putnam and Rev. Messrs. Chadwick and Camp. The attendance at the Christmas services was quite good, and, notwithstanding the loss of their minister, the society is courageous and hopeful for the future.

DIED.

WILKINSON.—At Syracuse, N. Y., on Thursday, December 21, 1876, Abby May, aged two years, daughter of Alfred and Charlotte May Wilkinson, and granddaughter of Rev. Samuel J. May, deceased.

The Inquirer.

Published every Thursday, from the middle of September to the middle of July, in the Park Bank Building, 214 Broadway, New York.

To be in season for insertion the same week, communications intended for publication must be forwarded in time to reach this office not later than Tuesday. No attention is paid to anonymous communications. We require the name and address of every writer, not necessarily for publication, but as guarantees of good faith.

Communications relating to the editorial department of the paper should be addressed, "Editor of the Inquirer, P. O. Box 109, New York City;" all others to "Publisher," same address.

No person is authorized to collect money or make contracts for the Inquirer, who cannot show written authority from the Publisher.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

Three Dollars per year, in advance. Clergymen, Two Dollars per year. Postage, Twenty Cents per year, in advance. Remittances should be made by Registered Letter or by Post-Office Money Order, or Draft on New York payable to PUBLISHER OF THE INQUIRER.

ADVERTISING RATES.

Six cents per agate line per week; outside page and pages next reading matter, ten cents per line. Special Notices twenty cents per line.

Discount—Five per cent. on yearly accounts amounting to $250 and under $500. Ten per cent. on yearly accounts amounting to $500 or more.

Copy for Thursday's paper received until Tuesday afternoon.

Advertisements must be acceptable in every respect.

Office, PARK BANK BUILDING, 214 Broadway.

Address,

THE INQUIRER,

Box 109, New York.

Special Notices.

Protestant Leaders.

A COURSE OF LECTURES

BY

JOHN W. CHADWICK,

AT THE

Second Unitarian Church, Brooklyn,
Corner of Clinton and Congress Streets.

1876—77.

LECTURES:

- I. Luther and the Reformation. Sunday evening, Nov. 5, 1876.
- II. John Calvin and his System. Sunday evening, Dec. 3, 1876.
- III. George Fox and Quakerism. Sunday evening, Dec. 17, 1876.
- IV. Wesley and Methodism. Sunday evening, Jan. 7, 1877.
- V. Emanuel Swdenborg. Sunday evening, Feb. 4, 1877.
- VI. Murray and Universalism. Sunday evening, March 4, 1877.
- VII. Thomas Paine: His Relation to his own and later Times in Matters of Religion. Sunday evening, April 1, 1877.
- VIII. Channing and Unitarianism. Sunday evening, April 15, 1877.
- IX. Theodore Parker. Sunday evening, May 6, 1877.

Hour of Lecture, HALF-PAST SEVEN.

Morning Service at 10:35 precisely. Vesper Service, Third Sunday Evening of each Month, with the above exceptions.

Madame Ivan C. Michels,

SHAKSPEARIAN READER.

Accepts engagements for Church and Parlor Readings. Ladies and Gentlemen thoroughly instructed in Elocution. For Terms and Testimonials apply to 33 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

The Address of Rev. John F.

LOOKE is to the care of W. H. Baldwin, President, Young Men's Christian Union, 18 Boylston St., Boston.

Littell's Living Age.

Jan. 1, 1877, the LIVING AGE enters upon its 132d volume. During the year it will furnish to its readers the productions of the foremost authors above named and many others; embracing the choicest Serial and Short Stories by the LEADING FOREIGN NOVELISTS, and an amount unapproached by any other periodical in the world, of the most valuable literary and scientific matter of the day, from the pens of the leading Essayists, Scientists, Critics, Discerners and Editors, representing every department of knowledge and Progress.

The LIVING AGE (in which "Every Saturday" has been merged) is a weekly magazine giving more than double column octavo pages of reading-matter yearly. It presents in an inexpensive form, considering its amount of matter, with freshness, owing to its weekly issue, and with a satisfactory completeness attempted by no other publication, the best Essays, Reviews, Criticisms, Tales, Sketches of Travel and Discovery, Poetry, Scientific, Biographical, Historical and Political Information, from the entire body of Foreign Periodical Literature, and from the pens of

THE ABLEST LIVING WRITERS.

"A pure and perpetual reservoir and fountain of entertainment and instruction."—Hon. Robert C. Winthrop. "The best periodical in America."—Theo. L. Cuyler. "Fairly without a rival."—Congregationalist, Boston. "It reproduces the best thoughts of the best minds of the civilized world upon all topics of living interest."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

"The choicest literature of the day."—N. Y. Tribune. "Every weekly number of 'The Living Age' now-a-days is equal to a first-class monthly. For solid merit, it is the cheapest magazine in the land."—The Advance, Chicago.

"With it alone a reader may fairly keep up with all that is important in the literature, history, politics and science of the day."—The Methodist, N. Y.

"Indispensable to every one who desires a thorough compendium of all that is admirable and noteworthy in the literary world."—Boston Post.

"Ought to find a place in every American home."—N. Y. Times.

Now is the time to subscribe, beginning with the New Year. Published weekly at $3 per year, free of postage; or for $10.50 THE LIVING AGE and either one of the American $4 Monthlies (or Harper's Weekly or Bazar) will be sent for a year, both postpaid; or for $9.50, the LIVING AGE and Scribner's St. Nicholas or Appleton's Journal.

EXTRA OFFER FOR 1877.—To all new subscribers for 1877 will be sent gratis the six numbers of 1876, containing, with other valuable matter, the first instalment of a new and powerful serial story, "The Marquis of Lossie," by GEO. MACDONALD, now appearing in the LIVING AGE from advance sheets.

Address LITTELL & GAY, Boston.

ADAPTED TO ALL SECTIONS OF THE COUNTRY.

THE NEW JERSEY AGRICULTURIST.

A plain, practical 8-page Journal, devoted to the

FARMING, GARDENING AND HOUSEHOLD INTERESTS.

TELLS WHEN AND HOW TO PLANT.

HINTS FOR EACH MONTH.

FARM,

GARDEN,

LAWN,

GREENHOUSE,

WINDOW AND INDOOR GARDENING.

Only 50 Cents a Year. Sample Copies Free.

Liberal pay and a Premium (Cash) to Agents.

NEW JERSEY AGRICULTURIST,

P. O. BOX 2576, New York City.

$55 TO $77 a Week to Agents. Samples FREE P. O. VICKERY, Augusta Maine.

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY

Manufacture those celebrated Bells for CHURCHES, ACADEMIES, &c. Price List and Circulars sent free. HENRY McSHANE & CO. BALTIMORE, MD.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALETT & CO., Portland, Maine.

10 PER CENT NET.

Kansas, Missouri and Iowa Improved Farm First Mortgage Coupon Bonds Guaranteed. We guarantee, as an assurance, that we loan not to exceed one-third of the actual value. In over six years' business never lost a dollar; never delayed a day on interest or principal; neither we nor our customers ever took an acre of land under foreclosure. Send for particulars and references.

J. B. WATKINS & CO., LAWRENCE, KAN., or HENRY DICKINSON, Manager, 72 Cedar Street, New York.

OUT-SELLING IMMENSELY—THE Centennial Exposition,

DESCRIBED AND ILLUSTRATED.

The only complete, richly illustrated, low price work, 750 pages, only $2.50. Treats of the entire history, grand buildings, wonderful exhibits, curiosities, great days, etc. The best chance of 100 years to coin money fast, as everybody wants this work. 1,000 agents appointed first four weeks, 5,000 wanted. For full particulars address quickly, HERRMAN BOOTHMAN, Publishers, Philadelphia, Pa., Cincinnati, O., Chicago Ill., or Springfield, Mass.

Be not deceived by premature books assuming to be "official," etc.

EMPLOYMENT.

I want 1,000 agents to canvass for the COMPLETE HERBALIST and GROWING WORLD. I will give such terms and furnish such advertising facilities that no man need make less than $20 per month and all expenses—no matter whether he ever canvassed before or not. Address DR. O. PHELPS BROWN, 21 Grand Street, Jersey City, N. J., and full particulars will be sent by return mail.

EMPLOYMENT.

ANY PERSON of ordinary intelligence can earn a living by canvassing for The Illustrated Weekly. Experience is not necessary—the only requisite being, as in all successful business, industry and energy. Send for particulars. Address CHARLES CLUCAS & CO., 14 Warren St., N. Y.

BALD HEADS

Can be covered with a piece exactly fitted to the Bald spot, so perfect, and with work so ingeniously contrived as to appear each hair just issuing from the skin, the hair being exactly of the same shade and texture as the growing hair; they are so perfect they cannot be detected. Made only at BATCHELOR'S Celebrated Wig Factory, 16 Bond Street, N. Y.

HAIR DYE.

BATCHELOR'S CELEBRATED HAIR DYE is splendid. It never fails. The only true and perfect Dye. Harmless, reliable, instantaneous. No disappointment, no ridiculous tints; remedies the ill effects of bad dyes, leaves the hair soft and beautiful Black or Brown. Sold and put up by BATCHELOR'S Wig Factory, 16 Bond St., N. Y. Sold by all druggists.

W. A. Batchelor's Curative Ointment. Immediately cures Ring-Worm, Tetter, Itching of the Head, and all Eruptions of the Skin, Face or Body.

W. A. Batchelor's Alaska Seal Oil for the Hair. The best Hair Oil in use.

W. A. Batchelor's Dentifrice for beautifying and preserving the teeth and Gums and deodorizing the breath.

W. A. Batchelor's New Cosmetics.

Black or Brown, for tinting the Hair, Whiskers or Moustaches without greasing them. Sold at factory, 16 Bond Street, New York, and by all druggists. Ask for them.

The Toll Gate! Prize Picture sent free! An ingenious gem. 50 objects to find. Address, with stamp, E. O. Abbey, Buffalo, N. Y. 1891-ly

BABBITT'S TOILET SOAP.

Unrivalled for the toilet and the bath. No artificial and deceptive odors to cover common and objectionable ingredients. After years of scientific experiment the manufacturer of Babbitt's Best Soap has perfected and now offers to the public THE FINEST TOILET SOAP in the World.

For Use in the Nursery It has No Equal. Worth ten times its cost to every mother and family in Christendom. Sample box containing a cake of 6 oz. each, sent free to any address on receipt of 15 cents.

Address B. T. Babbitt, New York City.

$12 a day at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine.

PRINTING PRESSES FROM $10 TO $50. SEND 10 CTS TO WY EDWARDS, 36 CHURCH ST. NEW YORK.

ASTHMA AND CATARRH'S ASTHMA.

Having struggled twenty years between life and death with ASTHMA, I experimented with cough cures and herbs and inhaling the medicine. I fortunately discovered a sure cure for ASTHMA and CATARRH. Guaranteed to relieve every case of Asthma instantly, so the patient can lie down to sleep. By mail, $1.00 per box. Address D. L. LANGE, 21 Maple Creek, Ohio. For sale by Druggists.

HANOVER FIRE INSURANCE CO., NO. 120 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Forty-seventh Semi-Annual Statement.

JANUARY 1, 1876.

Cash Capital.....	$500,000 00
Reinsurance Fund.....	587,717 75
Outstanding Liabilities.....	112,298 14
Net Surplus.....	392,769 20

ASSETS.

Cash in Bank and Office.....	$102,756 92
United States Six Per Cent. Bonds.....	596,637 50
Bonds and Mortgages, being first lien on improved Real Estate in the Cities of New York and Brooklyn.....	326,025 00
Loans on Call (Market Value of Securities, ties, $136,790).....	114,850 01
City and County Bonds.....	230,265 00
Bank and Trust Co. Stocks.....	41,550 00
First Mort. R. R. Bonds and Stocks.....	57,250 00
Balance in hands of Agents and Uncollected Office Premiums.....	99,163 96
Accrued Interest on Bonds and Mortgages and Call Loans.....	7,067 22
Real Estate.....	17,109 49
	$1,592,775 99

BENJ. S. WALCOTT, President.
I. REMSEN LANE, Secretary.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs,
such as Coughs, Colds,
Whooping Cough,
Bronchitis, Asthma,
and Consumption.

The reputation it has attained, in consequence of the marvellous cures it has produced during the last half century, is a sufficient assurance to the public that it will continue to realize the happiest results that can be desired. In almost every section of country there are persons, publicly known, who have been restored from alarming and even desperate diseases of the lungs, by its use. All who have tried it, acknowledge its superiority; and where its virtues are known, no one hesitates as to what medicine to employ to relieve the distress and suffering peculiar to pulmonary affections. CHERRY PECTORAL always affords instant relief, and performs rapid cures of the milder varieties of bronchial disorder, as well as the more formidable diseases of the lungs.

As a safeguard to children, amid the distressing diseases which beset the Throat and Chest of Childhood, it is invaluable; for, by its timely use, multitudes are rescued and restored to health.

This medicine gains friends at every trial, as the cures it is constantly producing are too remarkable to be forgotten. No family should be without it, and those who have once used it never will.

Eminent Physicians throughout the country prescribe it, and Clergymen often recommend it from their knowledge of its effects.

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass.,
Practical and Analytical Chemists.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

LAMAR INSURANCE COMPANY, OF NEW YORK. Broadway, cor. John Street.

Capital, - - $200,000.

ASSETS, JANUARY 1, 1876.

Cash on hand and in Bank.....	$13,269 20
U. S. Bonds, market value.....	304,220 00
Loans on Call, Good Stocks Collateral; 1,000 00
Bonds and Mortgages on Brick Dwellings.....	58,900 00
Bills Receivable for Inland Prem's.....	1,820 65
Premiums in course of collection.....	7,394 70
New York Bank Stocks market value.....	21,487 80
	$408,092 05

Losses unadjusted estimated at $14,300 56

ISAAC R. ST. JOHN, President.

A. R. FROTHINGHAM, Vice Pres't.

WM. R. MACDIARMID, Sec'y.

HOME Insurance Co. of New York, Office No. 135 Broadway.

Forty-sixth Semi-Annual Statement, Showing the condition of the Company on the first day of July, 1876.

Cash Capital.....	$3,000,000 00
Reserve for Re-Insurance.....	1,845,521 47
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Dividends.....	247,326 66
Net Surplus.....	958,868 71

Total Assets - - - $6,051,716 84

SUMMARY OF ASSETS:

CASH IN BANKS.....	$426,946 71
BONDS AND MORTGAGES, BEING FIRST LIEN ON REAL ESTATE WORTH $4,820,000.....	1,922,738 01
UNITED STATES STOCKS (MARKET VALUE).....	2,642,125 00
BANK STOCKS (MARKET VALUE).....	287,487 50
STATE AND CITY BONDS (MARKET VALUE).....	92,260 00
LOANS ON STOCKS, PAYABLE ON DEMAND (MARKET VALUE OF SECURITIES, $547,050).....	423,650 00
INTEREST DUE ON 1st JULY 1876.....	79,594 53
BALANCE IN HAND OF AGENTS.....	181,157 19
BILLS RECEIVABLE.....	10,833 34
PREMIUMS DUE AND UNCOLLECTED ON POLICIES ISSUED AT THIS OFFICE.....	13,634 56

Total - - - $6,051,716 84

LIABILITIES.

CLAIMS FOR LOSSES OUTSTANDING ON 1st JULY 1876.....	$247,326 66
DIVIDENDS UNPAID.....	1,400 00

Total, - - - $247,326 66

CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.
A. F. WILLMARTH, Vice-Pres't.
D. A. HEALD, 2d Vice-Pres't.
J. H. WASHBURN, Secretary.

T. B. GREENE, Ass't Secretaries.
C. K. FRANCIS, Ass't Secretaries.

A Dividend of FIVE per cent. has been declared, payable on and after Tuesday, the 18th of July.

New York, 14th July, 1876.

THE NEW JERSEY MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO., NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.

J. H. STEDWELL, President.

C. H. BRINKERHOFF, Secretary.

J. H. CANNIFF, Cashier.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved ($2.00) Receipt Book." Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. Stinson & Co., Portland, Maine.

ATLANTIC MUTUAL INSURANCE CO NEW YORK,

OFFICE 51 WALL ST.

ORGANIZED 1842.

INSURES AGAINST MARINE AND INLAND
NAVIGATION RISKS.

And will issue Policies making Loss payable
in England.

Its Assets for the Security of its Policies
are more than

TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured, and are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated during the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearing interest until redeemed.

JOHN D. JONES, President.
CHARLES DENNIS, Vice-President.
W. H. H. MOORE, 2d Vice-President.
A. A. RAVEN, 3d Vice-President.
J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

PHENIX INSURANCE COMPANY, OF BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Capital..... $1,000,000 00
Cash Assets, Jan. 1, 1876..... 2,549,958 77

OFFICES:

Western Union Telegraph Building, BROADWAY, Cor. DEY St., New York.

Brooklyn Office, 12 & 14 Court St.
Brooklyn E. D. Office, 93 Broadway.

The benefits to be derived by the public from Insurance against loss by fire are so great and numerous, when compared with its trifling cost, as to render it an imperative duty on every one to avail themselves of the protection afforded by the PHENIX INSURANCE COMPANY against the destructive ravages of FIRE, which in a few moments may lay waste the fruits of a whole life of industry.

STEPHEN CROWELL, President.
PHILANDER SHAW, Vice President.
WILLIAM R. CROWELL, Secretary.
ESTABLISHED A. D. 1850.

THE MANHATTAN LIFE INSURANCE CO., or NEW YORK,

has paid $6,500,000 Death Claims;
has paid $4,500,000 return premiums to Policyholders; has a surplus of more than $1,600,000 over Liabilities; and a ratio of $120 Assets for every $100 Liabilities, by New York Standard of Valuation. It gives the best Insurance on the best lives at the most favorable rates.

EXAMINE THE PLANS AND RATES OF THIS COMPANY.

HENRY STOKES, President.
C. Y. WEMPLE, Vice-President.
J. L. HALSEY, Secretary.
S. N. STEBBINS, Actuary.
H. Y. WEMPLE, Assistant Secretaries.
H. B. STOKES, Assistant Secretaries.

TEAS AND COFFEES

AT WHOLESALE PRICES.
In lots to suit customers. SPECIAL TERMS TO CLUB ORGANIZERS and those who devote whole or part of time in selling our goods. Send for new Price List.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY,
P. O. Box 5643, Nos. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

Amateur Theatricals.

For the benefit of the Lodging House for streetboys, Nos. 314 and 316 East Thirty-fifth Street, branch of the Children's Aid Society, to be held at the hall,

NO. 1464 BROADWAY,

Near 42d Street, Thursday evening, January 25th, 1877.
at eight o'clock.

TICKETS, ONE DOLLAR. ADMIT ONE.

EVENING DRESS.

Employment Society for Poor WOMEN.

This Society now offers for sale at its store, No. 143 East 13th street, New York, a large quantity of garments, the remains of last year's stock, at very low prices. Those wishing to buy women's or children's clothing to give to the poor or to charitable institutions will find there a good supply of articles suitable for the purpose. Call and examine the garments, or send orders to

THE EMPLOYMENT SOCIETY,
143 East 13th Street,
New York City.

Christmas Appeal for Poor CHILDREN.

The Children's Aid Society wish to give a Merry Christmas to the thousands of poor children under their charge, if only the charitable send the means. They desire to distribute thousands of shoes and garments among the children of their Industrial Schools; and have pleasant festivals for these poor little ones. They propose, if money be sent, to give good Christmas dinners in the Lodging Houses to the street boys and girls. One Hundred Dollars will give 150 school children warm dinners for a month.

But the best Christmas present is a home! Who will give it? Fifty Dollars will provide three homeless children with homes in the Country. It is earnestly asked that the children of Sunday Schools and Day Schools will remember these little ones who have no home nor friends.

C. L. BRACE, Secretary,
Children's Aid Society, 19 East 4th St., N. Y.

December, 1876.
Gifts of provisions and clothing may be sent to the General Office, 19 East Fourth Street, N. Y., or will be called for, if the address be forwarded.

Donations of money may be enclosed to any of the undersigned: if in checks on Post-Office orders, made payable to the order of J. E. WILLIAMS, Treasurer.

WM. A. BOOTH, President,
100 Wall St.
JOHN EARL WILLIAMS, Treasurer,
Metropolitan National Bank, 108 Broadway.
C. L. BRACE, Secretary,
19 East Fourth Street, N. Y.

Holiday Music Books!

17 SPLENDID VOLUMES FOR PRESENTS.

Uniform in Style, Binding and Price,
which is for each Book, in Boards,
$2.50; in Cloth, $3.00; in
Cloth, full Gilt, $4.00.

THE WORLD OF SONG

is the latest Volume of Bound Music, has 280 pages, full Sheet Music Size, and is filled with the best Songs and Duets of the day.

GEMS OF THE DANCE

is the latest Bound Volume of Instrumental Music, 232 pages, Full Sheet Music Size, filled with the best recent compositions of Strauss, Lemoine, Zikoff, Faust, and other is a companion to the famous "GEMS OF STRAUSS."

Also, Vocal.

GEMS OF ENGLISH SONG,
GEMS OF SCOTTISH SONG,
GEMS OF GERMAN SONG,
WREATH OF GEMS,
SHOWER OF PEARLS,
OPERATIC PEARLS,

MOORE'S IRISH MELODIES,
SILVER WREATHS,

Instrumental.

GEMS OF STRAUSS,
HOME CHORUS, Vol. I. & II.
PIANIST'S ALBUM,
PIANOFORTE GEMS.

Also the MUSICAL TREASURE, both Vocal and Instrumental, ORGAN AT HOME, for Reed Organs, and PIANO AT HOME, with Piano Duets.

Either book mailed, post free, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,
BOSTON.

C. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 Broadway,
New York.

J. E. DITSON & CO.,
Successors to Lee & Walker,
Philadelphia.

WOOD & DAVIS,

BANKERS.

31 PINE STREET, NEW YORK.

GOVERNMENT BONDS, STATE, MUNICIPAL, RAILROAD SECURITIES AND GOLD BOUGHT AND SOLD ON COMMISSION.

C. D. WOOD.

S. D. DAVIS.

BROOKLYN ADVERTISEMENTS.

OVINGTON BROTHERS,

246, 248, 250 and 252 Fulton Street,

BROOKLYN.

Fine China and Glass,

Clocks and Bronzes.

MAJOLICA, FAIENCE, GIEN, TORQUAY AND WARES

Goods packed and shipped free of charge.

O'BRIEN & COMPANY,

IMPORTERS,

MANUFACTURERS and RETAILERS

OF DRY GOODS,

CARPETS,

CLOTHING

141 and 143, 151 to 159 Atlantic Ave.

We solicit an inspection of our magnificent assortment in all our Departments—forty-one in number—conceded to be the largest, most varied and best selected ever exhibited in Brooklyn, with a stock in value amounting to over half a million dollars.

Joseph O'Brien & Co.,

141 and 143, 151 to 159 Atlantic Avenue.

Lectures and Sermons,

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

FIRST SERIES.

The Education of Conscience.

Self Respect.

The Higher Reverence.

God on our Side.

Man and the Bible.

The Best Use of Sunday.

SECOND SERIES.

The Essential Piety of Modern Science.

A Rational Church.

Economy and Waste.

Also, WAY, TRUTH AND LIFE, a Biography of N. A. Staples, with sermons, price, $1.00.

For sale by CHARLES P. SOMERBY, 139 Eighth St., New York. Copies sent by mail, at the rate of five cents each and postage.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.

Established in 1897.

Superior Bells of Copper and Tin, mounted with the best Rotary Hangings, for Churches, Schools, Farms, Factories, Court-houses, Fire Alarms, Tower Clocks, etc. Fully Warranted. Illustrated Catalogue sent Free.

VANDUSEN & TIFT, 102 E. 2d St., Cincinnati.

a beautiful Quarterly Journal, finely illustrated, and containing an elegant colored Pioneer Plate with the first number. Price only 25 cents for the year. The first No. for 1877 just issued in German and English.
VICK'S FLOWER and VEGETABLE GARDEN, in paper, 50 cents; with elegant cloth covers, $1.00.
VICK'S CATALOGUE—300 illustrations, only 2 cents.
Address, JAMES VICK, Rochester, N. Y.

MISFIT CARPETS.

English Brussels, Three Ply and Ingrain; also, Stair Carpets, Velvet Rugs, Crumb Cloths, etc., very cheap, AT THE OLD PLACE.

112 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

Carpets carefully packed and sent to any part of the United States free of charge.

SEND FOR PRICE LIST.

J. A. BENDALL.

Lockwood, Brooks & Co.'s

STANDARD NEW BOOKS.

THE RELIGION OF EVOLUTION.

By Rev. M. J. Savage. 12mo. Cloth. $1.50.

LIGHT ON THE CLOUD; or, HINTS OF COMFORT FOR HOURS OF SORROW. By Rev. M. J. Savage. 18mo. Cloth, gilt. $1.25.

THE FARM-YARD CLUB OF GOTHAM. By Geo. B. Loring. 8vo. Tened paper. Cloth. Seventy Illustrations by well-known artists. $3.50.

STUDENT LIFE AT HARVARD.

By a Graduate. 12mo. Cloth. $1.75.

IN THE SKY GARDEN. By Lizzie W. Champney. Illustrations by J. Wells Champney. ("Champ.") 8m. 4to. Cloth. $2.00.

LONG AGO. A YEAR OF CHILD LIFE. By Ellis Gray. Illustrated from designs by Susan Hale, Helen D. Hale, and Julia P. Dabney. 16mo. Cloth. $15.00.

At all bookstores, and sent, postpaid, by the Publishers,

LOCKWOOD, BROOKS & CO.,

Boston.

Books that every Unitarian SHOULD READ.

DR. DEWEY'S NEW BOOK.

THE TWO GREAT COMMANDMENTS. SERMONS BY REV. ORVILLE DEWEY, D.D. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

ORTHODOXY AND REVIVALISM. Sermons by REV. J. T. SUNDERLAND, of Chicago. 12mo. Cloth, $1.50.

Mailed, postage paid, on receipt of price.

JAMES MILLER, Publisher,

617 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

1877. POSTPAID. $1.60.

THE NURSERY; A Monthly

MAGAZINE FOR YOUNGEST READERS. SUPERBLY ILLUSTRATED. Send ten cents for a Sample Number and Premium List.

JOHN L. SHOREY,

36 Bromfield Street, Boston.

STEARNS & BEALE,

STATIONERS,

BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS,

PRINTING and LITHOGRAPHY,

147 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

(Between Broadway and Nassau Street)

JOEL W. STEARNS, W

M. P. BEALE.

Magic Lanterns and Stereopticons

FOR

PARLOR AND EXHIBITION USE.

A fine assortment of Lantern Views from all countries and upon all subjects.

MICROSCOPES and MICROSCOPIC OBJECTS,

AND EVERY VARIETY OF SCIENTIFIC AND OPTICAL GOODS.

Send for Catalogue.

JESSE S. CHEYNEY,

(Successor in Department of Scientific Instruments to JAMES W. QUERN & CO.),

1 & 3 BOND STREET, New York.

THE INQUIRER.

VOL. XXXII.—NO. 5. }
WHOLE NO., 1575. }

NEW YORK, JANUARY 4, 1877.

{ $3.00 PER ANNUM.
{ 8 CENTS A COPY.

CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL NOTES.....	51
LEADING ARTICLES:
The Outlook.....	53
A Ministers' Institute.....	53
The Law of Inheritance.....	54
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE:
The Massachusetts State Convention of Teachers.....	55
From Boston.....	56
From Chicago.....	57
LITERARY NOTICES:
Tennyson's New Drama.....	57
Minor Notices.....	57
New Publications Received.....	58
ART AND SCIENCE:
The Relative and the Beal.....	59
Art Notes.....	60
HEARTH AND HOME:
January.....	61
Felicien David.....	61
In Dream.....	62
Recollections of Gen. Bartlett.....	62
The Morality of Careful Writing.....	62
OUR BOYS AND GIRLS:
The Grandfather's Blessing.....	63
Great-Grandfather's Books.....	64
SELECTIONS:
OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE:
The Intolerance of Bigotry.....	66
From Washington.....	66
From Davenport, Iowa.....	66
JOTTINGS.....	67
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT.....	67

HENRY W. BELLOW, James T. Bixby, R. A. Griffin, S. S. Hunting, A. D. Mayo, E. P. Powell, Minot J. Savage and C. C. Shackford are among the contributors to this number of the INQUIRER.

NEW YEAR'S DAY was celebrated with about the usual amount of social knight-errantry. It was a harsh day, ending worse than it began. But the young and the middle-aged defied the cold and the snow, and there was abundant good feeling. We found, too, much less gloom about politics or business than we expected. There seems to be either a practised submission to the hard times, or else a quiet conviction that they are not so bad as they look for industrious and discreet men of business. The day of living without work, prudence and steady enterprise went by, happily, four years ago. While it lasted it demoralized trade. The effects are still disastrous. But we judge that the most foolish are now pretty well convinced that the old and false expansion is not to return. We observe a good many quiet and successful kinds of business springing up on very sober, old-fashioned principles. We find that more and more are satisfied with what they are doing and making. If we could only all agree that we are not waiting for anything to turn up, but are already quietly on the tide which is slowly rising, it would cure a great many illusions. There are evidently to be no sudden and no important changes in business prospects. They are growing, like the days, slowly brighter. Let all business men rejoice in this small increase of light, and use it by small increases of confidence. We want no leaps into good times. We may scratch our eyes out and in by jumping from panic to elation, and from elation to panic, but we had better keep out of those bramble-bushes, and our eyes on the plain, sober path of daily drudgery at honest toil. That is the path of honor and safety, if not of speculative wealth and dizzy prosperity.

We might suggest as a motto for the Turko-Russian question the following lines from Tennyson's Harold :

“ War ? the worst that follows
Things that seem jerked out of the common rut
Of nature is the hot religious fool,
Who seeing war in heaven, for heaven's credit
Makes it on earth.”

Things are very much jerked out of nature by Mr. Lessep's canal, and by the threat of a change of door-keepers at the Dardanelles ; and so “ the hot religious fool,” be he Muslim or Greek churchman, thinks it high time to make war on earth for heaven's credit. Nothing worse could follow, except, perhaps, the total dearth of “ hot religious fools !” They have done some service from Paul's day to Luther's, and may even render some in the Eastern Question. We are not sure that the “ hot religious fool ” is not quite as useful as the “ cold irreligious sage.” Perhaps Mr. Gladstone may stand for one, and the Earl of Beaconsfield for the other.

THE railroad horror at Ashtabula, coming so soon after the burning of the Brooklyn Theatre, may fail to create as deep a feeling as it otherwise would, but can hardly fail of a thorough investigation if the newspapers do their duty. The report that officials of the railroad prevented the use of water to extinguish the flames of the burning cars, with the view of destroying evidence which might be used to support pecuniary claims against the Company, would indicate a crime which is hardly conceivable as a fact. Nevertheless, it adds to the obligation resting upon the authorities to probe the matter to its lowest depths. The harrowing details of the calamity, as well as the general character of it, bring forcibly to mind Mr. Charles Francis Adams, Junior's, able series of articles in the Atlantic Monthly.

THE news from Constantinople is of a very threatening character, though still allowing room for a slight hope of peace. The defiant attitude of Turkey, however, is a serious sign, and promises to be but another indication that whom the gods wish to destroy they first make mad. A position which compels unanimity on the part of all the Western peoples—which ranges Salisbury alongside of Ignatieff, and bids fair to consolidate British feeling, is one which cannot be taken with impunity. There are some problems which nothing but war appears competent to settle, but while war continues the horror that it is, we can only hope that diplomacy may be able to avert it, and trust to the ameliorating influences of time for a more acceptable settlement.

THE money market remains remarkably steady at a slight advance in rates, call loans ranging up to 7 per cent. to 7 per cent. gold. No special change is to be noted in business prospects, further than a somewhat more hopeful feeling, as we have stated elsewhere. The price of gold has varied very little, such movement as has taken place being downward, sales having been made as low as 106 $\frac{7}{8}$. On the other hand, silver is higher in London, with sales at 57 $\frac{1}{4}$. The political situation draws attention away from the Bland silver bill and as its supporters are very enthusiastic, there is some danger that it may slip through the Senate without being required to give the countersign. It is scarcely possible, however, that it should receive the President's signature. The "dollar of our fathers" is a very good phrase, but the silver dollar never was their dollar, in any proper sense, and it is to be hoped that it will never become the dollar of their sons.

LUCIUS ROBINSON was inaugurated Governor of New York on Monday without display, and on Tuesday sent his message to the Legislature. It is largely occupied with a statement and discussion of the State finances, the canal and local interests, which he treats of course in an able manner. No one is likely to question his ability or integrity in the duties of his office. That portion of his message, however, which is devoted to national affairs, is not so highly to be commended. We know it has become customary to take the course which he has followed in expatiating on the conduct of the general Government when addressing the State Legislature, but we think it fairly open to question whether the custom is not more honored in the breach than in the observance. Governor Hayes' suggestion that national party questions be kept so far as practicable out of the State elections seems much more pertinent. On the other hand, Governor Hayes' proposal that an amendment to the Constitution be submitted to the people, providing that the election for State offices be held on the day of the Presidential election seems, after our New York experience, to point toward the worst possible course which could be pursued.

THERE seems an improved state of political feeling. The blowing off of the partisan steam whistles has relieved both the Democrats and the Republicans from any danger of bursting with suppressed passion. It is fortunate that we had so much time to consider and discuss the issues. The South has shown excellent temper and discouraged all suggestions of settling matters by force, however blatant a few Democratic papers may have been at the North in their promises to sustain a new Southern Rebellion. There is no evidence yet of any common plan likely to be adopted by the Committees of the two Houses for counting the electoral vote. We do not despair of an agreement, especially if they consent to define and follow past precedents, without introducing any plan original in any respect with themselves. What we want is to discover clearly and authoritatively the purpose of the Constitution, and then to follow it, let it lead where it may. If it is not wholly clear, or needs change and defining, let that come by and by. But we cannot afford to make a new rule to settle an election which had only the old rule in view when it was making.

We think there are really very few sober people or patriotic men out of Congress or office, who care very much how the electoral vote is settled, provided only the law is strictly observed. As we heard a shrewd man say, the success of either candidate will be the ruin of his party. No party can survive the trials which must beset an administration that does not go into office with something more than mere legal right. We are not without suspicion that both parties are already demoralized and ruined beyond the possibility of recovery, and we should rejoice to see new and distinct issues made in the country, such as would permit serious and thoughtful men to take one side or the other with cordial conviction. At present on the fence seems the only place out of the mud.

THE last London Quarterly has an article full of startling facts concerning London pauperism, illustrating the tendency of many popular charities to increase pauperism, and so degrade society. Bristol is probably the most benevolent city in the world. In its nineteen parishes there is a dram-shop to every ten houses, and every twentieth inhabitant is a pauper; but so satisfied are these paupers with utter dependence that the Bristol & North Somerset Railway Company could not obtain laborers, even by offering the highest wages. Brittany, for the same reason, is the worst department in France for beggars and drunkenness. The decay of Holland is to be traced, we are told, to the excess of charitable endowments and consequent pauperism.

In an exceptionally severe winter in London the public were aroused through the newspapers, soup-houses were opened, food tickets, coals and groceries were freely distributed, and the wretchedness was just as great as if not a penny had been distributed. A visiting clergyman declared that with every gift of a shilling ticket he had done four-penny worth of good and eight-penny worth of harm.

Edward Denison, son of the late Bishop of Salisbury, who, like Octavia Hill, lived amongst the poor so as to understand their real wants, found that one curse of large eleemosynary endowments was to attract crowds and keep them satisfied with hovering between chronic want and precarious alms. He mercilessly tore up the false creed of parents who will not fulfil parents' duties. He would separate children from parents who had received steady charity for a year, and so cut off the fatal entail of beggary and degradation. He insisted that if the children had to be removed to save them from becoming a dead drag on the community, the taxpayers did no more than their obvious duty.

The example of London ought to serve as a warning to our young cities. We are treading closely in her steps. What with intemperance, laziness, and the herding together of the dissolute, we are raising up whole hosts of satisfied paupers, who are not ashamed to multiply their degraded progeny, educating them in thieving, lying, profanity, filth and every immorality. It ought to be a settled principle with all almsgivers to visit their beneficiaries, raise them out of entire dependence, encourage them to work and spur them on to self-support.

ONE of our contemporaries publishes a letter from a correspondent, entitled, "How not to deal with Shirks," which is an amusing instance of the ease with which momentous questions may be settled, if the one who treats them is only allowed to select his facts to suit his purpose. The evil which this gentleman sets himself to correct is that evil of charitable intelligence offices, and the ground upon which such offices are claimed to be evil is the assumption that the parties whom they assist to find employment are shirks and malingerers who have been rightly shelved by a society seeking its own preservation.

Given the facts as stated, let us not quarrel about the reasoning. "Natural selection," and the "survival of the fittest," are the watchwords of the epoch, and progress doubtless depends upon these factors, however hardly they may bear upon individuals. But is it not just possible that our civilization is not yet quite perfect? Is it not possible that it has developed somewhat irregularly, and that we may be a little hasty in deciding that, because at a particular moment a man may not be performing efficient service, he is therefore unfit or unwilling to perform service? Friend, perhaps some little circumstance, not wholly within your control, has placed you where you will do the most good. If so, be thankful, but be a little cautious also. You ask, "Why do we not have a 'Bureau' for the introduction of gravel into the works of watches?" Now that is a very bright question, and we enjoy it, O so much! But it hardly indicates the whole story. There are watches, and watches. A watch will go very well with a certain number and variety of wheels, which might yet go better and tell a fuller story with a larger number and a greater variety. It is very easy for a wheel to run around when it is once nicely placed in the watch, but it is sometimes a trifle difficult for it to get in, and that not wholly because of the total depravity of the wheel. Is it not just possible that cases sometimes arise where the individual concerned is not the shirk, but the excluded member; not the gravel, but the much-needed wheel? Is it not also possible that the machinery "of the ordinary intelligence offices where labor is traded in according to the laws of demand and supply" may sometimes creak a little, and fail to grind out the best possible product? In a word, do you know anything about such intelligence offices and their results? If you do your experience must be different from that of the majority if it has led you to suppose that those offices justify an impression that they are the divinely-appointed means to produce a perfect result.

THE OUTLOOK.

THE outlook discloses a vast scientific progress, whose results are not yet wholly apparent. It has overturned many conceptions of the universe, but what new conceptions will be adopted, and what exact relation they will hold to present belief, one can hardly tell. Science does not advance in a straight line. It has crooks and turns: its vision is constantly changing; its relation to every new truth is a progressive one; and its supreme conclusion of to-day becomes a subordinate one to-morrow, as some fresh prospect widens. One cannot, therefore, foresee the precise attitude of science; not having collected all facts and seen all relations, its finality is afar off. But that it will be a mighty factor in human progress, no one can deny. Its aroused spirit will hereafter obey only its own law; its piercing search will halt at no threshold.

But along with this scientific progress there is also a vast religious progress. Many think that this progress consists in a modification of religious belief and feeling by the enlightenments of science. But it is something deeply more. It is an unfolding of the inward potency of religion itself. Religion does not depend altogether upon science for its growth. It has a life of itself. It springs from fountains of its own deep in the human heart, and by its proper energy goes forward into new and beautiful forms. It is not simply science that is overthrowing the ancient creeds, but also religion itself; and religion does this, not at the dictate of science, but by the demands of its own spirit. The tendency of the religious nature to-day is to gladly accept the results of science, but its tendency is also to transcend those results. It does not tamely follow in the march of science. It has its own royal course; by an original impulse it proceeds. It is not satisfied with the old dogmas, and will have something better. In acquiring this something better, it uses, indeed, the instrumentality of science, but above that, it has its own forward tendency.

Furthermore, there is observable a fresh literary power. The recent publication of poems of remarkable originality shows that literature is heaving with new forces; that the imagination of man is being touched with new fire. Homers and Shakespeares have not yet appeared, but the possibility of them has flashed. The immeasurable life of man is not exhausting itself in scientific research or religious fervor, but is seeking also for poetic expression, for new and wonderful forms and music and grace into which to pour its eternal tides.

The outlook discloses, therefore, not simply scientific advancement, but thoroughly independent religious and literary movements. Science is perhaps to-day the predominating energy, but will it continue so? Religion and literature are girding themselves with new power. They have not run their course; they have revelations to make and inspirations to give, and they will dower humanity, not by permission of science, but of their own regnancy.

Does he not, then, profoundly mistake the progress of man who looks only at his scientific growth, who thinks that science is sole messiah, the only leader? Is it wise to assume that hereafter religion and literature are to be mere creatures of science—its beautiful slaves, to wait upon humanity only at its bidding? Does not a fine insight show that religion and literature have their own separate origin and powers; that their veracities are co-equal with that of science, and that while they mingle harmoniously with its "dry light," they fling in a color and glory of their own fresh from God?

One cannot understand the drift of the age—see all its radiant possibilities—unless along with the perception of its scientific progress, there is realized also its religious and literary life, which is not dependent upon science, but from separate sources flows into and animates the world, so that the promise of our manifold humanity is not only in the microscope and telescope, but also in the breath of prayer and the poet's song.

A MINISTERS' INSTITUTE.

THE present molluscous and boneless condition of theological opinion, in which old traditions and creeds are mixed with incongruous notions and convictions due to modern discoveries and experiences, has rendered dogmatic controversy almost useless. Sectarianism has abated, but with it any clear fidelity to distinct ideas. Theologians are loose and indefinite in their fundamental positions. Preaching has become sentimental, superficial, illogical, contradictory, unsystematic, uninstructional. The interest that once belonged to it, as a solemn reasoning from clear and fixed data, has given place to that of sensational, entertaining or emotional addresses, or to what are called, for lack of a better name, "practical" discourses, which avoid all doctrine as vain and useless, and devote themselves to superficial suggestions about morals and living—as if truth about God and human nature and the attitude of the heart, will and mind toward eternal principles were not at the root of all morals and all true life. It is the vague, indeterminate state in which the theory of religion is left that makes the Christian ministry so largely at the mercy of special gifts in its individual members for success and usefulness. There are no clear, settled, substantial grounds of opinion or conviction on which earnest, dutiful men of average ability can take their stand and from them instruct and command the respect and attention of the people. It is high time that the profession which is specially set apart for interpreting the Scriptures should agree upon some clear principles of interpretation. It is high time that what earnest and persistent scholars and seekers, by all the aids of modern and ancient learning, have come to know about the origin and order and authority of the Scriptures, should be put into a form and stated in a way to make all ministers and intelligent laymen acquainted with their conclusions. It is hardly too much to say that most cyclopædias and collections in aid of theological and Scriptural knowledge are somewhat carefully obscure and exoteric, timid and shuffling, containing usually materials from which able and careful students may extract valuable information, but not at all leading or luminous to those who have not time and ability to compare and judge amid a vast mass of distracting testimonies.

We are glad to hear that the Unitarian ministers—who at least have the advantage of much more ecclesiastical independence than any others—are beginning to stir up a plan for a learned, frank and vigorous discussion among themselves of the great fundamental questions of religion. If we are rightly informed, they are arranging what we understand is to be called a Ministers' Institute—a biennial meeting to alternate with their National Conference, but for ministers only and only their own ministers, when a week is to be devoted by such ministers as choose to attend to hearing lectures on the most vital religious questions, prepared by clergymen, and perhaps laymen, selected for their acquaintance with special departments of investigation or of thought, and designed to give the results of the latest and best studies in all countries upon such questions as the origin, the chronology, and the nature of the inspiration of the Scriptures; the history of opinion in the early centuries of the Christian church; the bearing of late scientific hypotheses, with strong claims to respect or acceptance, upon hitherto received opinions—as, for instance, the age of the world and of prehistoric man upon Adam's relations to the human race and to the creeds of Christendom.

We understand that at least twelve lectures, by eight different men of note in their respective departments, are already agreed upon, their subjects fixed, and the lectures in preparation. They are to be given sometime in September next at some central point not yet determined. Each lecture of an hour will be discussed by two experts of different schools or tendencies in set speeches or papers. There will probably be two lectures each morning and one each afternoon. None but members of the institute will be admitted, as it is considered of the highest importance that the lectures and discussions should preserve as much as possible their scholarly and scientific character, and that no sideloops should be wasted upon a popular audience. The evenings of the week are to be devoted to public worship or public discussion, but the days wholly to class-room instruction and scholarly debate.

How the Unitarians will make their scheme work remains to be seen. Whether it will rally round it as many of their ministers as they hope is doubtful. Whether they have leaders and scholars and thinkers fitted to command the respect and following of the rest in their studies and speculations; whether Biblical knowledge and criticism is sufficiently advanced and matured in its form to admit of scientific statement; whether the armed truce between science and religion can be turned into a cordial alliance—these are questions which cannot be predetermined. We must at least thank the Unitarians for leading off in the direction thus indicated, and we shall be surprised if other ecclesiastical bodies do not follow them. The late Church Congress in Boston was an excellent enterprise, and very successful. But it was not a collection of ministers in their character as scholars and students, like the proposed "Ministers' Institute." It was a public assembly of ministers and laymen, with the Prayer-book for background and ring fence. It did excellent service. But, although admirable in method, able, instructive, and wonderfully free, it did not aim at a scientific basis for theology. The Ministers' Institute—perhaps with too much hopefulness—seeks to find this. We give it our best wishes and hopes.

THE LAW OF INHERITANCE.

A MUSCLE used for some special purpose and well trained to its work, becomes a large and strong muscle. The blacksmith's arm is brawny and full of power. If any part of the animal organism is used more than usual, it gains in size and power of action; and if generation after generation is called to use the same parts of the organism, this enlarged size and power is transmitted. It becomes a set in the organism.

Nature always reproduces herself. The new capacity is inherited, and soon develops into a new power. In the conflict of life, that variation which altered circumstances has called out, or which new desire has produced, which is fitted and best suited to the environment, is transmitted. The fittest survives. Nature selects her noblest products for transmission, by a law the most wonderful and perfect the scrutiny of man has yet discovered. It is a law which insures victory to the best, which gives what is truest the best of all opportunities. This law puts all things on trial. In this trial is made certain that truth wins, right conquers. The good gain the battle; the loving bear off the palm of victory. Nature and her laws, God and His providence, are such that no other result is possible in the end. However far from being true this may seem, as we look out upon human life, and see the evil cause winning, and the bad man gaining the most of life's enjoyments, yet it is true by a law so vast and powerful that no other result is possible.

It is a matter of knowledge and of science, not of faith and theory alone, that God conquers and not the devil, truth and not falsehood, good and not evil, right and not wrong. The devil may have his day, but not forever; the bad man may be prosperous, but not in that which is enduring; wrong may win for a season, but right conquers in the end. Let there be time enough, and Nature is pledged to see that what ought to prosper does prosper, what ought to succeed does succeed.

Some of the conditions and results of this law of inheritance are worthy of special study. One of the most conspicuous of them is full of encouragement and hope. It tells us that every good deed, every grand word, every noble life, is added to Nature's inherited power, and helps to make the world better. It is not a fancy, but a well-warranted fact, that not one such moral force is ever lost. Each one goes to swell the sum of inherited moral power, and to make it easier for humanity to do right and to be better.

What an element of hope there is in this idea for every worker! We can know, because of the action of this law, that our good deed will have its sure result. Men are made of finer mold as a higher purpose comes before them. They catch the inspiration of it. They are made wiser, greater lovers of the true, good and beautiful. They, in turn, communicate their influence to others. The good act communicates itself; the true word gets oft repeated. Especially does the parent make his child better by that which has made him better; and not only his child, but his grandchild, great-grandchild, and even much farther on down the line of his posterity. Just by what each age acquires which is in advance of the one before it, is it made better; and by what it transmits to the age after it, is humanity made better.

Each worker may feel confident that his work is not only added to the great sum total, which pushes each age onward, but that his work is necessary to the continued growth of humanity. No brave thought, no act of pure living, no quiet word of truth, no patient confidence in the right, is ever lost, but the great law of inheritance has just these forces with which to work, in order to lift humanity up. Drop out these forces, in which the humblest of us are factors, and mankind must be at a standstill.

If we will but look back to the past, and see what we owe to it, we shall perceive the mighty force of this law. That we have books, schools, knowledge, is because we have entered into what other men have won for humanity by patient study and labor. What a host of brave men and women have gone before us, that we are able to serve God in our own way! A long line of heroic souls have had their day, who, by their efforts in the cause of civil liberty, have given us the political freedom we enjoy to-day. In whatever direction we turn, in the beauties of social intercourse, the attractiveness of our homes, the mental power of our age, we are inheritors of many generations passed away. Many millions of individuals, each doing his part, have given us all we have and enjoy to-day. We can add to this cumulated power, and pass it on grander and richer than it came to us. Every sigh of love, aspiration for truth, brave work of hands, patient endurance of good, out of all the past, enters into the present to make it what it is. If one tear-drop, one beating throb of woman's love, one wondering gaze of a little child into its mother's pure face, one brave thought, were lost out of the past, the present would be other and less than what it is. We must take courage, then, to act well our part; to do well what we can to add to the grand upward life of human progress. No act that is true, no word that is lovely, no labor of hands that is honest, can fail of its purpose or that will not add somewhat to that better day, which is coming up the steep of time.

We shall also do well to remember that our law of inheritance tends to crush out all which is evil and untrue. All the evil and discord of the world to-day in any way due to man's action is the result of neglect of Nature and her laws on the part of those who have gone before us. We inherit that evil and that discord. Our blood is tainted, our brains weakened, because our forefathers kept not in the way of right, were not obedient to truth. We have pains, we have sluggish brains, we have weak bodies, we have a set of the moral nature toward evil, because our fathers loved their bodies, their appetites, their passions too well. We bear the coin-mark of their follies. Shall not our children inherit evil tendency, bad blood, disordered passions from us, unless we abandon vice, violation of Nature's laws, and disregard of moral purity? Think of it! We are laying up disease, evil propensities, and dull brains for our children and children's children. The follies of our fathers are our weaknesses; our follies, our sins, will be the weaknesses of our children. If we keep the laws, our children will be healthy and happy; if we break them, our children will be unhealthy and unhappy.

This law of inheritance lends terrible emphasis to every fact of human life. It says always and everywhere, in thunder-tones, If you will continue to be what you are, you must grow. You cannot stand still. As soon as you cease to be a worker for what is better, that moment you begin to lose your power, that moment you begin to grow worse. Self-satisfaction, laziness, contentedness, are death producers. Science says that the animal which is not improving from generation to generation is deteriorating. Our monkeys of to-day are descendants of a stronger and wiser race of ages ago. Our bears come from the larger and more sagacious cave-bear of times long past. One of our most obnoxious human parasites was once a bright-winged fly. Ceasing to advance, ceasing to have any outward motive for improvement, a decline has been the result. Apply this fact to man, who chooses his own growth, who selects his own motives, and how powerful it becomes! A race of men that is no longer actuated by some true purpose, some tendency and wish for improvement, is in the process of dying out. Men must have a motive before them, something to secure; and then they will advance just as rapidly as the motive, the ideal, has absorbed their thought and desire, and they are faithful to it. This is a part of that great law of growth, which says, the good will endure, the bad will fail. If we are in active search for truth, we are progressing; if we have ceased to care for the truth, death has begun its slow work upon us.

GEORGE W. COOKE.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE MASSACHUSETTS STATE CONVENTION OF TEACHERS.

THE old Puritan contempt for hardship is not dead in the Bay State. Every year, at this blustering holiday season, the school teachers of this commonwealth are called to meet, in solemn convention, for two laborious days, to listen to elaborate essays from famous pedagogues and wrestle with each other in those fiery discussions in which pedagogues delight. No sunshine of jollity—ball, reception, or banquet—is permitted to interfere with the stern purpose to fight it out on the pedagogic line if it takes all winter. Possibly, out of respect to this indomitable purpose, these winter State conventions are almost completely ignored by the people of the cities in which they assemble. The lady teachers also “fight shy” of such a solemn conclave. Even in Boston the convention does its work with little outside observation or interference. Superintendent Harris rode a thousand miles through the snow to deliver an admirable address to 150 people in Springfield last Thursday, and the local press roundly berates the people of that pleasant burg for their total neglect of their distinguished visitors. We do not think, however, the people are wholly at fault, or even the country schoolmarms quite depraved, for this neglect. It is no joke to face the chances of the almost certain holiday “snowing up,” or to quarter yourself in a first-class hotel and work like a dog, listening to even the best essays, hour after hour, for two days. The people are too much absorbed at the Christmas time to give serious attention to anything. Probably, would the old Commonwealth condescend to learn of New York and Ohio, and blow the educational horn at the closing of the schools in June, or even in golden October, the schoolmarms would throng the courts and the people would respond to the entertainment. Surely it is time that something of the “gay and festive” should be mixed with these serious “exercises” of the hard-worked profession of the teacher.

But, leaving out such considerations, the Convention of last week, though not so numerously attended as some, was full of vital interest. Perhaps too much time was given to the discussion of “The Metric System” and the “Reformed Spelling,” though one would not have missed the brilliant address of Dr. Thomas Hill, of Portland, in advocacy of a chart that reminded one strangely of the orthography of the lamented Artemus Ward. The reformers must wait till the memory of Petroleum Nasby and Orpheus C. Kerr has faded out before they can expect us to look with patience upon their schemes for reducing the spelling-book to its lowest terms.

But the main drift of the work done was excellent in quality and of practical value. Mr. Harris ventilated his well-known skepticism of the object system of instruction, while Principal Boyden, of Bridgewater, and Superintendent Parker, of Quincy (one of our new importations from the West, and a thoroughly live man), explained and defended the system. The only danger threatening the object, oral and kindergarten methods of teaching is now from the ignorance of the majority of teachers who attempt to handle them. Properly understood, they are simply the natural, divine ways of instruction, and must prevail.

The duty and difficulties of compulsory education were set forth by Superintendents Johnson, of Newton, and Philbrick, of Boston. There was a good deal of valuable talk on our present system of “grading” and “marking.” The cast-iron routine of the graded school of ten years ago is getting modified in a way to favor both the bright and the dull scholar and the teacher, now the chief sufferer in the schoolroom. In all our best graded schools it is possible for a superior pupil to go on as rapidly as is good for him, while his slower companion can be kept in his place without disgrace. The drift of the discussion favored the testing of the scholar by periodical examination and personal observation by the teacher rather than by the interminable marking and averaging of the school register. The subject of good reading was gracefully handled by Professor Moses Brown, of Boston, and the co-education of the sexes in high and collegiate schools warmly insisted on.

A touching episode was the parting address of Joseph White, Secretary of the Board of Education, who retires, after a service of seventeen years. The most important thing now in Massachusetts, more important than the decision of the Presidential election, is the choice of a new Secretary. The new man should at once be competent to impress the teachers of the State with the advantages of the best methods of education and to lead a revival of zeal for the common school among the people. For, what with the public stinginess that always hits first the school and the church in hard times, the constant undermining of the Catholic bishops, who with one hand remove the children from the public schools and with the other fill our city governments with men instructed to starve them out, and the "high-toned" crusade of a considerable class of cultivated enemies of our present system, the friends of popular education need to be awake and constantly on guard. The schools of the cities and large towns of Massachusetts are excellent, in care for the health and morals of the children superior to those of any State, though perhaps not up to the best in a few Western cities in their methods of instruction and the enthusiasm of their teachers. But in many of the older townships the decay of population has told seriously on their prosperity, and proud and wealthy Boston still casts a solid vote in the Legislature against a general school tax whose proceeds should be divided among the people, to the great advantage of these country districts. But this will come in due time.

The Convention closed with a charming illustrated lecture on the Yellowstone Park by Mr. W. I. Marshall. As it will be given to the teachers of New York within a few days, we can only say, "Go and see." The Convention adjourned on Thursday P. M. in time for its members to put into port before the terrific snow storm that now threatens to bury us all out of sight. A. D. M.

SPRINGFIELD, Dec. 29, 1876.

BOSTON CHIT-CHAT.

MY DEAR INQUIRER:—It is too late to wish you a Merry Christmas, though I may appropriately express the hope that you have had one. It was an ideal holiday at the Hub. To look at the wild-eyed women who infested and blockaded and surged through the streets for a week beforehand you might have imagined that Sorosis had risen, that husbands were locked up at home, and that the "coming woman" had arrived and taken absolute possession of affairs. But however they seemed, they "were not mad;" they were only—after the American fashion—making tremendous hard work of having a good time. As Lowell says—

"Pleasure doos make us Yankees kind o' winch, Ez though 't wuz sunthin paid for by the Inch;
But yit we du contrive to worry thru,
Ef Dooty tells us that the thing's to du,
An' kerry a hollerday, ef we set out,
Ez siddly ez though 't wuz a redoubt."

They did get through at all hazards, and in spite of dull times—"regardless of expense."

I know one nest, at any rate, where the young birds were merry. They began to sing, as usual, at the most exasperatingly unseasonable hours. But what won't people endure for the sake of seeing the children happy? And, by the way, this one lesson of Christmas—that our best happiness comes from making and seeing others happy—is worth unspeakably more than all it costs. I take it that the sun, if he ever thinks anything about it, finds out that he himself is bright by seeing that he makes other bodies shine. And so I think we never find our own true human joy till it comes back to us reflected in other faces.

What a house-full there is of merriment that feeds its boisterous glee on dolls and cards and swords and drums and tea-sets and miraculous monsters of all races and all climes! And then, for once in the year, what a luxury to be allowed to sit up late and see some outside entertainment. No matter if they do ache with weariness, and cry out in their sleep from candy-caused stomach-aches! It is a similar price that all the world pays for its indulgences; and they are only anticipating the follies that most grown people rarely outgrow.

But such a day for sleighing Boston rarely sees. It was mild and comfortable. I generally prefer to take my sleigh-rides in poetry or in day-dreams when my feet are on the fender. I have a deal of sympathy with the man who said that when he wanted a sleigh-ride, all he needed to do was to open the back and front doors, so as to get a stiff breeze through the hall, then sit with his feet in a pail of ice-water, hang icicles about his neck, and jingle a string of bells. But Christmas day the sleighing had about it all the poetry with the discomforts left out. The day was remembered as usual in all the churches, with decorations and sermons and songs. If only men could sustain and prolong their better moods, and make the whole year Christmas, how soon the Golden Age might come!

Our brother, Laird Collier, dropped in on us the other night. The old Second Church is happy and prosperous under his ministry. When he went there it looked as though they would find it hard work to grow. The fact of it is, so many churches have moved over to the Back Bay that they haven't people enough—and hardly religion enough—over there to go around. But though not wishing it, the Second Church has received advantage from the misfortunes of the Brattle Square. Its break-up has set loose many families to seek new church homes. So from this source mainly Bro. Collier has had some thirty families added to his flock.

I hear that Barrows is doing capitally as the successor of the lamented Dr. Hall, in old Meeting House Hill church in Dorchester. He has fairly conquered his position, and taken possession of the hearts and heads of his people.

W. H. Savage, in his new field at Leominster, also appears to have taken hold of things by what Bro. Clarke would call the "right handle." The people are enthusiastic, and church and Sunday school are very prosperous. The same is true of Dole also at Jamaica Plain.

From the way the new comers take hold of things and settle into their work, I think the liberal churches need not be ashamed of the material they borrow from the orthodox ranks.

In your paper for December 21st you quote from Dr. Holland on "Muscular Christianity." Though it is true that fine physique does help a preacher wonderfully, I think the Doctor carries his point a little too far. Starting with Paul, he will find it a little difficult to run his principle down the line of history. It breaks down badly, even in Boston. The little, wiry, almost insignificant appearing Lorrimer, at Tremont Temple, has an audience nearly twice as large as Phillips Brooks. In Chicago, Professor Swing packs McVicker's, and he is a man of poor voice, of no presence, and of delicate health. Granting all his ability, Murray has so many outside and unusual helps that one can hardly tell what he would do in ordinary circumstances. He gives a grand Sunday concert to start with—immense chorus, splendid quartette and duet, and solo singing, assisted by brass instruments and big organ. Then he and Swing enjoy the tremendous exceptional advantage of ministering to the great throngs of people who do not like to leave the associations of orthodoxy, and yet want to hear liberal doctrine. It is unquestionably true that the majority of men and women at the present time are neither definitely "orthodox" nor definitely anything else. To this great majority Murray ministers. But, leaving this aside, there are at least two or three other audiences in Boston as large as Phillips Brooks' while the preachers are not much more than half as large.

Immense preparations are making for Moody's arrival, and he will doubtless have his usual run in Boston. I hope the Liberals will keep cool, and, so far as they speak at all, will hold themselves firmly to their true ground. Excitements in religion are no worse, perhaps, than in politics, though there are some of us who hold that shouting and torchlight processions are not specially potent engines of even political reform. But the main point is this: The basis of Moody's movement, both as to fact and logic, is false. It is a libel on God and a disgrace to man. In spite, then, of incidental reformatory work—which might take place as well, and really does take place even under pagan religions—let us keep this one question uppermost—Is it true? If not, will it pay to copy or encourage it?

DECEMBER 29, 1876.

SILVUS.

FROM CHICAGO.

ALL hail the only living Saint, Santa Claus! and all hail the mothers that rush through the streets to find something with which to do him honor. State street was a mass, a crowd, a jam on Saturday, and on Monday an empty dream. Sunday evening was home night. The churches were comparatively vacant, and the Christmas trees were lighted. The Third Church had a rich vesper service, the gems of which were "Cantique de Noel," "As the hart panteth," and "Bethlehem." Bro. Herford gave another of his capital sermons on the fundamental principles of religion overlooked or ignored by the revivalists. He added one terrible broadside for Rev. David Swing, who, forgetting himself, took occasion in the pulpit to sneer at the little pulpits that did not concur in the Moody movement, but dared to have their own say about it. This force of the masses is unquestionable; and this advantage which one has who caters to those he dares not face is undeniable; but Bro. Swing must not forget his beginnings nor his superb record. The world will not stop with the Central Church. There are a few pilgrim souls who will seek shelter at other haunts, even in Chicago.

Robert Collyer is quietly at work, with his usual grand warmth of soul, and it is rumored will give us a new book in the Spring. Sunderland is in the new hall, and gives up his handsome church. But he is comparatively free of debt and has a fund of energy that never fails him.

Shop-keepers wore an unusual smile this week. The rush of trade last week oiled all the wheels and the great music-box plays away as if the machinery would never run down. But Chicago is barometrical in temperament, and we shall see gloomy faces again before long. Besides, the Lake has a habit of tossing the traditional wet blanket over us quite too often, full of catarrhs and rheumatism.

Prof. Winchell has been here, on and off, and Mrs. Howe is still with us. She spoke to a very small audience at the McCormick Hall last Sunday. Miss Kellogg and the Apollo concerts alone draw full houses. The Apollo is a club of not only standard singers, but cultured people. Their rehearsals and concerts are the pride of Chicago. The Beethoven is a smaller club, and attempts only more difficult classical music. The leader, Wolfsohn, is a genius in his line.

The feeling grows among the liberals that the only hope for permanent growth and unquestioned success is education. Church appliances must be adapted to the steady, systematic culture of the moral faculties. The study department of the organization must be more prominent. And as ministers, we must learn patience, "learn to labor and to wait." The desire for a rush and notoriety has eaten up our liberal churches. They have not come fully to see that the better theology must be taught. Each one wishes to go with the noise of kettle-drums and trumpets. This is all very natural, seeing that most Western Unitarians are not such by birthright, but are men who have come out from the old churches, and are full of protest and often disgust. The minister must keep exceedingly cool, not to be led away from legitimate religious, educational work and constructive efforts. The one supreme test of success seems to be, "Are the young improving in character and growing in positive piety? Is the love of God and the divine character evident in their lives?"

I have had a constant fusillade since my first letter to THE INQUIRER, regarding my remarks concerning the faith that knows no doubts. It is impossible, perhaps, to explain to many that one can have so supreme a faith in God and such a rest in the Divine character that he can take creeds to pieces and examine them as coolly as he would dissect a watch. Faith in God is a sublime power, but faith in man's testimony as authority is a wretched substitute. There is no impertinence like that of every Smith or Thompson who presents his notion of the unspoken future as a fetish which you must trust or be damned.

For the last two years the Third Church has kept a roll of its Sunday school boys that desired employment, and has not failed to provide for every one. We have three in one firm.

POWELL.

MRS. CHARLES BELL, lately deceased at the age of ninety, was in every way remarkable. She was favored with the intimate friendship of Jeffrey, Sydney Smith, Lyell, Owen, Whewell, Faraday, etc. Of course she was gifted in speech. Moreover, she was a devoted wife. Sir Charles' best book on the Hand was written by her own hand, and lately she has published the letters of her husband and her own recollections.

LITERATURE.

REVIEWS.

HAROLD: a Drama. By Alfred Tennyson.

THIS sinewy, purposeful and Saxon-blooded drama is not so various in interest, or so rich in characters, or so brilliant in special passages, as "Queen Mary;" but it is marked with few of the defects and inexperience of that tragedy. It is eminently dramatic in form, the characters defining themselves by their actions and speech, without the aid of long descriptions thrown in, delaying the action to eke out its own lack of power and significance. We can hardly venture, after one reading, to give a decided opinion about the merits of the play. Though without the subtlety of thought we usually associate with the poet, eminently objective indeed as contrasted with his common style, this drama is amazingly subtle in suggestion and in the problems of personal character it raises. Few as the touches are, the portraits stand out distinctly—Edward and Harold, and each of his brothers, and old Stigand, and Elith, and Aldwith. The object of the drama seems to be identical with that of "Queen Mary"—to strengthen the Protestant feeling in England, and with it the nationality of the English people. Tennyson has been the greatest of English laureates, in consecrating his genius to the illustration of English history. He shows himself an Englishman all over in the drama, and, for aught we know, presents Harold as the type of what an Englishman, a Saxon, may do and dare, even to the risking of his personal honor and his salvation to save England as a Saxon kingdom.

Edward the Confessor is introduced to exhibit a pious impotency that wastes the energies due to ruling and aggrandizing the country in prayers and asceticisms, making its own future hopes superior to its immediate duties and its sacred office. He is the figure of religious superstition at its best—pure, saintly, servile before God, winning to those nearest, but without masculine energy or good sense or fitness to rule. He is afraid of comets and popes, and trusts in relics and dead men's bones.

Harold, on the contrary, is essentially without superstition—we might almost say without religion, if a devoted love of his country and readiness to risk his personal honor and salvation for it be not his religion. He is presented as full of nobleness, of lovingness, of honor. He does loyal service to Edward, and wins his confidence, in spite of his impiety to the church. He is loyal to his brothers, and loves them spite of their faults—now of passion, like Tostig; now of weakness, like Wolfmuth. But he that once says, "better die than lie" ends with prodigious lying. He breaks his oath to William of Normandy; he breaks his troth to Elith; he forswears himself; he dares everything that religion and moral truthfulness would forbid; but always for England, always to save her in some dreadful peril—never for personal ambition, never to escape personal loss, always against his own peace and his own prospects, but for England's Saxon honor and strength and rule!

This is so bold a demand on our confidence, so extraordinary a summons to surrender all our previous theories of nobleness—if we would keep Harold where he clearly stands in the author's heart—that we pause for breath. Is this the historic Harold? and is this glorious warrior and loving, princely man, stained with deliberate falsehood to his enemy and treachery to his mistress, to be taken into our hearts and enthroned in our respect? Is it the author's purpose to make religious vows and oaths, and personal vows and promises, when broken for patriotic purposes and with no personal ends, but rather with dreadful personal sacrifices, only an awful background to illumine Harold's Saxon's devotion to his country? We must read this drama again and again before we trust ourselves to any final judgment of its moral bearings. Of its poetic merits we have no question. It is full of power and calm depth of feeling, with high dramatic quality and moving action.

A MANUAL OF SORRENTO AND INLAID WORK, for Amateurs, with original designs. By Arthur Hope. Chicago: John Wilkinson. 1876. Price $1.50.

This is a handsome book on a popular subject. The visitor at Machinery Hall at the late exhibition could hardly avoid feeling that the one subject in which all Americans must be interested was that of scroll sawing. The busy machines were at work at every turn, and were always surrounded by admiring crowds. Undoubtedly much pleasure has been given in a thousand homes by the manipulation of these tiny saws, and by the decorations which they have rendered possible. And in this there has been real profit even though there may be a considerable interval between this work, as it is usually done, and artistic work.

Mr. Hope has taken great pains to be clear in his instructions as to the kinds of wood to be chosen, the best tools to be employed, and the most satisfactory methods of working. He also gives a large number of designs in black and white for picture frames, paper cutters, and various other objects, and also silhouettes and initial letters formed of figures in action. To the uninitiated the illustrations form the most attractive portion of the book.

Some Children's Books.

"THE CHILDREN'S PARADISE," by Katharine B. Zarega, is one of those books, the materials of which have been found attractive in the household and among friends, wherefore it is assumed that it will prove so to a larger public. Usually it would have been better to keep them where they originated, and this little book of verse is no exception to the general rule. It is, however, nicely printed on toned paper.

"THE YOUNG TRAIL HUNTERS," by Samuel Woodworth Cozens, will, doubtless, be found very entertaining by the boys into whose hands it falls. It is packed full of incident from beginning to end, and among a variety of hunting experiences, the killing of Indians seems to afford the best sport. The boys can do without it.

"SNIP AND WHIP AND SOME OTHER BOYS," by Elizabeth A. Davis, is not nearly so bad as the preceding volume, but its language is not what it should be, and it is difficult to see what profit there is in the book, while the interest awakened by it is of the weakest. The scene is laid in the neighborhood of Nantasket, and it may be said to have a faint, very faint local color.

"VINE AND OLIVE, or Young America in Spain and Portugal," is by William T. Adams, (Oliver Optic.) and what more need be said? You have the story chapters, and the study chapters, and as the author says, you can take your choice. We all know the avidity with which the boys seek these volumes, and it is not unnatural to suppose that they exercise the choice which is offered them. The question naturally arises; why not, then, put your fiction and matters of fact between separate covers?—upon which follows another question; why not, then, have them written by other authors?—which opens up the whole question of the literature destined especially for children—rather too large a subject to enter upon in this paragraph.

"DAISY TRAVERS," by Adelaide F. Samuels, though it opens stiffly, is suggestive of Miss Alcott's "Little Men," and is rather artificially managed, is yet really ingenious, and probably worth more than either of the others which we have named. And this notwithstanding certain obvious and serious defects. Its sub-title, "The Girls of Hive Hall," indicates its character, it being the story of the inmates of a sort of private Orphanage, established by a mature young lady of sixteen, herself formerly a waif.

The first of these five volumes is published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, the others by Lee & Shepard.

MAGAZINES.

American Library Journal.

THE AMERICAN LIBRARY JOURNAL. Monthly. Managing Editor, Melvil Dewey. Published by F. Leypoldt, New York. Vol. I, Nos. 2 and 3. Yearly subscription, $5.

The establishment of this journal in the interest of a very important class of professional men marks a distinct era in the profession. Time was when a librarian was a book-worm or mere clerk. Now he must be both, combined and glorified. The numbers before us contain a report of the recent conference at Philadelphia, with contributions from Poole, Cutter, Winsor, Smith, Spofford and others. It is of marked interest for others beside professionals. We shall hope to treat this general subject at some length at a future time.

The Unitarian Review for December.

DR. HEDGE does not write half often enough. His defence of optimism opens this number with a vivid picture of Zoroaster and the religion of Persia, followed by a declaration that there is no evil in the world, "for, only that is evil which is evil in its cause and effect, evil in all its issues, evil forevermore." This world, because of its being God's workmanship, he maintains to be the best possible world.

John Q. Adams' Memoirs makes a very racy article, full of spice; criticisms of men and events, showing him to be a far greater man than is commonly thought. Rev. J. T. Bixby's paper on the Motor Power of the Universe, tracing it to an intelligent will, is one of the best utterances of this very able reasoner, and is well set off by Dr. Hosmer's fatherly counsel to young ministers, exalting as it does the pastoral office. I see it symbolized, he says, in that common picture of Dante and Beatrice; in her translation to spiritual life she became to the poetic eye the beau ideal of a divine holiness; while she, looking to the Father, rose nearer and nearer to His excellence, he looking to her rose nearer and nearer, both ascending toward the highest. Rev. L. G. Ware gives us some touching Memoranda of Michel Angelo, but we were not prepared to hear Leo X. denounced as stupid and a dullard.

BRIEF NOTICES.

THE Marginal Indexed Diary, or Daily Record Book, published by the Erie Publishing Co., Erie, Pa., is convenient either for the pocket or desk, and, being perpetual, is good for any year or a any time of the year. There is an index of months across the foot of the page, and an index of days for each month at the side, which enables the user to turn instantly to any date desired. It also contains an Alphabetical Index for classifying the subject matter of the book, besides thirty pages of valuable tables and useful information. The price is $2 per copy, sent, postpaid, by the publishers; also for sale by stationers.

THE conductors of The Unitarian Review announce in the January number, which comes in just as we are going to press, that the following articles will appear in the next and succeeding numbers of the present volume:—

On the Relations of Religion to Science and Philosophy, by Rev. J. T. Bixby (on "Hermann Lotze,") Rev. Thomas Hill, Rev. Clay Macauley, etc. On Religion and Social Relations, by Rev. Brooke Herford ("The Sabbath Question,") Rev. A. A. Livermore ("The American Physical Man,") Rev. W. H. Foote ("The Taxation of Churches,") Rev. C. A. Humphrey ("Church-Going,") Rev. C. W. Buck ("Social Reform,") On Biography and National History, by C. C. Smith, Esq. ("The Belknap Papers,") E. D. Mead ("F. W. Robertson,") Rev. G. Reynolds ("Burgoyne's Campaign,") etc. On Biblical Criticism and Exposition, by E. Abbott, LL.D. ("Davidson's New Testament,") Rev. R. Ellis, D.D. ("The Christianity of the Epistles to the Romans,") Rev. J. H. Allen ("The Old Testament and the New Criticism,") Rev. N. S. Folsom ("The Book of Psalms,") Articles are also expected in this department from James Marteneau, LL.D., Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter, Rev. J. F. Clarke, D.D. Rev. J. W. Chadwick will have an article in an early number on "Monastic Orders," Rev. C. H. Brigham on "Judaism at Rome" and on "The Religion of Japan," and Rev. James De Normandie on "The Spread of Christianity." Sermons will appear in successive numbers, by Rev. E. E. Hale, Rev. F. H. Hedge, D.D., Rev. W. H. Furness, D.D., and Rev. Robert Collyer.

NEW PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

BOOKS.

From J. E. Osgood & Co.

HAROLD; A Drama. By Alfred Tennyson. $1.00.

From Roberts Brothers, Boston.

GOETHE'S WEST-EASTERN DIVAN. Translated by John Weiss. 1877.

SAPPHO; A Tragedy in Five Acts. By Franz Grillparzer. Translated by Ellen Frothingham. 1876.

SUNSHINE IN THE SOUL. Poems selected by the Editor of "Quiet Hours."

From Macmillan & Co.

RAMBLES AND STUDIES IN GREECE. By J. P. Mahaffy.

From James Miller

LESSONS OF FAITH AND LIFE. By E. H. Chapin.

ENDEAVORS AFTER THE CHRISTIAN LIFE. Discourses by James Martineau.

From Hurd & Houghton.

COLONY BALLADS. By George L. Raymond.

INDEX TO THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY. Vol. I.-XXXVIII. 1867-1876. Price $2.50.

From W. B. Kern, Cooke & Co., Chicago.

LIFE HISTORY OF OUR PLANET. By William D. Gunning. Illustrated by Mary Gunning.

THE NEW DESCRIPTIVE GEOGRAPHY OF PALESTINE. By H. S. Osborn, LL.D. Part I. Published at the State University, Oxford, Ohio.

MAGAZINES.

THE UNIVERSALIST QUARTERLY, Jan., 1877.

THE INTERNATIONAL REVIEW, Jan. and Feb.

LITTLE'S LIVING AGE, Dec. 30, 1876.

THE BIBLIOTHECA SACRA, Jan., 1877. Edited by Edwards A. Park, George E. Day, and Archibald Duffy.

UNITARIAN REVIEW FOR JANUARY.

ART AND SCIENCE.

THE RELATIVE AND THE REAL.

THE Atheism of olden time said bluntly, "there is no God," and the extremity of its folly was its own refutation. The infidelity of to-day says, "Whether or not there is any God, we can know nothing at all about Him, and so ought not to waste our time and energies by taking Him into consideration."

Practically I see little difference between this theory of spiritual nescience and outright denial of spiritual existence. The assurance that we are and must always remain in dense ignorance of spiritual things kills the hope of heaven and the awe of the Divine, takes its edge from conscience and withers every religious emotion. Who can worship an absolute darkness, an utter silence? The God to whom the heart can bow and consecrate itself must be something else than an eye-blinking fog-bank.

And not only is this know-nothingism in religion without the first shred of a claim to be considered its best friend, but it is also destitute of any genuine foundation in truth or clear ideas. Take that which is its strongest argument—that derived from the necessary relativity of human knowledge. We can know things only in their relations and contrasts, we are told. To think is to determine, to condition. How, then, can we know God in Himself? Every effort to conceive the absolute is a limitation of that absolute. Every notion of the Divine is tinted with the colors of the thinking mind. It is impossible to know the real God. That which we think to be Him is only the magnified shadow of our own self.

Now it is very true that we cannot know God except in His relation to us. What He is in Himself or unrelated to us, we can never attain to. But this is not the peculiar defect of Divine knowledge. It is a condition of all our knowledge. We can know no one in himself, out of his relations to us. We know a friend only by the various manifestations of his personality to us—his looks, words, tones, actions. The more intimate his relations with us the better we know him. If he come into no relation to us at all we can know nothing of him. If we are said to know men outside of their relations to us, it is but a figure of speech to express the knowledge that comes through indirect relations instead of direct. The stranger whom we gaze upon in his intercourse with others or know of by reading or hearsay we come thus far into relations with. We can know nothing that does not come into some connection with our self. We cannot know even an apple or a stone irrespective of its appearance to us. No grain of sand, in itself, i. e. in its unrelated essence, is knowable by us. We know it only by the phenomena which it manifests—its shape, hardness, color, taste. Moreover these manifestations must be manifestations to our spiritual senses, our individual minds. What they are, or may be, independent of our sensibility, we can never know. The judgments suggested by the experiences of one sense may be corrected by those of another. The tongue may revise the inferences of the eye, and vice versa. Phenomena as manifested to one sense may be translated into or explained by the phenomena manifested to another. Color and sound, for example, are becoming pretty clearly reduced to tactile relations of motion with the optic and auditory nerves. The sensibility of eye and ear, that is, is brought into the same class as that of the finger. But carry this process of simplification as far as you please, you can never pass beyond the circle of the personal sensibility. Whatever perception we have, the perceiving subject is mingled with it, and a factor in the product, and that perception is such only as the nature of our faculties allows it to be. Without eyes we can know no color, without ears no sound, and the range of colors, the gamut of sounds, is such only as the structure of these organs in each of us allows.

Now, all this is true enough. But about it has gathered a huge penumbra of notions that are not true, that do not follow. It does not follow, as has been inferred, that because our knowledge is relative to us it is, therefore, deceiving. Why is it that in order to find the true and the real we must seek that which is not in relation to ourselves? Is there anything that necessarily confines genuineness, actuality, substantiality, to that mental air-castle—the thing in itself—or to the relations of things to others rather than to their relations to us? For my part, I do not see why that which is relative to me may not be as true as what is not.

I have never heard and I cannot discover any valid reason which requires us to assume that the only Reality is that which cannot appear, or which appears to other minds or in other relations than to us. If Reality is something that we can know nothing about, then by what right can we affirm that it is something else than the Relative. Evidently, on that supposition itself, one might with as good right assert the identity of the real with the manifested things as to assert its difference from them.

Now for this affirmation there is good reason. It is the dictate of common sense that our sensations are something actual, and a sound philosophy will recognize that the relative, the phenomena that appear to us, are not mere phantasms, but parts of the great Real. To take a very simple example. A pedestrian stubs his toe against the curb-stone. The sensation within him is a real thing, the stone is a real thing. Doubtless the stone is something more than what he feels it to be. But it is, at least, this in this relation. It may be thought of without reference to its present conditions. But it is just now, in reference to these conditions, precisely what it appears. Remove it, and the whole equilibrium of the cosmos would feel the change. Even the mental hallucination is a real thing.

When a man who has lost his foot feels a pain in his toe, as he says, the sensation felt is actually felt. That the judgment refers it to a wrong cause and site does not make it non-existent or unreal. The nerve vibration is there and the feeling of it is there. In reference to the peculiar state of the nervous system of the patient, it is not only genuine but true to the conditions under which it arises, and would be false to the conditions around it were it otherwise.

And moreover, the realities, so far from being made unknowable to us by our relations to them, are revealed through those relations. To infer that we can know only the relations, never the things; that we can become acquainted only with appearances, never with substances, and that we have no reason to believe in the existence of things and substances, or anything about their nature, is another fallacy. Relations are nothing unless there are things to be related. And if the things are entirely unknown their relations must be also unknown. Appearances are impossible unless there is something to appear; and through the relations themselves comes a knowledge of the things related. In the very appearance we learn of the substances appearing. An iron lamp-post, e. g., manifests itself to your touch as hard and smooth—to your eye as of a certain shape and color—to the ear, if it be vigorously struck, as possessed of certain phenomena and relations to yourself: speaks of something which has power to impress you with these sensations, something that abides; that you cannot banish by thinking it away; but that when you shut your eyes to it or go away, waits for you in the very same group of appearances till you return. These qualities speak of some unity in which they centre—some reality to which they belong, and whose nature, as it is in reference to you, is shown by them. Herbert Spencer, arguing for our knowledge of matter, maintains that though we know only the relative reality, yet that that stands in such a fixed relation to the Absolute Reality that knowledge of one is tantamount to knowledge of the other. "The conditioned effect," he says, "standing in indissoluble relation with the unconditioned cause and equally persistent with it so long as the conditions persist, is, to the consciousness supplying these conditions, equally real, * * * and for practical purposes is the same as the cause itself." This is true, and true for all phenomena and all realities: And, in accordance with this principle, I claim that so far from the Ultimate Reality, the Divine, being inscrutable, we have no mean knowledge of it. We have knowledge, not only of its existence, but of its nature. We know Matter as we know Force, a magnet, a rose, a bird, viz., by its action upon us, "by the persistent impressions," to use Spencer's language, "which are the persistent results of a persistent cause," by "our mental obligation," as he says in another passage "to regard every phenomenon as a manifestation of some power."

Every fact of the universe is a real exhibition of the action and character of its Supreme Cause. We cannot see or touch God directly. Neither can we see or touch oxygen or the luminiferous ether. Yet as their natures, though tasteless to tongue, odorless to the nose, invisible to eye, ungraspable by the hand, are known by the effects which they are capable of producing upon us, so can we know the God who is unobservable by any sense through His constant action and effects in the world. Its order and unity speak of the Harmonious One; its progress and growth of that which can alone grow—Living Energy; its intelligent and beneficent adaptations testify to attributes of Reason and Sense; and the moral and spiritual grandeurs of humanity show in man's Creator a righteousness as holy at least as man's purest rectitude, a real as noble, at the lowest, as our highest ideal.

This knowledge of the Divine character, revealed through its manifestations in creation, is, of course, not complete, is not absolute. But we see no reason to believe it deceiving. On the contrary, there is every reason to hold it true, as far as it goes. It must at least be admitted, even on scientific principles of investigation, to be sufficient relative knowledge—good as the scientific world's knowledge of the Force and Matter and Motion which it talks so confidently about; good as these are for good working hypotheses, nay, as the only hypotheses that will work.

JAMES T. BIXBY.

ART NOTES.

It is one thing to paint Nature as it is, another to paint it as the artist sees it.

MORAL of the Loan Exhibition for young American artists: Learn to draw—draw first, and you will sometime color if it is in you; color first, and you probably will never draw.

CHARLES BLANC says that the faculty for drawing must be born in the artist, that color can be acquired. This opinion, so opposed to the common notion, is significant, for it comes from one of the most expert of art critics.

At Knoedler's may be seen two etchings by Courty from paintings by Troyon, which are striking examples of color-effect rendered in black and white. Steel engravings are totally deficient in the interpretation of color; but the etching and the lithograph are often very effective.

In a notice of some Japanese woodcuts, W. M. Rossetti says: "We find in them extraordinary dignity and power of line, considered both singly, and in combination forming composition; decisive, masterly vigor of stroke; most varied, original and audacious grouping; action carried to an extreme, yet well understood and coherently conceived even in its vagaries; remarkable combinations of darks and lights, if not exactly of light and shade; splendor and complication of decorative quality; unflagging invention of the natural, the extraordinary, and the preternatural—throughout all these diverse qualities an essential unity, which belongs to imagination and to the full grasp of the means which the artist has to work with."

THIRTY years ago Planché said: "Realism is an important theory, but transitory; which may serve to regenerate art, but which certainly is not art. Realism, which with many young people is the end of painting and sculpture, will be the ruin of conceited tradition, will correct foolish innovation, and will retemper the softened metal of thought. It will break the tiresome monotony of compositions copied from age to age; it will discipline those eccentric, ignorant and boastful caprices, which regard as novel only that which is bizarre, and it will contend against those craven works, which, being of no religion, smile at every altar, but worship no god. Still, whatever it may do, it can never answer the needs of art; it can never reproduce the marvels of Phidias and Raphael."

SOMETIMES one of these sudden effects of daylight in Athens contains a whole revelation on the nature of ancient art. When in one of the new buildings upon which the masons are at work all over the town you chance to see a piece of fresh carved marble against the sky, it dazzles you with its extreme glitter and whiteness, you understand at once why statues of pure, untinted marble would not do in this climate, and why the ancient Greek, to make his groups of outdoor statues tolerable to the eye, must needs have toned and tinted them; and how, further, it is probable that his marble surfaces in general were toned with some preparation which did for them that which time, subduing the white glitter to a hundred rich diversities between ivory and amber, has done for them now. There is another way in which Athenian daylight makes you understand ancient art for the first time. Until one has seen the effects of sculpture and architecture in that sun and that shadow, one can but feebly guess what Greek sculpture and Greek architecture mean. The moment you see shadows like these, strong, sharp and defined as by a needle's point, yet full, in the shaded surface, of a blue and bloomy light, you have gained a new revelation as to the powers and effects of sculpture. In the West we know nothing of this daylight, which, at the same time, cuts out every shadow into the sharpest definiteness and force of contrast, and floods all that lies within the shadow with a soft and exquisite clearness. Every projection is thrown into intense relief, every play of surface is expressed with the subtlest gradation, every wandering line tells clearly; the commonest mason's work looks striking and beautiful; no wonder that in the great times eye and hand could train themselves to that power which seemed more than human.—SIDNEY COLVIN.

HEARTH AND HOME.

JANUARY.

O WINTER! Frozen pulse and heart of fire!
 What loss is theirs who from thy kingdom turn
 Dismayed, and think thy snow a sculptured urn
 Of death! Far sooner in midsummer tire
 The streams than under ice. June could not hire
 Her roses to forego the strength they learn
 In sleeping on thy breast. No fires can burn
 The bridges thou dost lay where men desire
 In vain to build.

O Heart, when Love's sun goes
 To northward, and the sounds of singing cease,
 Keep warm by inner fires, and rest in peace.
 Sleep on content as sleeps the patient rose.
 Walk boldly on the white, untrodden snows;
 The winter is the winter's own release!

—H. H., in January Atlantic.

FELICIEN DAVID.

(Moncure D. Conway, in Harper's Magazine for January.)

FELICIEN DAVID, born at Cadenet, in Provence—known there at five years of age as an infant prodigy, strangely befallen that village of two thousand souls only learned enough to applaud his art with his violin, but with ample heart to feel the charm of his sweet voice—was an orphan when, at eight years of age, he was taken to be a chorister in the cathedral at Aix. He had been there only a year when he composed a piece of music which was thought worthy to be performed at grand mass, and was so performed. He found a true friend there, a professor in the Jesuit College, who had nothing to give him but his best care and instruction; but these he gave without stint, and Felicien presently came from the college penniless, but full of ability and hope. At eighteen, being entirely without resources, he went to earn a very meagre living in a notary's office; but the Archbishop of Aix was scandalized that a youth whose sweet hymns he had listened to and loved should be an attorney's clerk, and through his influence he became maestro in the leading church of Aix, Saint Sauveur, and he was also made (aged nineteen) second leader of the orchestra in the same city. Felicien was of a melancholy temperament, and employed much of his time in writing nocturni. He had a wealthy uncle, who, however, was also a miser. This uncle thought himself very liberal in giving his nephew an allowance of fifty francs a month; the only person who agreed with him was the nephew, who by it was enabled to live—just live—in Paris, and there pursue his studies. Cherubini was then director of the Conservatoire in Paris, and he did not fail to recognize the advent of a new musical genius; he placed him where he would be trained by MM. Fétis, Benoist, and Reber. But the miserly uncle thought it folly for the youth to be spending money to study in Paris, when he might be earning it as a musician in Aix; so the allowance of fifty francs a month ceased, and Felicien earned his living by giving music lessons.

And now came Fathers Enfantin and Bazard, hierophants after Saint Simon, preaching his new gospel of Society. One of the first to throw himself into that movement, and with all the enthusiasm of an imaginative youth, was Felicien David. He went to dwell with the community at Menilmontant, where he composed the chants and choruses sung by the worshippers under the new cult of Saint Simon and Pere Enfantin. When the association was condemned and dispersed by the government, a number of the brothers resolved to undertake a pilgrimage to the East. Among these was Felicien, who also took along with him for a companion—his piano! Three strange, seemingly idle, but most fruitful, years he now passed in the East, sometimes appearing on the path of his brother pilgrims, then disappearing, occasionally surprised while swinging in his hammock in some shady spot on the banks of the Nile, next reported as seen, sun-tanned, with a caravan in the Arabian Desert. The pasha happened once to hear his music—for he charmed the Alexandrians with concerts—took him to his palace, listened with rapture, and besought him to remain there forever as his favorite and friend.

But Felicien is the child of an ideal the pasha cannot see, and so refusing the seductions of Egypt and of palaces, he plunged again into the solitudes. At that time (1835) the plague began to rage at Alexandria, and was already slaying two hundred people each day, so the young composer journeyed by land to Syria; and now from his hammock, or from his sheltered seat on the camel, where his blank sheets and pencil are always before him, he sees and spiritually transmutes to music the romance of Gaza, Jaffa, Jerusalem, Tyre, Sidon, Smyrna, Rhodes, Cyprus, and the Isles of Greece. Before these eyes full of dreamy wonder passes the brilliant masquerade of ages and races, who fought and slew each other, it may be, but are now softened and blended in the perspective of Time into the same solemn grandeur of world-history. One day, as a man awakened from deep dreams, he finds his hammock changed to a civilized chamber, hibiscus and cassia replaced by boulevard brick; he was in a Paris lodging-house, turning the scenes through which he had been wandering into "Oriental Melodies."

But Paris did not appreciate those themes, and did not buy them; and Felicien sank into melancholy, which this time meant the seclusion of one dead. But the hermit was mastering the art and mystery of his vocation more thoroughly; and at the end of two years, during which Paris was unaware of his existence, he emerged, bringing with him several symphonies. One of these was performed at a concert in 1837; but the composer had not learned in the least how to manipulate claqueurs or conciliate managers and publishers, so the symphony gained him no fame; nevertheless, it won him the faith and reverence of a few men who held divining-rods that trembled at the veins of true genius, and these studied his symphony and awaited the next work of its author. But this was a long time in coming. Four years passed, when they who remembered that symphony sought out its author, and found him in an attic living on crusts; for the rest, eating his heart even while feeding it with the hope that he might still achieve some adequate work. So it went on for dreary years, until at last a lover of art who also had means encountered him, compelled him to receive assistance, and on a glorious day—the first for many years which gave him a door without the wolf at it—namely, in December, 1843, he set himself to composition of the Desert. Night and day he lives over again the scenes through which he had journeyed; all that was petty in his pilgrimage drops away, its grand features stand in relief, and in his exaltation they gain a more real, because more spiritual life. In just three months from the time of its commencement the work is complete.

On the 8th of December, 1844, the Desert was brought out at the Conservatoire of Paris. An old fellow-traveler of the composer in Egypt, M. Colin, who was also a poet, wrote a poem which was recited in the intervals of the music. Then suddenly, from being the obscurest artist in Paris, Felicien

David became the most famous; for a long time the public there would listen to nothing but the Desert, and before the season was over it had been reproduced in every capital of Europe.

[FOR THE INQUIRER.]
IN DREAM.

BY GEORGE EDGAR MONTGOMMERY.

COULD I but pour the passion of my breast
Into some mould as changeless as my love;
Could I but make of every star above
A radiant witness eager to attest
The secret that doth mock the soul at rest,
The secret I have held and still must hold—
Ah, what a sweet, glad tale might then be told
Of one young life that dreamed its hope the best!

Alas! frail hope, thy death is in thy sigh,
And none shall know what I have yearned to tell;
My love is all a dream, a far-off cry,
That echoes sadly, like some funeral bell;
Yet,—O sweet dream! in thee I live, I die,—
Whilst I may dream, life is no longer hell!

RECOLLECTIONS OF GEN. BARTLETT.

[Correspondence of the Evening Post.]

THERE must be many of your readers who remember, in the early days of the civil war, the passage through Broadway of the 49th Regiment of Massachusetts volunteers. At its head rode a young man of only twenty-two years, tall, graceful and soldierly to such a degree that it seemed as if a year and a half of previous service had already molded him into the ideal soldier. He wore one wooden leg, an arm was in splints, and a crutch was swung over his shoulder; but his carriage and bearing were those of a man whom nothing could daunt.

At the close of that long and fearful struggle, in July, 1865, Harvard University welcomed home those of her brave sons who had gone forth to battle for fatherland and for liberty. Doubtless many a long year will pass ere such another sight is witnessed upon this continent. Among all the brave and strong and distinguished and loved ones who gathered there in that great commemoration which Lowell has immortalized in verse, not one was more noticed than Bartlett. Who that was present will ever forget his emotion when called upon to speak? He was the idol of young Harvard; perhaps we may say that the most of romance surrounded him of all the sons of Harvard, in the minds of old and young. He tried to speak. He stood pale, trembling and silent; when Col. Lee, chief marshal of the day, rose and said: "As was said to President Washington upon a certain occasion, 'Sit down, sir; your modesty exceeds even your merit.'"

In the Summer of 1874 Gen. Bartlett was chief marshal of the Harvard commencement. His staff was composed of twenty-four former officers. A rare interest was added to the occasion by the fact that then, for the first time, the alumni were to dine in the great memorial hall. The memories of the late civil war were to be revived again, but in no unkindly spirit, as Bartlett and many others desired and tried to accomplish. It was upon this occasion that Gen. Bartlett made that short but most forcible and beautiful appeal for a renewal of friendship and peace between the South and the North. The effect was electric, and the audience fairly sprang from their seats, and leaned toward him, and gathered round him and cheered him again and again.

It was the fortune of the writer to meet Gen. Bartlett at the country-house of a friend on the Sunday preceding that speech, and to speak with him as to the wisdom and propriety of his proposed line of remark. Never was a man more in earnest and more anxious to do what was right. He was clear in his own mind, but he was not so certain as to the manner in which his friends and the Harvard alumni would receive his remarks. He was impelled by a sense of duty. His, like that of the Founder of our religion, was the ministry of reconciliation. The hearty response which Harvard gave him was not accepted as his personal triumph, but as proof that the best sentiment of the country was for reconciliation. At Lexington, on the 19th of April following, he spoke in the same patriotic strain, with the whole country for a listener, and set the key-note of the centennial year, so that all the horrible din of partisan strife could not utterly silence the new awakening of patriotic memories.

Frank Bartlett, as his friends were wont to call him, was in all things a manly man. Had his life been spared, he must inevitably have been drawn into public life. He possessed capacity for leadership. The charm of his presence was magnetic. He was perfectly honest, perfectly true and perfectly fearless. The few speeches and letters which he has left us are models of brevity, of strength and of good homely English. That was almost Emersonian when he said that "he believed in administration which was above suspicion, and not one which was above investigation." When the history of the great civil war is fully written out, there will be few names about which will gather so much of romantic interest, and of tender and sentimental regard, as about that of this gallant young Massachusetts officer.

It seems to us who knew him that he has died altogether too young for his own complete fame and for our happiness. But a wise Providence orders all things. At a time of grave political excitement, when few men stand forth for country, and all are for party; when sectional distrust and hatred again display their ghastly forms; when more than ever reconciliation and peace are yearned for by every patriotic heart; his failing life and sick chamber, and calm and beautiful death, arrest the attention of men and point them to the better way, the Christlike way of bearing one another's burdens; of judging each other kindly, of binding up the broken-hearted, of rebuilding the waste-places. If such an influence might go forth from his death, he, at least, would scarcely murmur at his release.

THE MORALITY OF CAREFUL WRITING.

[From the Atlantic Monthly for January.]

THE genius of true art is the most austere as well as the most genial of spirits. To know and serve it we must keep our finer preceptions keen-eyed and humble. We cannot lose distinctions in art, taking an intention in place of achievement, without vitiating our power of discriminating in other things. Promise without performance in finance and state-craft gets ugly names given to it. I do not wish to deal in ugly names, but I should like to suggest the analogy here. But the writers I refer to, and their apologists, plead that they are too much in earnest to have time to observe artistic laws or improve taste in themselves and others. One of them, in a preface to his new novel, says he does not claim for his books "the character of beautiful works of art," but "is not afraid to inform the reader that these books are written with the honest, earnest purpose of helping him to do right." This clearly implies a sneer at "beautiful works of art." But need a man's purpose be any the less honest and earnest if he tries to do his work as well and beautifully as possible? This writer wants to have it supposed that there is something superior, something especially religious, in his fixing attention on his purpose and neglecting the execution of it. But religiousness in all branches of life demands that we should do what we have to do in the most thorough way; and real thoroughness implies beauty; and beauty in human products implies severe thought and refined art. The writer of that preface of course uses literary art just as far as he can grasp it to make his story attractive. But he finds that his works are not ranked very high for their art, and therefore he assumes that art is not worth thinking much about. But let me ask why these gentlemen compose novels, instead of tracts and sermons? Tracts and sermons demand less literary art than long fictions, and if sincerity is a thing apart from art, tracts and sermons are more sincere. No; they write books because they can reach more people, and possibly because they can make more money by them. And they write them in a quick, loose, unfinished way, because it is less difficult than to write them in a mood of devotion to the highest æsthetic as well as the highest ethical ideals. It is a feeble self-deception on their part to assume that they are more virtuous for this reason than the conscientious literary artist who would be glad enough to have his fifty thousand readers, too, but will forego them if he must be false to his ideals in order to get them.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

THE GRANDFATHER'S BLESSING.

BY BERTHOLD AUERBACH.

(Concluded from last week.)

My Uncle Adam had caused grandfather a great deal of trouble. Possessed by an irresistible passion for a wandering life, he had left his father's house, and for many years nothing was heard from him. My grandfather often sighed for him in secret, for he was fondly attached to this, his youngest son. And when Adam finally appeared with a wife from America and two sons, his father said in the words of the Scripture: "Now let me die. Since I have seen thy face, because thou art yet alive. I had not thought to see thy face; and lo! God hath shown me also thy seed."

My grandfather was considered in the whole neighborhood a freethinker—as I learned afterwards—for he read all sorts of books, and had his own opinions on a variety of subjects. Once on Whitsunday, just after the bell had rung, and the service had begun, he had stood a while in front of the church with hands folded together, and then went off into the woods. He said to a man who met him and questioned him: "That it was sometimes better for one to catch the holy sound at the door of the temple, and then to bear it with him in his heart out into the wide world; that he wanted to-day, just for once, to go where the flowers, waving in the wind, send up their sacred incense, and to hear the birds preaching in all tongues and languages and praising God."

From that day my grandfather passed for a freethinker, and yet he loved God more than all else, and his neighbor as himself. At a later period, when I could read, and his eyes were unable to see the print, I had often to read the Bible aloud to him. I once saw him shed tears at the history of Jacob, but I was dry-eyed, and read without stopping, in order to come to something which would give him consolation. As I was at one time reading the passage, "Love thy neighbor as thyself," he said in a low tone to himself: "One can reverse that and say, Love thyself as thy neighbor!" I did not exactly understand what he meant, and thought too that the words of the Scriptures ought not to be changed and turned round; and, occupied with this thought, I read on without knowing what I was reading, and stammered and stumbled. My grandfather took the Bible from me and closed it. I was not allowed to read to him again for a long time, and so I retained all the circumstances in my memory. I now comprehend his meaning in saying: "Love thyself as thy neighbor!" It was that we should be free from all fond partiality toward self, and look upon ourselves as if we were not ourselves but another person. How hard that is!

Why is it, that, as a general thing, the grandfather is so specially fond of the first-born grandchild, and that this child so much resembles him? I am inclined to think that the man, becoming a child again, is drawn toward the child, and their affections become entwined: it is the free exercise of parental and filial love, love which has been freed from dependence on mere natural relationship, and which is also bound up with it.

My grandfather's life closed with a holy death. Even at this moment I feel his hand on my head, and it seems as if a spirit of blessing, a tender, sanctifying spirit, rested upon me.

The last time my grandfather was out in the field, was when we were getting in the second crop of hay. The fresh odor of the hay was perhaps too pungent for the old man of four-score and seven years, and he fell in a fainting fit. He was carried home, and as soon as I returned from school I hastened to him. He felt for me with trembling hand, and held me fast: after this I had to stay away from school and remain with him. On the fifth day of his illness, on a Friday morning, he said to me: "Read aloud something from the Scriptures." I handed to him on the bed the Bible, which he opened. Was it chance, or was it some special providential leading?—my eye directly fell upon this passage: "And the time drew near that Israel must die." I wept; I was suffered to read no further, and was sent to call in all the household. And my grandfather said: "Adam, place me upright in bed, for I wish to speak to you all." Adam did as was desired of him, then stationed himself behind the bed, and grandfather continued: "Adam, you are my youngest son, and you have caused me many a grief. I forgive you from the bottom of my soul; you have a stout heart and a strong intellect—rule over them. Look at the swift-footed horse who is curbed with bit and bridle. May the spirit of peace and love prevail in you, my dear son; may God bless you."

Adam pressed his hands together and also his lips, drawing long and deep breaths. My grandfather then called my father to the bed-side and said to him: "John, to you a quiet life is allotted; you are pious and patient, but your hand is dilatory. Let Adam be your hand, and let him carry out what you have agreed upon between you. Be strenuous in doing as you are in suffering. Be you true to each other, you brothers, remember your father on earth and in heaven, and be united with him."

My father, with his cap pressed against his mouth, in order that his loud sobs might not be heard, now placed himself at the head of the blessing patriarch, who called my mother to him and said: "You came into my house as a maid-servant, and you became my daughter. You have repaid my love a thousand-fold. Preserve with diligent hand what the Lord has bestowed upon you; be kind to those who serve you; be a mother to the children of my dead Magdalena, and God will recompense it to you and to your children, and to your children's children. May you be blessed!"

My mother stood at the foot of the bed and prayed in a low tone. Turning to Adam's wife, the dying old man continued: "Your cheerful spirit has gladdened my old days. You were sent to my house by God from a far distant land, so that I might know all men are one in His sight. Implant in the hearts of your children a love to all men of every creed and of every land. My daughter, receive my blessing."

Laying his two hands on my mother's face, he then said in trembling accents: "Weep not too sorrowfully for me, thou loving and true; be not too impatient for the day when you shall be with me once more, and forever may God be your support."

He drew a deep breath, and in a relieved tone uttered my name. I knelt down at his side; he laid his hand on me and said: "Receive my blessing, my son! Much has been bestowed upon you, more than to other men; be to them a leader. The spirit of truth and of love rest upon you, my son!—Receive me, thou Spirit of Love, forgive me."

He never spoke again.

And whenever I utter from a sacred place, or embody in a voiceless, written word some deep thought which I seek to pour out into the souls of men, it seems to me as if the spirit of my grandfather spoke through me.

"May I live like him, and like him die!"

GREAT-GRANDFATHER'S BOOKS.

[H. E. Scudder, in St. Nicholas for January.]

THE New England Primer was not the only little book which great-grandfather had. There were not many books made in America then, and this was almost the only one made expressly for children; nor were there very many made or written in England for children alone in those days.

"Mother Goose's Melodies" is an American book more than a hundred years old. Many of the rhymes in it, most indeed, are English nursery rhymes, brought over in the head to this country; but there was a real Mother Goose in Boston, who sang the little ditties to her daughter's children and her daughter's husband, who was a printer, collected them into a book. Then we read of "Goody Two Shoes," which was quite well known, and there were a good many scraps of history, and anecdotes in almanacs, as there are now. But then, as now, children read the same books that their fathers read. Indeed, that was much more common then, for it is only within the last hundred years, more especially the last twenty-five or thirty, that there have been many books and magazines especially for children. But there were long ago books written, like "The Arabian Nights," "Robinson Crusoe," and "Gulliver's Travels," the authors of which were not thinking of children at all; and yet these books have come to be read almost entirely by the young. Great-grandfather had these books, and he read besides many books which children to-day, with books of their own, are less likely to see. There was John Randolph, of Roanoke, for instance, a notable Virginian, who was born in 1773. The first book that fell in his way was Voltaire's "History of Charles XII. of Sweden." He found a closet full of books, and before he was eleven years old he had read "The Spectator," "Humphrey Clinker," "Reynard the Fox," "The Arabian Nights," "Tales of the Genii," "Goldsmith's Roman History," and an old "History of Braddock's War," "Don Quixote," "Gil Blas," "Quintus Curtius," "Plutarch's Lives," "Pope's Homer," "Robinson Crusoe," "Gulliver's Travels," "Tom Jones," "Orlando Furioso," and "Thompson's Seasons"—a queer lot, but some of them great books, which it would be well to read now, instead of weak and foolish ones.

SELECTIONS.

THE ERL-KING.

[Translated from the German of Goethe.]

WHA's ridin' sae fast i' the gloamin's licht?
WHA's ridin' sae late through the mirksome nicht?
A faither, wha clasps aye mair close i' his arm
His ae bonnie laddie, sae bielded frae harm.

"My bairn, what gars ye aye cower doon your een?"
"O faither, haud fast! it's the Erl-king I've seen—
The Erl-king, wi' his croon an' his glamourie."
"My son, it's driftin' euid that ye see."

ERL-KING.

"Ne'er hae I seen sae fair a face!
Ne'er hae I viewed sae sweet a grace!
O gin ye'll gang wi' me, we'll play
On gowden shores the lee-lang day."

"My faither, my faither, O dinna ye hear What the Erl-king whispers sae laigh i' my ear?"
"Noo whist ye, my bairn—it's some weary win'
That has tint away whilk it canna fin'."

ERL-KING.

"O come wi' me to my far-off hame!
Ye sall kame your locks wi' a gowden kame.
My dochters their watch by your side sall keep,
An' rock ye, an' kiss ye, an' sing ye to sleip;
They'll rock ye, an' kiss ye, and sing ye to sleip."

"My faither, my faither, an' dinna ye see
The Erl-king's fair dochters aye beckon to me?"
"My son, it's but yonder gray willows' saft sheen Ye tak for the glint o' their starry een."

ERL-KING.

"It's oh, bonnie bairn, but I like ye weel; Noo, yield ye, I rede, or my power ye sall feel."

"O faither, O faither, haud fast by me noo!
For his gruesome han' it lies cauld on my broo!"

The faither shuddered—his heart grew a stane,
But he grippit his bairn an' made ne'er a mane.
He sped to his castle wi' mickle drede;
Wae's me! in his arms—the bairn lay deid!

—Chambers's Journal.

THEY are never alone that are accompanied with noble thoughts.
—SIR PHILIP SIDNEY.

TO CHOOSE time is to save time; and an unseasonable motion is but beating the air.—BACON.

I LOVE such mirth as does not make friends ashamed to look upon one another next morning.—ISAAC WALTON.

THE very essence of tyranny is to act as if the finer feelings, like the finer dishes, were delicacies only for the rich and great, and little people have no taste for them and no right to them.

ALL things are literally better, lovelier, and more beloved for the imperfections which have been divinely appointed, that the law of human life may be effort and the law of human judgment mercy.—RUSKIN.

A LAWYER who does not believe in law, a physician who does not believe in medicine, a clergyman preaching doctrines which are false to his own convictions—these are drudges of a lower order than the Irishman carrying his hod of bricks up the ladder.
—JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE.

GOETHE said that the thought of endless life was sometimes oppressive to him, because there must be a period when further progress was impossible. But he was reassured on this point when he looked up to the stars. The poet felt that in revealing such depths of space to him they hinted at intellectual distances which no soul could out-travel. In the same spirit Kant said: "Two things fill me with perpetual awe—the moral law and the starry heavens."—JOHN WEISS.

THERE is a certain sweet severity of innocence—like that of Hilda in "Transformation"—which is dreadfully pained and shocked at the first great evil-doing which is brought before it, and thinks nothing was ever like it, or no punishment sufficient. This kind of sternness is as hard on itself as on others, and is really hatred of sin. Yet if the misery of the poor sinner be brought before these hard judges, they will soon be pitiful enough and grieve over their own harshness.—CHARLOTTE M. YONGE.

It is told of Brutus that when he fell on his sword, after the battle of Philippi, he quoted a line of Euripides: "O virtue! I have followed thee through life, and I find thee at last but a shade." I doubt not the hero is slandered by this report. The heroic soul does not sell its justice and its nobleness. It does not ask to dine nicely and to sleep warm. The essence of greatness is the perception that virtue is enough. Poverty is its ornament. It does not need plenty, and can very well abide its loss.—EMERSON.

A BRITISH VILLAGE IN OXFORD.

(From The London Times.)

A MOST remarkable discovery has been made in the course of preparing the ground for the new University schools in the High street, Oxford, which are about to be erected from the designs of Mr. Graham Jackson, M. A. In proceeding with the excavations there has been laid bare the site of what is considered by some an undoubted British village, or settlement, dating back perhaps for more than two thousand years. The site chosen for the erection of the schools, and on which this discovery has been made, was occupied, as is well known, by the Angel Hotel, and lies between High street on the North, Merton street on the South, University College on the West, and King Street on the East, and embraces an area of about two acres, nearly the whole of which, or at all events all that has been already cleared, abounds in evidence that on this spot originally existed a British settlement.

The excavations have now been made to a depth of about fifteen feet, and the earth having been cleared away has left standing a number of mounds of gravel, or at least so they appear to the uninitiated, but on closer examination these mounds resolve themselves into the walls which divided the circular pits in which our progenitors dwelt. In some cases the wall is not more than six inches thick, while in others again the division is of greater thickness, but all the spaces are of the same shape—namely, circular, although of course they differ in size. One very perfect specimen, situated on the west side, is of a remarkable character. It is much larger than the others, and being on the extreme edge of the site only one half has been exposed. The appearance presented therefore is that of a semicircular excavation in the gravel, the base of the semicircle being formed by the earth and foundations of the adjoining building.

This large pit has adjoining it a much smaller one, which probably served as the entrance, and at the point of junction between the two there is a bench or narrow platform. The opinion has been expressed that these excavations are merely old gravel pits, but against this supposition must be adduced the facts that they cover a large extent of ground, that they are all at about six feet below the surface, that each one of the caves or pits, although circular in shape, has a level bottom, that the walls in some cases are not more than six inches in thickness, that the gravel on the top of the wall bears undoubted traces of having been turned up from a lower level, and that in two of the pits have been found concrete floors (these being the only two that have been at present carefully examined,) of what composed is not at present known, but of such tenacity that it was possible to remove the half of one of them without fracture.

At the bottom of another of these primitive dwellings were found some pieces of decayed wood, which may or may not have been portions of the original roof. The remains have at present a most remarkable appearance, especially when viewed from a height, as then the circular form of each is more apparent, and the regularity of construction, and all being upon the same level, affords conclusive evidence to some antiquarians that here has been found incontrovertible evidence that Oxford can carry her antiquity back to a far earlier date than the classic days when King Alfred founded University College. In removing the rubbish and earth several objects of great interest have been found, including a portion of a Runic cross, a Saxon knife and arrow head, etc., and, also, a very large number of bones, but these possess no particular interest, as they are principally of domestic animals in general use.

The discovery has caused considerable interest in university circles, Professors Rolleston, Westwood, Prestwich and others having examined the spot, but of course there is at present a conflict of opinion as to the real nature of the discovery which has been made by the clerk of the Works, whose antiquarian knowledge is considerable, and to whom great credit is due for the careful manner in which he has preserved every possible evidence that can lead to a proper determination of the question.

SUNDAY SCHOOL MUSIC.

(Eugene Thayer in the Golden Rule.)

If we examine the words and music of the average Sunday-school Hymn and Tune Book what do we find? Save here and there a passable selection, nothing but a mass of stupid, incongruous stuff, nonsense and twaddle; illiterate, ungrammatical, and utterly unpoetical jingle; and music that trash or dishwater would be too good a name for. And this is not the worst of it. The little innocents are actually obliged to sing this drivelling nonsense.

Think of children beginning life with—

"'Twill all be over soon;

'Tis only for a moment here,

'Twill all be over soon."

Or singing such dismal meditations as this:—

"A few more prayers,

A few more tears,

It won't be long. It won't be long."

Or such enforced juvenile hypocrisy as—

"Almost anchored, life's rough journey

Shortly now will all be o'er.

Unseen hands the sails are furling;

Soon I'll reach the heavenly shore.

Almost home! how sweet it soundeth

To the heart that's worn with care."

Think of it! Worn with care at the age of twelve! Think of them obliged to vocalize such falsehoods as—

"I want to be an angel

And with the angels stand."

They don't want any such thing. There isn't a child in the world but what wishes to live. Not one of them wants to be an angel when death is the price. And yet innocent, unthinking children absolutely have to sing this dreariness. Further: I have seen and played from a Sunday-school book which had the words, "For Jesus is my Saviour," set to that drunkard's melody, "We won't go home till morning." Three or four notes changed, but the rest note for note. And this in my blessed native State of Massachusetts! Now the music was not bad, for I said that there is no such thing as bad music. But there are such things as bad associations; and when we hear this, or any other melody, repeatedly sung by men reeling home at midnight, we must conclude that it is unfit for church service. Unfit because of bad association; unfit because of inappropriateness;—the only thing that can render music valueless for good influence and good works.

"As the twig is bent the tree's inclined." So we must begin in the Sunday-school if the music of the church is ever to be reformed. If you have any Sabbath-school books like this, buy no more fire kindlings until they are in the ash barrel past resurrection. Far better that the children should have but a half dozen hymns, or even none at all, than that they be made to sing such false, hypocritical, arrant nonsense as the majority of these books contain.

RUSSIA'S POPULARITY IN ENGLAND.

(Moncure D. Conway, in the Cincinnati Commercial.)

AMONG those classes who are supposed to lead public opinion, there has been for many years a growing interest in Russia, and an increasing appreciation of the intellectual and moral growth of that country. This modern feeling was indicated yesterday at a rather unique assembly, which was called together in St. George's Hall, where I had the pleasure of being present. It was called together by Mr. W. R. S. Ralston, an English scholar, who has made the study of Russia his specialty, and who passes much of his time in that country. There is in the pleasant seaside village of Broadstairs an institution called St. Peter's Orphanage, where little Slav (chiefly Russian) children, who have become orphans in this country, have a pleasant home, under the patronage of the Archbishop of Canterbury and his wife, Mrs. Tait. Mr. Ralston has long been in the habit of visiting that orphanage, where he collects the children and pours out to them stories from the traditions and fairy lore of their country, with which his head is stored. Recently he resolved to call the attention of his London friends to this orphanage through the very pleasant method of taking a hall and sending out invitations (without price), that they might come and hear some "gossip about the Slavs." The result was a gathering, about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, of that oddly cosmopolitan character which I believe London alone can supply. I found myself comfortably seated between a rationalist Broad church clergyman and a radical lady artist, on the other side of whom was a Japanese pagan, at whose left was the rigidly orthodox Dr. Littledale, editor of the Church Times. Close by Edward Maitland, the Agnostic author of "The Pilgrim and the Shrine," touching elbows with the eminent Ritualist, the Rev. Mr. Denton. Mr. and Mrs. Herz, of the Comtist school, were seated near Mr. and Mrs. Karl Blind, of the German free-thinking persuasion. A little way off were G. H. Lewes, whose always striking countenance gets better looking as he gets older, and George Eliot, with whom the reverse is the case—and to get a look at whom all the ladies rose on tiptoe, whispering, "There she is!" The handsome young traveller, Mackenzie Wallace, who is carrying through the press a great work on Russia, for whose excellence Mr. Ralston vouches, was present also; so also was Mr. Macall, editor of the Athenæum, whose continued success proves that success sometimes succeeds better than merit; Mr. Ferguson, author of "Serpent and Tree Worship," and many other archæologists were present. William Black, too, was there, but I had only time to get from him that his recent American journey was a continuous festivity. (He has come back with heroines enough for one thousand novels, and looking vigorous enough to turn them all into romance.) Well, such were some of the characteristics of the audience which assembled to listen to Mr. Ralston; and nothing was more noticeable than the enthusiastic way in which they responded to every word he said favorable to Russia. His allusion to the emancipation of the serfs elicited continuous applause, and his account of the genuineness of their sympathy for the people of their own race now suffering from Turkish oppression awakened the liveliest sympathy. These were but incidental allusions, indeed, Mr. Ralston having studiously avoided the political side of his subject, but the scholarly gentlemen and ladies took up the faintest word favorable to Russia, and by their applause gave the meeting political significance.

OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE PUSILLANIMITY OF BIGOTRY.

To The Editor of the Inquirer :

THE Independent recently gave circulation to what it calls the "interesting story" of the London Methodist Recorder, concerning the death of Athanase Coquerel. It affirms that he disavowed the religious truth he had gained in the plenitude of his powers, and in death presented a spectacle of abject fear and weakness, sending for a Wesleyan pastor to whom he confessed and by whom he was shriven.

We have no doubt the story is one of those miserable fictions bigotry has ever invented to prop up its decaying creeds. It imagines the hero of faith dying as the slave of superstition would die if he had thought or said aught contrary to local or orthodox opinion.

It evermore stands about the cross of Christ's friends and says what it said, when its cold, cruel eyes were fixed upon his wan and suffering form, "Let be; let us see whether Elias will come to save him." Its malignant heart is stirred with triumph when the powers of reason are invaded by mortal agonies, and no music is sweeter to its ear than the bitter cry, "Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani?" But they go from their triumph to see sooner or later that the power of the reformer cannot be neutralized by the tremors of disease and the agonies of death. He rises again in spite of every Eloi, but the veil of the temple is rent never to be repaired.

But supposing the story true, what can be indicative of greater meanness than even to refer to it? Does not wise legislation insist that wills made under religious excitement in the time of mortal fear are nugatory? Is a man's opinion on any subject of as much worth when he is sick as when he is well? Cannot the Church of Rome boast that myriads of Methodists and other heretics have repented of their apostasy from the Holy Catholic Church when face to face with death? Has Protestantism come to this, that it must invade the chamber of death and snatch the words of delirium from dying men wherewith to discredit the testimony of health and intellectual maturity? Must it resort to the old strategy of mediæval times? Why does it stop there? In the old times they not only allied themselves with disease, they not only took advantage of abnormal conditions engendered in the course of nature, but anticipated them. If the words of dying men are so useful for the spread of the Gospel, when the nervous system is low and the brain feeble, why not make the nerves and brain obedient? The Catholics used to pour wine through a tunnel down the throats of Protestants, and when they were nearly deprived of reason, made them subscribe to the faith, and boasted of glorious conversions by this method. If all that is sought is recantation, if it be of no consequence whether the penitent be well or ill, living or dying, why do they not assist and accelerate the processes of disease?

But there is another side to the subject. If Rationalists sometimes die in fear, and creep in the last fever to lay themselves in the habit of the monk, do the Orthodox always die in triumph? When they sing, "O for a closer walk with God," or "I will praise Thee, every day," let them remember how William Cowper died! If Coquerel profited by the evangelical preacher in his dying hours, Cowper warned him away as impotent to help, and leaped, as he thought, at once to death and hell.

But a stout and reverent heart triumphs over death before the hour death triumphs over him. It is in the plenitude of our power, before the furies do their fell work, the soul strong in the love of God, dwelling in the light of His truth, can say, (while pietism allies itself with death and the grave,) "Now while the strength of a man is mine, O death, I will be thy plague; O grave, I will be thy destruction; repentance shall be hid from mine eyes."

FROM WASHINGTON.

AS IN all Southern cities, the holidays are more generally and more heartily observed than in the towns and cities of the North. Moreover, Washington, as a part of Maryland, is a Catholic city. The old residents—and, I may add, some very good Christian people here—are Roman Catholics—men and women who go about doing good. They have hospitals, orphan asylums, and schools well equipped and well managed. They have many churches, but no cathedral. One of the handsomest and most costly churches is occupied by colored people, although they are to be seen in other Catholic churches also. The music at the church for colored people, St. Augustin's, is very attractive, and, like that at St. Aloysius, draws many Protestants there at vespers. St. Dominic's is another beautiful church recently completed. St. Patrick's is in course of construction. The colored Presbyterians have a fine brick church in the most admirable and fashionable portion of the West End. The Methodists are almost as well situated near Franklin Place. The Baptist church, on Nineteenth Street, is in the midst of fashionable dwelling houses. This is owing mainly to the extending and building up of the city to and around the early locations of these churches of the colored people.

The Protestants and the white people of Washington have few fine churches. The church of the Ascension, Episcopal, is altogether the finest. It cost about $200,000. Mr. Corcoran contributed a large share of its cost. The church built by the Lutherans will present a grand appearance when completed. Dr. Newman's (the Metropolitan Methodist) church is large and elegant, but its location is poor. The Congregationalist is very large and complete in all its appointments, but very ugly in its exterior. These three churches, like others in Washington, were paid for by non-resident friends, to whom they still look for more or less sympathy and aid.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25, 1876.

FROM DAVENPORT, IOWA.

THE cry from all parts of the country is hard times, and yet we keep alive our work here in the valley of the Mississippi without any aid from our Atlantic neighbors. We may seem to you to be far away. We are from twenty-four to thirty-six hours from New York city, and near the centre of the republic. We are few who rally under the name Unitarian, but the number of liberals who have no sectarian connection is great.

We have recently had visits from our brethren at Chicago, and also from our brethren at Keokuk. These friends have given us some of their best thoughts in lectures and sermons.

E. P. Powell, of Chicago, is wonderfully terse and comprehensive in his style, and carries his hearers with him. Spectrum Analysis is a dull theme in the hands of some men, but as presented by Brother Powell, it is living and practical. The age of Socrates, Buddha, and Confucius was made as real as the nineteenth century. We had a fine lecture also on the Spectrum from Brother Clute, whose lucid style gave a charm to the subject. He showed every school-boy present how certainly we can analyze the sun and stars.

Rev. J. T. Sunderland made us but a short visit—too short for us to learn all from him that we wished to learn. We did learn with infinite satisfaction that the Fourth Church of Chicago is to live, and Mr. Sunderland will be present at the Easter celebration. He has stood by his guns with rare pluck. The heavy debt is reduced to only two thousand dollars, but why is that suffered to cripple a struggling church when we have a thousand persons in our body who would bless themselves by the gift of so small a sum in the name of the Lord?

Now, dear INQUIRER, I wish to congratulate you on your new name. It is the one for this day and generation, and is especially fitted for this Western country, where "Orthodoxy" has the barefaced assurance to proclaim its authority, as if, indeed, it had not been proven false in philosophy and as Bible teaching a thousand times.

If I had a dozen copies, I would do my best to obtain subscribers. Give us a paper cosmopolitan in its scope and deeply religious in its spirit, and we will do what we can to circulate it.

HUNTING.

JOTTINGS.

We notice that the Chime of Bells made by our advertisers, Henry McShane & Co., of Baltimore, which was a feature of the Exhibition, has been purchased by Mrs. A. T. Stewart for the Memorial Church at Garden City, Long Island.

THE Centennial grounds at Philadelphia, in their Winter garb, present a striking contrast to their appearance last Summer. The large buildings remain, though some which have been sold will disappear with the Spring. Active measures have been taken to push the Permanent Exhibition, for the use of which the Main Building has been taken, one of the first moves being to widen the passage-ways to such an extent that the available show-space is reduced one-third.

FROM TRANSYLVANIA.—A correspondent of the Austrian Protestant writes of the Lutheran Church in Transylvania (Hungary)—"With our whole people religion and culture, faith and knowledge, Christianity and liberty of conscience, are regarded not as antagonistic, but as complementary to each other." This privilege, hardly possessed by any other people, is attributed to the traditional arrangement in our Lutheran church, by which our young men must act as teachers at one of our five high schools for some years before they can obtain a settlement as pastors. They come thus into intimate connection not only with the people, but also with scientific thought.

BOSTON YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN UNION.—This season's course of "Practical Talks," given by the Union, will begin next Saturday evening in the Union Hall, Boylston street, to be continued on twelve successive Saturday evenings in January, February and March. Hon. Emory Washburn will open the course by giving on Saturday evenings, Jan. 6th and 13th, "A Talk on the Constitution of the United States." To this entire course, all, both ladies and gentlemen, are invited. Doors open at 7½, to begin promptly at 7½.

The children's festival given by the Union last Saturday afternoon was in all respects a great success. Four hundred invitations were issued, and one lady contributed 160 dolls!

THE OHIO FREE NORMAL SCHOOL, a new department of Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio, under the charge of Prof. James McNeill, assisted by Professors and Instructors of Antioch College and High School, opened its Winter term yesterday, January 3d. This school, embracing a course of one year's study, is free of charge for tuition to all persons above the age of seventeen years, who shall declare their intention to enter on the profession of teaching, for at least one year after leaving the school, and shall pass a satisfactory examination in Arithmetic, Grammar, Geography, Spelling and Penmanship. The success of the first term of this department has in every way exceeded the most sanguine

The Inquirer.

Published every Thursday, from the middle of September to the middle of July, in the Park Bank Building, 214 Broadway, New York.

To be in season for insertion the same week, communications intended for publication must be forwarded in time to reach this office not later than Tuesday. No attention is paid to anonymous communications. We require the name and address of every writer, not necessarily for publication, but as guarantees of good faith.

Communications relating to the editorial department of the paper should be addressed, "Editor of the Inquirer, P. O. Box 109, New York City;" all others to "Publisher," same address.

No person is authorized to collect money or make contracts for the Inquirer, who cannot show written authority from the Publisher.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

Three Dollars per year, in advance. Clergymen, Two Dollars per year. Postage, Twenty Cents per year, in advance. Remittances should be made by Registered Letter or by Post-Office Money Order, or Draft on New York payable to PUBLISHER OF THE INQUIRER.

ADVERTISING RATES.

Six cents per square line per week; outside page Scale of and pages next reading matter, ten cents per line. of Agate Lines
Special Notices twenty cents per line.

Discount—Fifty per cent. on yearly accounts amounting to $250 and under $500. Ten per cent. on yearly accounts amounting to $500 or more.

Copy for Thursday's paper received until Tuesday afternoon.

Advertisements must be acceptable in every respect.

Office, PARK BANK BUILDING, 214 Broadway.

Address,

THE INQUIRER,

Box 109, New York.

Special Notices.

Protestant Leaders.

A COURSE OF LECTURES

BY
JOHN W. CHADWICK,

AT THE
Second Unitarian Church, Brooklyn,
Corner of Clinton and Congress Streets.

1876—77.

LECTURES:

- I. Luther and the Reformation. Sunday evening, Nov. 5, 1876.
- II. John Calvin and his System. Sunday evening, Dec. 3, 1876
- III. George Fox and Quakerism. Sunday evening, Dec. 17, 1876.
- IV. Wesley and Methodism. Sunday evening, Jan. 7, 1877.
- V. Emanuel Swedenborg. Sunday evening, Feb. 4, 1877.
- VI. Murray and Universalism. Sunday evening, March 4, 1877.
- VII. Thomas Paine: His Relation to his era and later Times in Matters of Religion. Sunday evening, April 1, 1877.
- VIII. Channing and Unitarianism. Sunday evening, April 15, 1877.
- IX. Theodore Parker. Sunday evening, May 6, 1877.

Hour of Lecture, HALF-PAST SEVEN.

Morning Service at 10:35 precisely. Vesper Service, Third Sunday Evening of each Month, with the above exceptions.

Madame Ivan C. Michels,

SHAKESPEARIAN READER.

Accepts engagements for Church and Parlor Readings. Ladies and Gentlemen thoroughly instructed in Elocution. For Terms and Testimonials apply to 33 LAFAYETTE PLACE, NEW YORK.

The Address of Rev. John F.

LOCKE is to the care of W. H. Baldwin, President
Young Men's Christian Union, 18 Boylston St., Boston.

"Admirably fitted to teach the art from the very beginning."—Chicago Tribune.

"Mr. Hope is one of the old masters" in this sort of work. He has prepared an excellent work, in which his subject is treated fully and clearly."—Chicago Post.

"This book is a necessity for the thousands who will take up this new, pretty and useful pursuit!"—Chicago Tribune.

SORRENTO AND INLAID WORK FOR

AMATEURS, BY ARTHUR HOPE.
A practical manual of Scroll-Sawing, Overlaying, Polishing, Inlaying, Silhouettes, &c. Containing 50 full-sized designs, new and beautiful. The designs are worth more than price of book. Tastefully bound in muslin. For sale by booksellers generally. Sent by mail on receipt of price, $1.50. Descriptive circular mailed to any address.

JOHN WILKINSON, Publisher, 51 Lake St., Chicago.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, 122 Fifth Ave., New York.

Manhattan Savings Institution,

NOS. 644 AND 646 BROADWAY, COR.
BLEECKER STREET.

New York, Dec. 22, 1876.

Fifty-Second Semi-Annual Dividend.

The Trustees of this institution have declared the Fifty-Second Semi-Annual Dividend on all deposits on the last day of January next, (by the rules entitled thereto,) at the rate of Six per cent. per annum on sums not exceeding $500, and Five per cent. per annum on larger sums. Payable on and after January 15th.

E. J. BROWN, President.

EDWARD SCHELL, Treasurer.

C. F. ALVORD, Secretary.

OUT-SELLING IMMENSELY—THE Centennial Exposition.

DESCRIBED AND ILLUSTRATED.

The only complete, richly illustrated, low price work, 750 pages, only $2.50. Treats of the entire history, grand buildings, wonderful exhibits, curiosities, great days, etc. The best chance of 100 years to coin money fast, as everybody wants this work. 1,000 agents appointed first four weeks, 5,000 wanted. For full particulars address quickly, HUBBARD BROTHERS, Publishers, Philadelphia, Pa., Cincinnati, O., Chicago Ill., or Springfield, Mass.

Be not deceived by premature books assuming to be "official," etc.

expectation of its friends, and its prospects for the future are encouraging.

"CORRUPTION wins not more than honesty. Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace, to silence envious tongues. Be just and fear not."—Shakespeare.

Over this motto Mr. Thos. Nast, in the current number of Harper's Weekly, gives us an eminently peaceful figure of Justice embracing with her right arm the infant New Year, while in her left hand she holds the traditional scales. The Capitol looms up in the distance, and on the left sits Old '76, evidently wondering which side of the scale will go down when Justice presides next month over the counting of the electoral vote! The old gentleman seems sorely puzzled, and evidently thinks the closing days of his career sadly wanting in cheerfulness. Young '77 looks innocently hopeful, and Justice has a calm but determined look which is very reassuring.

ST. LOUIS.—The Church of the Messiah is the title of an attractive looking little paper issued by the church of that name, and edited, we presume, by its versatile and active minister, Rev. John Snyder. The number for December contains a full list of the various social, educational and benevolent agencies of both the Church of the Messiah and the Church of the Unity. Rev. Dr. W. G. Eliot furnishes the second of two interesting papers on The Genesis of the Church of the Messiah, giving facts and statistics many of which he alone could furnish. The editor generously offers his services to those in search of information concerning Unitarianism or other forms of Liberal Christianity, and illustrates his willingness to be "interviewed" by several pungent answers addressed to Elder, Calvin, and other determined truth-seekers. An able and admirable sermon on Worship of the Father, by Rev. John C. Learned, of the Church of the Unity, fills well the third page. We wish we could transfer it bodily to our own columns. We shall print portions of it next week. Mr. Learned is one of the clearest thinkers and most devoted ministers in the West. We are not surprised to hear that he has taken a strong hold upon the more thoughtful people of St. Louis.

THE stability of Blackwood's is noteworthy. Every issue is good, and the December number is therefore not put forth as an extra inducement to subscribe to something poorer to come. Though this uniformity of excellence obtains with this periodical, there is room for honest praise every month in the year. This month the interest of "The Woman Hater" is fully sustained. Vizard manfully combats the sly meanness of Severne, though not finding out the depth of his depravity. Miss Gale is allowed to practice medicine in England under peculiar conditions. We may learn an Englishman's opinion of Americans in this remark of Vizard's addressed to an American lady: "I farm two hundred acres"—vicariously, of course. Nobody in England has brains enough to do anything himself. That weakness is confined to your late father's country, and they suffer for it by outfighting, outliving and outwitting us whenever we encounter them."

"A German Bath" is the title of an article describing the present state of Homburg, Baden-Baden and other resorts of that class. Since the abolition of public gambling at those fashionable nurseries of vice some of these places go to decay, and others prosper in new fields of enterprise. What people undergo for the sake of following their leaders is well illustrated in the writer's experience at a mineral spring in Nassau. "Mongolia and Solitudes of Northern Thibet" is chiefly entertaining as a careful account of those regions of the Chinese Empire which have hitherto defied the observation of Europeans. The Great Desert of Gobi was crossed by Col. Prejevalsky, a Russian, whose work furnishes the text for the writer of the paper on Asiatic customs and countries. "The Secret Chamber, Castle Gowrie" is a wild specimen of the ghostly and ghastly that hardly ranks with the productions that render famous the name of Blackwood. It is a highly-drawn picture of nothing at all. But what can be said of Devious Rambles No. III? It has so many capital features. It dissects the century and compares now with then in a manner both subtle and original. The improvements of the present day are well looked at. Their good and bad sides are held up for review.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

[Under this head we shall reply briefly, as we find opportunity, to some of the questions put to us, either in conversation or in letters; in our answer to which we think others than the questioner will be likely to take some interest.]

DAYTON.—Your best way is to apply to Rev. Charles W. Wendte, pastor of the First Congregational Unitarian church in Cincinnati, who will, we are sure, be happy to answer your various questions. Mr. Wendte is our special correspondent for Cincinnati and neighborhood. He was the soul, if not the founder, of the Chicago Athenæum, and can undoubtedly give you just the information you are in search of. Mr. William H. Baldwin, President of the Boston Young Men's Christian Union, would also be a good man to consult.

SAN FRANCISCO.—The members of the Christian Register Association are, we believe, all members of the American Unitarian Association, but there is no formal connection between the two associations. Neither can justly be held responsible for the acts of the other. Your impression is a common one in the West, arising naturally enough from the fact that both Associations have their headquarters in the same building, at 7 Tremont Place, Boston. You can procure Parker's works by sending to G. P. Putnam's Sons, 182 Fifth Avenue, New York. An American edition of Dr. Martineau's new book will soon be published by Roberts Bros., Boston.

METHODIST.—We send THE INQUIRER to clergymen, of whatever "persuasion," for $2.00 per annum of forty-three numbers. Our regular subscription price is $3.00.

RHODE ISLAND.—We are unable to supply further orders for the first number of THE INQUIRER. Of the numbers for Dec. 14, 21, and 28 we have still a few copies on hand.

BALD HEADS

Can be covered with a piece exactly fitted to the Bald spot, so perfect, and with work so ingeniously contrived as to appear each hair just issuing from the skin, the hair being exactly of the same shade and texture as the growing hair; they are so perfect they cannot be detected. Made only at BATCHELOR'S Celebrated Wig Factory, 16 Bond Street, N. Y.

HAIR DYE.

BATCHELOR'S CELEBRATED HAIR DYE is splendid. It never fails. The only true and perfect Dye. Harmless, reliable, instantaneous. No disappointment, no ridiculous tints; remedies the ill effects of bad dyes, leaves the hair soft and beautiful Black or Brown. Sold and properly applied at BATCHELOR'S Wig Factory, 16 Bond St., N. Y. Sold by all druggists.

W. A. Batchelor's Curative Ointment
Immediately cures Ring-Worm, Tetter, Itching of the Head, and all Eruptions of the Skin, Face or Body.

W. A. Batchelor's Alaska Seal Oil
for the Hair. The best Hair Oil in use.

W. A. Batchelor's Dentifrice for beautifying and preserving the teeth and Gums and deodorizing the breath.

W. A. Batchelor's New Cosmétique, Black or Brown, for tinting the Hair, Whiskers or Moustaches without greasing them. Sold at factory, 16 Bond Street, New York, and by all druggists. Ask for them.

$12 a day at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine.

$55 to $77 a Week to Agents. Samples FREE P. O. VICKERY, Augusta Maine.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $50000 free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine.

The Toll Gate! Prize Picture sent free! An ingenious gem. 50 objects to find. Address, with stamp, E. C. Abbey, Buffalo, N. Y.

BABBITT'S TOILET SOAP.

Unrivalled for the toilet and the bath. No artificial and deceptive odors to cover common and deleterious ingredients. After years of scientific experiment the manufacturer of Babbitt's Best Soap has perfected and now offers to the public THE FINEST TOILET SOAP in the world. Only the purest vegetable oils used in its manufacture. For Use in the Nursery it has No Equal. Worth ten times its cost to every mother and family in Christendom. Sample box containing 4 cakes of 4 oz. each, sent free to any address on receipt of 75 cents. Address H. T. Babbitt, New York City. For Sale by all Druggists.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from active practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of consumption, bronchitis, catarrh, asthma, and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for nervous debility and all nervous complaints, after having thoroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, feels it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive, and a conscientious desire to relieve human suffering, he will send, free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, with full directions for preparing and successfully using. Sent by return mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, DR. W. C. STEVENS, 126 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

BLMYER MFG CO
BELLS
CHURCH SCHOOL FIRE ALARM
Finest, low priced, fully warranted. Catalogues giving full particulars, prices, etc., sent free.
BLMYER MANUFACTURING CO.,
664 to 694 West Eighth St., Cincinnati, O.

MARVELOUS.
The success of agents with the magnificent new combination of THE ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY. Let no agent fail to send for particulars at once.
Address, CHAS. CLUGES & CO.
14 Warren St., New York, or
112 Monroe St., Chicago.

PRINTING PRESSES FROM $100 TO $350
SEND 10 CTS. TO
WY. EDWARDS, 36 CHURCH ST. NEW YORK.

TROY BELLS.

THE JONES & CO.
Old Established Troy Bell Foundry continue to manufacture those superior Bells which have made Troy celebrated throughout the world. All Bells Warranted Satisfactory. Particular attention given to Church Bells, Chimes and Peals of Bells. Illustrated Catalogues sent free.

HANOVER FIRE INSURANCE CO., NO. 120 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Forty-seventh Semi-Annual Statement.

JANUARY 1, 1876.

Cash Capital.....	$500,000 00
Reinsurance Fund.....	587,717 75
Outstanding Liabilities.....	112,298 14
Net Surplus.....	392,759 20

ASSETS.

Cash in Bank and Office.....	$102,756 92
United States Six Per Cent. Bonds.....	596,637 50
Bonds and Mortgages, being first lien on im- proved Real Estate in the Cities of New York and Brooklyn.....	326,023 00
Loans on Call (Market Value of Securities, ties, $136,790).....	114,840 00
City and County Bonds.....	230,243 00
Bank and Trust Co. Stocks.....	41,650 00
First Mort. R. R. Bonds and Stocks.....	57,250 00
Balance in hands of Agents and Uncollected Office Premiums.....	99,168 96
Accrued Interest on Bonds and Mortgages and and Call Loans.....	7,067 22
Real Estate.....	17,109 49
	$1,592,775 09

BENJ. S. WALCOTT, President.
I. REMSEN LANE, Secretary.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

For Scrofula, and all scrofulous diseases, Erysipelas, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Eruptions and Eruptive diseases of the skin, Ulcerations of the Liver, Stomach, Kidneys,
Lungs, Pimples, Pustules,
Boils, Blotches, Tumors,
Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald
Head, Ringworm, Ulcers, Sores, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Pain in the Bones, Side and Head, Female Weakness, Sterility, Leucorrhœa, arising from internal ulceration, and Uterine disease, Syphilitic and Mercurial diseases, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, General Debility, and for Purifying the Blood.

This Sarsaparilla is a combination of vegetable alteratives—Stillingia, Mandrake, Yellow Dock—with the Iodides of Potassium and Iron, and is the most efficacious medicine yet known for the diseases it is intended to cure.

Its ingredients are so skillfully combined, that the full alterative effect of each is assured, and while it is so mild as to be harmless even to children, it is still so effectual as to purge out from the system those impurities and corruptions which develop into loathsome disease.

The reputation it enjoys is derived from its cures, and the confidence which prominent physicians all over the country repose in it, prove their experience of its usefulness.

Certificates attesting its virtues have accumulated, and are constantly being received, and as many of these cases are publicly known, they furnish convincing evidence of the superiority of this Sarsaparilla over every other alterative medicine. So generally is its superiority to any other medicine known, that we need do no more than to assure the public that the best qualities it has ever possessed are strictly maintained.

PREPARED BY
DR. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass.,
Practical and Analytical Chemists.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

LAMAR INSURANCE COMPANY, OF NEW YORK; Broadway, cor. John Street. Capital, - - $200,000.

ASSETS, JANUARY 1, 1876.

Cash on hand and in Bank.....	$13,269 20
U. S. Bonds, market value.....	304,220 60
Loans on Call, Good Stocks Collateral, 1,000 00
Bonds and Mortgages on Brick Dwell- ings.....	58,900 00
Bills Receivable for Inland Prem's.....	1,826 65
Premiums in course of collection.....	7,841 70
New York Bank Stocks market value.....	21,487 00
	$408,092 05
Losses unadjusted estimated at.....	$14,300 56

ISAAC R. ST. JOHN, President.
A. R. FROTHINGHAM, Vice Pres't.
WM. R. MACDIARMID, Sec'y.

HOME Insurance Co. of New York, Office No. 135 Broadway.

Forty-sixth Semi-Annual Statement, Showing the condition of the Company on the first day of July, 1876.

Cash Capital.....	$3,000,000 00
Reserve for Re-Insurance.....	1,845,521 47
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Dividends.....	247,326 66
Net Surplus.....	958,868 71
Total Assets - - -	$6,051,716 84

SUMMARY OF ASSETS:

CASH IN BANKS.....	$426,946 71
BONDS AND MORTGAGES, BEING FIRST LIEN ON REAL ESTATE WORTH $4,200,000	1,922,738 01
UNITED STATES STOCKS (MARKET VALUE)	2,642,125 00
BANK STOCKS (MARKET VALUE).....	287,487 50
STATE AND CITY BONDS (MARKET VALUE)	69,250 00
LOANS ON STOCKS, PAYABLE ON DEMAND (MARKET VALUE OF SECURITIES, $547,050)	423,650 00
INTEREST DUE ON 1st JULY, 1876.....	78,394 53
BALANCE IN HAND OF AGENTS.....	181,157 19
BILLS RECEIVABLE.....	10,833 34
PREMIUMS DUE AND UNCOLLECTED ON POLICIES ISSUED AT THIS OFFICE.....	13,631 56
Total - - -	$6,051,716 84

LIABILITIES.

CLAIMS FOR LOSSES OUTSTANDING ON 1st JULY 1876.....	$247,326 66
DIVIDENDS UNPAID.....	1,400 00
Total - - -	$247,326 66

CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.
A. F. WILMARTH, Vice-Pres't.
D. A. HEALD, 2d Vice-Pres't.
J. H. WASHBURN, Secretary.
T. B. GREENE, Ass't Secretaries.
O. K. FRANCIS, Ass't Secretaries.

A Dividend of FIVE per cent. has been declared, payable on and after Tuesday, the 13th of July.
New York, 14th July, 1876.

THE NEW JERSEY MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO., NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.

J. H. STEDWELL, President.
C. H. BRINKERHOFF, Secretary.
J. H. CANNIFF, Cashier.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr.
Chase's Improved ($2.00) Receipt
Book." Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free.
Brisson & Co., Portland, Maine.

ATLANTIC MUTUAL INSURANCE CO NEW YORK, OFFICE 51 WALL ST.

ORGANIZED 1842.

INSURES AGAINST MARINE AND INLAND
NAVIGATION RISKS.

And will issue Policies making Loss payable
in England.

Its Assets for the Security of its Policies
are more than
TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured, and are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated during the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearing interest until redeemed.

JOHN D. JONES, President.
CHARLES DENNIS, Vice-President.
W. H. H. MOORE, 2d Vice-President.
A. A. RAYBURN, 3d Vice-President.
J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

PHENIX INSURANCE COMPANY, OF BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Capital..... $1,000,000 00
Cash Assets, Jan. 1, 1876..... 2,549,958 77

OFFICES:

Western Union Telegraph Building, BROAD-
WAY, Cor. DEX St., New York.

Brooklyn Office..... 12 & 14 Court St.
Brooklyn E. D. Office..... 45 Broadway.

The benefits to be derived by the public from insurance against loss by fire are so great and numerous, when compared with its trifling cost, as to render it an imperative duty on every one to avail themselves of the protection afforded by the PHENIX INSURANCE COMPANY against the destructive ravages of FIRE, which in a few moments may lay waste the fruits of a whole life of industry.

STEPHEN CROWELL, President.
PHILANDER SHAW, Vice President.
WILLIAM B. CROWELL, Secretary.
ESTABLISHED A. D. 1850.

THE MANHATTAN LIFE INSURANCE CO., OR NEW YORK,

has paid $6,500,000 Death Claims;
has paid $4,560,000 return premiums to Policy-holders; has a surplus of more than $1,000,000 over Liabilities; and a ratio of $120 Assets for every $100 Liabilities, by New York Standard of Valuation.
It gives the best Insurance on the best lives at the most favorable rates.

EXAMINE THE PLANS AND RATES OF THIS COM-PANY.

HENRY STOKES, G. Y. WEMPLE,
President, Vice-President.
J. L. HALSEY, S. N. STEBBINS,
Secretary, Actuary.
H. Y. WEMPLE, H. B. STOKES, Assistant Secretaries.

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY

Manufacture those celebrated Bells for CHURCHES,
ACADEMIES, &c. Price List and Circulars sent free.
HENRY McSHANE & CO.
BALTIMORE, MD.

Amateur Theatricals.

For the benefit of the Folging House for street boys, Nos. 314 and 316 East Thirty-fifth Street, branch of the Children's Aid Society, to be held at the hall,

NO. 1464 BROADWAY,

Near 42d Street, Thursday evening, January 25th, 1877, at eight o'clock.

TICKETS, ONE DOLLAR. ADMIT ONE.

EVENING DRESS.

1877. POSTPAID. $1.60.

THE NURSERY; A Monthly

MAGAZINE FOR YOUNGEST READERS.
SUPERBLY ILLUSTRATED. Send ten cents for a Sample Number and Premium-List.
JOHN L. SHOREY,
36 Bromfield Street, Boston.

STEARNS & BEALE,

STATIONERS,

BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS,

PRINTING and LITHOGRAPHY,

147 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

(Between Broadway and Nassau Street)

JOEL W. STEARNS.W

M. P. BEALE.

1877 Music Books for 1877

THE SALUTATION.

A CAPITAL BOOK FOR CHOIRS, SINGING CLASSES AND MUSICAL CONVENTIONS.

In this fine book will be found the newest and best sacred music by L. O. EMERSON. Good Singing School Course, with abundant excellent material for practice, including a number of Glee, also Tunes in all the Metres, and a large number of fine Anthems. Should be in the hands of every Choir member.

$1.38; or, $12.00 per Doz.

THE ENCORE.

By L. O. EMERSON, has the same Singing School Course as that in the SALUTATION, but with a much larger number of Glee, rendering it a Glee Book. Also a fair number of Sacred Tunes.

75 Cts.; or, $7.50 per Doz.

Either book mailed, post-free, for Retail Price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

C. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 Broadway,
New York

J. E. DITSON & CO.,
Successors to Lee & Walker,
Philadelphia.

WOOD & DAVIS,

BANKERS.

31 PINE STREET, NEW YORK.

GOVERNMENT BONDS, STATE, MUNICIPAL, RAILROAD SECURITIES AND GOLD BOUGHT AND SOLD ON COMMISSION.

C. D. WOOD.

S. D. DAVIS.

Employment Society for Poor WOMEN.

This Society now offers for sale at its store, No. 143 East 13th street, New York, a large quantity of garments, the remains of last year's stock, at very low prices. Those wishing to buy women's or children's clothing to give to the poor or to charitable institutions will find there a good supply of articles suitable for the purpose. Call and examine the garments, or send orders to

THE EMPLOYMENT SOCIETY,

143 East 13th Street,

New York City.

BROOKLYN ADVERTISEMENTS.

OVINGTON BROTHERS,

246, 248, 250 and 252 Fulton Street,

BROOKLYN.

Fine China and Glass,

Clocks and Bronzes.

MAJOLICA, FAIENCE, GIEN, TORQUAY AND WARES

Goods packed and shipped free of charge.

O'BRIEN & COMPANY,

IMPORTERS,

MANUFACTURERS and RETAILERS

OF DRY GOODS,

CARPETS,

CLOTHING

141 and 143, 151 to 159 Atlantic Ave.

We solicit an inspection of our magnificent assortment in all our Departments—forty-one in number—conceded to be the largest, most varied and best selected ever exhibited in Brooklyn, with a stock in value amounting to over half a million dollars.

Joseph O'Brien & Co.,

141 and 143, 151 to 159 Atlantic Avenue.

Lectures and Sermons,

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

FIRST SERIES.

The Education of Conscience.

Self Respect.

The Higher Reverence.

God on our Side.

Man and the Bible.

The Best Use of Sunday.

SECOND SERIES.

The Essential Piety of Modern Science.

A Rational Church.

Economy and Waste.

Also, WAX, TRUTH AND LIFE, a Biography of N. A

Staples, with sermons, price, $1.00.

For sale by CHARLES P. SOMERBY, 139 Eighth St., New York. Copies sent by mail at the rate of five cents each and postage.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.

Established in 1837.

Superior Bells of Copper and Tin, mounted with the best Rotary Hangings, for Churches, Schools, Farms, Factories, Court-houses, Fire Alarms, Tower Clocks, etc. Fully Warranted. Illustrated Catalogue sent Free. VANDUZEN & TIFT, 102 E. 23 St., Cincinnati.

10 PER CENT NET.

Kansas, Missouri and Iowa Improved Farm First Mortgage Coupon Bonds Guaranteed. We guarantee, as an assurance, that we loan not to exceed one-third of the actual value. In over six years' business never lost a dollar; never delayed a day on interest or principal; neither we nor our customers ever took an acre of land under foreclosure. Send for particulars and references.

J. B. WATKINS & CO., LAWRENCE, KAN., or HENRY DICKINSON, Manager, 72 Cedar Street, New York.

MISFIT CARPETS.

English Brussels, Three Ply and Ingrain; also, Stair Carpets, Velvet Rugs, Crumb Cloths, etc., very cheap, AT THE OLD PLACE.

112 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

Carpets carefully packed and sent to any part of the United States free of charge.

SEND FOR PRICE LIST.

J. A. BENDALL.

THE MOST EMINENT living authors, such as Prof. Max Muller, Prof. Tyndall, Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Dr. W. B. Carpenter, Professor Huxley, R. A. Proctor, Frances Power Cobbe, The Duke of Argyll, Jas. A. Froude, Mrs. Muloch, Mrs. Oliphant, Mrs. Alexander, Miss Thackeray, Jean Ingelow, George MacDonald, Wm. Black, Anthony Trollope, Matthew Arnold, Henry Kingsley, Francis Galton, W. W. Story, Ruskin, Carlyle, Fenayson, Browning, and many others are represented in the pages of

Littell's Living Age.

Jan. 1, 1877, the Living Age enters upon its 132d volume. During the year it will furnish to its readers the productions of the foremost authors above named and many others; embracing the choicest Serial and Short Stories by the LEADING FOREIGN NOVELISTS, and an amount unapproached by any other periodical in the world, of the most valuable literary and scientific matter of the day, from the pens of the leading Essayists, Scientists, Critics, Discoverers and Editors, representing every department of Knowledge and Progress.

The Living Age (in which "Every Saturday" has been merged) is a weekly magazine giving more than THREE AND A QUARTER THOUSAND double column octavo pages of reading-matter yearly. It presents in an inexpensive form, considering its amount of matter, with freshness, owing to its weekly issue, and with a satisfactory completeness attempted by no other publication, the best Essays, Reviews, Criticisms, Tales, Sketches of Travel and Discovery, Poetry, Scientific, Biographical, Historical and Political Information, from the entire body of Foreign Periodical Literature, and from the pens of

THE ABLEST LIVING WRITERS.

"A pure and perpetual reservoir and fountain of entertainment and instruction."—Hon. Robert C. Winthrop.

"The best periodical in America."—Theo. L. Cuyler.

"Fairly without a rival."—Congregationalist, Boston.

"It reproduces the best thoughts of the best minds of the civilized world upon all topics of living interest."—Philadelphia Inquirer.

"The choicest literature of the day."—N. Y. Tribune.

"Every weekly number of 'The Living Age' now-a-days is equal to a first-class monthly. For solid merit, it is the cheapest magazine in the land."—The Advance, Chicago.

"With it alone a reader may fairly keep up with all that is important in the literature, history, politics and science of the day."—The Methodist, N. Y.

"Indispensable to every one who desires a thorough compendium of all that is admirable and noteworthy in the literary world."—Boston Post.

"Ought to find a place in every American home."—N. Y. Times.

Now is the time to subscribe, beginning with the New Year.

Published weekly at $3 per year, free of postage; or for $10.50 per annum in advance.

$4 Monthly (or Harper's Weekly or Bazar) will be sent for a year, both postpaid; or, for $9.50, the LIVING AGE and Scribner's St. Nicholas or Appleton's Journal.

EXTRA OFFER FOR 1877.—$3

To all new subscribers for 1877 will be sent gratis the six numbers of 1876, containing, with other valuable matter, the first instalments of a new and powerful serial story, "The Marquis of Lossie," by GEO. MACDONALD, now appearing in the LIVING AGE from advance sheets.

Address LITTELL & GAY, Boston.

ADAPTED TO ALL SECTIONS OF THE COUNTRY.

THE NEW JERSEY AGRICULTURIST.

A plain, practical 8-page Journal, devoted to the

FARMING, GARDENING AND HOUSEHOLD INTERESTS.

TELLS WHEN AND HOW TO PLANT.

HINTS FOR EACH MONTH.

FARM,

GARDEN,

LAWN,

GREENHOUSE,

WINDOW AND INDOOR GARDENING.

Only 50 Cents a Year. Sample Copies Free.

Liberal pay and a Premium (Cash) to Agents.

NEW JERSEY AGRICULTURIST,

P. O. BOX 2576, New York City.

THE INQUIRER.

VOL. XXXII.—NO. 6. }
WHOLE NO., 1576. }

NEW YORK, JANUARY 11, 1877.

{ $3.00 PER ANNUM.
{ 8 CENTS A COPY.

CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL NOTES.....	101
LEADING ARTICLES:
Public Sentiment and the Presidential Dilemma.....	102
Mr. Ely's Successor in Congress.....	103
The Medico-Legal Association.....	103
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE:
From England.....	104
From Chicago.....	105
LITERARY NOTICES:
Mr. Fox Bourne's Life of Locke.....	105
The North American Review for January.....	106
Minor Notices.....	107
New Publications Received.....	108
HEARTH AND HOME:
Another Year.....	108
Winter Lessons.....	108
The New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children.....	109
OUR BOYS AND GIRLS:
Prince Carol.....	110
THE PULPIT:
Worship of the Father.....	112
OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE:
Reconstruction.....	112
A Hint to Small Congregations.....	113
OBITUARY:
Mrs. Hannah H. Thomas.....	113
JOTTINGS.....	114
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT.....	114

CHARLES G. AMES, Henry W. Bellows, William Potts, Edward P. Powell, and S. Alfred Steinthal are among the contributors to this number of THE INQUIRER.

On Tuesday gold was quoted in the New York market at 105½, a price at which it would seem to be policy on the part of the banks to supply themselves. Just at this time, however, they are mainly engaged in endeavoring to escape exorbitant taxation by reducing their capital. As we go to press, gold stands at 106½, the slight rise being attributed to the Louisiana embroglio. The price of silver has varied somewhat during the week, closing at 57 3-16d per ounce. The supporters of the Silver Bill still maintain a determined position, and will require vigorous opposition.

THE Conference at Constantinople continues its sittings, but seems no nearer to a peaceful settlement of the question under discussion than at the date of our last issue. Lord Salisbury and General Ignatieff have postponed their departure until next Monday, giving room for more talk, but with little promise of a satisfactory result, in the present temper of the Porte. There appears to be less unanimity on the part of the members of the Conference than existed a week ago—a fact which will certainly tend to encourage Midhat Pasha in his opposition to the demands made by it. Meantime it is reported that the Russian Contingent in Servia has been dissolved, and that Servia is negotiating with the Porte for peace on the basis of the status quo and the maintenance of the Treaty of Paris.

THE coup d'état in Louisiana is so recent and the movement of events has been so rapid that any extended comment upon them seems premature and hazardous. At this writing, it would appear that Nicholls is practically in quiet possession of the city of New Orleans, with the exception of the State House, which is held by the adherents of Packard, and is managing affairs with great judgment and prudence. So far, all indications point to an intention on the part of the General Government to refrain from interference except to preserve the peace. Should this intention be carried out, there can be no question as to the result;—the Democrats will acquire and remain in possession of the State government.

In the inextricable web of irregularities of which Louisiana has been the scene for many years, it is impossible, for an unprofessional man at least, to trace the thread of legality or to say on which side, if on either, a full legal claim exists. Of this, however, we feel quite assured: if Mr. Nicholls can be installed as Governor of the State, with due regard to justice, and the gang of unworthy politicians who for so long a time have kept the people in a condition of turbulence and unrest, can be definitively overthrown, the best interests of all the people of the State, white and black, and of the nation at large, will be subserved thereby.

AFTER a long illness, the result of which could not be doubtful, the death of Commodore Vanderbilt was announced without creating that financial excitement which many had anticipated. A natural apprehension that a division of his great estate would lead to dealings in the stock market which would necessarily seriously affect the prices of leading stocks, produced some variations in rates, but no important changes.

Our contemporaries and the public generally improve the occasion by discussing the character and life of the deceased, and the testamentary disposition of his enormous wealth. There remains little, however, to be said. Here was a man with large ability and great powers of organization, who, living in a time of rapid development, and giving his attention closely to his personal interests, succeeded in accumulating vast riches; who enjoyed all the protections and facilities afforded him by the community in which he lived, but did not consider it necessary to make any return to it, except so far as the conduct of his extensive business compelled him, and who at his death made every effort to keep together the hoard which he had gathered. It was not a noble life; it was not a typical American life. It does not call for imitation.

It is rather surprising that Governor Hayes' proposal that hereafter the Ohio State election shall be held on the same day as the Presidential election should have elicited so much favorable comment from journals which ought to have known better. The ground of approval is undoubtedly the desire to prevent the concentration of the political forces of the nation upon individual States prior to the great battle—a concentration prompted by the feeling that the moral effect of a victory thus gained will be a great aid to the successful party at its entrance on the final struggle. Undoubtedly this is a strong reason for changing the time of holding the election for State officers. But it does not follow that in case of a change the date of the Presidential election must necessarily be chosen. We are fully aware that much time is consumed—yes, much time is often wasted—in political campaigns, and that frequent elections are to be avoided. But the questions involved in municipal and State, and in national elections are so wholly different, the evils resulting from a confounding of issues so great, that every effort should be made to attain the desired infrequency of campaigns and avoidance of external pressure by some more rational means than that which is proposed. Perhaps when we have reduced the number of elective offices within some reasonable proportions, and made official terms long enough to warrant us in hoping that a whole term need not be consumed in obtaining the knowledge necessary to the proper fulfilment of its duties, we may find some questions which now trouble us wholly disappear.

As one element of any satisfactory arrangement of our representative system, we think it will hardly be denied that the political combinations involved in the election for President and for members of Congress are naturally wholly different from those involved in the election of members of State, city or town governments.

For more than a week past the air of New York has been thick with dire threatenings of slaughter on the part of certain well-known individuals, the same to take effect "in the field of honor" by means of the real old-fashioned duel. Shades of the dead past protect us! Has it come to this? We have had our revival of enthusiasm in andirons, in straight-backed chairs, in majolica and bric-a-brac generally, in which we meekly confess that in our small measure we faintly participated. But we never thought it would go thus far. Must we indeed prepare to stand up and be shot at in the interest of our honor? We really hope not. We had rather give up the straightest chair-back in the whole house—nay, the most grotesque and ugly piece of crockery in our collection, than believe it. A well-conducted murder we can understand. There is a definite effectiveness about it of which we can see the force. To be sure, murder is a bad habit to get into, but it generally occurs in sporadic cases. This standing up and giving your enemy the same chance to shoot you that you have to shoot him, however, complicates the matter extraordinarily. We do not like it. Will not some one tell us whether we must either accept the duel or give up our old china?

Late reports inform us that the parties have met, three shots have been exchanged at fifteen paces by two good marksmen, nobody has been hurt, and the wounded honor of all has been healed. A blessed consummation! Let us now contribute our mite toward formulating the code for the benefit of future aspirants. We make these suggestions:

First. Let a shocking bad hat be selected and hung upon a peg, and each party be entitled to three shots at it. The result in this case will be similar to that reported in the case just settled.

Second. Let each party be armed with a pillow, and set to work belaboring his opponent. This might, however, produce headaches.

Third. In aggravated cases, let the parties draw lots as to which shall be hung over a clothes-line, hat and coat removed, while the other bangs away at him with a repeating rifle at three paces.

PUBLIC SENTIMENT AND THE PRESIDENTIAL DILEMMA.

THERE is a manifest and wholesome abatement of the fever in the public pulse in regard to the election. The controlling sentiment of the people is one of cool and submissive patience, with ever less and less of anxiety, and an increasing indifference as to the precise result. It is very fortunate that so little personal enthusiasm attaches to the two candidates. Gov. Hayes, from the general quietness and retiringness of his worthy character and the nation's small previous acquaintance with him as a politician or statesman, has no strong place in the personal affections of the Republicans out of his own State. He has steadily grown in the respect of the nation by his admirable reticence, his self-respecting withdrawal from all participation in the canvass and the measures that have followed it, and his obvious subordination of all private ambition, or love of office and power, to the will and the interests of the country. It is plain that neither he nor his best supporters are going to be hurt by his failure to reach the Presidential chair, should that be in the book of fate. There is no feeling about his personal aspirations and their gratification or defeat, such as tore the hearts of Henry Clay's followers and lovers after each of his disappointments. His personal fortunes are not matters of earnest concern and deep feeling with any portion of the Republican party, thoroughly respected and trusted as he is and deserves to be.

With Gov. Tilden it is equally plain that the Democrats, either in his own State or elsewhere, are not heartily in sympathy, and do not feel at all confident that they want him for President unless as a party success. His temperament is cold and cautious. He excites no enthusiasm by his presence or his character. He seems equally without vices and virtues of a conspicuous, challenging and decided kind, such as move indignation or admiration. Most people think of him as a hard-headed and not soft-hearted man, whose main interest is for number one; who has managed to acquire a large fortune in ways that have not been very considerate of others' rights and claims; by legal adroitness; by the wrecker's arts—who, if he does not make the ships go on the rocks, spends his life in watching the shore, to profit by the welcome disaster. He is a man with few warm friends; who lived in this community for forty years without being known or felt as a public benefactor; who left the city and the country during our civil war, in doubt whether he felt a pang at the perils of the nation or a throb of sympathy with the cause of liberty, anti-slavery or union. In his own party he has never been a man after its own heart—not in full sympathy with its cardinal ideas and measures, disposed to have his own way, and not trusted as a hearty representative of its policy. Republicans may be glad of this, and it may be creditable to Mr. Tilden's sagacity; but it does not help his popularity with his own party, nor deepen the concern with which his prospects of success and failure are regarded. We have been much struck, in conversing with his most distinguished adherents, to see evidences of coolness and even resignation to his fate, should it be one of disappointment of his hopes.

For ourselves, we rejoice in this feeling, believing that the Democrats are right in their doubt whether Mr. Tilden will be a highly and purely Democratic chief if he attains the Presidency. We shall rejoice in his party independence, if he reaches the White House, and we may equally rejoice that Gov. Hayes has so little to thank the Republicans for, who took him up as a pis aller—a person less likely to be defeated than the men they preferred and went to Cincinnati to nominate. He, if he comes in at all, will come into office unpledged to anything but his excellent letter of acceptance of the nomination. We sincerely hope that, in either case, we are going to have a President who, not having gained his place by any special services, on either side, to his professed party, and not entangled in political friendships, will be free to pursue the policy which the intelligent people of both parties and of no party are longing to see inaugurated—a policy that considers only the claims of the nation and the dignity and interest of the whole country.

We are far from forgetting Gov. Tilden's record as a Ring breaker. It has been useful and honorable, but it did not lie in the direction of his characteristic traits, and has not been accepted as evidence of his high-toned and unselfish personal and public virtue. Yet it made him the nominee of the Democratic party, and may make him President; and it is a good pedigree. We trust its wonderful success will make Mr. Tilden continue to do like works, if he has new and larger opportunities.

All this absence of high personal charm and influence over the people's hearts, in both candidates, we regard as a piece of eminent good fortune. It keeps Congress a little cooler, and less personal in its debates; it makes the work of the two advisory committees easier. It will render the result of the election less trying, whatever it be. It is an element of safety and an augury of a calm February.

MR. ELY'S SUCCESSOR IN CONGRESS.

It is curious to see Mr. D. D. Field sent to Congress to take the place of honest Mr. Ely, the Mayor now in office. It was supposed that Mr. Ely would hold on to his seat until the last moment, so as not to diminish by an ounce the Democratic strength in the House; but he resigned, and Mr. Field was hurried into his place under some urgent sense of the importance of strengthening the legal brains of the Democratic party in Congress, and to participate in the settlement of the Presidential election. It is difficult to believe the rumors that this has been done in accordance with Governor Tilden's orders or counsel. How he could think it right or decent to select for a leader in Congress the leading counsel for Tweed, whose rascalities it was the making of Governor Tilden to oppose, and who found Mr. Field his chief obstacle, is hard to imagine. Nobody doubts Mr. Field's great ability, courage and persistency as a lawyer, or his services as a codifier of New York laws, or his considerable reputation at home and abroad as a writer on large subjects. But, unhappily, few confide in him as scrupulous, high-toned or trustworthy, where his cupidity or his obstinacy, his self-confidence or his ambition, are excited. It would be idle to conceal the general disesteem, and even dislike, felt towards him by most honorable men, whether in his own or in other professions. We cannot in charity doubt that a large part of this is due to mere association with Tweed's case, and that he may have partial justification for his course in that famous defense of the greatest robber of modern times on the English principle of a lawyer's being bound to make a client's case his own. Still, lawyers constitutionally high-toned and honorable manage to keep out of causes, however tempting their proffered retainers, which it is defiling to touch, and the public have a feeling that Mr. Field might have done so had he been of a delicate stomach. Viewing his course with all the charity we could muster, the conclusion least unfavorable to him has been only this—that he was not consciously im-moral in his legal career, but only un-moral, that is, not dominated by moral considerations and feelings. This is the true account of a great many public men—not to speak of private men—that they are not intentionally immoral, but, from not being sensitive to moral considerations, do things that strike all their peers as opposed to the code of sound ethics.

We are profoundly sorry to see a man of this apparent stripe—a man who must be a leader, and who has the audacity and ability to lead—who has cowed many, not to say most, of his profession, and made the whole Bar Association unable to throw him over when they eagerly desired to get rid of him—we are painfully alarmed to see such a lawyer sent to Congress at a crisis like the present, to add his subtlety and his fearlessness to the counsels of the Democrats, when plain-dealing, simplicity, caution and wisdom and public confidence are so much more wanted. If ever we needed men in public life free from suspicion as patriots and moralists and publicists, it is now. But be Mr. Field what he may, the election of a man of his doubtful repute and damaged legal position, from the heart of the very community that has suffered most by him and knows him best, is a mortifying proof how little moral feeling enters into the calculations of politicians. General Butler's election in Massachusetts and Mr. Field's in New York are painful facts in the centennial year.

THE MEDICO-LEGAL ASSOCIATION.

THE existence of a Medico-Legal Association in New York, whose object it is, by a union of medical and sanitary experts with lawyers, to secure the conditions of health and safety to our children at the public schools, by devising plans for better ventilation, less crowding and shorter sessions, and then urging their adoption as laws and rules for the governance of school trustees and commissioners, is a very encouraging fact, known to few and not likely to receive due attention. Their first report shows conclusively that our school-houses are insufficient in number and size; that the money spent on ornamentation and architecture would be much better spent in roominess, in more light, in better arrangements of lavatories and privies, in easier access and exits, in less ambitious rooms for collecting the whole school, and in larger class-rooms, now sacrificed to the principal room. It is certain that air-space is not enough by one-half and desk-room by a third. It is certain that children go to school too soon for health and safety; that the sessions cover too many hours, and that the afternoon session is of doubtful utility. It is certain that eye-diseases are caused to a serious extent by imperfect light, bad air, and too long confinements. In short, our present sanitary arrangements in public schools need a vigorous overhauling, although not more than in our private homes, where gas and furnaces and ill-washed privies and ill-arranged drains cause untold amounts of poisoned blood, and typhoids and fevers, and dysenteries and infant deaths. It is so difficult to persuade most people that the air they breathe, as nourishment and as poison, is the largest factor in their food and the most decisive element in their health, that we despair of any rapid improvement in sanitary practices. But it is none the less, rather all the more, important that those who know and feel the urgency and claims of hygienic reform should be instant in season and out in proclaiming them, and we thank the Medico-Legal Association with all our hearts for their able attention and energetic action in the premises. We do not believe great public meetings, where superficial considerations usually employ the speakers, can do much in cases like this. But we are sure that able advocates in the Legislatures might accomplish a great deal. Why does not some bright and enlightened lawyer in our Assembly give himself heart and soul to the fullest study and the most exclusive advocacy of reforms by law in our Common School Regulations regarding the construction and ventilation of school-houses, school hours, ages admitted, and whatever affects the health of the children? There is here a chance for conferring untold blessings on the present and all future generations, and bringing down benedictions on the public leader and orator in this crusade against public ignorance and economy combined against children's lives, eyes, brains, and whole future!

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

To the Editor of The Inquirer :

SIR:—In my last letter I mentioned, with sincere regret, the great loss which the Unitarian and literary world had sustained in the death of Dr. Beard. Since then we have had to deplore the premature decease of two men well-known to the wide circle of liberal thinkers and writers. One of them, no doubt, whose reputation will have been familiar to your readers, Mr. George Dawson, did not technically belong to our household of faith, but was so closely identified with unsectarian Christianity, that we could reckon his work as promoting all in which we were really interested. He was originally intended for the ministry among the Baptists, and began his public career by supplying the pulpit of an old minister of that denomination during the lengthened vacation he was taking. The fresh originality and earnestness of the young preacher filled the usually half-empty chapel with a crowd of admiring hearers. The somewhat daring innovations Mr. Dawson made in his theological teaching were discovered to be heretical, and he was obliged to withdraw from his temporary position, taking with him, however, a large number of his hearers. After a short time a new chapel was built for Mr. Dawson, and in it he has manfully maintained his reputation as a preacher of a free gospel, surrounded by a congregation which numbered many of the leading liberals of Birmingham in its ranks, and was a powerful agency in gaining for that town its reputation as the centre of advanced political thought and activity in England.

Active as he was as a minister, Mr. Dawson did not confine his energetic work to Birmingham or his congregation. In every town of the kingdom he was a welcome lecturer; and while it would seem that the days of popular lecturing are past in England, whatever they may be in the States, he could always command an enthusiastic audience. He had the happy knack of popularizing the very highest thoughts of the best thinkers of the day, and rendering much that would have been caviare to the multitude, accessible to them. He was gifted with a ready flow of simple Saxon English, and a rich humor, which enabled him to attack popular prejudices and old established abuses without giving offence. His strong sympathies with manly thought and feeling inspired him with admiration for the old Puritans, to whom England owes so much of her present freedom and prosperity. I do not think it is saying too much to say that if Cromwell and Milton are popular names among the people, George Dawson has done much to awaken them to a true appreciation of what these heroes of the commonwealth accomplished.

But not only did he lecture on semi-political subjects; with rare power did he open the minds of his hearers to the high lessons of Shakespeare, Cervantes and other humorous writers, and became one of the best teachers of a pure and noble morality, while never sinking to the dull level of trite platitudes. There was a rich vein of poetic sympathy in every thing he said, while a minute acquaintance with much out-of-the-way literature and local antiquarian lore gave a flavor to all his lectures, which made listening to them a pleasure to the student as well as to the busy man of the world. He was not quite so successful as a journalist, though his leaders naturally were brilliant in many ways; but his especial work was to teach by speaking, and few men have been so successful as he was, in this, his peculiar domain. No political meeting in Birmingham was considered complete without him, and though of late years his many avocations compelled him to withdraw from much work in which he had previously engaged, his early death is regarded as a public calamity, and in the circle of his private friends, his genial brightness will long be missed and his memory cherished with affectionate tenderness.

Unitarianism in Scotland has lost one of its most active and generous supporters by the death of George Hope, an early convert from Calvinism. He was a tenant farmer, who had made farming a scientific and therefore a successful pursuit. With boldness not common in North Britain, he did not shrink from declaring his faith in an unpopular creed. Many of the best men in Scotland sympathized with his opinions, but few were daring enough to avow the fact. His courage and clear-sightedness made him an active Anti-Corn-law man, when few other farmers were wise enough to see that protection is in the long run as injurious to the producer as to the consumer. You will perhaps pardon my making such an assertion; here we look upon it now as an axiom, and hope the day will come when it will be equally so accepted on your side of the Atlantic. He was an advocate of all measures of purely political reform, and in their advocacy was called upon to bear his cross. Differing from his landlord in politics, he was deprived of the Fenton-Barns farm, which his family had tilled for generations, and which his skill had greatly raised in value. He felt this hardship very deeply, and though the liberals of Scotland presented him with a handsome testimonial, yet some of his friends believe that the blow it gave him has conduced to shorten his life. In a country where theological prejudices still rule so powerfully, the high esteem in which Mr. Hope was held proves how excellent was the character of him whom we now so bitterly deplore.

He and George Dawson were alike active in promoting the extension of national education. It is one of the weak points of our social condition that we still are without any real plan of bringing the people under the influence of good and thorough training. Our government has, since 1870, done very much to multiply schools and increase the amount of the grant in aid made by the State to efficient schools; but the results are still lamentably below what they ought to be. We still make the school too much the means of helping the religious institutions of the land, instead of regarding the education of the people its primary and only aim, and naturally enough this most important branch of our social economy is still the battle-field of rival sects. Nearly everywhere the late elections for School Boards saw the ranks of candidates divided into those who claimed to be elected as supporters of our established church, or as Roman Catholics, and even those who appealed as liberals, without trusting to their theological position as a ground of support, were generally labelled by the public as Congregationalists or Methodists, Baptists or Unitarians. It is a source of sincere rejoicing, however, that nearly all the country over the elections have resulted in putting the management of the boards into the hands of those who are pledged to ignore every sectarian consideration which stands in the way of popular education. We cannot, however, help deploring that so many denominational schools impede the universal triumph of sound principles in primary schools. Our primary schools, which are receiving government aid, have one very decided advantage over the secondary schools, which are, to a very great extent, private institutions. No government aid is given, except where trained teachers who have gained the certificates by examination are employed. But any one may open a private school, and we have no recognized authority to certify the fitness of would-be teachers. The result is, of course, that all kinds of quackery is resorted to in schools. It is true that the universities have, by a system of local examinations, attempted to raise the general standard of education, but there is no law to compel the heads of schools to send their scholars up for examination, and, of course, only the well conducted institutions avail themselves of this means of proving their efficiency.

Some of our most active educational reformers are now engaged in arranging for the examination, as well as the training of teachers for higher schools, and all enlightened men are full of sympathy with the movement. The promoters of the Kindergarten system of infant training, both in London and in Manchester, are working in the same direction. The Froebel Society, in the former town, have just held their annual meeting, and have issued a plan of examination for next year, of a very thorough and searching kind. Certificates gained in such examinations will be of great advantage, as proving that their holders are not only possessed of knowledge, but have also the skill needed to impart what they know in a proper and philosophical manner. A university degree has been hitherto regarded as the best recommendation in a boys' school, though the science and art of teaching have never formed part of an English university training, and though chairs of this subject have only just been established at St. Andrews and Edinburgh. By the way, the rage for academical titles is being ministered to at present by some American institutions in a manner which acts injuriously upon the character of your best educational institutions. I know of men unable to spell correctly being possessed of seemingly authentic diplomas from New York or Philadelphia, and adding M.A. or LL.D. to their names. The traffic in German degrees has been successfully stopped by the continental authorities, but I fear your republican freedom cannot prevent the abuse, which is a growing one, of so-called American degrees.

You can imagine that we are all engaged here in Christmas festivities. Bad trade and rumors of war do not seem to prevent our annual rejoicings. There will be the usual grand consumption of turkeys, geese, beef, plumb-pudding and mince pies, and I fear the usual plentiful libations of ale and wine, for the next fortnight. It is pleasant to see how the season brings out the kindly feelings of good will among men. The poor and needy are being cared for, once a year at least, in something different to the pauper scale. We Manchester folks are specially active in providing bodily and mental entertainment for the children of the poor. Every ragged school, every Sunday school, is having a party for its scholars, and good cheer abounds everywhere. There is one party in which I take a great delight. The proprietors of the Evening News, a half-penny paper, whose circulation is upheld, to a great extent, by the news boys and girls, give a dinner to somewhere about six hundred of their children. It is a wonderful sight to see these little things, who perhaps from year's end to year's end never see a joint of meat except in a shop window, sitting down to the feast provided for them. The way that rounds of beef and legs of mutton disappear is a sight to see, while there seems to be a kind of magic in the speed with which the puddings vanish, notwithstanding the consumption of solid food that has preceded them. Some few of us, who have been called upon to make after-dinner speeches on these occasions, have found that the children are, generally speaking, a more critical audience than the usual frequenters of public dinners; they have a very honest manner of letting a prosy speaker feel that he is prosy; but they appreciate any one who knows how to get at children's hearts, and they can cheer a good hit most rapturously. They generally leave the dining-room with some warm article of clothing much needed by them, as they are often selling papers till nine or ten o'clock these cold Winter evenings.

I wonder whether you have pantomimes in New York like ours, with all the glories of fairy-land made actual for a season; and children of every age, from three-score years and ten downwards, enjoying the fun of the harlequinade with clown and pantaloon, and red hot pokers, and the traditional upsetting of all laws of honesty and morality. We old fogies, of course, only laugh to see the little ones enjoying the fun—at least we say so; but as I am writing confidentially to you, I may say that when clown does suddenly become conscious of the heat of the poker in his capacious pocket, and jerks and writhes in acute agony, I become a boy again myself, and am at a loss to know whether I enjoy the æsthetic glories of fairy-land more than the fun which follows its transformation into the realism of the harlequinade. But I must cease. I have just been summoned to a Christmas-tree, where my own children, and I don't how many nephews and nieces, are to be made happy. I can only hope that you and all your readers will, when this reaches New York, have had a truly merry Christmas and a happy New Year.

S. A. S.

FROM CHICAGO.

NEW YEAR'S day was cold and the callers were slow to thaw out, but when once well in circulation the feeling was generally expressed, "This does us good. Hard times are lightened by sociality. Give us New Year's about three times as often, and we should have no more panics."

Prof. Sumner is here and hereabouts earnestly preaching the gospel of free trade and reform. Our Free Trade Club is strong and made up of young, vigorous elements. The ethics of the question begin to command attention as well as the economy. Charles Francis Adams, Jr., fills an engagement later in the season. Clubs are formed in all the Western States to co-operate and to foster discussion. The Hon. Henry Strong reads a paper to-night at the house of Fernando Jones, on Financial panics. The Syllabus declares: "(1.) That financial panics are the result of the abuse of credit, over-production, the speculative use of capital and labor and the loss of capital by luxury and waste. (2.) That panics are, to an extent, inevitable, yet their frequency, duration and influence are largely controllable by social customs and personal economy. (3.) Capital must divide with labor the time gained by labor-saving machinery, thus giving to labor leisure for improvement and culture, and also preventing over-production." It will be curious to hear the logic by which he sustains the assertion that over-production is possible. A large part of the social machinery is self-adjustive. Any effort to take it apart for the purpose of shortening belts or piston-rods is useless.

Many of us are hoping that the coalition of Independents and Democrats will send Lyman Trumbull back to public life as United States Senator. It is certain that John A. Logan will not be returned. His friendship for the Whiskey Ring alienated some of his warmest friends. There is no concealing the fact that these men, for some reason, believed very stoutly in Logan. But their power is gone. Pardoned out of prison and jail, they go about haggard, financially broken, and some of them taking their last refuge in dissipation. Compensation! Providence! call it what you will, it is the mill that grinds fine.

The death of P. P. Bliss in the great railroad slaughter has caused a general expression of sympathy and of pain throughout the city. The Tabernacle was draped in black, and Mr. Moody has constantly referred to his friend during the week.

We are to begin next Sunday the last Moody week. We have had the last week several times, but I believe this one is final. The programme is as follows: Sunday, "Where art thou;" Monday, "Grace;" Tuesday, "The Son of Man is come to seek and save the lost;" Wednesday, "Excuses;" Thursday, "The Blood;" Friday, "Heaven;" Sunday, "Tekel." There has been considerable effort of late to reach the hard drinkers. But while a few rise to tell how Jesus takes away their appetite, the Washingtonian Home and other organizations are steadily building up the drunkard with patient care. It is nonsense to say anything else will undo a bad habit but patient displacement in building an opposite tendency.

Sunderland is doing his level best in his new field, and has the sympathy of all faithful men. The Third Church is gaining friends and is doing its work substantially. A few bright Sundays would help us.

POWELL.

LITERATURE.

MR. FOX BOURNE'S LIFE OF LOCKE.

WE have at length an adequate and exhaustive life of John Locke,* whose personal history has hitherto been lost sight of in the profound and revolutionary interest excited by his works. It is true that Locke's works have vividly impressed all who have read them with the intellectual integrity and moral uprightness of the author—his courage, intense love of truth, freedom from passion and prejudice, closeness of observation and happy power of illustration; the homely correctness of his style, freedom from ambition, and highly reverential nature. He has ever been regarded as a spotless man, a lover of his race, a careful scholar and an original thinker. It has been conceded, too, that he is the father of the English and Scotch school of metaphysicians, and produced a greater revolution in philosophy than any Englishman, perhaps any European, in his century. But his personal history, training, part in politics, friendship, and habits of life, although suggested by Le Clerc's brief memoir, Lady Masham's recollections and Lord King's two volumes, have waited two centuries for a competent delineator, and they have happily found it in Mr. Bourne. He may be said to have done all that the most diligent research under the most favored circumstances, could do, to collect and connote the scattered documentary and epistolary materials, and to place them in lucid order, and allow the image of the man, in his full inner and outer lineaments, to pass before us. It is an image of stately height and dignity, impressive to a rare degree in its intellectual and moral proportions—full of power and worth, yet softened by unexpected evidences of warm affections, tender friendships, humorous perceptions and graceful courtesy. Locke's letters to his scholarly friends are not more marked by acute thought and high culture than by overflowing affection and the highest capacity for an admiring friendship, while his letters to his household intimates, and especially to women, are curiously playful, witty and original, and deserve a place of their own in the best collection of graceful and amusing letters. Although he never let his dignity down, and in the most familiar communications is the high-toned, courteous Christian gentleman, he is bold in his humor, racy and witty in his style, and affectionate almost beyond any bachelor in literature. If ever a man was formed to enjoy domestic life, by his warmth of feeling, his love of women, his fondness for children, his indifference to fame and office, and his appreciation of a private life, shut up with a few dear friends, John Locke was the man. But he lived and died a bachelor, illustrating the common rule that men capable of warm friendships and with strong moral and intellectual sympathies, winning and holding fast all who come close to them, are in a manner delivered from the necessity of forming that exclusive tie to wife and children, in which less generous and more narrow hearts find the boundary and the needed support of their social affections.

* The Life of John Locke. By H. K. Fox Bourne 2 vols. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1876.

Mr Bourne is a correct and vigorous writer, without being either copious, elegant or fascinating. He has a genuine sympathy with his subject, and shows a thorough acquaintance with the intellectual, theological and political topics that are involved in any history of Locke's mind and life. He is a discriminating critic too, and with a profound appreciation of Locke's philosophy and religious opinions, he is not tied to his conclusions and does not demand for him the praise of being up to our own times in his metaphysics or his theology. There is no charm coming from special grace, delicate sympathy with Locke's finer traits or original reflection, no exquisiteness of analysis or deep penetration into his moods, but there is manly, unaffected truthfulness, plain vigor of thought and expression, thoroughness and candor. The matter of the work is so interesting and instructive that we miss less such charms as belong to Trevelyan's Life of Macaulay or Foster's Life of Goldsmith or Lewes' Life of Goethe. But we recollect no life of any modern philosopher in which the human element is so well presented, and specially we know of no other metaphysician of the first class whose private character was even greater than his public works, and whose history would better bear telling in such full detail.

"John Locke was born on the 29th of August, 1632, forty-four years after Hobbes, thirty-six years after Descartes, twenty-four years after Milton, and in the same year as Spinoza; ten years before Newton and fourteen before Leibnitz. He died on the 28th of October, 1704. Berkeley was then twenty years old and Voltaire ten. Hume was born seven years and Kant twenty, after his death. He was in his seventeenth year when Charles the First was beheaded, and in his twenty-eighth year when Charles the Second was allowed to assume the English crown. He was sixty-seven when William of Orange was made King, and he lived through two and a half years of the reign of Anne."

Thus pregnantly Mr. Bourne opens his story, and if he had stopped here, the names and dates he furnishes in the relations in which they are placed would give food for long and valuable reflection to all who are tolerably conversant with the names he catalogues. It is curious, by the way, that although Locke was intimate with Newton, nothing is said of his ever having seen John Milton, with whose political spirit and even theological views he must have had high sympathy. It can only be accounted for by the nearly opposite temperaments of the two men—the one a poet and a radical, an intuitive thinker, an inspired rhetorician, and a despiser of prudence—the other a slow, cautious student of facts in the mind, the Church, the State, who built up his conclusions from the most painstaking observation and inquiry, stated them in the most cautious and unassuming way, dreaded the illusions of imaginative feeling and the glitter of words, and must have thought Milton a rash and dangerous speculator. Locke was a conservative in feeling, by his strong common-sense, his patience, his disciplined temper and tongue, his reverence for existing order and religion, and although he has been more revolutionary by his influence in philosophy and theology than Milton himself, it has been by the quiet pressure of his thoughts, which carefully avoided in form and spirit any appearance of destructiveness or violence. It is for this reason that what Hobbes, Descartes and Spinoza, by their bold challenges of the opinion of their times could not effect, Locke, who adopted many ideas of the two first, though never without serious modification, succeeded by his calmness and caution in slowly commending to the attention of thinkers, until his thoughts overturned the whole system of mediæval and Aristotelian and Platonic philosophy, at least for a century, and placed him at the head of all philosophers until Kant appeared.

We have no intention of attempting even an abstract of Mr. Bourne's two volumes in the space here afforded us. Of Locke's careful training in Westminster School, of his student life at Oxford for eight years, and his occupation as Greek lecturer, reader in rhetoric, censor of moral philosophy, companion of Lord Ashley, etc., we can say nothing.

We have aimed only to draw the attention of our readers to this work, which we have read with undiminished interest to the last page. But we must leave it to ampler columns than we possess to supply any account of its contents, much less any special criticism.

REVIEWS.

The North American Review for January, 1877.

THE first number of the new series of this Review, just transformed from a quarterly into a bi-monthly, is exceedingly promising for its future. There is not a careless, commonplace or uninteresting article in the whole number, nor an untimely one. Mr. R. H. Dana, Jr.'s article, No. 1., "Points in American Politics," is a learned, lawyer-like and statesman-like paper on the questions just now trying the courage and judgment of the American people. It is calm and judicial in tone and free from all partisan prejudices. Only on the subject of the treatment due to the nation's wards, the newly-enfranchised negroes, is Mr. Dana in the least excited, and there his warmth and decisiveness are most welcome and most justifiable. The evils and dangers of the general-ticket system in the election of President are historically set forth. The danger of swinging the vast vote of a great State, as a unit, crushing the rightful influence of the smaller States, is illustrated by the influence of the New York election upon the Presidential vote, it being generally conceded that as went New York so must go the Union! A return to the choice of electors by districts, who shall represent the local wishes of parts of the State not desiring the candidate who may be the prevailing favorite, is the only method for securing the rights of minorities. There is no probability that the States will return to this old method, without some change in the Constitution. They might do it lawfully, but they will not, because the great States cherish the undue importance which the present usage gives them. Mr. Dana thinks the electoral college system less advantageous than a direct vote by the people. His plan is that each citizen of a State vote directly for the candidate of his choice. The candidate having the plurality of votes in the whole State will be credited with two electoral votes, and the candidate having a plurality in any district will be credited with one for each district he carries. This process gives to each State two electoral votes corresponding to its two Senators, and as many district votes as it has members of the House of Representatives, and will require the latter vote to be counted by single districts. This is substantially Senator Morton's plan, and Mr. Dana thinks it the best. He is in favor of one term of six or seven years. In ascertaining the vote, he thinks the responsibility of deciding the earlier steps as to who is elected should be left to the States assumed to have the right of voting. Which have that right and are in condition to exercise it, must be determined by Congress, but only under the most solemn and united act of the whole Republic, in the exercise of its highest function of political legislation. Mr. Dana points out the total want of parallelism between the British Government and our own, and the impossibility of our adopting the English custom of giving Cabinet ministers seats in Parliament. On civil service reform, specie payments and our relation to late Rebel States, Mr. D. is clear and instructive. Altogether, this article pays for a year's subscription.

To couple the two political articles together, we may say that Mr. Godkin's, No. II., on "The Eastern Question," is as timely, just as candid and as nearly exhaustive of the subject as Mr. Dana's. It is in strange contrast with the uninformed and fumbling character of most American notices of that now engrossing European topic. It gives a history of the whole contest, its rise, its tremendous influence, the barbarizing, enslaving and tyrannous policy of the Turks along the whole frontier of their encroachment upon Europe. Mr. Godkin pays just tribute to the Turk as a warrior, a proud and usually an honorable man, truthful and self-respecting, and with the instincts and manners of a gentleman, but with a profound political and religious contempt for all races and politics but his own. So that the better he is, the braver and the more sober, the more dangerous. He represents the Christian majority—at least three-quarters of the whole population—in the Turkish provinces as not ruined by the laws, but by their own cowed and cowardly spirit, and hardly wonders at the contempt felt for them by the Turks. Mr. Godkin evidently thinks the true policy of European governments is to abhor if not drive them out of Europe, and that no agreement with the Porte, however favorable in terms, will avail to the protection of Christians, unless they are accompanied by a military police. No justice can be done to this instructive, highly-considered and full discussion of the Eastern Question in any abstract of it. It is as condensed as it can well be in itself.

Of the literary criticism all is excellent, whether in the examination of Bret Harte's claims, the high estimate of his genius for dialogue and for representing a peculiar class of American character, and a denial of his ability to maintain sustained flights, with charges of carelessness in his style; or in the notices of contemporary literature, where Doudan's Mélange et Lettres finds a charming and appreciative recognition; Foster's Life of Landor is praised and Landor's genius finely characterized; Bourne's Life of Locke is less adequately, but still most favorably noticed; Dean Stanley's History of the Jewish Church receives cordial and discriminating praise, with a proper qualification for the limitation of his somewhat romantic mind, when acting as historian; Schaase's History of the Arts of Design, declared a great and profoundly learned work, with a favorable notice of Kinkel's Mosaic for Art History, and as many more of other valuable recent works. But Mr. Whipple's article on Daniel Deronda is the literary jewel of the number. He has not laid himself out so fully and fairly to do his very best for some years, and he has exceeded himself in boldness, originality, brilliancy and profundity. He defends the conception of Daniel Deronda's character against all comers with the most chivalric courage and the finest play of his critical rapier. There is a noble defence of Mordecai, who has been generally deemed rather a melodramatic failure. Mr. Whipple's deep insight into the nature of religious enthusiasm (and nobody who has not something of this sympathetic feeling can do any justice to George Eliot in her most successful characters) is one of his finest qualifications for criticism, the rarest among cultivated men in our day. We have no time to record a hundredth part of the pleasure and admiration we have felt in reading this profound, thorough and beautiful piece of analytical criticism. We hope George Eliot may break through her rule and at least enjoy the surprise and delight of finding fuller justice done to her in America than has yet been rendered by any English critic, laudatory and exalted as the notices of her genius have been.

Mr. Gryznowski's article on Wagner's Theories is masterly, too scientific for our knowledge, but not too obscure to hide its masculine grasp or its admirable candor and discrimination. Mr. Fiske's Triumph of Darwinism is just what would be expected of him, and that is praise enough.

LIGHT ON THE CLOUD; or, Hints of Comfort for Hours of Sorrow.

By M. J. Savage. New York: James Miller.

There is true comfort and helpfulness in this book for every earnest mind and heart struggling with the problems of life, growing faint and weary with the burden of sorrow and pain, fearing to trust the full and growing light of the present day, and longing for that peace which passeth all understanding. But the comfort is that of courage and patience, with a willing acceptance of the "pain of thought" and the realization of the grandeur of the struggle both morally and intellectually. There is no final and theoretic solution of the mysteries of life, no belittling of the reason to falsely strengthen the heart, or exaltation of the intellect to deaden the spiritual, but, with the firm recognition of the right and duty to study and understand the laws of God and the universe, an acceptance of all the many phases of nature and human nature as the grand field in which we must work and conquer. Hence we find the lessons of affliction, the usefulness of mental and spiritual struggle, the deepest meaning of good and evil, the part which each of us should take in recognizing the former and combating the latter, with a reverent belief in the doctrine of evolution in its higher sense of the constant quickening and improving of all our faculties by their earnest cultivation. Here too is the secret of resignation, which is in part the recognition of the divine principle of the world, Love, and in part the willingness to gain through suffering that divine sympathy with mankind which was the secret of Jesus Christ, and which enabled him and may enable us to comprehend our fellow creatures and to minister to them in their hour of need. This is the "strong consolation" of this tender and helpful book. And for the future life, whatever heaven may be, we can best apprehend and enjoy it by striving in this present life to model the divine proportions and symmetry of the highest thought and action, and to render immortal that "harmony" which should fill God's universe with the sweetest and most heavenly melody, and should indeed be called the music of the spheres.

LONG LOOK HOUSE. A Book for Boys and Girls. By Edward Abbott. Silhouette Illustrations by Helen Maria Hinds. Boston: Noyes, Snow & Co.

The author frankly confesses that this series of "Long Look Books" is written in the style of the Rollo Books, but we think that this first volume of the series is far more interesting than any Rollo Book we ever had the misfortune to read. The moral bearing is more successfully hidden, and real interest is excited in the processes of house-building with all its corollaries, i. e., framing, roofing, plastering, plumbing, heating, etc. Boys really like to know how to do all these things, and pass many hours in carpentering and contriving by themselves, when a real study of the subject with theoretical as well as practical masters of these useful arts would help them greatly. The silhouette illustrations are good, and the Long Look Family in the Frontispiece are all the more interesting for their black but expressive attitudes.

THE SALUTATION. By L. O. Emerson. Boston: Oliver Ditson & Co. 352 pp.

THIS is "a New England church music-book." The first ninety-two pages are a repetition of the opening portion of "The Encore," by the same editor. Mr. Emerson, who has compiled these and several other works of the kind, has included a great variety of his own compositions in this collection. Several pieces by Mr. L. H. Southard, teacher of music in the Boston schools, will be well received by many of his former pupils. With much that is new, this ample book contains many venerable tunes sacred from associations of the past. Peterboro', Coronation, Dundee, and Duke Street find place, as well as others equally familiar and full of pleasant memories. Some of the compositions of Beethoven and Handel and other great masters are found here. The opening recitative, "Comfort ye my people," as produced by Nathan Barker from Handel's oratorio, is among the good things that are heard in this pleasant "Salutation."

BRIEF NOTICES.

MACMILLAN & Co. are now publishing the South Kensington Science Lectures, carefully revised by the authors, and copiously illustrated, recently delivered to Science Teachers at the Loan Collection of Scientific Apparatus. They comprise: Photography, by Capt. Abney, R.E., F.R.S.; Light, by Prof. Stokes, F.R.S.; Metallurgical Processes, by Prof. A. W. Williamson, F.R.S.; Physiological Apparatus, by Prof. Burdon Sanderson, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S., and Dr. Lauder Branton, F.R.S.; Electrometers, by James Bottomley, F.R.S.E.; Kinematic Models, by Professor Kennedy, C.E.; Sound and Music, by Dr. W. H. Stone; Field Geology, by Prof. Geikie, F.R.S.

NEW PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

BOOKS.

From Littell & Gay.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE. Volume 131.

From Macmillan & Co.

THE SCHOLAR'S HANDBOOK OF HOUSEHOLD MANAGEMENT AND COOKERY. By W. B. Tegetmeier. 50 cents.

From Chase & Hall, Cincinnati.

THE PROBLEM OF PROBLEMS, and its Various Solutions. By Clark Braden.

From the Catholic Publication Society.

POEMS: Devotional and Occasional. By Benjamin Dionysius Hill, C.S.P.

From Roberts Brothers, Boston.

HOURS OF THOUGHT ON SACRED THINGS. By James Martineau, D.D., LL.D.

MAGAZINES.

THE NEW ENGLANDER, for January.

THE NURSERY, for January.

HEARTH AND HOME.

ANOTHER YEAR.

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

THAT this shall be a better year
Than any passed away,
I dare not at its open door
To wish, or hope, or pray.

Not that the years already gone
Were wearisome and lone;
That so with hope too long deferred
My heart has timid grown.

Nay, rather that they all have been
So sweet to me and good,
That if for better I should ask
'Twould seem ingratitude.

And so with things far off and strange
I do not care to cope,
But look in memory's face and learn
What largess I may hope.

Another year of setting suns,
Of stars by night revealed,
Of springing grass, of tender buds
By winter's snow concealed.

Another year of summer's glow,
Of autumn's gold and brown,
Of waving fields and ruddy fruit
The branches weighing down.

Another year of happy work,
That better is than play;
Of simple cares, and love that grows
More sweet from day to day.

Another year of baby mirth
And childhood's blessed ways,
Of thinker's thought and prophet's dream
And poet's tender lays.

Another year at beauty's feast,
At every moment spread,
Of silent hours when grow distinct
The voices of the dead.

Another year to follow hard
Where better souls have trod;
Another year of life's delight,
Another year of God.

WINTER LESSONS.

I WENT to California in October, 1865, and kept near to San Francisco till the following April. December was "pleasant as May;" in January, the roses, callas, geraniums and heliotropes were holding high festival; by February, the treeless hills were glorified by masses of wild flowers.

But did I ever tell you of the homesickness of that first beautiful Winter in fairy land? Edgar Buckingham knows about it, for I wrote begging him to send me a snow-bank and a field of ice.

For seven winters we saw not one crystal flake fall out of the Pacific skies. Of course, we soon dropped into harmony with the new surroundings; the witchery of the California atmosphere stole into our blood; and, though we may have sulked through some dismal spells of rain, there was always a large unexpended balance in favor of a climate which invited us out of doors three hundred days in a year; and so we chanted with Edward Rowland Sill, about—

"The land where Summers never cease Their sunny psalms of light and peace."

But when a copy of Whittier's "Snow Bound" found its way to our camp, between the ever-green mountains of Santa Cruz and the ever-blue bay of Monterey, I was siezed with a heart-sick longing to see that "whirl-dance of the blinding storm" which brings "a universe of sky and snow."

The average Californian, though he speaks pathetically of the East as "home," does not readily forgive any croaking; nor would it mend matters to complain of the monotony of life in a land where the warmest month is a little too cool to feel like Summer, and the coldest month is a good deal too warm to feel like Winter. Nobody could say it was otherwise than agreeable; yet there might be too much of a good thing—wearing away at the same set of nerves, and forever repeating the same sensations—a dull delight of uniformity—

"Shining on, shining on, by no shadow made tender, Till love falls asleep in the sameness of splendor."

So it was that through all those seven years in California I never got over a passionate longing to see the glorious autumn-flame consuming a forest; to see a river lying still, white and glassy in a valley; and to shovel a path through "the solid whiteness." When in June of 1866, we climbed the high Sierra, en route for Yosemite, and found among the stunted pines some remains of last winter's drifts, few of the party could quite comprehend the excitement of that one who leaped from his mustang and abruptly presented each of his companions with a snow-ball, construing them for the moment to be the boys and girls of Merrimac county, with whom such compliments were exchangeable twenty-five years before.

These experiences on the Pacific coast all came surging back again, mingled and colored with the earlier ones of New England, when our minister, a few Sundays ago, undertook to set out for us some "Lessons of Winter." He thought all the phenomena of nature might best be seen through religious eyes; that both the beauties and the utilities of "all common things" were never so generally appreciated as now; and that the inhabitants of the stern and changeable climates of the North might as well put into their liturgies thanksgivings to Him who "made Summer and Winter," for the very varieties and sharp contrasts which the seasons bring. He pointed out the moral value and mental stimulus which may be found in what we call irregularities, and showed how impossible it is that they should ever overpass certain fixed limits. The periodicities of nature allow room for some swayings and oscillations; but we soon learn to keep our feet and our heads amid these changes of weather and other conditions, as a child learns to keep his balance in walking. No small part of our schooling, he thought, comes from what we call "exposure."

He compared the sun with the Corliss engine, which we have just seen putting in motion every wheel in fourteen acres of machinery; and the precision with which the mathematicians compute all the leading movements of the universe proves that what we consider irregularities are really no more than the slight jar which makes us sensible of the mightier effect.

Imagination takes alarm while it asks, What if, in Summer, it should keep growing hotter and hotter? What if, in Winter, it should keep growing colder and colder? What if, in freshet-time, it should keep on raining? What if, in drought, it should finally forget to rain at all? But it never does, and it never can! There is a fixed amount of force deploying in fixed channels, and subject to a system of checks, balances and compensations so adjusted as to preserve an equilibrium. Every fluctuation works its own cure.

And what is this impersonal and mindless. Somewhat which we call "it," when we say, it rains, it snows, it freezes, it blows? Does it not mark the survival of paganism in our way of thinking and feeling about the forces or the world and the powers of the air? The Hebrew hymn-writers did not say "it." They said (here the minister threw open the big Book and read from the 147th Psalm): "He giveth snow like wool; He scattereth the hoar-frost like ashes; He casteth forth His ice like morsels; who can stand before His cold? He sendeth out His word and melteth them; He causeth His wind to blow, and the waters flow." How the poetry would vanish from such a passage, if "it" were to take the place of "He"! And human life will become the prosiest of prose, if we substitute blind fate for all-knowing providence, mindless law for all-working will.

Just at this point my attention wandered. Out of a distant past, and far away in an old Congregational meeting-house of central New Hampshire, I could hear voices which have long been silent, singing to the air of "Dundee"—

His hoary frost, His fleecy snow,
Descend and clothe the ground;
The Wintry streams forbear to flow,
In icy fetters bound.

He sends His word and melts the snow;
The fields no longer mourn;
He calls the warmest gales to blow,
And bids the Spring return.

The changing wind, the flying cloud,
Obey His mighty word;
With songs and honors sounding loud,
Praise ye the sovereign Lord.

It would have been more and better than a gratification if the sermon could have paused long enough for the congregation to rise and lift up their hearts in this paraphrase of David by Dr. Watts. But the preacher seemed to think he had not done his whole duty till he had shown us our debt to the writer as a moral instructor. The tonic, bracing effect on our resolution, the stiffening up of the will to do and to bear the increased necessity of thoughtfulness and foresight in providing for ourselves and others—the value of the fire-side, or of indoor centres of domesticity and hospitality—the grateful hush in business, the shorter days and the increased opportunity for personal and social improvement—and, "finally," the claims of the destitute and helpless, to whom the winter brings no such joys—all these points were thrust at us in rather rapid succession; the crowning impression being that Winter is something to be accepted with joy and thanksgiving; and that if we know what is good, we shall enter into sympathy with the happy children who are converting the whole season into holiday, as they rush about singing—

Hurrah for the jolly old Winter!
The king of the year is he!
His breath is cold and icy,
But his heart is full of glee.

After the benediction, the minister found the deacon from

Berks County waiting to offer his hearty hand, and to make this characteristic little speech: "Parson, I wish you had come round and preached that sermon to me before I got up this morning!"

CHARLES G. AMES.

THE NEW YORK SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO CHILDREN.

[Report of a speech by Henry W. Bellows, at its last annual meeting, January 3, 1877.]

THERE is something in the very name of this society which arouses our best sympathies, while it shocks and then confirms our respect for human nature. That innocent and helpless children should need any other protection than their own appealing weakness, inexperience, and helplessness, their own budding charm and promise; that their parents and natural guardians should by any possibility become their oppressors, enemies and persecutors, offends our natural feelings as parents and as human beings. But that, needing this protection and defence, they find it in an aroused public sentiment and in this society which embodies it, is reassuring. As we read the sad story of their wrongs and sufferings, we find that parents can be brutes, that drunken fathers and mothers can forget and abuse their own flesh and blood, and that selfish and avaricious men can torture their little children with the lash and the fist into premature acrobats and circus-riders; that they are ready to twist their shrinking tendons into the cord that pulls in their guilty gains, and weave their heart-strings into the nets that fish in the filthy pool of sensational and dangerous appeals to the love of horror and the taste for what is spiced with threatening death, and has the near prospect of broken bones and bleeding arteries for its disgusting attraction. The pertinacity of these peddlers of their own children's heart's blood, these dealers in the shrinking flesh and shuddering nerves of their own infants—selling at two shillings a head the privilege of seeing a little child held by the feet, on a horse's back at full speed, or hanging on a trapeze by his toes, or twisted in a knot about his father's worthless neck, itself in instant peril of being broken—is one of the strongest and most appalling evidences of the fact that cupidity may drink up in its raging thirst every gentle spring in a parent's breast, and quench every spark of Nature's deepest, most instinctive and humane feeling.

The records of this society, in their detailed reports, furnish us fearful pictures of the neglect, abuse, and cruelty to which children are subject in this so-called Christian community. And I suppose they are but a small percentage of what actually exists. Alas! what could we expect from a city full of crowded tenements, of houses of prostitution and sample-rooms—samples of the devil's temptations and poisons and instigations of cruelty—but this result? So many drunkards, so many abandoned women, so many idle men, so many tramps, beggars, thieves, pickpockets—men armed with revolvers, women armed with worse weapons—effrontery, oaths, lewdness, and tiger's claws in place of finger-nails—these given, necessarily, so many neglected, starving, ill-clothed, abused and wandering children—children become a burden and hated as a restraint and a tax on their time and stolen money. They must exist. There are vastly more than we know or than this society has been able to reach. But what a blessing and what a restraint it is upon their increase that this society, well hated, we hope, like the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals—well hated because deserving the hatred of all harsh, cruel and avaricious parents, and honored by their abuse and their fear—should have the encouragement and support of all the decent and honorable portion of the community, the countenance of the courts, the strength of the law, the co-operation of State and city attorneys, and should be able to publish abroad the evidence of its fearless pursuit, its vigorous chastisement of these ferae naturae—these monsters that outrage God's most sacred instincts of parental love and man's most common feelings of respect and love for helplessness, innocence, and dependence. I am proud to see that the venerable President of this society, Wright by name and by nature, can betake himself to distant towns to secure the rights of a single little child; that the arm of the society reaches across the Continent, and finds agents of its power and benevolence in San Francisco and echoes of its own humanity in a society springing up on the distant Pacific coast, as well as in others in neighboring States.

It is not simply what such a society does that constitutes its whole service; it is what it stands for. It is an organized protest against cruelty. It is a patent notification that modern civilization tion, in one of its most crowded, exposed and complex centres, does not give up in despair the problem of protecting the rights of the most feeble and defenceless. It proclaims the solemn resolve that domestic and parental cruelty shall not exist unrestricted, unpunished, unavenged; that children, and all the more the children of the poor and ignorant and brutal, are the wards of the community; that they belong to the race, and to the worthy and virtuous and humane portion of it, even more than they do to their own reckless, ruined, infamous parents. For our own sake and for our children's sake, we cannot see the cruel blows, the cries of terror, the pinched cheek of infantile hunger and cold, in the maltreated children of the worst class of our population, go unheeded and unchecked or unrelieved. They are likely to be echoed and reflected in our own nurseries. They shake the cradles, they threaten the delicate limbs, they infect the temper, they poison the thoughts and degrade the feelings of our homes; they make humanity cheap and vile.

They render infancy and childhood no longer sacred, and weakness and dependence no longer natural claimants on protection and mercy. They arraign our civilization. They convict our piety of lifelessness. There is not an idler, a criminal, a brutal parent, an abused, ragged, hungry child, an unarraigned offender in New York that does not stain the ermine of justice; that does not shame our religion and our patriotism; that does not sow doubts of the very being of a God and a Providence; that does not lower the general level of respect for human nature and tend to bring it into derision and contempt. Let those who deride philanthropy, who sneer at the efforts to make cruelty dangerous and hateful, towards beasts and men and children, know what they are doing. They are spitting in the face of humanity, and above all, in the face of its holy martyrs and prophets and apostles; in the face of St. Francis, of St. Charles Borromeo, of Mrs. Fry and John Howard, Miss Dix and Tuckerman, aye, of Moses and Jesus. They are spitting upon the image of God, and the spit is blown in their own faces. What are all the admirable and truthful objections lately brought by the students of public and private charity against indiscriminate benevolence—to which we owe so much respect and attention—and none feels it more deeply than I; but nevertheless what are the economic difficulties and social objections which grow out of the victories of the heart over the head, of the sympathies over the judgment, to compare in peril and in final injury to humanity, with the consequences of a hardening of the heart in the well, the comfortable, the shielded, educated, moralized class of humanity, towards the wrongs, sufferings, injuries of any portion of the human family? Why? as the waste of Croton water compares with the drying up of the fountains in the heavens and the earth. It is sad to see so precious a thing as water wasted; but what if it should be choked in its sources and never renewed? It is sad to see charity wasted, abused, turned into a source of poverty and dependence. But what if charity herself should die? What if caution and fear and prudence should make every eye irresponsible and every brow suspicious and every heart frigid; if the poor and suffering and sick and beaten and wronged, should find the gates of mercy shut upon them, lest malingers and weaklings and liars should be found running away with some of the milk of human kindness stored in the lock-up of a suspicious and guarded humanity? Ah, nothing is more true, strange as it may seem in its sound. It is not the vices of society that are most discouraging, it is the decay of its virtues! We want no sleek, orderly, polished decency and universal prudence and enlightened selfishness to take the place of the effusive, sympathetic, genial, humane, cordial relations that ought to mark, and in a manner do, the civilization where man's eye softens to his fellow, his hand relaxes at his claim and his heart gives room to his supplication. But do not think it is the heroes and heroines who are striving to systematize and instruct our charity, to warn us of indiscriminate benevolence, that these words are pointed at. They are usually the best and most benevolent and devoted, as well as most instructed and big-hearted of our race. It is the people who shut out and off the whole question of suffering and wrong, and defend themselves with theories that intervention and watching and beneficence do more harm than good, and that they are excused from all necessity and all obligation of thinking anything about it.

MR. W. J. MARSHALL's lecture at Steinway Hall on Jan. 5th, four P.M., was an excellent exhibition of the wonders of the National Park, on the Yellowstone, by a series of twenty-one photographs, generally colored, and all vivid and carefully made, thrown upon a broad canvas and magnified and lighted by the oxy hydrogen lantern. It was a surprising succession of pictures, and pleasantly were they described by Mr. Marshall. If anything, the exhibition was too long, as it is very exhausting to fasten the eyes long upon such an illumined space in a dark room, not to forget that the rapid change of attention to many different objects is only less wearying than fixed and prolonged attention upon one—a fact that many visitors to the Exposition found true—as it was more the cause of nervous exhaustion than the space gone over or the time spent in the exhibition. But the interest was lively and the gratification great in Mr. Marshall's lecture and show. Certainly the scenery of the Yellowstone National Park is exceptionally striking. We are not converts to the theory that striking scenery is of most lasting charm. Nature, in her fantastic moods, is no more to be admired than Art in the same line. We could not be hired to live among spouting geysers nor in giddy canoës, and Niagara is a nuisance after a week's stay. Even the high, mountainous regions sometimes oppress and weary after a few weeks' experience of them. Our Autumn foliage becomes as tiresome as a kaleidoscope after a few days. The palette which Nature spreads in the canoës of the Yellowstone, gaudy beyond any precedent, offends the educated eye in the picture, and would be fearful after a little experience of it in the real scene. People who like the dress and hazards of the circus, the trapeze and acrobat, might enjoy it; but real lovers of Art, or even of Nature, would hurry away after short visits, and pray for calmness, harmony and repose in their prospects. This is not against the interest of the pictures or the place as a curiosity. We hope everybody will see the pictures and hear Mr. Marshall, if only to save them from the long journey to the Park, which would yield a doubtful reward.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

[FOR THE INQUIRER.]

PRINCE CAROL.

ONCE on a time, a long, long while ago,
When little fairies dwelt with men below,
It chanced one Summer day a peasant maid
Went gathering wild-flowers in a forest glade.
Her name was Elsie. She was sweet and fair;
Although her dress was coarse, her feet were bare,
And when she reached her little cottage brown
Behind the hills, the sun was going down;
And so this little maiden only paused to bring
A cup of water from the bubbling spring,
To place her flowers in and keep them bright,
When, kneeling down beside her cot so white,
With folded hands she said her evening prayer,
And fell asleep without a sigh or care,
While those fair flowers filled the maiden's room
And all the cottage with a sweet perfume.
Then when the summer moon rose full and clear,
She seemed to peep at Elsie fondly there;
But though she made her chamber bright as day,
Still fast asleep the tired maiden lay.
And now it chanced that, 'mid the fairest flowers
That Elsie gathered in the sunny hours,
Was one white lily;—deep within her cup
A fairy all the time was folded up,
For fairies sleep the whole day long, you know.
So in the moonlight woke this fairy now:
She shook her wings as if to fly away,
Then turned and saw sweet Elsie as she lay
In childish slumber, breathing soft and low—
Her fair cheeks bright with health's warm, rosy glow.
Surprised, the fairy watched the maiden there,
And thought she ne'er had seen a form so fair.
Most wonderful of all was Elsie's hair,
For her soft curls seemed spun of golden thread,
And like a halo shone around her head.
So by this sign the little fairy knew
That Elsie's heart was pure and truthful too,
And all night long she flitted to and fro,
Watching the sleeping maid and loath to go;
And then at dawn, she touched the lily white
With her light wand, to keep it fresh and bright.
Her gauzy wings she folded up once more
And hid herself again low in the flower;
So thus for many nights the woodland fay
Watched little Elsie as she sleeping lay,
And learned to love the peasant maiden too
Better than any mortal form she knew.

And Elsie dreamed such pleasant dreams the while,
Her lips oft parted with a happy smile,
Till when at length the Queen of fairy land
Sent for this truant fay, she raised her wand
And severed one soft lock of golden hair
From Elsie's brow, and bore it with her there,
While tenderly she hung the bright curl up
Beside her own white, fragrant lily cup,
Where she slept day by day and woke at night
To see it shining in the fair moonlight.

It chanced a certain Prince, in pensive mood,
One Summer day came wandering through the wood,
And fell asleep at golden sunset's hour
Just close beside the fairies' lily flower.
Now this same Prince, named Carol, had been told
That when a maiden's hair seemed spun of gold,
And glistened as the moonlight on it fell,
That maiden's heart was pure and free as well;
But if instead the lock of hair should fade,
However fair and sweet should seem the maid,
He must not choose her for his wife, for she
Would only bring him grief and misery.
And so Prince Carol sought to find a maid
Whose hair in silver moonlight would not fade;
But all in vain, though ladies high and grand
And peasant girls he sought all through the land.
And so the Prince at length grew sick at heart;—
He left the palace, wandering far apart,
And fell asleep, as I have said before,
Within the fairy dell at sunset hour.
And thus it happened, as the moon rose up,
He woke and saw upon the lily cup
The lock of Elsie's hair, just as the fay
Stretched out her silver wings to fly away.
But when the Prince sprang up, rejoiced to see
The lock of hair, and clasp it eagerly,
It withered at his touch and shrank away.
And then spoke out the little woodland fay,
Telling the Prince, though he was good and wise,
He was unworthy still to win the prize,
Or otherwise this lock of hair, that shone
Like burnished gold, would mingle with his own.
“But I'm a Prince,” cried Carol. “Who is she
That is so pure she may not smile on me?
And tell me, fairy kind, what must I do
Till I the maid with golden hair may woo?”
“I know you, Prince,” the Fairy smiling said;
“And many a high-born lady you might wed,
But she from whose fair head I took this curl
Is but a poor, bare-footed, peasant girl;
Yet you can never win her for your own
Till you resign your sceptre and your throne,
And win your bread by honest toil alone.
Do this, my Prince, or never come again,
For now I warn you it will be in vain.”
And ere the Prince another word could say
The fairy stretched her wings and flew away;
And vanished too the lock of golden hair.
The Prince stood lost in wonder and despair,
And all night long he wandered ill at ease.
What! give up wealth, his throne and crown—all these
To win a peasant maid? It could not be.
And yet he longed this little maid to see,
While every day the yearning stronger grew,
Until at length no peace Prince Carol knew;
And so at last he hid his jewelled dress
Beneath a peasant's robe, so none might guess
He was a Prince. He took a staff, yet still
He paused with golden coin his purse to fill,
And far he travelled, looking everywhere
Among the peasant maids whose feet were bare,
To find the one with curls of golden hair,
Until one eve, just as the sun went down,
He paused to rest beside a cottage brown,
And chatting with the Peasant at the door,
He lingered, being loath to start once more,
Until the full moon rose up wondrous bright,
And flooded all the cot with silver light;
When all at once he saw a maiden there,
With clear, sweet eyes, and wee feet white and bare,
While round her brow soft curls of golden hair
Shone like a halo in the moonlight fair.
Then at a glance Prince Carol knew that he Had found his prize, and rising eagerly
To clasp the maiden's little hand he tried;
But Elsie shrank away and turned aside,

Although she kindly smiled; yet all in vain,
As days passed by he sought her hand to gain,
For still she seemed as far beyond his love
As if she were an angel from above;
And so the Prince at length, with wounded pride,
His peasant's garb threw hastily aside,
And stood in all his regal dress arrayed
Before the poor and simple peasant maid.
And not the fairest lady in the land
But proud had been to see the Prince thus stand
And sweetly sue to let him win her hand.
A nobler Prince in sooth 't were hard to find.
His voice was gentle and his smile was kind;
But Elsie's face changed not; she only said:
“I thank you, Prince, but you I cannot wed.”
And then he turned in scorn and angry grew.
“A Prince am I, a peasant maiden you;
How is it for your hand in vain I sue?”
Then Elsie spoke:—“Birth makes not rich or poor
In Heaven's sight; but those whose hearts are pure
And they who toil, and suffer, and endure,
May nobler be than heads that wear a crown;
And know, kind Prince, a lowly maid may own
Her love, or yet her sovereign right to say,
E'en to a Prince, if so it please her—nay,
As freely as a high born lady may.”
As Elsie spoke the Prince forgot his pride,
And as we long for gifts that are denied,
So now Prince Carol thought that e'en his throne
He would resign to call the maid his own.
“Elsie,” he cried, “whate'er you bid me do
Shall now be done to prove my love for you.”
But Elsie smiled: “Your love I would not buy
Nor sell my own. A simple maid am I.
I cannot hope your ways like mine will be;
Go then and wed a maid of high degree.
Your smile is pleasant, Prince, but in your eyes
There is a shade that smile cannot disguise,
I know not whence it comes; I am not wise;
I only know that when you look at me
That shadow in your eyes I always see;
While it is there your wife I cannot be.”
When Elsie told him this Prince Carol knew
That all the little fairy said was true;
He must forget that he was born a king—
Must give up all that wealth to him could bring,
All willingly resign his crown and throne
To call a simple peasant maid his own.
And what to him the homage of the crowd,
The regal pomp, of which he once was proud;
These empty honors all seemed poor and dim
Compared to that sweet maiden's smile to him.
To win one single heart so pure and true
Was better than a thousand thrones, he knew.
As thus he thought, Prince Carol's face grew bright,
And he seemed noble e'en in Elsie's sight;
But yet he spoke no word—to boast were vain;
In secret he would toil and strive to gain
This little Elsie. So he turned away
And patiently he toiled from day to day;
He freely gave his gold to feed the poor,
And then he sought the fairy dell once more.
Again he found the lock of golden hair,
That glistened still in silver moonlight there;
And though it vanished not, yet as he tried
To clasp it in his hand it shrank aside.
But while he wondered, from the lily cup
Again the little woodland fay rose up.
Smiling she said:—“Prince Carol, you behold
Your brown curls may not mingle with the gold;
For in your heart, Prince Carol, even yet
Do you not feel a shadow of regret
For all that you are called upon to part
E're you can win a little maiden's heart?
If so, when you return to woo that maid
She still shall see within your eyes that shade;
But ere her love to you be freely given
You first must win the approving smile of Heaven;
For know, Prince Carol, that you must not strive
So much to win a rich reward, but live
A noble life full of self-sacrifice,
Then come again and look in Elsie's eyes.”
Prince Carol sighed, for in his heart he knew
That what the little fairy said was true;
For as he toiled he did not look above,
But only cared to win fair Elsie's love;

THE PULPIT.

WORSHIP OF THE FATHER.

(Conclusion of a discourse by Rev. John C. Learned, minister of the Church of the Unity, St. Louis, printed in full in the "Church of the Messiah.")

It is the crown and glory of Judaism that it has given to the world the idea of one God, and Him supreme, the only being who can claim our worship and our prayers. All else, all departure from this conception and faith, though found in Christian churches, is Gentile, is derived from barbarism and paganism. All worship of the creature, instead of the creator, is the fruit of a degraded or undeveloped faith. "Thou shalt have no other gods before me; and the likeness of anything in heaven or earth thou shalt not worship"—these were the first two commands of the immortal decalogue, as given by Moses. "The true worshippers shall worship the Father"—this is the instruction of Jesus.

Through heathen influence, or through false ideas of the one God, corruption came in. Converts to the Christian church in its early period were made from polytheistic nations—from Syria and Egypt, from Greece and Rome. In the severe exigencies of life men fell into the way of looking upon God as angry and despotic. They even tired of a God that was said never to change, or who was generally visiting judgments upon His creatures. They wanted a change of gods, new gods and different ones. Those who, like the stern prophets, had spent their strength in declaring God's judgments and warnings and terrors to the people, at length saw the people turn away from Jehovah in despair, as of Himself incapable of mercy and destitute of love. As Jesus was exalted in the Christian church, and at first represented as the incarnation of divine love, as interceding for men against the vengeance of God, all turned to him, and in time, by steps very distinct to the student of ecclesiastical history, the man of Nazareth was deified by his grateful disciples; but even Jesus in his turn was to suffer eclipse. There were some passages in the gospel of severest denunciation and penalty for disobedience and unbelief. He is called the judge at the last great assize. In order to persuade men by the terrors of the law, even under the Christian dispensation, for the time being, they spoke less of the wrath of God, but depicted in deepest colors the wrath of the Lamb. He who studies Grecian Art in the church, and even down to the time of Angelo, will find plenty of paintings in which Jesus, in accordance with mediæval ideas, is represented as the stern judge, showing his own wounds with vindictive spirit, as remembering the wicked cause of all his degradation and agony. Sometimes he is even more avenger than judge. In a Greek picture Moses holds a scroll with the words, "Behold him whom ye crucified," while the offenders of Jesus are dragged into everlasting fire. In the Grecian "Last Judgments" a river of fire flows from under the throne of Jesus to drown and burn up the wicked. "All the angels and powers of heaven tremble before him."

Just as men had been compelled to turn away from God, whom they could no longer heartily worship, to find in Jesus the divine compassion; so in a later stage, by a similar misrepresentation of the character of Jesus, they were forced to turn away from him to find the divine compassion in Mary. Just as Jesus-worship sprang from false ideas of God, so on a lower scale Mary-worship rose from false ideas of Jesus. Man will not remain a worshipper before a being hateful or vindictive. Fear may extort some rites from men for a time, but in the end he will sooner worship his brother-man or some dead saint, so love be there; or he will cease to worship altogether. The ground for the worship of the Virgin Mary was already suggested in these Grecian paintings of the last judgment. Mary is there, and as a figure full of tender, pitying benignity is adoring Jesus, the judge, to relent, or she looks toward the redeemed, with face averted from the condemned, as if unable to endure the sight. She appears as mediator, or supplicant for mercy, interceding for sinners who crowd around her and kneel with uplifted faces and imploring looks.

When we consider the influence of polytheism, still not extinct, the false tendencies of thought already established, and the ignorance and gloom of those dark ages, is it any great wonder that this system of Mary-worship captivated all hearts? And so it came to be true, as in the Catholic Church it is still, that Mary received more prayers than all the persons of the Godhead put together. Mary-worship had almost uninterrupted sway in the church until the light of the Reformation broke in. Its power was then checked and broken for all the best minds of Christendom. But Luther's Reformation carried men back, not to primitive Christianity, but one step only. They fell back upon the worship of Jesus. That is where orthodoxy stands to-day. Primitive Christianity, like Judaism itself, was theism pure and simple, the worship of God. The new reformation, now represented in Christendom more by individual faith than by organized sects, stands for nothing less. The church of the new civilization will be monotheistic. The world has tried polytheism and tritheism and dualism; it has tried demonology, idolatry, mariolatry, Christolatry. Our churches in the past stand dedicated to or named after the holy angels, the canonized saints, or they blazon forth all authorized or unauthorized titles of the Martyr of Palestine. We have churches of St. James, St. Peter, and St. John; of Saints Bridget and Elizabeth, and of Mary the Virgin Mother. We have churches of the Redeemer, of the Saviour, of the Messiah, of the Holy Ghost, of the Trinity, of All Saints. We have churches of the Annunciation, of the Immaculate Conception, of the Advent, of the Holy Sacrament, of the Transfiguration, of the Ascension, of the Rosary, of the Cross. We have churches of Gethsemane, Bethesda and Calvary. We scarcely realize how Romish names and symbols have encouraged and confirmed false habits of thought, but churches of God, of the Unity, of Our Father, of the Divine Paternity, of Hope and Charity, of Truth and Righteousness and Good Will—these, though they may come at length, for the most part are waiting to be tried, waiting for that purification of worship which, as we look upon it, is greatly hindered by the yet lingering and unspent power of polytheism and idolatry which still shelters itself under the Romish ritual and all Trinitarian systems of belief. All saint and hero-worship, wherever found, all deification of human lives or created things, is paganism. And though in the "survivals," which we may still see, there is much softening and refining from the gross forms of dead civilizations, yet the essence of worship so founded is the same.

The faith of our times, tried as it is by rational thought, requires for its safe support God, and God alone, as the object of its worship. It does not feel safe, resting upon a deified man or woman whose anomalous life is at the mercy of historical criticism. It cannot settle down on the worship of our brother, though so pure and exalted, Jesus. It wants God. No human being whose life was counted by years, who once lived and then ceased to be; once was manifested to men, then veiled himself; not being present except to his children in petty Palestine; unknown to the millions of his equally worthy children elsewhere, yet who have all sunk into eternal death because he would not tell them how to escape his wrath. No; the new reformation will certainly set forth God as the object of men's worship, the good, the impartial, the ever-present God. "The Father seeketh such to worship him." The new civilization, if it be worthy of the name, will accept and honor the Supreme God, the Ancient of Days, the Eternal, the Now. Men may call Him by different names. The chemist may identify Him, in accordance with his dialect, with affinity or force; the astronomer may have no higher phrase than motion or gravitation; the biologist may call Him Life; the poet may call Him Nature; the philosopher may call Him Thought; the mystic may call Him Spirit; but it will be the same essence, the Supreme, the Omnipotent, the All-sustaining God, the One God and Father of us all.

OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE.

RECONSTRUCTION.

THE half century of disintegration has passed. The old rocks have been crumbling, even those which made the foundations of the Orthodox church. These fragments must be gathered together, that nothing be lost. These lime rocks in our Western cliffs once were only the sediment in the ocean, the fragments of other bodies. Now behold their solidity and strength. Human opinion on a hundred points in science and religion is all afloat. It is dissolved, and the time is ripe for recombination, and in this work the free thought, which has had so much to do with the destruction of the old, must be a powerful agent. Each member must find its mate. Reconstruction cannot be so sudden as destruction. A few days are enough to pull down an old building, but months are required to build the new edifice. We see new opportunities for work every day. The city has been desolated by fire; the people ask for something which they cannot define. A new kind of faith, a more useful home, with larger rooms and more windows, are the needs of the hour. We are called on to show them the better model of a home, a church adapted to all the faculties of our nature. We must have a thoughtful church, and must have a central truth to rally on, a truth that has power to enthuse and command. That truth must be the centre of the nerve-power—the brain of the organization, dispensing life to every part. It must not be presented as an abstraction; it must not be an axiom in geometry or a theory in science. We must have freedom to consider all theories in science or philosophy according to the mental wants of our societies, but all need a practical point to rally on. What should it be? It should be a practical work for the moral and social culture of young persons, using all the intellect that is at our command in doing this work. The elders must be edified in various ways, but the young must be educated. Our charities occupy but a small per cent. of our efforts. The poor we have, but our charities are so organized that our churches find but little occupation in that direction. The great work is the education of the youth of this age to work for something besides material interests. The air is oppressed with work to supply food and raiment. These are needful, but we must look for methods to do a better work.

Our Liberal church has many members which can be brought into one body by gradual assimilation of life and purpose. As a model to work by, we cannot dispense with the Man who stands as the Christ to all of us. We have nothing to do with the blood theology that is rife in some places. We make no idol of Jesus, before whom we must degrade ourselves. We simply want an inspiring example in one who has shown us what self-sacrifice is—one who has dared to do and die for his righteous convictions.

In our methods of moral culture, we must find some work for every one to do which will involve the element of sacrifice. We must learn how to organize for benevolent work, not simply in giving alms, but in doing everything that aids in the building up of the social edifice. For one, visiting the poor; for another, scientific teaching. One may work in an evening school, another visit the sick; one may preach and another practice. The body has many members, and each has its office. Who will tell us how we can provide work for all the varied members of even a small church? Let us have the details? S. S. H.

DAVENPORT, Ia.

A HINT TO SMALL CONGREGATIONS.

IN most country parishes, at this season of the year, there are small congregations, owing to excessively cold or stormy Sundays, and many of the people living at a distance from the church. Would it not be well to suggest on such occasions to the few who brave the weather and are seated in the corners and side pews that they occupy the body pews, and so relieve the awkwardness of the minister's having to look over empty seats to see familiar faces?

All who have spoken in public know the inspiration which comes from the eyes of interested hearers, often the larger the congregation the more inspiring the service.

I have heard brother ministers, when on exchange, inquire the names of certain persons who were helpful by the interest manifested in their countenances. I feel sure that the people themselves would be quite as much benefited by this associated worship as clergymen. The very emptiness of the front pews gives a chill of loneliness which we do not feel when only the side pews are vacant.

One who has never preached to scattered audiences may not know how disagreeable he would find it; but let him call upon friends, and converse at separate corners of the room, filling up the space with empty chairs, and I think he would feel it to some extent. Such a ceremony would hardly be repeated. Yet we expect our minister to talk to us of what should be the nearest and dearest matter to our well-being, in a most constrained attitude towards us, when it can easily be made so much more grateful to both pastor and people. S. S. B.

OBITUARY.

MRS. HANNAH H. THOMAS.

[Died at Irvington, on the Hudson, January 5th, 1877, aged seventy-two.]

We have to record, with deep sensibility, the death of one of our excellent New England women, Mrs. Hannah H. Thomas, widow of the late Mr. John Thomas, for a time Treasurer, and for many critical years a sturdy pillar of the First Congregational church in New York. He was killed by lightning, it will be remembered, about twenty years ago, on his own place at Irvington on the Hudson. A true son of Plymouth (the rock was on his own wharf), a modest, upright, warm-hearted and sincere man, of primitive simplicity in his ways, and still very dear to the memory of his old friends, he is never to be forgotten by the writer of this notice, who leaned upon his arm in the days of his youthful ministry, and all through the anxieties of the building of the Church of the Divine Unity, which greatly tasked Mr. Thomas's anxieties, time and liberality. And now, his faithful wife and widow, ever cherishing his memory, after twenty years follows him into what to her was doubtless his still fresh and open grave!

Mrs. Thomas had lived for twenty years at the home her husband built at Irvington, and there she died. But she was still in close and frequent communication with her old religious home, and continued in heart a member of All Souls' Church to the last. Her affections were not of an intermitting kind, and where she gave her interest and confidence, there they remained unaffected by separation or time. Possibly she was as fixed in her distrusts and dislikes—but we know nothing of these—as she was delicate and reserved when she could not speak well of her acquaintances.

Mrs. Thomas was the last survivor but one of that numerous family of the late Mr. Isaac Hedge, of Plymouth, Mass., which contributed so many excellent daughters to the moral and social wealth of the community, all marked by excellent sense, refinement of moral feeling and freshness of heart. They were all Unitarians in faith, and adorned the profession they made. We could with hearty satisfaction draw the portraits of most of those noble women, and they would make a lovely gallery of matronly dignity, womanly delicacy and humane Christian worth. But we resist the temptation. Mrs. Thomas had such cordiality, constancy and ever fresh affections, that she made herself dearly loved by those honored with her friendship; but her affectionateness was not coupled with neutrality of convictions or lack of independent opinions. She was deeply of her own mind, respected her own conclusions and abided in them firmly. Hospitable, devoted to kindred, unexact, charitable, industrious, without pretence or ambition, she found in her only daughter and her children the most satisfying society, and a sphere of ever-living freshness and delight. The friendship between her and her daughter was of the rarest and most beautiful kind. Patient in sickness, she was composed and cheerful in death. She knew in whom she trusted! Her faith in God's fatherly care was perfect, and her solace in the precepts and promises of Jesus complete. Seldom has the soul triumphed so perfectly over the body as in her long dying, during which, to the last moment, her spirit was clear, conscious of its waiting on the brink, yet thoughtful of others, and without a fear for itself, though anxious "to be delivered from the burthen of the flesh." We cannot lament, at 72, any one's happy death—least of all hers, for she was ripe for heaven, and has gone to a well-earned reward of worth and fidelity, and to beloved ones longed for, and who must have been longing for her. Her memory will be cherished sacredly and tenderly while her friends remain this side the veil. H. W. B.

JOTTINGS.

NORTHBORO', MASS.—Rev. Henry F. Bond is to preach at Northboro', Mass., for three months.

HARTFORD.—The Unitarian services to be held in this city under the charge of Rev. M. K. Schermerhorn, late of Buffalo, will be inaugurated next Sunday evening with a sermon by Rev. Dr. Bellows, of New York.

ARLINGTON, MASS.—Rev. George W. Cutter has accepted the call extended to him by the Unitarian church in Buffalo, N. Y., at a salary of $3,500. His parishioners in Arlington will part with him with sincere regret.

A LIST of books selected especially for the ethical culture of the young has been carefully prepared by Rev. E. P. Powell and J. Colgrove, of Hadley Bros., Chicago, published in a slip for the use of parents, and distributed in the First church.

HARLEM.—The second in the special course of Sunday evening sermons, now in progress at Unity Chapel, Harlem, 128th street, near Fourth avenue, will be given next Sunday evening by Rev. John W. Chadwick, of Brooklyn. Dr. Bellows and Rev. S. H. Camp will also preach in this course. Announcements will be made in THE INQUIRER from week to week.

THE most remarkable instance of self-control during the past week is, unquestionably, the complete reticence of our neighbor, the New York Herald, concerning that first-class sensation, the Bennett-May "unpleasantness." James Gordon Bennett, Sr., whose journalistic career was enlivened by several duels, would not have countenanced the present silence of the Herald. If he frequently winked at the publication of news more original than true, he never allowed any of his personal shortcomings to interfere with at least the first half of the Springfield Republican's admirable maxim: "To print all the news, and to tell the truth about it." The morning after he had been cowed, or had "vindicated his honor" on some mysterious field of glory, you might have been sure to find the whole story properly displayed in his enterprising sheet, which never allowed any pretense of aversion to personal notoriety to stand in the way of the sale of a large extra edition! Now that the Herald's sporting public has discovered, to its grief, its favorite's present alarming and most uncharacteristic "policy of silence," there will be many a tear shed in memory of the less reserved policy of the "old man," who, with all his ignorance of "polo," never wasted any time trying to stand on his dignity.

We have received the prospectus of a new quarterly, to be issued May 1st, 1877, "or as soon thereafter as circumstances shall warrant," and to be called "The Radical Review." Mr. Benj. R. Tucker, of New Bedford, the projector of this enterprise, says in his circular that the aim is to provide for thoughtful Americans "a periodical publication, serving the same purpose here that the Fortnightly and Contemporary Reviews serve so well in England. The progressive portion of our population demands some adequate literary vehicle for the carriage and diffusion of the most radical thought of our time. The editor and publisher avails himself with pleasure of the permission granted him by the following persons to announce them as probable contributors; to which list he hopes to make important additions hereafter: John Weiss, John Fiske, Edmund C. Stedman, Sidney H. Morse, Octavius B. Frothingham, Lysander Spooner, Ezra H. Heywood, Samuel Johnson, J. Stahl Patterson, Prof. E. S. Morse, John W. Chadwick, Joel A. Allen, Mrs. E. M. F. Denton, Dyer D. Lum, Stephen Pearl Andrews, Wm. J. Potter, John Orvis, Charles W. Buck, Francis E. Abbot, Wm. Henson, Howard N. Brown, Samuel Longfellow, Abram W. Stevens, Cyrus A. Bartol, Joseph H. Allen, John C. Clifford, J. R. Ingalls. Each number will contain two hundred or more octavo pages, well printed on good paper. Terms per annum, postpaid, $5.00. Address the Publisher, Benj. R. Tucker, Lock Box 589, New Bedford, Mass."

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The Unitarian society is working hopefully and successfully to fulfill its part of the pledge made at Saratoga, to raise $30,000 for the purchase or erection of a new church edifice. The society already sees its way clear to the realization from all sources of about $23,000, leaving $7,000 still to be subscribed. The subscription seems to have been managed with excellent judgment; there have been many generous subscriptions from people of small means, and after the fourth of March many other subscriptions of this sort are confidently looked for. The few wealthy men and women interested are not likely to stand by and see the scheme frustrated by the lack of three or four thousand dollars. In so far, therefore, as the Washington people are concerned, the outlook for the new church seems to us encouraging.

We hear that about one-third of the $30,000 to be raised by the churches has already been contributed chiefly by the smaller churches. The more wealthy churches could raise the remaining $20,000 to-morrow if necessary, but are holding off until after the inauguration of somebody and the return of business activity. The Washington people were recently favored with a visit from Rev. Dr. A. P. Peabody, of Harvard University, who preached two Sundays, and made himself equally agreeable, "daily and Sundays," as one of our exchanges says. No attempt seems to have been made by the Washington church to win golden opinions from their honored guest, but we are glad to hear that Dr. Peabody left Washington much impressed with its importance as a field for Liberal Christianity.

The Inquirer.

Published every Thursday, from the middle of September to the middle of July, in the Park Bank Building, 214 Broadway, New York.

To be in season for insertion the same week, communications intended for publication must be forwarded in time to reach this office not later than Tuesday. No attention is paid to anonymous communications. We require the name and address of every writer, not necessarily for publication, but as guarantees of good faith.

Communications relating to the editorial department of the paper should be addressed, "Editor of the Inquirer, P. O. Box 109, New York City;" all others to "Publisher," same address.

No person is authorized to collect money or make contracts for the Inquirer, who cannot show written authority from the Publisher.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

Three Dollars per year, in advance. Clergymen, Two Dollars per year. Postage, Twenty Cents per year, in advance. Remittances should be made by Registered Letter or by Post-Office Money Order, or Draft on New York payable to PUBLISHER OF THE INQUIRER.

ADVERTISING RATES.

Six cents per agate line per week; outside page and pages next reading matter, ten cents per line. Special Notices twenty cents per line.

Discount—Five per cent. on yearly accounts amounting to $250 and under $500. Ten per cent. on yearly accounts amounting to $500 or more.

Copy for Thursday's paper received until Tuesday afternoon.

Advertisements must be acceptable in every respect.

Office, PARK BANK BUILDING, 214 Broadway.

Address,

THE INQUIRER,

Box 109, New York.

Special Notices.

Protestant Leaders.

A COURSE OF LECTURES

BY
JOHN W. CHADWICK,

AT THE

Second Unitarian Church, Brooklyn,
Corner of Clinton and Congress Streets.

1876—77.

LECTURES:

- V. Emanuel Swedenborg. Sunday evening, Feb. 4, 1877.
- VI. Murray and Universalism. Sunday evening, March 4, 1877.
- VII. Thomas Paine: His Relation to his own and later Times in Matters of Religion. Sunday evening, April 1, 1877.
- VIII. Channing and Unitarianism. Sunday evening, April 15, 1877.
- IX. Theodore Parker. Sunday evening, May 6, 1877.

Hour of Lecture, Half-Past Seven.

Morning Service at 10:35 precisely. Vesper Service, Third Sunday Evening of each Month, with the above exceptions.

The Address of Rev. John F.

LOCKE is to the care of W. H. Baldwin, President Young Men's Christian Union, 18 Boylston St., Boston.

"Admirably fitted to teach the art from the very beginning."—Chicago Tribune.

"Mr. Hope is one of the 'old masters' in this sort of work. He has prepared an excellent work, in which his subject is treated fully and clearly."—Chicago Post.

"Altogether the best book that can be placed in the hands of the amateur."—N. Y. Graphic.

"The diagrams are excellent and the instructions clear and direct."—N. Y. Evening Post.

SORRENTO AND INLAID WORK FOR AMATEURS, BY ARTHUR HOPE.

A practical manual of Scroll-Sawing, Overlaying, Polishing, Inlaying, Silhouettes, &c. Containing 50 full-sized designs, new and beautiful. The designs are worth more than price of book. Tastefully bound in muslin. For sale by booksellers generally. Sent by mail on receipt of price, $1.50. Descriptive circular mailed to any address.

JOHN WILKINSON, Publisher, 55 Lake St., Chicago.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, 132 Fifth Ave., New York.

HAIR DYE.

BACHELOR'S CELEBRATED HAIR DYE is splendid. It never fails. The only true and perfect Dye. Harmless, reliable, instantaneous. No disappointment, no ridiculous tints; remedies the ill effects of bad dyes, leaves the hair soft and beautiful Black or Brown. Sold and properly applied at BACHELOR'S Wig Factory, 16 Bond St., N. Y. Sold by all druggists.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

For all the purposes of a Family Physic, and for curing Costiveness, Jaundice, Indigestion, Foul Stomach, Breath, Headache, Erysipelas, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Biliousness, Dropsy, Tumors, Worms, Neuralgia, as a Dinner Pill, for Purifying the Blood,

Are the most effective and congenial purgative ever discovered. They are mild, but effectual in their operation, moving the bowels surely and without pain. Although gentle in their operation, they are still the most thorough and searching cathartic medicine that can be employed: cleansing the stomach and bowels, and even the blood. In small doses of one pill a day, they stimulate the digestive organs and promote vigorous health.

AYER'S PILLS have been known for more than a quarter of a century, and have obtained a world-wide reputation for their virtues. They correct diseased action in the several assimilative organs of the body, and are so composed that obstructions within their range can rarely withstand or evade them. Not only do they cure the every-day complaints of everybody, but also formidable and dangerous diseases that have baffled the best of human skill. While they produce powerful effects, they are, at the same time, the safest and best physic for children. By their aperient action they gripe much less than the common purgatives, and never give pain when the bowels are not inflamed. They reach the vital fountains of the blood, and strengthen the system by freeing it from the elements of weakness.

Adapted to all ages and conditions in all climates, containing neither calomel nor any deleterious drug, these Pills may be taken with safety by anybody. Their sugar-coating preserves them ever fresh, and makes them pleasant to take; while being purely vegetable, no harm can arise from their use in any quantity.

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass.,
Practical and Analytical Chemists.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

THE HOWARD INSURANCE COMPANY,

OF NEW YORK.—OFFICE NO 66 WALL STREET.
Cash Capital $500,000.—Chartered in 1825.

This Company insures property against loss or Damage by Fire and the risks of Inland Navigation and Transportation, on the most favorable terms.

SAM'L T. SKIDMORE, President.
HENRY A. OAKLEY, Vice-President.

DIRECTORS:

SAMUEL T. SKIDMORE, HEWLETT SCUDDER,
THOMAS W. GALE, CHARLES H. CLAYTON,
JOHN H. SWIFT, JOHN L. RIKER,
JAMES R. TAYLOR, GEORGE W. TALBOT,
HENRY J. SCUDDER, FREDERICK STURGES,
HENRY A. OAKLEY, JOHN J. WHITE,
CHARLES MALL, R. LENOX BELKNAP,
HENRY I. BARNEY, JAMES C. CARTER,
WILLIAM H. WISNER, EDMUND PENFOLD,
ALEXANDER MAITLAND.

CHARLES A. HULL, Secretary.
RICHARD W. CLARK, Asst. Sec'y.

HANOVER FIRE INSURANCE CO.,

NO. 120 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Forty-seventh Semi-Annual Statement.

JANUARY 1, 1876.

Cash Capital.....	$500,000 00
Reinsurance Fund.....	887,717 75
Outstanding Liabilities.....	112,298 14
Net Surplus.....	392,759 20
	$1,592,775 09

ASSETS.

Cash in Bank and Office.....	$102,766 92
United States Six Per Cent. Bonds.....	596,637 50
Bonds and Mortgages, being first lien on improved Real Estate in the Cities of New York and Brooklyn.....	326,025 00
Loans on Call (Market Value of Securities, ties, $136,790).....	114,850 00
City and County Bonds.....	230,265 00
Bank and Trust Co. Stocks.....	41,650 00
First Mort. R. R. Bonds and Stocks.....	57,250 00
Balance in hands of Agents and Uncollected Office Premiums.....	93,163 96
Accrued Interest on Bonds and Mortgages and and Call Loans.....	7,067 22
Real Estate.....	17,109 49
	$1,592,775 09

BENJ. S. WALCOTT, President.
I. REMSEN LANE, Secretary.

W. A. Batchelor's Curative Ointment
Immediately cures Ring-Worm, Tetter, Itching of the Head, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Face or Body.

W. A. Batchelor's Alaska Seal Oil
for the Hair. The best Hair Oil in use.

W. A. Batchelor's Dentifrice for beautifying and preserving the teeth and Gums and deodorizing the breath.

W. A. Batchelor's New Cosmetique,
Black or Brown, for tinting the Hair, Whiskers or Moustaches without greasing them. Sold at factory, 16 Bond Street, New York, and by all druggists. Ask for them.

The Toll Gate! Prize Picture sent free! An ingenious gem. 50 objects to find. Address, with stamp, E. C. Abbey, Buffalo, N. Y. 1491-ly

BABBITT'S TOILET SOAP.

Unrivalled for the toilet and the bath. Non-irritating and delectable odors to cover common and deleterious ingredients. After years of scientific experiment the manufacture of Babbitt's Best Soap has been perfected and now offers to the public THE FINEST TOILET SOAP in the World.

Only the purest vegetable oils used in its manufacture.

For Use in the Nursery it has No Equal. Worth ten times its cost to every mother and family in Christendom. Sample box containing 3 cakes of 5 ozs. each, sent free to any address on receipt of 75 cents.

Address R. T. Babbitt, New York City.
For Sale by all Druggists.

ASTHMA D. LANCELL'S ASTHMA.

Having struggled twenty years between life and death with ASTHMA, I experimented by compounding roots and herbs and inhaling the medicine. Fortunately discovered a sure cure for ASTHMA and CATARRH. Guaranteed to relieve any case of Asthma instantly, so the patient can lie down to sleep. By mail, $1.00 per box. Address D. D. LANCELL, Apple Creek, Ohio. For sale by Druggists.

LAMAR INSURANCE COMPANY, OF NEW YORK.

Broadway, cor. John Street.

Capital, - - $200,000.

ASSETS, JANUARY 1, 1876.

Cash on hand and in Bank.....	$13,269 20
U. S. Bonds, market value.....	304,220 00
Loans on Call, Good Stocks Collateral.....	1,000 00
Bonds and Mortgages on Brick Dwellings.....	58,900 00
Bills Receivable for Inland Prem's.....	1,820 65
Premiums in course of collection.....	7,394 70
New York Bank Stocks market value.....	21,487 00
	$408,092 05

Losses unadjusted estimated at $14,900 56

ISAAC R. ST. JOHN, President.

A. R. FROTHINGHAM, Vice Pres't.

WM. R. MACDIARMID, Sec'y.

HOME Insurance Co. of New York,

Office No. 135 Broadway.

Forty-sixth Semi-Annual Statement,
Showing the condition of the Company on the first day of July, 1876.

Cash Capital.....	$3,000,000 00
Reserve for Re-Insurance.....	1,845,521 47
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Dividends.....	247,326 66
Net Surplus.....	958,868 71
Total Assets - - -	$6,051,716 84

SUMMARY OF ASSETS:

CASH IN BANKS.....	$426,946 71
BONDS AND MORTGAGES, BEING FIRST LIEN ON REAL ESTATE WORTH $4,820,000.....	1,922,738 01
UNITED STATES STOCKS (MARKET VALUE).....	2,642,125 00
BANK STOCKS (MARKET VALUE).....	287,487 50
STATE AND CITY BONDS (MARKET VALUE).....	69,250 00
LOANS ON STOCKS, PAYABLE ON DEMAND (MARKET VALUE OF SECURITIES, $547,060).....	423,650 00
INTEREST DUE ON 1st JULY, 1876.....	73,894 53
BALANCE IN HAND OF AGENTS.....	191,157 19
BILLS RECEIVABLE.....	10,833 34
PREMIUMS DUE AND UNCOLLECTED ON POLICIES ISSUED AT THIS OFFICE.....	18,634 56
Total - - -	$6,051,716 84

LIABILITIES.

CLAIMS FOR LOSSES OUTSTANDING ON 1st JULY 1876.....	$245,926 66
DIVIDENDS UNPAID.....	1,400 00
Total, - - -	$247,326 66

CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.

A. F. WILLMARTH, Vice-Pres't.

D. A. HEALD, 2d Vice-Pres't.

J. H. WASHBURN, Secretary.

T. B. GREENE, } Ass't Secretaries.
C. K. FRANCIS, }

A Dividend of FIVE per cent. has been declared, payable on and after Tuesday, the 18th of July.

NEW YORK, 14th July, 1876.

THE NEW JERSEY MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.

J. H. STEDWELL, President.

C. H. BRINKERHOFF, Secretary.

J. H. CANNIFF, Cashier.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved ($2.00) Receipt Book." Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STIMSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

ATLANTIC MUTUAL INSURANCE CO NEW YORK,

OFFICE 51 WALL ST.

ORGANIZED 1842.

INSURES AGAINST MARINE AND INLAND
NAVIGATION RISKS.

And will issue Policies making Loss payable in England.

Its Assets for the Security of its Policies are more than

TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured, and are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated during the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearing interest until redeemed.

JOHN D. JONES, President.

CHARLES DENNIS, Vice-President.

W. H. H. MOORE, 2d Vice-President.

A. A. RAVEN, 3d Vice-President.

J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

PHENIX INSURANCE COMPANY, OF BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Capital.....	$1,000,000 00
Cash Assets, Jan. 1, 1876.....	2,549,958 77

OFFICES:

Western Union Telegraph Building, BROADWAY, Cor. DEX ST., New York.

Brooklyn Office..... 12 & 14 Court St.
Brooklyn E. D. Office..... 98 Broadway.

The benefits to be derived by the public from Insurance against loss by fire are so great and numerous, when compared with its trifling cost, as to render it an imperative duty on every one to avail themselves of the protection afforded by the PHENIX INSURANCE COMPANY against the destructive ravages of FIRE, which in a few moments may lay waste the fruits of a whole life of industry.

STEPHEN CROWELL, President.

PHILANDER SHAW, Vice President.

WILLIAM E. CROWELL, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED A. D. 1850.

THE MANHATTAN LIFE INSURANCE CO., OF NEW YORK,

has paid $6,500,000 Death Claims; has paid $4,500,000 return premiums to Policy-holders; has a surplus of more than $1,600,000 over Liabilities; and a ratio of $120 Assets for every $100 Liabilities, by New York Standard of Valuation. It gives the best Insurance on the best lives at the most favorable rates.

EXAMINE THE PLANS AND RATES OF THIS COMPANY.

HENRY STOKES, President.

C. Y. WEMPLE, Vice-President.

J. L. HALSEY, Secretary.

S. N. STEBBINS, Actuary.

H. Y. WEMPLE, } Assistant Secretaries.
H. B. STOKES, }

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY

Manufacture these celebrated Bells for CHURCHES, ACADEMIES, &c. Price List and Circulars sent free. HENRY McSHANE & CO. BALTIMORE, MD.

A Amateur Theatricals.

For the benefit of the Lodging House for streetboys, Nos. 314 and 316 East Thirty-fifth Street, branch of the Children's Aid Society, to be held at the hall,

NO. 1464 BROADWAY,

Near 42d Street, Thursday evening, January 25th, 1877, at eight o'clock.

TICKETS, ONE DOLLAR. ADMIT ONE.

EVENING DRESS.

STEARNS & BEALE,

STATIONERS,

BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS,

PRINTING and LITHOGRAPHY,

147 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

(Between Broadway and Nassau Street.)

JOEL W. STEARNS.

WM. P. BEALE.

MUSIC BOOKS for Schools,

ACADEMIES AND SEMINARIES.

THE HIGH SCHOOL CHOIR.

($1, or $9 per doz.) is already a "proved and prized" book in a multitude of schools, and has songs in 2, 3 and 4 parts, by EMERSON & TILDEN. Equally good are the older HOUR OF SINGING ($1), by EMERSON & TILDEN; CHOICE TRIOS ($1), for 3 Female Voices, by W. S. TILDEN; and DEEM'S SOLFEGGI (75c.), which has exercises in Italian style.

THE ENCORE.

(75 cts., or $7.50 per doz.), so successful as a Singing School book, is also a practically good class book for High Schools.

THE WHIPPOORWILL.

(50 cts.) by W. O. PERKINS, author of "Golden Robin," is filled with genial, pleasing songs for Common Schools.

American School Music Readers, Book I. (35c.), Book II. (50c.), Book III. (50c.), are well-made, Graded note readers, by EMERSON & TILDEN.

As collections of cheerful sacred songs, such as now enter so gracefully into School Life, we commend three books of uncommon beauty, our Sabbath School Song Books, RIVER OF LIFE (35 cts.), SHINING RIVER (35 cts.), GOOD NEWS (35 cts.).

Either book mailed, post free, for Retail Price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

C. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 Broadway,
New York.

J. E. DITSON & CO.,
Successors to Lee & Walker,
Philadelphia.

Employment Society for Poor

WOMEN.

This Society now offers for sale at its store, No. 143 East 13th street, New York, a large quantity of garments, the remains of last year's stock, at very low prices. Those wishing to buy women's or children's clothing to give to the poor or to charitable institutions will find there a good supply of articles suitable for the purpose. Call and examine the garments, or send orders to

THE EMPLOYMENT SOCIETY,

143 East 13th Street,

New York City.

WOOD & DAVIS,

BANKERS.

31 PINE STREET, NEW YORK.

GOVERNMENT BONDS, STATE, MUNICIPAL, RAILROAD SECURITIES and GOLD BOUGHT and SOLD ON COMMISSION.

C. D. WOOD.

S. D. DAVIS.

EMPLOYMENT.

ANY PERSON of ordinary intelligence can earn a living by canvassing for The Illustrated Weekly. Experience is not necessary—the only requisite being, as in all successful business, industry and energy. Send for particulars. Address CHARLES CLUGAS & CO., 14 Warren St., N. Y.

$12 a day at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine.

$55 to $77 a Week to Agents. Samples FREE P. O. VICKERY, Augusta Maine.

is the most beautiful work of the kind in the world. It contains nearly 150 pages, hundreds of fine illustrations, and six Chromo Plates of Flowers, beautifully drawn and colored from nature. Price, 50 cents in paper covers; $1 in elegant cloth. Printed in German and English. VICK'S FLORAL GUIDE, Quarterly, 25 cents a year, VICK'S CATALOGUE—300 illustrations, only 2 cents. Address, JAMES VICK, Rochester, N. Y.

Manhattan Savings Institution,

NOS. 644 AND 646 BROADWAY, COR. BLEECKER STREET.

New York, Dec. 22, 1876.

Fifty-Second Semi-Annual Dividend.

The Trustees of this institution have declared the Fifty-Second Semi-Annual Dividend on all deposits on the 1st day of January next, (by the rules entitled thereto,) at the rate of Six per cent. per annum on sums not exceeding $500, and Five percent. per annum on larger sums. Payable on and after January 15th.

E. J. BROWN, President.

EDWARD SCHELL, Treasurer.

C. F. ALFORD, Secretary.

OUT-SELLING IMMENSELY—THE Centennial Exposition,

DESCRIBED AND ILLUSTRATED.

The only complete, richly illustrated, low price work, 750 pages, only $2.50. Treats of the entire history, grand buildings, wonderful exhibits, curiosities, great days, etc. The best chance of 100 years to coin money fast, as everybody wants this work. 1,000 agents appointed first four weeks, 5,000 wanted. For full particulars address quickly, HUBBARD BROTHERS, Publishers, Philadelphia, Pa., Cincinnati, O., Chicago Ill., or Springfield, Mass.

CAUTION. Be not deceived by premature books assuming to be "official," etc.

With and without Rockers; heavy and light; large and small. For OFFICE, LIBRARY, STUDY, PLAZZA, PARLOR, SEWING-ROOM, NURSERY—wherever you want

SOLID COMFORT.

Send stamp for an illustrated Price-List.

F. A. SINCLAIR,
Mottville, N. Y.

Be careful that the chairs are stamped with my name in full; others are imitations.

For sale by Furniture Dealers in New York and at 218 Fulton street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from active practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of consumption, bronchitis, catarrh, asthma, and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for nervous debility and all nervous complaints, after having thoroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, feels it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive, and a conscientious desire to relieve human suffering, he will send, free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, with full directions for preparing and successfully using. Sent by return mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper,

DR. W. C. STEVENS,
126 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

BALD HEADS

Can be covered with a piece exactly fitted to the Bald spot, so perfect, and with work so ingeniously contrived as to appear each hair just issuing from the skin, the hair being exactly of the same shade and texture as the growing hair; they are so perfect they cannot be detected. Made only at BATCHELOR'S Celebrated Wig Factory, 16 Bond Street, N. Y.

MISFIT CARPETS.

English Brussels, Three Ply and Ingrain; also, Stair Carpets, Velvet Rugs, Crumb Cloths, etc., very cheap, AT THE OLD PLACE.

112 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

Carpets carefully packed and sent to any part of the United States free of charge.

SEND FOR PRICE LIST.

J. A. BENDALL.

BROOKLYN ADVERTISEMENTS.

OVINGTON BROTHERS,

246, 248, 250 and 252 Fulton Street,

BROOKLYN.

Fine China and Glass,

Clocks and Bronzes.

MAJOLICA, FAIENCE, GIEN, TORQUAY AND WARES

Goods packed and shipped free of charge.

O'BRIEN & COMPANY,

IMPORTERS,

MANUFACTURERS and RETAILERS

OF

DRY GOODS,

CARPETS,

CLOTHING

141 and 143, 151 to 159 Atlantic Ave.

We solicit an inspection of our magnificent assortment in all our Departments—forty-one in number—conceded to be the largest, most varied and best selected ever exhibited in Brooklyn, with a stock in value amounting to over half a million dollars.

Joseph O'Brien & Co.,

141 and 143, 151 to 159 Atlantic Avenue.

Lectures and Sermons,

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

FIRST SERIES.

The Education of Conscience.
Self Respect.

The Higher Reverence.

God on our Side.

Man and the Bible.

The Best Use of Sunday.

SECOND SERIES.

The Essential Piety of Modern Science.

A Rational Church.

Economy and Waste.

Also, WAY, TRUTH AND LIFE, a Biography of N. A. Staples, with sermons, price, $1.00.

For sale by CHARLES P. SOMERBY, 139 Eighth St., New York. Copies sent by mail at the rate of five cents each and postage.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.

Established in 1837.

Superior Bells of Copper and Tin, mounted with the best Rotary Hangings, for Churches, Schools, Farms, Factories, Court-houses, Fire Alarms, Tower Clocks, etc. Fully Warranted. Illustrated Catalogue sent Free. VANDUSEN & TIPP, 102 E. 2d St., Cincinnati.

10 PER CENT NET.

Kansas, Missouri and Iowa Improved Farm First Mortgage Coupon Bonds Guaranteed. We guarantee, as an assurance, that we loan not to exceed one-third of the actual value. In over six years' business never lost a dollar; never delayed a day on interest or principal; neither we nor our customers ever took an acre of land under foreclosure. Send for particulars and references.

J. B. WATKINS & CO., LAWRENCE, KAN., or HENRY DICKINSON, Manager, 73 Cedar Street, New York

THE INQUIRER.

VOL. XXXII.—NO. 7. }
WHOLE NO., 1577. }

NEW YORK, JANUARY 18, 1877.

{ $3.00 PER ANNUM.
{ 8 CENTS A COPY.

CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL NOTES.....	117
LEADING ARTICLES:
The Electoral Question.....	118
Principal Dawson and Evolution.....	118
A Ministers' Institute, again.....	119
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE:
From Chicago.....	120
From Washington.....	121
LITERATURE:
A New Service Book.....	121
The International Review.....	123
A Winter in Egypt and Syria.....	123
Poems, by Rev. Dr. H. N. Powers.....	124
Colony Ballads.....	124
New Publications Received.....	124
ART AND SCIENCE:
Art Notes.....	124
HEARTH AND HOME:
God's Anvil.....	125
A November Dandelion.....	125
Mr. Weiss's Ideas of Women.....	125
SELECTIONS:
Suggestions for Work and Improvement.....	125
OUR BOYS AND GIRLS:
The Grandmother's Story.....	127
OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE:
The Worcester Conference.....	128
JOTTINGS.....	129
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT.....	130

HENRY W. BELLOW, H. C. BUNNER, Elizabeth Cumings, Nicholas P. Gilman, Edward P. Powell, Minot J. Savage, Charles W. Wendte and Celia P. Woolley are among the contributors to this number of THE INQUIRER.

THE cable brings news of the returns of election for the new German Parliament. The official returns show that sixty-three Conservatives have been elected to the Reichstag. This will enable the Conservatives to elect the First Vice-President, who has hitherto been chosen by the Progressive party. The members elected are classified with regard to their attitude toward the Empire as follows: supporters, 194; opposers, 133.

THE final report of the commission appointed by the last Legislature to investigate the condition of the prisons of this State was made to the Governor on Tuesday. The substance of the report found its way into the newspapers last October, just after a preliminary report had been made, and now that our State Constitution has been so amended as to give good promise of a radical reform in the administration of our prisons, the full report will be read with a somewhat abated public interest. It is none the less valuable, however, on that account, and must prove of substantial service to the new prison officials in their efforts to inaugurate the proposed reforms.

THE Senatorial election in Massachusetts is still undetermined, with the chances apparently in favor of Judge Hoar. The second joint ballot on Wednesday resulted as follows: Hoar, 95; Boutwell, 93; Abbott, 62; Rice, 17; Bullock, 4; Seelye, 4; Sandford, 1. Whole number of votes, 276; necessary for a choice, 139. The question will probably be decided to-day, when a second joint session of the Legislature will be held.

Messrs. Ferry, Windom, and Blaine of Maine, were re-elected to the United States Senate on Tuesday by large majorities. In Illinois, on an informal ballot, Governor Palmer received 89 votes and Senator Logan 97, the Independent and other votes numbering nearly 20.

THE dispatches of the Republican National Committee for which the House of Representatives has been so anxious have at length been revealed. The most interesting feature which we find is a new sort of divisible certainty discovered by Mr. Chandler, or, as we might say, a form of absolute certainty done up into lots to suit customers. On the 8th of November he telegraphed to each of five different States: "We are absolutely certain of 185 votes for Hayes if your State is safe, and Tilden is sure of the rest." He could, of course, have sent the dispatch with the same propriety to the remaining thirty-three, and then we should have had for each thirty-seven absolute certainties and only one doubt. It is hardly to be supposed that Pelton could have beaten that.

THE Conference at Constantinople has been for some time gradually approaching a point where it is in great danger of becoming ridiculous. By a happy accident it may escape this danger before the close of the current week, but whether it will or not is still uncertain. The gradual relaxation in the demands made upon the Porte has not been of a character to inspire any very wholesome dread on the part of the Sultan or his advisers, and the Grand Turk certainly appears to occupy the position of arbiter of his own destiny, rather than that of the sick man who must take whatever medicine is presented to him "for his own good." There is still talk of all the ambassadors leaving Constantinople in case their very last proposition shall not be accepted, but it is stated that the announcement was made by each representative, separately, that each may keep his skirts clear of any suggestion of complicity with what may follow.

GOLD has been rather higher all the week, ranging between 106 and 107, the latter figure being reached on Tuesday. There seems no special reason why the price should go lower at the present time, while there are many reasons why it may go higher. Silver has been quoted at 57½d. per ounce in gold. The markets generally are stated as "quiet but steady," which would be very satisfactory if quietness had not become a chronic condition of portentous significance. However, there is a general steadiness in most branches of business which it is gratifying to see. It is unfortunate that the weakest spot among our financial bodies is that occupied by the Life Insurance Companies, a class of corporations whose sole warrant for existence should rest in the fact that they are above suspicion. The most recent revelations, notably in the case of the Security—Heaven save the mark!—are sickening in the extreme. Is it too much to ask that in such cases as this, the officers who for years have forsworn themselves and systematically deceived the public and defrauded their customers, whose dearest interests were at stake, should be summarily dealt with? We venture to say that the lines must be drawn more closely or a very beneficial institution will be destroyed.

A RAPID increase in the number of Egyptian travellers may confidently be looked for about this time. According to Mr. M. D. Conway, a large roll of papyrus covered with inscriptions was discovered some twenty years ago, under the floor of an old tomb in Thebes. It was 139 feet long by 16½ inches broad, and looked something like a stair carpet. Mr. Harris, the lucky finder, bought it for a comparatively small price. His daughter, Miss Harris, felt convinced that it was a treasure, and to make sure against accidents, set herself to the immense work of tracing every sign and letter on it upon a paper of equal extent. She succeeded in making a fac simile of it. Her father died, and the lady took a house at Koumel Dyk, Alexandria. A few years ago an explosion occurred in the house, which was reduced to fragments. Of its contents the two chief treasures alone escaped unharmed, the papyrus and Miss Harris herself. The great Egyptian archaeologist, M. Brugsch Bey, examined the papyrus and told the Khedive of its great value, and the Egyptian government offered the sum of £2,000 for it. But Miss Harris would not part with it. She brought it to England, when the British Museum purchased it for a larger sum, and from that time to this Dr. Birch and his corps of Egyptologists have been deciphering it, while scribes have been engaged in copying it. It proves to be a complete record of the life and works of Rameses III, and a statement of the condition of things at Thebes three thousand years ago.

THE situation in New Orleans remains much the same as when we went to press a week ago. Packard is still in possession of the State House, and Nicholls of the police stations and court rooms. The President has illustrated his neutrality by telegraphing Gen. Augur that if any one is to be recognized, it must be Packard, which he thinks does not warrant the inference that he has put his foot into it. What his object was in sending the dispatch if he did not mean anything by it, he does not state. Doubtless he is fully aware of the difference between tweedle-dum and tweedle-dee, and wishes to convey the information to others. Packard has issued a high and mighty proclamation, to which the clerk of the Sixth District Court responds with a denunciation of Packard as "a wicked and shameless impostor," and a call upon the sheriff to guard the court from "violence or intrusion." Another statesman, writing editorially in the New Orleans Evening Democrat, advises his friends "to follow Packard into his hotel, and, if need be, into the Court House itself, and hang him from its highest window." These gentle amenities are probably soothing rather than otherwise to the perturbed spirits of the writers. An amusing incident of the situation is the appearance of the Hon. Percy Bysshe Shelley Pinchback as a candidate for United States Senator before the Nicholls Legislature. Tempora mutantur et nos mutamur in illis, and sometimes we are Democrats and sometimes we are Republicans,—sometimes we are demagogues, and then again we are statesmen.

THE ELECTORAL QUESTION.

THE electoral question drags on. We wish the disposition to co-operate were more evident. Probably no mere outsider can estimate the feelings, biases and necessities of a Congressman of the very selectest order. It seems probable that party ties will have an altogether irresistible influence with the committees. Twenty citizens, selected only with reference to sense, candor, patriotism, would soon find a way out of the difficulties, which the country would endorse and follow. But what can men trained to party measures and incapable of ordinary usefulness without considering party policy be expected to do, under present circumstances? The very selection of a nicely-balanced partisan committee proves that party was not expected to be ignored. We believe more success would have attended the conference if the noblest, strongest men in Congress had been selected without the least reference to party. It is a case where only wisdom, honor, self-forgetfulness, love of law and union and peace, can do us any good. But alas! we are to be tossed from the jealousy of the two parties in the two Houses—which first hate each other, and then the rival party in their own House—upon the partisan committees, where it seems probable every vote will be a party vote. We trust the near approach of the 14th of February will scorch these responsible men into some feeling for the country, its rights, its peace, its hopes, and that they will manage to put off some of their hard party cuticle and feel more like men and Americans, and less like Republicans and Democrats. The country has its eyes upon these committees. They have an enviable chance to commend themselves to the gratitude of the whole nation. Will they use it?

At the time of our going to press, Wednesday, the Joint Committee appointed to devise a method of counting the electoral votes has not yet reported, though expected to do so to-day. While the details of the plan expected to be submitted by this committee are as yet unknown, it is no secret that the chief feature of this plan is the recommendation of the appointment of a Board of Arbitration, to consist of members of both Houses and of judges of the Supreme Court. To this Board it is proposed to submit all questions in regard to the counting of the votes from States which have sent more than one return, the decisions of the Board to be final, unless rejected on the concurrent vote of both Houses.

The difficulties of agreement on any plan are, of course, seriously aggravated by the fact that both political parties are represented in the Joint Committee by several partisans of the first water. Fortunately, there are several unknown factors in the problem which make it impossible for either the Republicans or Democrats to "fix" matters beforehand entirely to their liking. But the result of the count will depend very considerably upon the nature of the plan accepted by Congress, and the politicians on both sides are exercising all the astuteness at their command to carry things in their own way. It seems unreasonable to expect a unanimous report from the Joint Committee, but rumor says this is by no means impossible. We shall hope for the best.

PRINCIPAL DAWSON AND EVOLUTION.

PRINCIPAL DAWSON, always the relentless tracker-out and foe of evolutionary invaders of theistic faith, pursues Prof. Huxley, in the January number of the International Review, through his late New York lectures, with a keen scent and very sharp teeth. He admires and respects Prof. Huxley's ability, honesty and courage too much to allow him to deal in any general obloquy, but he is caustic, satirical and unsparing in his showing up of the alleged defects in his argument. He charges him with stating the same hypothesis under three forms, as if they were essentially different, when they are really identical, and so setting up two men of straw, as if live difficulties, and knocking them over with the other one. His dissection of Huxley's argument is very adroit and masterly, but we should very much like to see Huxley take hold of Principal Dawson and show us how easy it is to make mince-meat of another man's carcass when no competent witnesses are near to see whether the body he operates upon is that of the supposed enemy or one furnished by the procurer and labelled with his name. We have a strong suspicion that Huxley and his whole class are greatly blinded by the same disposition which Dr. Draper has shown, in his Conflict of Science and Religion, to the claims of the intelligent believers in a spiritual source of persons and things. Religionists have undeniably for ages looked not only unfavorably, but with eyes of alarm and horror, upon all hypotheses or discoveries which threatened their venerable convictions touching the existence and providence of a Divine Creator and Superintendent of nature and man, and upon all attempts to confound the human and the brutal. And we make no doubt their resistance has been useful and necessary. For science has too often not contented itself with stating its facts, but has hastened to draw conclusions from them fatal to the most sacred and most saving instincts of man as a moral and spiritual creature. Religion has not usually been instructed enough to contend with science on her own ground, and so has hurled her anathemas at its conclusions from her throne of faith, a process justly complained of by science, but excusable enough on the part of religion, considered as acting from instincts of self-preservation. For, in the end it is a purely materialistic science that will be driven from its position, and not religion, which, surrendering its formal propositions, will never surrender its instincts, and already knows that science, in its godless aspects and materialistic conclusions, is false, even if she cannot prove it or show how.

On the other hand, it is equally plain that defenders of a spiritual principle at the heart of the universe and a spiritual origin for man, are apt, like Prof. Dawson, to confound the outworks with the citadel, and often think it necessary to defend positions which it is certain will ultimately have to be surrendered. There is a certain prejudice and rancor in Principal Dawson's manner of dealing with evolution which savors of the odium theologium, and which belongs to most religious men in their assaults upon evolution. The determined identification of religion with the inspiration of the Mosaic books is among the weak and foolish prejudices of this class. The staking the Christian or theistic faith of the world upon the maintenance of foundations so insecure is doubtless very pleasing to the scientists, who find it easy to riddle and shake this cob-house, and much prefer it for a ground of attack than the foundation laid in the very nature of man. That "evolution" is one of the methods of the Eternal and Shaping Spirit is, despite Prof. Dawson's prophecies to the contrary, very certain to be established. But that it is the only or the chief method, or a method which carries its cause in itself, is less and less credible every day. It really answers no question that is vital and deepest in man's soul, and the simplest faith of a Christian peasant has a more rational aspect and a finer essence than the best statement which the agnostics and the anti-theists have yet been able to give to the question, "Who made me, and for what end?"

THE PROPOSED MINISTERS' INSTITUTE, AGAIN.

THE friends of the proposed Ministers' Institute will doubtless feel greatly obliged to the Christian Register for its hearty endorsement of the plan. The ardent and whole-souled way in which the project is received by the Register proves how wholly the advocates of the scheme can depend on the sympathy and furtherance of the venerable organ of New England Unitarianism. The solicitude shown that the projectors of the Institute may correct all misjudgments in advance and have the full benefit of the wisest counsel is one every friend of the movement must gratefully appreciate. The Register asks some leading questions, which, being somewhat familiar with the views of the originators of the Institute, we will try to answer.

First. It wishes to know for its clients, the younger ministers, to what extent the proposed instruction is to be superior to that which they have recently received, upon the same subjects, from Professors Hedge, Clarke, Stearns, Everett, Abbot, Young, Livermore, Brigham and Cary? As most of these Professors are among the learned persons invited to address the Institute, we do not see how any instruction from them is likely to be superior to that which they are in the habit of giving in their professional chairs. We suspect that the devisers of the scheme never thought of suggesting any incompetency in the instructors or teachings of the two theological schools at Cambridge and Meadville, or they would have put the work they desire to see done into other hands. They proceeded, we conclude, upon the notion that young men, and men not young, after a few years of practical experience in the ministry, usually find themselves in a condition to appreciate instruction, theological and pastoral, much better than in the days of special preparation. They probably felt, too, that the professors might, for such men, condense and concentrate the results of their own studies and make general statements of great value, which it would be less useful and wise to give to beginners. We are satisfied that unlearning what had been previously taught in the theological schools was no part of the plan, although we do not doubt that a great readiness to retract any errors of opinion would be the desirable and useful spirit both of teachers and taught.

In regard to the second question, "whether the most valuable papers prepared for the Institute will or will not be afterward accessible in the Unitarian periodicals," we should reply, judging by past experience, that they probably will be. But then, they would not exist at all to be thus published, if they were not called forth by an occasion of oral delivery. This, however, is not the real answer. Lectures read at home and unaccompanied by the authors' personality, voice and earnestness, produce far less decisive influence than oral discourses. And discourses heard in company by sympathetic and congenial minds carry with them an illuminating and contagious influence which is none the less powerful because it cannot be accurately defined. This is the main reason why sermons preached and sermons read at home are such different and unequal forces. It is the real foundation of public worship that men feel and understand in each other's presence and in God's presence together what they seldom feel or understand in their privacy. Usually the very persons who read public discourses most eagerly and interestedly are those who first heard them; and oftentimes, alas! they find they are like the man who brought home the shell that delighted him so much, but could not bring home the sea, the shore and the sky that gave it its special charm.

Thirdly. "Why the Institute, if needed and profitable, is to meet so seldom?" Mainly, because it has to content itself, in view of time and cost, with doing a little, instead of doing all the good it could desire. The National Conference is, in part, becoming a Ministers' Institute. It meets only once in two years. The new plan is to double these opportunities for ministers, and to make what is only one object with the Conference, the special object of the Institute—instruction for the ministers.

The Register "cannot understand why some laymen may be invited to be speakers, yet all laymen, however studious and interested, are to be forbidden to listen." There are some subjects very important to ministers at this time of day which experts in science or medicine or law or art or political economy are better fitted to lecture upon than any theologian. It was considered desirable to open room for calling in such help when it became desirable to get the best available information upon such topics. There is no doubt, considering the proportion of laymen to ministers, that the general weight of intelligence and worth is with the laity and not with the clergy, especially in this country, and unquestionably hundreds of men and women might and would profit by the lectures of the Ministers' Institute. But practical schemes of usefulness have to be limited to the means at hand and to the object proposed. At present this is a Ministers' Institute and a Unitarian ministers' Institute, and is confined to this class exclusively, as the meetings of any other association for definite objects are confined, for reasons of expediency, to add the force of a strong professional fellowship and common interest, to secure a larger frankness and a fuller and more affectionate confidence and to exclude differences that would embarrass and weaken the particular ends sought.

As it is commonly necessary to have general rules for the governance of all assemblies, the men who knew what they were seeking adopted, after very serious deliberation, such rules as they thought most favorable to their object,

It is difficult to accomplish very large objects, such as the bringing together all the wise men and women in our American Christendom to debate great theological or ecclesiastical questions. The Ministers' Institute is a modest and humble effort to accomplish a little good in the Unitarian ministry, by disinterested labor and co-operation on the part of as many as incline to come together, on a plan which is not yet fully before them. As none of the projectors have or can have any objects that are selfish or ambitious—as they represent all schools, ages and tendencies in the Unitarian body—it is to be hoped that if any cold water is to be thrown upon the plan, it will all be as clean as possible. Perhaps the scheme is weak, untimely, superfluous, wounding to somebody's feelings. If so, it is not at all indispensable it should go forward. We do not believe its undertakers very much covet the labor it may involve. Even should it fail, as many supposed the National Conference undertaking would fail, and some even now think it has failed, we do not believe it would be mortifying or distressing to its hopeful proposers. If only fifty or even twenty earnest young ministers came once together, the time would not be wholly lost, and if they never came together again, there would be no inconsolable grief. Let the Ministers' Institute, then, try to succeed, and be encouraged to think it may. Seeing that its failure will do no harm to any existing interest and break no hearts, while its success might do some important service, we incline to think this view will prevail among the ministers, and then the good wishes and high hopes of the Register will all be verified.

We have received a copy of letters of Rev. S. K. Lothrop, D.D., to the proprietors of the Brattle Square church in Boston, with their action thereupon. It is rare to find evidences of more disinterested and Christian conduct than Dr. Lothrop's, as it is presented in his correspondence with the society. He is frank, patient and forgiving. The action of the society was not always what so old and faithful a minister, of over forty years' service, might have expected, but their embarrassments were overwhelming and ended in a necessity of closing the church and offering it for sale. We shall earnestly hope that the ancient society will not be dissolved. It is evident that Dr. Lothrop's course produced a very kind and tender feeling before the correspondence closed, and that the people parted from their minister with genuine regret. There is not a word in Dr. Lothrop's correspondence which he could wish to recall, or which any friend of his can read without sympathy and pride.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM CHICAGO.

THE discussion over the "success" of Moody is without consideration that, so far as numerical results are concerned, the same work is repeated by Mormons, Indian "White Clouds" and Hindoo Fakirs. The simple question is, can anything be relied upon to develop any legitimate power of man except education? Is there a cross-road to scholarship or to sainthood? We know very well that figures will not lie in the long run; but they may be made to tell some strange stories before the problem is worked out. So when Unitarians groan over the wonderful success of Mr. Moody, let them remember to wait till the problem is worked out. For one, two, or possibly six months a religious excitement may grow in fervor and accumulate strength; but no power of flaming placards, illuminated street cars, vast tabernacles, and all the minutiae of preparation and organization can keep up the appearance of success when the novelty is gone. Then comes the time for testing the work. If Mr. Moody and his co-laborers will make out a list of one thousand converts in Chicago by name, and will tell in what church they are finally reaped, I will volunteer to furnish a table of those men one year from date, and we will learn how many recede and how many proceed. A list has been published of so many atheists, so many infidels, etc., who have been brought to Jesus. Let us see if they will stay there. I say this in no spirit of carping or disrespect for honest endeavors. I have the figures for several revival movements, and would like more. Of one great uprising in Central New York, six held to the churches at the end of two years out of nearly two hundred. The testimony of St. Louis is emphatic that the work of Mr. Hammond three years ago ended in a collapse. One of Mr. Moody's workers of four or five years ago, wearing one of his badges, called on me last summer for help in establishing a liberal Sunday School in the, as he called it, "morally burned district." "I am an atheist" he said, "but if you can help to start a movement for fairly teaching the principles of a good life I will contribute money and means. I don't believe in anything concerning another life. I'll hear no more about it. But our boys and girls need to be educated in the ways of righteousness." The result has been the Fifth Unitarian Sunday School. A night school is also sustained, in which not only the elementary studies are pursued, but vocal music and drawing. There are, besides, two debating and social clubs formed. The machinery has run on quietly for eight months. If we can keep the innumerable host of unemployed ministers from trying to start a church there with a salary, the work will steadily grow.

Rabbi Kohler, of the Sinai Synagogue, is doing some strong work. He has lately preached a radical sermon on "The Pentateuch" which commands the attention of scholars.

Learned, of St. Louis, has recently read an essay before the Woman's Club discussing "The Experience of the Nation on Vital Topics," in which he admirably says: "If we could foresee at once all the difficulties that any course casts us into we should shrink from the undertaking or even deem it unwise."

Snyder's "Church of the Messiah" has a department for correspondents in which he answers the question, "Can any who do not know Jesus be saved by living according to the light of Nature?" His answer shows lucidly how "Socrates and all other living heathen have but one destination." It won't do to get in the way of Snyder's pen.

There is talk here of calling Dr. Kittredge, of the Third Presbyterian, to Plymouth Congregational. A much better thing has been done by the Fourth Presbyterian, formerly Dr. Swing's, in calling J. C. French, the accomplished Brooklyn preacher. A truer man and abler could not be selected. The Reformed Episcopalists would exceedingly like to get Dr. Thomas from the Methodists, one of the ablest men in the denomination hereabouts. He was driven out of Chicago by the presiding elder on account of his liberal views. O! for a revolution to recall the brilliant and witty Dr. Powers, formerly of St. John's Episcopal, now of Bridgeport, Conn. He was also "too broad."

It is a pity not to pick a few gems from some of the great "popular" sermons of the day; so I give you a handful from a Christmas discourse that held its vast audience entranced. "Religion is just as graceful in a charade as in a hymn-book." "You will see a great change when the last shackle of iniquity snaps under the arm of the Lord Almighty. The Himalayas will become Mount Zion, and the Pyrenees Moriah, and oceans the walking-places of him who trod the wave-cliffs of stormiest Tiberias; and the song of salvation shall rise heavenward, until the great sky shall become the sounding-board that strikes back the shout of redemption to the earth, until it rebounds again to the throne of the Infinite, and all heaven, rising on their thrones, beat time with their sceptres." "Wandering through the snake-infested swamps of Africa, Christ's heel will bruise the serpent's head." When religion and poetry so charmingly combine, the result should not be lost even to men of radical proclivities.

POWELL.

FROM WASHINGTON.

"WHAT do you think now?" said Jerry Black to Mr. Seward after the Union cause had met with its most serious disasters during the war, and despair was casting its deepest shadows. "Why," said Mr. Seward, "I think, as I have always thought, that the Union will be saved." "Well," said the ex-Attorney-General, "you are the most sanguine man I ever saw." "Not unreasonably so," said Mr. Seward. "What would you say if you were to see a man with pains in his back, fever in his pulse and his skin covered with eruptions?" "I should say he had the small-pox and would die," said Mr. Black. "I should not," said Mr. Seward; "I should say he would live, for in such cases it is the rule to live and the exception to die."

Those who, like Mr. Seward, have an unwavering faith in the destiny of the republic believe it will safely emerge from its present danger. Although no one is sagacious enough to point out the way of salvation, a strong reliance is felt in the good common sense of the people, combined with their interest, and in what is called their "sober second thought." Except for the meetings of the 8th of January, public sentiment is apparently more unanimous and calm than it was before Congress assembled. The fever is not greater, but less.

A prominent topic of interest just now among statesmen is the projected interoceanic canal, opening a water communication between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, via the Isthmus of Darien or Panama. British statesmanship secured the control of the canal through the isthmus of Suez, and it is well worthy of American ambition to obtain like advantages in the Western hemisphere. If in the quarrel about the Presidency we allow so great a prize to escape our grasp, we shall forfeit our character for political and commercial sagacity. The recent great survey of route demonstrates the feasibility of the enterprise.

Another project is the establishment in Washington of a grand national museum, to which may be transferred the many interesting objects exhibited by the United States Government at Philadelphia, and also the numerous gifts which have been tendered by other governments to our own. It is proposed to devote the million and a half of dollars contributed by Congress to the Centennial Exhibition to the creation of a permanent exhibition at the capital of the nation. This, with a grand effort on the part of all the people of the United States in its success, will give this country an institution rivalling the British Museum.

JANUARY 14, 1877.

LITERATURE.

A NEW SERVICE BOOK.

THE American Unitarian Association in 1868 published, in connection with the Hymn and Tune Book, "Services for Congregational Worship." The compiler said in the preface: "The present work is an attempt to supply a want very generally expressed, both by clergy and by laity, which has already led to the preparation of several manuals, more or less extended; but which does not yet seem to find what satisfies it." We have had no personal experience in using this work from Sunday to Sunday, but expressions of disappointment from members who have used it, lead us to believe that the want, which is emphasized both by the compiler and ourselves, still does not "find what satisfies it." A recent careful examination of the whole book satisfies us that the revision now proposed by the Association is very much needed. In fact, using our plain privilege of offering advice to the officers of the Association, which is the servant of the denomination only, we should counsel not a revision of this book, but the issue of a new work upon the basis, perhaps, of this one. The principal merit of the "Services for Congregational Worship" is its adaptation, in many places very tender and uplifting, of Bible language and the words of ancient collects and litanies. Every prayer-book should hold on firmly to the past; it should retain many of those choicest expressions of pious feeling to which ancient men were moved by the Holy Spirit, and the antiquity of which but redoubles their native power. In this respect, and it is a matter of first consequence, this book stands almost, if not entirely, free from criticism. But in many other respects, on points of greater or lesser consequence, it seems to us very ill-adapted to our needs.

To proceed from small matters to greater:—The book is, to our thinking, too long in and of itself. When bound, as is often the case, with the Hymn and Tune Book, it makes a cumbersome volume. But, whether used separately (and many would prefer this way,) or between the same covers with the Hymn Book, it might be shortened one-third, at least, to great advantage. Other things being equal, the briefer the work the better. If mere gain of space were desired, the book could be abbreviated much without change of its plans. The chants, which are in the Hymn Book, and for which hymns would often be used, could be omitted; and the repetition of the Order is not essential in every service. But some portions of the Psalter should, for various reasons, be left out; and our objections to the Order of Service go further than to its simple repetition. Most of our congregations are accustomed to a very simple order of service, and unaccustomed to any prescription of that order except by usage. The simpler the order followed, then, in the service-book, and the less the prominence given to it, the better. The "Services," although not going to an extreme, elaborates the order more than many would like, more especially in the evening prayer. But whether we speak from prejudice or from good taste, we should decidedly object to the prominence and importance given to the Order in each service with its minute directions for position. The directions are generally unobjectionable in themselves, but their proper place is, as in Rev. Dr. Clarke's "Book of Worship," once for all at the beginning. It reminds one too much of machinery to be told in each service that here you are to stand and there you are to sit, that now you are to sing and now you are to read and now again to pause for silent prayer, and that, finally, you are "recommended to reverently pause a short time, after the benediction," before leaving your place. Surely it is a more excellent way to let usage settle many of these small matters. Let the compiler make his suggestions in his introduction, and withhold them from obtrusively staring in the face of the worshipper in his every mood.

The Lord's Prayer is inserted with each service. To the custom of so using it, we think it may well be said that Jesus seems never to have so intended it, and that the frequent reiteration tends toward weakening its effect, and toward "the vain repetitions" of the heathen.

"The Psalter follows, in the main, the reading of the later edition of the Chapel Liturgy." We have not the Chapel Liturgy at hand, so that the authority it follows in its reading is not known to us. But the authority can hardly be higher than that of Noyes or of Samuel Sharpe, whose translations are by us. From these, as well as from the Common Version, this Psalter varies much. Often it departs from them to the loss of correctness, more often with a greater loss of poetical spirit and expression. Compare with the accepted version, or with Noyes' translation, these renderings of familiar passages: "I will lay me down in peace and take my rest," "My voice shalt thou hear betimes, early in the morning will I direct my prayer unto thee," "O Lord, our Governor, how excellent is Thy name," "To behold the fair beauty of the Lord," "The Lord is the wholesome defence of His anointed," "With Thy favorable kindness wilt Thou defend him," "My soul thirsteth for Thee in a barren and dry land;" or the entire Psalms Nos. 15, 23, 24. The common version is nearly always more poetical, while Dr. Noyes' is generally more accurate and poetical also than this Psalter, the adoption of which seems a case of "advancing backwards."

That revision which the Book of Psalms, of course, demands before it can be profitably read by modern Christian people in church, has not here been carried far enough. Some of David's milder imprecations upon his enemies, (that they are the enemies of the Lord also goes without saying) have been retained, to jar upon the minds of a more civilized age. The feeling with which the Hebrew regarded all foreign nations and gods should not be revived in our memory by passages the narrowness of which we at once perceive. Our later Christian doctrine of Providence does not say, 'Upon the ungodly he shall rain snares, fire and brimstone, storm and tempest;' nor does our doctrine of Immortality say: "The dead praise not the Lord, neither they who go down into silence." Shall we continue to read that "The wrath of God endureth but the twinkling of an eye," or to ask, "Wilt Thou continue Thy wrath from generation to generation?" or, "What profit is there in my blood when I go down to the pit?" Is it in accordance with a cheerful Christianity to repeat that, "The days of man are but as grass," "Man is like a thing of naught," "Man walketh in a vain show," "Verily every man living is altogether vanity?" To repeat in cold blood David's words of excitement, "my sins are more in number than the hairs of my head" cannot be a performance whose sincerity is obvious. How much the Psalms gain in power by occasionally translating the name Jehovah by "The Eternal" readers of Matthew Arnold will not need to be told, while many must sometimes weary of the paraphrase, "Lord." We do not perceive what important end is gained by arranging the Psalms under the days of the month. An arrangement, as in the "Book of Worship," by subject matter, would be far more convenient and profitable. If the ascription, "Now unto the King," ought to be repeated at the end of each reading, which we much doubt, a perhaps hypercritical taste would suggest that "etc," at the end of the last two lines has not a good look.

When we come to examine the prayers inserted in the services, we find much to surprise. We are afraid that devotion can hardly prevent the suggestion of political thoughts by the petitions for the President of the United States. Certainly many good citizens would not refrain from smiling if they should read, "From all sedition, privy conspiracy and rebellion, deliver us." A broader smile might be excused upon the face of a Unitarian responding, "O Lord! deliver us," to the clergyman's "From all false doctrine, heresy and schism." Imagination might please herself by picturing a congregation of scientific farmers, doctors and signal-service officers joining in the litany, "From lightning and tempest, plague, pestilence and famine, O Lord! deliver us." But leaving this levity, what does this mean for us, "In the hour of death and in the day of judgment deliver us," "Remember not, Lord, our offences neither take Thou vengeance of our sins," "Deal not with us after our sins, neither reward us after our iniquities," "Rescue us from the punishment which for our sins we deserve." What has courageous piety to-day to do with such utterances? David struck a higher note: "let the righteous smite me, it shall be a kindness!" If the wounds of a friend are faithful, how much more those inflicted by a Divine Love which is not Love if it is not justice! Not in satire, but in all seriousness, we would suggest that a very important petition has been omitted from the litany quoted above: "From all insincerity, from every manner and degree of hypocrisy, from saying what we do not mean, from repeating what we do not believe, from formality and cant, O Lord, deliver us!"

The phrases in the prayers which refer to Christ are especially to be considered in revision. Some passages in the "Services," we can hardly suppose any considerable number of Unitarians would be strenuous to retain. Such are, "We bless Thee above all for Thine inestimable love in the redemption of the world by our Lord Jesus Christ," "Almighty Father, who hast given Thine only Son to die for our sins, and to rise again for our justification," "We are followers of Christ whom Thou hast made to be to us wisdom and righteousness, sanctification and redemption," "Our only mediator and advocate," "Help Thy servants whom Thou hast redeemed through his most precious blood." But if we are to have a Service Book which shall commend itself to many young minds now, and to more hereafter, who will repeat only what they honestly feel as truth in thought and in expression, we must go further, and leave out such phrases as these: "O God, who by Thy Son hast opened the way of life to all who hear and believe," "Through Thy blessed Son have mercy upon us," "When Thou gavest him to deliver man, it pleased Thee that he should be born of a virgin;" and the four Christmas collects on the eighty-fifth page. Many of our body in wide and high repute could not conscientiously repeat the passages referring to the resurrection of Jesus as a physical event, without mental reservation which would be unbecoming anywhere, and especially in a house of the God of Truth. Others, not few in number, having a love for the person and the word of our great Elder Brother, which yields to none in strength of feeling, like not to be saying of or to Him, "Lord, Lord." "Our Lord Jesus Christ" occurs very often in these prayers. Nearly every petition is offered "in His name;" our morality, even, is to be through him. It is not a trustworthy interpretation of the word of Jesus with pure literality so to obscure his meaning, nor a sign of spirituality to make his name a formula, when he wished his disciples to pray "in his spirit." Surely a revolt only against the letter which killeth and obedience to the spirit which makes alive a true honor for the life of God in the soul of man led a friend of mine once to end his Divinity Chapel prayer, "These things, Our Father and Our God, we ask in our own name." Thus do many of us feel about these matters. It is a slight thing to ask that those who have no difficulty about the words and phrases should omit them from the printed page. The omission does not diminish their faith, and it does make it easier for us to join in worship with them, without changing the meaning of what we read.

This counsel may seem too purely negative. We know it is easy to advise what to omit. But we stop here because no external word can effect in the revision that positive tone of love for Christ which the internal spirit of the compiler himself alone can cause. That spirit, if sensitive to the many desires of our body of believers, will speak of Jesus in varied ways, and, dropping some few hindering epithets and phrases, will not note their absence in the large force of its attachment to the Man of Nazareth.

We trust that of Jesus the reviser of our Service Book will so speak in a way that shall express our body's thought and feeling as they actually are to-day. We trust that in other respects the prayers will be animated by a noble and comprehensive piety. Let us not say too often, "We beseech Thee to hear us;" let us not give a peculiar turn to the Beatitudes by asking, "Give to us meekness that we may inherit the earth. Grant unto us to be merciful that we may obtain mercy;" let us not, in the marriage service, adduce the doubtful sanction of Paul; let us not dare to pray over a sick person, "We pray that Thou wouldst be pleased to remove his disorder and restore him to health;" let us not retain Apocalyptic visions of heaven which we have outgrown. But let us deal with our services, from invocation to benediction, as with our hymns, saying nothing our intellect does not approve and our heart feel. Let us have a Service Book which, flavored with antiquity, shall also show itself a fresh production of our own religious time. It will come to light in an age when knowledge is increased and the world is vaster than before. Let it thank God for all knowledge of nature and of man with a high gratitude; let it petition for quickening of mind and for intellectual virtue, and ask that faith keep even pace with inquiry, that man may feel and act in accord with his latest light, that, while earthly science comes, heavenly wisdom shall not linger.

N. P. G.

REVIEWS.

The International Review

For January and February contains an interesting article from Prof. Curtius on "Olympia in the Berlin Museum." A very successful effort to set up in their original position the statues lately discovered and disinterred in Olympia has gone forward in Berlin with very instructive success. The condition and splendor of Greek art in the age preceding Phidias is here illustrated with great beauty and high educative prospects. The statue of Victory is pronounced of ravishing beauty and lightness, its pose and draperies being full of the suggestion of motion. The simplicity of the pedestal is much admired, and attention is drawn to the subtraction from the effect of the figure by the elaborate and ornate pedestals which it is the modern fashion to place under statues. The attention which is now so rewardingly given to the recovery of long-buried treasures of art, and which has been so conspicuous in Dr. Schliemann's explorations at Troy, promises a general revival of the study of classic taste and a fresh and more intelligent appreciation of Greek genius and skill. Mr. Bryant's fine sonnet on "The Dangers of Manhood" separates Prof. Curtius' article from its pendant, an article on "The Paris Salon of 1876," in which pictures and sculptures are considered with great critical decisiveness by M. Charles Gindriez, apropos of the chief exposition in France, the annual salon, in this case, of 1876. This article is an excellent example of the care, knowledge and conscientiousness of art criticism in France, and makes us feel our American deficiencies in critical acumen and knowledge of the subject.

M. Gindriez discusses the question whether art is possible under popular governments, seeing that its great periods have always been those of imperial power, and usually those of the decadence of political freedom and even of moral elevation. He alleges that the genius of French artists has not gone out with the extinction of monarchy and imperialism in France, and that evidence exists to show that there is even a quickening of taste, power and enterprise under the new conditions of republicanism. It seems to us quite absurd to suppose that art, which is an eternal necessity of human nature, should have any dependence upon forms of government, which are accidental and perishable. It is not our form of government which depresses art in America, but the rawness and crudity of our general culture and the preoccupation of the higher intelligence of the people with more pressing interests. We shall not have any high or pure art until more of the mind and aspiration of the country are released from the dominion of primary pursuits. M. Gindriez praises highly some statues of M. Paul Dubois, whose character is as interesting as his works, and who has delighted Paris by two recent statues, one of "Charity," another of "Military Courage," parts of a monument to Gen. Lamoriciere. They are acknowledged to be among the chief triumphs of modern sculpture. The criticism on the several chief exhibitors of pictures is very instructive, and proves that the French are steadily overcoming their disposition to extremes and uniting the merits of form and color, of strict study of nature, with that idealism without which photography is better than pictorial art.

Mr. R. E. Bowker's careful criticism (6th article) on Daniel Deronda should be read in connection with Mr. E. P. Whipple's, in the last North American. It is very able and interesting, and shows a fine insight. It has little of the kindling enthusiasm of Whipple's fine abandon to his admiration, stated, though it be, in terms of careful discrimination. Mr. Bowker, however, pronounces George Eliot "easily first among living writers," which might be considered a pretty wholesale eulogy. He writes of her genius with reverence, but he concludes that she is unreligious, not irreligious; that she has two plots, neither of which is subsidiary to the other; that it is not certain that this is her best work, and not sure that it is not a decline from her former standard; that posterity alone can judge. All this is in inverted form such a tribute to George Eliot that we think even Mr. Whipple will be satisfied. We do not ourselves feel this pious necessity of putting our shoes off our feet in judging George Eliot, and we are by no means certain that she is the first living writer. She is certainly the most unusual of all recent women in her union of masculine vigor with feminine delicacy, of scientific and philosophic attainments with literary art and æsthetic taste, of dramatic with lyrical and narrative and critical powers. But she has the limitations of a nature essentially skeptical and unable to rest. She is the product and representative of the new age which has broken with popular faith, and is trying to create a new ethics and a new reason and rule for human life, apart from all reference to a living God or a personal immortality. If she uses the Christian or theistic vocabulary at all, it is only as an artist and without intending to confess any belief in its implications. Proudly able to face all uncertainties herself, and above the folly of wishing to weaken the positive faith in other minds, with nothing destructive in her noble soul, she simply detaches herself from the prejudices of believing spirits, and analyzes and uses the faiths of others as if a mere visitor from another order of intelligences, and not sharing the nature or experiences of her characters. The woman disappears in the artist, the truly human in the abstract intelligence of something neither male nor female, neither good nor bad, neither right nor wrong. This absolute indifference makes her an extraordinary reflector of all forms of character, so that villains and weaklings and saints and heroes get equal justice from the clear mirror of her mind, that shows them just as they are, without preference or rejection. This is certainly high dramatic art. But whether the novelist is to sacrifice the advantages of his mixed profession of dramatic exhibitor and moral teacher, of actor and chorus, of storyteller and confidential friend of his reader, is certainly questionable. We have always a fear that George Eliot does not restrain any disposition to give us her own feelings about her characters; that she finds a purely artistic air the one most easy for her to breathe, and that if she did speak out it would be all the worse for us. We cannot believe that this is wholesome, human and lasting. It flatters a present taste and meets a present mood of thought and feeling. It is vastly able and brilliant and interesting. But it is essentially sad, discouraging and hardening. George Eliot is, as a novelist, what Lewes is as a philosopher or Huxley and Tyndall as physicists. Her writings are the artistic side of the evolution theory. They are not unchristian or irreligious, but the Christianity and religion in them are carefully dæssicated of human moisture, and the writer herself is the only Deus-ex-machina that we think of. There is no danger of overrating this woman's genius or of the power and beauty of her works, but the aroma they exhale is for us not celestial. We read many feeble writers with more hearty sympathy and more confidence that their influence is beneficent. Indeed, bold as the prophecy may be, we doubt if her books will not lose charm and reputation with the disappearance of the philosophical and scientific speculations with which they are so closely allied.

We have no space to name the other articles in this excellent number of the International. H. W. B.

A WINTER IN EGYPT AND SYRIA. By Henry C. Pottel, D.D. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.

A very pleasant book, especially to those who have travelled in Egypt and Syria. The fascination of Eastern life, with its restful, brooding quality, may not appeal to the reason of the nineteenth century in the West, but it certainly has a strong effect upon the feeling and imagination of all who will put themselves under its potent influence. Even Cairo, with its busy mart and kaleidoscopic costumes, has a dreamy, basking air about it entirely foreign to any equally busy city that we are familiar with. Mr. Potter has described this charm of Cairo and the Nile voyage, as well as the delightful quality of the climate and the peculiar customs and worship of the Mohammedans. One chapter is devoted to Coptic customs, with an account of a wedding among these Egyptian Christians. Another interesting chapter describes the condition and progress of education in Egypt. A daughter of Archbishop Whately has devoted her life to teaching Arab children; the progress is very slow, but Mr. Potter says that her school contains two hundred girls, all of them bright and intelligent and eager to learn. We remember being much interested in this school when we visited Cairo, some years ago. There are American schools also, but none as good and thorough as Miss Whately's. It is a difficult task to combat the Eastern fatalism in the brains of these children, but once set the springs of thought and hope in motion, and we may look for something earnest and patriotic in their manhood and womanhood.

After describing his journey through Syria, Mr. Potter debates, in the last chapter, the question, "Is it worth while to visit the Holy Land?" He says emphatically, Yes. Even though the travelling is very fatiguing, "it is worth while to visit the Holy Land, simply because in no other way can one derive impressions so vivid, so enduring and so enduringly helpful." It makes the Bible another book; its geography becomes, so to speak, disentangled and distinct. Its scenery is an enduring memory and a perpetual and most helpful commentary." For ourselves, we can never forget the wild beauty of Jerusalem, the Dead Sea, Nazareth, and the Sea of Galilee, and these places are certainly much more real than if we had only read of them and never seen them. Mr. Potter's book would be an exceedingly pleasant companion on such a journey, as it gives in compact form much of what Murray describes at exhausting length.

POEMS, Early and Late. By Horatio N. Powers. Author of "Through the Year." Chicago: Jansen, McClurg & Co.

The many friends of that genial broad-churchman, Rev. Dr. Powers, late rector of St. John's Church, Chicago, have long desired to possess in some permanent form the graceful poems with which he has enriched their church and home festivals, and uttered in melodious verse the sentiment of so many notable occasions in the literary and social life of the Lakeside City. This little volume has been in part prepared to meet this wish, although containing much other matter of poetic and personal interest. The three-score poems are introduced by a tender and touching dedication to his wife, whose pathos at once wins the reader and makes him feel as if he were taken into a sacred confidence. Our poet sings of "Home," of "Nature and Life," of "Faith," and of "Friendship." Among the latter poems are two birth-day tributes to his friend, Wm. Cullen Bryant, and a charming sonnet to Robert Collyer, beginning:

"I miss thy face, dear friend, thy voice, thy hand," which first appeared in the columns of the LIBERAL CHRISTIAN. The home poems have great tenderness of feeling and delicacy of moral insight. Their heart tones reveal one who has trod the depths as well as the heights of life, and tasted of heart-sickness and sorrow, but whose manful and devout spirit has won the victory through trust in God, and now distills its tears into sympathy for all who suffer and live for all who have need. The poems of Nature are full of warmth and color, betraying the ardent disciple of Isaac Walton, the climber of Rocky Mountain fastnesses, the admirer of the grand and beautiful in natural scenery. In fine, this is not poetry that will be called remarkable, but a melodious, graceful, impassioned muse, that sometimes falls to a pathetic cadence, and whose sincerity and robust faith commend it to the most casual reader. It is especially welcome to those who have the privilege of an acquaintance with the cultivated and warm-hearted author. Certainly no one who recalls his admirable services to the twin causes of culture and catholicity in Chicago, as the coadjutor of David Swing and Dr. Thomas, but will find especial pleasure in the perusal of this latest contribution to the poetic literature of the West.

C. W. W.

COLONY BALLADS. By George L. Raymond. New York: Hurd & Houghton.

"Colony Ballads" ought to establish the reputation of Mr. George L. Raymond as one of the most brilliant exponents of the Tupperian system in poetry.

We cannot class him with the "fleshy school," for he lacks the sensuous vehemence of Swinburne and his imitators. He does not remind us of Browning, for he makes a point of being intelligible. He has the placidity of Longfellow, but not the sympathetic force. Nothing about him particularly reminds us of Tennyson. Nor can we regard him as a survival of the Queen Anne era, although in profundity and unquestionable correctness of sentiment he does, undoubtedly, suggest Pope. On the whole, we think we must credit Mr. Martin F. Tupper with the influence which directed the earliest steps of Mr. Raymond's muse.

Beyond a doubt she does Mr. Tupper credit. Indeed, we are inclined to think that Mr. Raymond has succeeded even better than his master in attaining the end for which that gentleman's verse has always striven—that of utter innocuousness. There is nothing in "Colony Ballads," we can assure our readers, which could harm the smallest infant.

And if any wearied soul wishes to withdraw itself from the fevered and passionate current of modern poetry and rest by the cool and pellucid spring whence the author of "Proverbial Philosophy" drew his mild inspiration, let him study the "Ballads," of which, for his further enlightenment, we append a couple of characteristic verses:

[1765.]

"If, brought to form one body,
The colonies now ally;
What comes to fall their freedom all
Will prove, so Franklin thought, too small.
'We join,' he wrote, 'or die.'"

[ALLEN AT TICONDEROGA.]

"Meantime, 'the captain,' Allen cried;
And scarce the word had said,
Ere on a door was pounding loud
To rouse his foe from bed.

"It opened partly, where behold!
In robes as white as fleece,
The chief, beside his blushing bride,
A picture stood of peace."

BRIEF NOTICES.

DURING the last few years a number of translations of the Norse Sagas have appeared in England and America. Taking the remarkable translation of Prof. Anderson, of Wisconsin University, of two of the finest of these Sagas as a text, Prof. H. J. Boyesen, of Cornell, has prepared for the March number of the International Review a somewhat elaborate paper on the Saga Civilization; the literary and social ideals of that age as illustrated by the Sagas. Prof. Fiske, of Cornell, and Prof. Boyesen have between them, privately, the only complete library of this literature in the United States.

NEW PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

BOOKS.

- From Harper & Brothers, New York.
THE DUCHESSES OF ROSEMARY LANE. By B. L. Farjeon. 75 cents.
From Scribner, Armstrong & Co., New York.
LANGE'S CRITICAL, DOCTRINAL AND HOMILETICAL COMMENTARY ON THE SCRIPTURES. Vol. VII. $5.00.
From G. P. Putnam's Sons.
THE PLAINS OF THE GREAT WEST, and Their Inhabitants. By Richard Irving Dodge. U.S.A. Illustrated. $4.00.
From Sloce, Woolman & Co., 119 and 121 William Street, New York.
MARK TWAIN'S ADHESIVE SCRAP BOOK.
From Anson D. F. Randolph & Co.
THE STAR AND THE CLOUDS. By the Hon. Mrs. Charles Hobart, author of "The Changed Cross." 75 cents.

MAGAZINES.

- THE NATIONAL QUARTERLY REVIEW. December, 1876.
HARPER'S MAGAZINE.
THE CATHOLIC WORLD.
WIDE AWAKE.

ART AND SCIENCE.

ART NOTES.

EVERY art can elevate itself above a mere handicraft only by being devoted to the expression of lofty thought.—MENDELSSOHN.

A PECULIARITY of Japanese pictorial art is the total absence of any indication of a feeling for the beautiful, either in choice of subject, or in treatment.

AT Schauss' may be seen two excellent panels by Miss Greator—one a shock of golden corn, the other a bunch of Scotch thistles. Much of this panel-work exhibited now-a-days is trivial; but in these pieces there is earnest work for the love of it.

AT Knoedler's there is a landscape by Robbins which shows great improvement upon the work heretofore exhibited by this artist, who belongs to the school of literalism which takes no liberties with nature. The subject is, "L'Aiguille du Midi, Chamounix."

MR. GEORGE H. MOORE, Superintendent of the Lenox Library, gives notice that upon special application by postal card he will issue tickets of admission to the exhibition of paintings and sculpture, which will be open to the holders of such tickets on Mondays and Thursdays until further notice, between the hours of 11 A.M. and 4 P.M. Among the artists represented in the collection are, Andrea del Sarto, Constable, Copley, Delaroche, Gainsborough, Leslie, Reynolds, Ruysdael, Vanderlyn, Vernet and many other famous names. Mr. Moore should be addressed at the Library, Fifth avenue Seventieth and Seventy-first streets.

THE means by which the artist must work are not to be compared with those which are at the command of nature, and hence the attempt at a slavish imitation of nature can never meet with success. However loud the representatives of such a short-sighted, imitative tendency may proclaim themselves as naturalists, their works will always be unnatural. It is the office of the true naturalist to carry the semblance of reality to the utmost limit of possibility, but this end he can attain only by a free, intelligent reproduction of what he has seen, and by a thorough comprehension as well as a perfect mastery of the means which are at the service of art.—VON BEZOLD.

TWO fundamental distinctions underlie art. I call them Realism and Idealism, from want of clearer words to express my meaning. The former applies to the portraiture of the external world, and partakes more or less of copying and imitation. It affects local and particular truths; is circumscribed in action and motive; inclines to inventories of things in its poorer estate; is apt to be cold, pedantic, minutely fine or broadly rough, and seldom rises above consummate dexterity and intellectual appreciation. Idealism bases itself on universal truth. It deals more with emotions and ideas than facts and action, opposing imagination to perception, on which realism chiefly rests. Inventing, suggesting, creating, the former is the poetry of fine art; the latter is prose. How to combine perfect execution with profound thought, and while rendering temporal and special truths, to endow them with the spirit of the ideal and eternal, is the great problem of art.—JARVES.

ALL criticism should be catholic and tolerant, but little of it is so. Our canons are made up, not of principles, but of personal likes and dislikes, which are often capricious or accidental, and which almost always depend somehow upon temperament. The man of indoor feeling and habit, the merchant for example, or the student, almost certainly regards landscape art as inferior to genre; while the out-door man—farmer, sportsman or tourist, reverses this judgment. The domestic man condemns historical art as theatrical; the man of affairs regards domestic scenes as sentimental. Brilliant color offends those who have no eye for color; breadth of treatment disturbs the precisian; finish, the idealist. To cure this narrowness let the question be asked, "What was the aim of the artist?" If that was worthy, the work well-done is sufficient justification; whether the aim be to tell the truth and no more, as Hunt; to moralize, as Hogarth; to amuse, as Leech; to imitate, as Desgoffe or Jacquemart; to be minutely true, like Richards, or broadly so, like Corot.

HEARTH AND HOME.

[FOR THE INQUIRER.]

GOD'S ANVIL.

BY M. J. SAVAGE.

I BREATHE the fiery furnace-breath;
I feel God's hammer blows;
I faint, as in the grip of death,
As round His hard laws close.

Let me be patient; for 'tis love
Enkindles all the flame.
The blows His faithful mercy prove,
And echo His dear name.

His tender hand, with iron grasp,
Me on the anvil holds.
His breath the flames that round me clasp
With fiercely burning folds.

The lightning fire and thunderous beat
Of forge and anvil storms,
The rough ore, for God's use unmeet,
Shape to divinest forms.

A NOVEMBER DANDELION.

A LITTLE brown and withered weed,
Part of the Summer's unclaimed good,
No golden hue, its beauty fled,
It lives as one amidst the dead.
Robbed of its Summer, spoiled of grace,
Why lifts it yet its wistful face?
But, look again! a sudden change
Has come upon the lifeless thing.
All spotless in transparent white
It floats as if on angel wing;
All robed in purest, sweetest white,
The brown husk fallen to the ground,
The flower soul stands in beauty crowned.
Oh! human soul, the teaching see
From out this life's dull misery.
For every beauty sought not found,
For every yearning left uncrowned,
For every hour of summer glow
Buried and lost in winter's snow
There waits a compensation full,
A joy which hides no sort of pain,
A mystery solved, a love made plain.

NOVEMBER, 1876.

E. A. O.

MR. WEISS'S IDEAS OF WOMEN.

I HAVE just read the essay on "Women and Men," in Mr. Weiss's last delightful volume, Wit, Humor and Shakspeare. The author seems not to have escaped the general infection, a desire to solve the mighty puzzle of womanhood. I wish we might never fall into worse hands. With regard to most of the brilliant and searching criticisms of women which are being so rapidly crowded into modern literature, I think many women must experience the same degree of astonishment as befell the Irishman when he heard his case so eloquently pleaded at the bar. Paddy said he never knew before what a miserable fellow he was; and woman might with equal frankness say that she never before suspected what an egregious simpleton she was. Every man, from Adam down, has deemed it necessary to account for the existence of woman on some new theory of his own. Nobody seems willing to take her for granted and give her a fair letting alone; but all follow the example of their ancestor in the garden and act as if they had just discovered the fair Ever of creation sleeping by a stream, and were in duty bound to classify and label her at once. Some woman ought to write another Essay on Man! Not man, that splendid abstraction who stands for humanity at large, but man in the concrete—not man, but men. They should be held before the slow fire of impartial criticism, until they were done brown, then left swimming in some gelatinous mixture of compliments and sentimentalisms, and served up hot. If they did not like it, it would be their own fault. The feast is one of their own originating, the sauce of their own providing, and in the matter of sauces the proverb says there should be no discrimination between the sexes.

Most of what Mr. Weiss has to say is exasperatingly true. With this much of an admission to begin with, let us take a rapid review of the essay itself. There is a shade of deprecation in the first sentence, as though the author knew he was entering upon a foolish business. "Man draws near to woman with the fly-net of his analysis, thinking to steal up and capture the secrets of her disposition." The greatest obstacle to be met with in this pursuit is the "distance of sex," the attributes of both men and women being greatly modified by sex. Sex imposes upon woman certain modes and habits of life, which heretofore have made it impossible that her education should be anything but a second-hand affair; a learning by "hearsay," which will make any one's judgments, "sentiments rather than reflections." Following this line of thought, he says: "She is more likely to be well-behaved than man, but less likely to be tolerant of ill-behaviour. . . . She is apt to condemn swiftly and fatally, where man would suspend his judgment till all the qualifying facts were put into the case." Here it seems as if Mr. Weiss had fallen into the common error of comparing the average woman with the superior man. Granted that the average woman does not care anything about facts as stepping-stones to a conclusion. Neither does the average man. If her judgments are mere sentiments, his are mere prejudices. If she is silly, he is stupid, and her prudery is matched by his indifference. Coming up to a higher plane of thought and into a more refined social state, we find both men and women viewing the philosophic aspect of questions and giving rational consideration to subjects which polite society sets aside with virtuous indignation.

Some one has said that, in comparing the merits of different religious systems, attention should be paid only to the highest thought in each. So in comparing men and women, it is unfair to place the wisest of one sex beside the most foolish of the other. Very few philosophers have as yet been so philosophic as to choose a woman of culture and wisdom as the typical woman. The best of men cling to their Becky Sharpes and Dora Copperfields, and are loth to give them up.

Mr. Weiss speaks of woman's deficient sense of humor, and accounts by it, as Richard Grant White does, for her failure to appreciate Shakspeare. Only it is evident that Mr. White approves this deficiency, as being another blank space which helps to fill out the general emptiness of character so commendable in a woman. We are led to infer from his remarks on this subject, in a recent number of the Galaxy, that those women whom men most admire do not read Shakspeare. Mr. Weiss does not go so far as this, does not elevate the defect into a virtue, which, like many others, would be no virtue at all in a man. Nevertheless he seems to doubt if this small vacuum in woman's cranium will ever be filled. "Women are not good readers of any kind of plays. . . . the Shaksperian ideal of the great passions of mankind has to be watered for her through the modern novel, trickle by trickle of protracted rhetoric, drop by drop of overflavored style." They persist in judging Shakspeare's characters according to the standard of their friends and neighbors, and object to them because they do not wear frock coats and silk hats. There is a broad foundation of truth in this. I have seen women who would simper and squirm over one of Bret Harte's stories, and bridle with resentment at the mention of Josh Billings or Artemus Ward. Still, some of us have not such exquisite susceptibilities and take a true, manly delight in Falstaff and Prince Hal.

Among the "vices which circulate through the world without invading the seclusion of women," are certain financial operations which she never understands and concerning which her husband can impose upon her credulity to any extent, making her believe in his perfect honesty, even though she is spending three-quarters of his income for jewelry. It may be that men believe women are just so simple and innocent as this, but you'll never get women to believe it of themselves or of each other. A woman may not know much about logic, but she has a smattering of arithmetic, and her extravagance in nine cases out of ten is to be set down to pure selfishness and not ignorance.

The author thinks women do not like to read the newspapers, and I am afraid that is true too. He says, "I have been astonished at the repugnance of intelligent and sprightly women for the labor that the genuine news of the day from every nation requires, as it deserves to be extracted from papers of value and dignity." Of course he has many pleasant things to say about woman's intuition, etc., all of which I fancy sounds oddly to women themselves, who may suspect with reason that whatever expertness they may possess in certain directions is but an absence of man's awkwardness.

When women assume the role of agitators, Mr. Weiss thinks they are apt to hurt both themselves and their cause by their volubility, but this he excuses by saying: "A woman's language becomes exacerbated because she is so inadequate to protest by actions."

He closes with a paragraph filled with the noblest sentiments, and every woman on reading it will hold her head a little higher—or a little lower: "When, however, a noble woman with a level countenance repudiates an unjust charge, she transfers herself from the bar to the bench, and unseats her summoners. The rebuke pulls down the accusers' eyes from their threat, and they seem to go wandering into corners furtively for refuge."

CELIA P. WOOLLEY.

SELECTIONS.

SUGGESTIONS FOR WORK AND IMPROVEMENT.

[Rev. J. B. Harrison, in the Vineland Independent.]

THESE suggestions about work for improvement are purposely made as plain and as practical as possible. I have avoided all wonderful plans for great movements, and have tried to keep to things that people can really do, almost anywhere. I hope that all who think these suggestions good will act upon them, and talk about them in their families and among their neighbors. This will be real work for improvement. I shall be grateful to anybody who will send me suggestions for other things which we can wisely try to do.

1. A great means of culture, sure to be widely used in this country in the near future, is the work of reading circles—little companies of three or four or a dozen persons, meeting informally to read and talk over what they read. If they try to have any formal organization, with officers, or with much of a plan, failure is almost certain. No "constitution" is needed for such work. Many such efforts fail because too many persons are invited to join the same circle. There is no obligation to ask all our friends. Those left out can form another circle.

2. The effort to have young people read better books merits the attention and assistance of all thoughtful men and women. Books may do harm as well as good, and there are good books in abundance which are much brighter and more interesting than the poor ones which are so generally read. Those who teach should know.

3. The local newspaper is a very important means of education already, but in most cases it is conducted in an indolent and careless way, with great indifference to its possible influence in the culture of the people. In nearly all cases a few thoughtful men or even women could soon bring about a great improvement in the character of the papers of their town. But this cannot be done by those who have selfish objects in view, or who have pet plans for great reforms.

4. The subject of amusements for the people needs far more thought and attention than it has yet received. Every village is visited each winter by a strolling company of actors or declaimers, who promise very attractive entertainments, but whose performances are usually unworthy of the support of cultivated people, and very highly injurious to the tastes and manners of our children and young people. The amount of money which is annually wasted upon such persons is enormous, and it is carried away from our towns without the people receiving anything of real value in return, even in the way of amusement. The arrogant claims for support often put forward by travelling players and concert givers should be judged, like everything else, on the ground of utility. Usually every town they visit has better actors, singers and readers than they are. We greatly need the effort of all intelligent men and women to foster everywhere a taste for cheap and harmless amusements. Our young people should be encouraged to cultivate, without going to extremes, their own powers for singing, humorous declamation and acting charades and dialogues; and the older people should not disdain to assist them. But all excess in the hours, costumes or arrangements, should be strictly avoided.

Every community should provide its own amusements, and depend upon its own resources as to personal talent. The fashionable lecture system—paying a hundred dollars, often much more, for the reading of a nice little essay—is a fraud and a senseless extravagance. No lecture is worth a hundred dollars to the people of a country town, nor the half of that sum, in this time when the best of all human thought is to be had so cheaply in books.

5. Our public schools should receive more attention from the people, and the whole subject of education should be examined and discussed more generally and far more thoroughly, so that our methods may be improved. The moral culture of children is left too much to agencies outside of the home. The care of our schools ought to have no connection with partisan politics. Schools should be so organized that parents can know what is the course of study, and what the children are expected to learn in a given time.

6. Most people are ignorant or careless, or both, in regard to health, and the natural means of avoiding disease. A better knowledge of the laws of health and a sentiment of duty and of pride in obeying them, are greatly needed, and would save much suffering. Some kind of sanitary regulations, of a plain and simple nature, should be established in all towns and villages. The poisoning of wells from drains and cess-pools is becoming a serious matter in nearly all the small towns of our country. The mismanagement of cellars is also a prolific source of disease.

7. In the hurry of our business and social life, many old persons are neglected and left to loneliness and depression of spirits. In every village and neighborhood the young people should give this matter special attention. All persons who, from age or failing health, are compelled to withdraw from the general social life, should be visited occasionally and made to feel that the younger and more fortunate have not forgotten them.

8. We need thought and culture in regard to living within our means, and to self-control in the use of money. Most of us often buy what we could do very well without. It is not likely that money will soon again be so easily acquired as it was a few years ago. The prosperity of that time was largely artificial and unreal. We should use money only for what we need most. This should be taught everywhere.

(To be continued.)

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

THE GRANDMOTHER'S STORY.

THE days were short and dark, and the wind piled the snow in great drifts; but Elspet and Bertha Dietz did not mind the weather; they spun their flax and planned Elspet's wedding linen.

"You will have a finer store than any girl in the Odenwald, my Elspet," said Bertha, "even Gretchen Vardeman had not so fine and in such plenty."

"And all the linen in the world wouldn't make her handsome," said Elspet tossing her pretty head. "Even her new husband has found that out. Angelica Pabst told me he refused to buy Gretchen a silver necklace, saying, nothing will straighten a crooked nose."

"Frau Gretchen's nose is straight enough for common folk," cried Bertha. "Herr Spiegle is a miser, that's why he refused the necklace. Barbara told me that he pinches his groschen till the light shines through them."

"Peace, peace, children," said the grandmother, who sat by the fire. "Hear and see and say little, lest you suffer the fate of a girl I once heard of."

"What happened to her?" asked Bertha, who loved stories.

"A dreadful thing befell her," said the grandmother. "Such judgments ought to come oftener, and long tongues wouldn't be so common."

"Tell us about her, grandmother," said Elspet, "and I will wind your yarn."

"A long time ago," said the grandmother, "there lived in the country of the Black Forest a wood-carver named Carl Vogler. His one treasure in the world was his daughter Sophia, and her he cherished as the apple of his eye. 'Tis said she was a wonderful creature. Her knitting and lace-work brought the highest price, and she could use the carving chisel almost as cleverly as the father himself. Only a picture of the holy Madonna could equal her in beauty, for her eyes were as blue as the mountain gentian, and her hair was the color of ripe barley. But she had one fault, a grievous fault, my children, and one to which I fear you are addicted—the fault of listening and prattling. At eighteen she knew more evil of her neighbors than a common gossip would know at fifty, and you may be sure no story grew sweeter by her telling.

One day while gathering fagots in the forest she met an old woman apparently on the same errand. Of her our young busybody asked so many questions that the old woman said to her reprovingly, "My daughter, were thy questions fagots ten men could not carry them." Nevertheless she was very kind to Sophia, leading her where the wood lay in heaps, and piling it upon her back till she could carry no more.

In their wanderings they had penetrated quite a way into the forest. The snow was falling fast and it was growing dark. Suddenly before them rose a beautiful palace, white as snow and all ablaze with light.

The old woman laid her hand upon Sophia's arm and said kindly, "This is my home; return thou to thine. So long as thou shalt keep our meeting secret, I will prosper thee in whatsoever good thing thou shalt undertake; but the day thou shalt yield to thy evil tongue and speak of me, thou shalt suffer a calamity that will make thy name a terror to thy kind." In a moment palace and old woman had vanished and Sophia was alone in the storm.

For two days Sophia was quiet. She feared the threatened calamity, and what helped her more than fear, she had no company. Never had she succeeded in her work so well. At her carving, her father exclaimed with delight, "So, so, daughter, thou must excel thy father. What next, what next!"

On the third day the tailor came to make her a kirtle of fine green cloth, and as he was a wordy fellow, like our tailor Tony, Sophia was beguiled into talk. And to let him know that she had great adventures, told him of her meeting with the old woman in the wood.

The next morning her tongue was grown so long it lay upon her lips, and what was worse, from the moment she awoke she felt compelled to talk and tell every bad story she had ever heard. Talk she must, repeating the same round of evil, whether there were folk to listen or not. From that time her tongue grew with fearful rapidity, and upon the end of it was formed a sharp sting.

One day, hearing of the marriage of an old playmate, in her haste to tell a malicious story about the family, she struck her own lips with the sting of her tongue. Awful pains seized her, and in less than an hour she was dead. And all her body, even her beautiful yellow hair, turned a green color horrible to behold."

"And is the story true, grandmother?" asked Bertha with white lips.

"As true as anything in this strange world, Liebchen," replied the grandmother. "Frau Ellsenberger, who lived in that country in her youth, and heard the story from the lips of an old man who knew Sophia herself, told brother-in-law Fritz, and he told me."

"Why are all the stories of gossiping women and not of gossiping men?" asked Elspet.

"How can I tell! That is one of the unknowable things," answered the grandmother. "In the matter of tongues and talking I never saw anything to choose 'twixt men folk and women folk."

ELIZABETH CUMINGS.

OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE WORCESTER CONFERENCE.

To the Editor of The Inquirer:

I AM glad to see your paper start out newly baptized and newly born, and I trust its name is indicative of its purpose. It will surely not be less liberal or less Christian because it has left those terms behind. Professions of all kinds are at a discount, and we are quite as apt to find the best quality of piety where there is least nominal and formal profession, so often equivalent to pretension.

I wish to say a few words about the Liberal churches in Central Massachusetts, especially in Worcester County. This Conference, soon to hold its annual meeting in Worcester, includes twenty-eight churches, twenty-two of which have settled pastors, and five of the other six pastors virtually settled and likely to retain their pastorates. A few of the longest pastorates now existing are those of the First church, Lancaster, Geo. M. Bartol pastor, settled in 1847; First Parish, Templeton, E. G. Adams, pastor, settled in 1847; First Unitarian Society, Upton, Geo. S. Ball, pastor, settled in 1857. Hall of Worcester, Smith of Barre, and Montgomery of Leicester, have been settled seven years each, while Rich of Brookfield, and Goddard of Harvard, were settled in 1870. Many changes have taken place in the Conference in the matter of pastors, the majority of them having assumed their labors within two or three years. With six elderly men, we have a score who are young men; and about the same proportion exists between what are called conservatives and advanced thinkers, though it would not be quite true to say that all who have been settled longest are on the conservative side, for Brother Bartol, of Lancaster, the genial pastor and moderator of the association, is somehow able to gather all the truths of both classes into the ample and well-filled storehouse of his thought. He is a brother of Dr. Bartol, of Boston, and is thought by some to be his superior, his modesty hiding his genius. Adams, of Templeton, finds his power in his fine executive ability, his excellent qualities as a pastor and a citizen, and in having a wife of wonderfully active and sympathetic powers. Mr. Adams was once elected a Bank President, and settles more estates than any other man in that region.

Mr. Ball, of Upton, has lately had a new church built for him by one of his parishioners in another part of the town. The Catholics occupy the old church, and the Methodists have built a new church which takes in quite a number of the Unitarians, on account of the difficulty in going so far to the new church. Mr. Ball is a great worker, vigorous, magnetic, conservative, quite a chemist, lectures on temperance, and other topics, is something of a farmer, a good deal of a man, an indispensable citizen, is liked by all the sects, has been Chaplain in the army, a State Senator, has been candidate for Secretary of State, and, together with Revs. Adams and Cutting, has enough to do in keeping down the steam of the score of "young bloods" in the Conference, and can hardly be said, in that, to succeed; for these young ministers are mostly strong, cultured, scholarly, broad and able to move straight and calmly on, and while deferential to age and charitable toward all opinions, feel that they must move forward with the new thought and try to meet the intellectual as well as the religious needs of the people. There is not an avowed Radical among this young score, not one who calls himself a Free Religionist, and yet I doubt whether one of them is in the least trammelled, fears truth, or is not moving along in the noble march of scientific thought, ever glad to welcome all light from all sources, while they all cultivate reverence and encourage the utmost freedom in religious opinion. Hall, of Worcester, is, without doubt, our finest scholar and ablest thinker. He is a good deal of a theologian, gives twelve private lectures on art each Winter, lives a bachelor in an elegant house, is a fine horseman, and rides from twenty to thirty miles horseback on exchanges, is not an orator, is loved and respected by the young people, has travelled abroad, and while he does not attract so many hearers as Henry Blanchard in the same city, his hold upon his parish grows stronger and stronger each year. His was the first Unitarian church in Worcester, and it includes many of the old families of note, such as the Salsburys. Mr. Hall followed in the pastorate such men as Drs. Bancroft and Hill. We somehow think of him as filling, in later life, some professorship in Harvard College, in art, ethics or theology, or perhaps belles lettres. I can only mention the names of several other pastors in the Conference, as my letter is growing lengthy.

Mr. Blanchard, formerly of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Lowell, Mass., succeeded Mr. Shippen, of the American Unitarian Association, and he is perhaps the finest preacher in the Conference. He uses no notes, and his ease, pleasant musical voice, sympathetic nature, thorough preparation of what he has to say, use of apt and telling illustrations gathered from personal experience and wide reading of the freshest literature, render his sermons exceedingly attractive and inspiring. His vesper services are rendered very attractive by fine music, and the large church is completely filled by people mostly not of his society.

Mr. Cutting, of Sterling, was formerly settled at Meadville, is very conservative, well read in ethics, a hard student, a good thinker, not broad, but deep, a thoroughly sound and conscientious man, a noble fellow, a most true and faithful pastor, full of rich thought aptly put in his sermons and essays, and while something of a traditionalist, is brave and most genial in spirit. He is Secretary of the Conference, and deserves a larger place than he fills; sometime he will fill a professor's chair in ethics or church history. Rev. J. T. Hewes comes to Fitchburg from the First church of Salem; he has got fairly into the work and will be a success in a most difficult parish to suit. I learn from THE INQUIRER that Savage, of Leominster, is doing finely in his new field. Gilman, of Bolton, speaks for himself in his articles in the magazines and papers. He is scholarly, a good thinker, a fine writer; terse, candid, calm, brave and true to his best thought in all he writes, and while not an orator, will make his mark in literature, and will constantly rise and force a recognition through the excellence of his work. Here I must stop; and for what I have said get a peeling from the parties mentioned. I will sometime gossip a bit about our Association and Sunday School Society. MERLIN.

JOTTINGS.

THOSE of our subscribers who are able to do so will greatly oblige us by remitting promptly in payment of their subscriptions. It is our custom to send bills when subscriptions become due, but in case bills should not be received, full information how to make remittances may always be found in the column preceding advertisements. We do not send receipts except when requested to do so, but indicate the state of each account on the address label on the paper. Thus, the number formed by the last four figures upon the label should be that of the last paper for which payment has been received. If this number should not be changed within three weeks after a remittance has been sent, it may be assumed that some error has occurred, and a postal card should be dropped to the Publisher.

IN the Dover, N. H., Enquirer of Dec. 7, 1876, there are some admirable words by Rev. C. A. Allen on Evil Habits, passages from an address read to the Dover Reform Club.

THE Missouri Republican of Dec. 31, 1876, contains an able Christmas sermon on "Three Kindred Faiths"—Judaism, Christianity, Mohammedanism—preached in the Church of the Unity, St. Louis, by the pastor, Rev. John C. Learned.

THE regular Sunday lecture course of Chicago is suspended. The Third Unitarian will take several of the proposed speakers. Hon. John A. Covert, of Cleveland, spoke last Sunday evening on "The Common People of France."

NEW ORLEANS.—The New Orleans Times of Dec. 31st contains a report of a lecture on "Benjamin Franklin" by Rev. J. H. Hartzell. The Times says: "The lecture was finely written, contained many passages of splendor and power, and was delivered with glowing eloquence. Other lectures are to follow on Cromwell and Socrates, and we learn that the lecture upon Charles Dickens is to be repeated by general request."

PHILADELPHIA.—Rev. Charles G. Ames is continuing his admirable "Sunday evening talks" at Spring Garden Institute. He announces for the new year a series of discourses on Men and Women, Marriage, Domestic Life, Children, Education, Friendships, Society, Citizenship, Labor Trade, Property, Health, and other practical subjects—all with a view to apply the principles and spirit of Christianity to human life and welfare.

BOSTON YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN UNION.—A sermon to young people will be given next Sunday evening, at 7½ o'clock, at the Union Hall Boylston street, by Rev. H. N. Brown, of Brookline, Subject, "The First Conditions of Earthly Success." Social singing at close of services. The public cordially invited. Last Sunday evening Rev. James Reed, of the Swedenborgian church, Boston, preached to a large and attentive audience upon "The Heavenly Canaan."

CITIZENS of New York and Brooklyn will be gratified with the statement, contained in the annual message of Mayor Schroeder, of the latter city, that the East River Bridge is now an assured success, and that the enormous piles of granite on either bank will not remain monuments to a great failure. Work upon the foot-bridge to be used by workmen in stretching the cables is rapidly progressing, with a fair prospect that the whole structure will be completed ready for use within three years.

The movement for another bridge across the river at Blackwell's Island is again making headway. This is intended as a railroad bridge, and would establish a direct connection between the plains and hills of Long Island and the great centre of railroad communication in New York at Forty-second street.

AN amusing misunderstanding filled Mr. Haweis' church, in Westmoreland street, Portland Place, to overflowing last Sunday evening. He had given out as the subject of his sermon "The Sanitary Aspects of Health,"—a somewhat paradoxical title, by the way, by which, we suppose he meant the health-producing aspects of health as distinguished from the pleasurable or physiological or other aspects of health—but was understood to have given out "The Sanitary Aspects of Hell," a somewhat novel subject to all who have assumed, as Protestants usually do, that there can be nothing sanitary at all about the state of punishment—a function reserved for the "purgatory" of "Catholic superstition." Mr. Haweis, however, declaring that he knew nothing about hell, proceeded to preach on the less sensational topic. Yet he might, we think, have connected to some extent his real with his presumed subject. If health is health-giving, then surely the state of moral retribution must be health-giving, too, so far as it is itself healthy. And is not all genuinely moral suffering for sin a symptom of health and not disease?—London Spectator.

HARTFORD.—The Hartford Unitarian society has revived its long-suspended life. It awoke last Sunday morning, when fifty of the old stock and their descendants met in a small room in the Charter Oak building and held an informal service of worship and conference, under the leadership of Dr. Bellows, an old friend of this society. In the evening the opera house was opened and a large congregation gathered to listen to a discourse by the same gentleman on "The Unitarianism of To-day." It was a frank, full, friendly statement of the issues between so-called Orthodoxy and Unitarianism, with a plain and direct account of the preacher's own theological views, which he said were all he could be responsible for, although he believed they fairly represented those of the majority in his denomination. Although an hour and a quarter long, there seemed to be a fixed attention paid to the discourse. A telegram was received in the midst of the service, announcing that Dr. J. F. Clarke would preach in the same place on the 21st or 28th instant, as might be preferred. Rev. M. K. Schermerhorn will take charge of the society for the Winter at least, and we hope permanently.

NEW YORK CITY.—The pulpit of All Souls' Church was supplied last Sunday by Rev. M. K. Schermerhorn, lately of Buffalo, now of Hartford, Conn. Dr. Bellows inaugurated the Unitarian services at Hartford.

At the Church of the Messiah Mr. Alger gave an elaborate and very interesting discourse on "The Church and the Theatre." The Herald thus introduces its report of the discourse: "Among the last requests of the late Edwin Forrest to his executors was the employment of Rev. William B. Alger to write his biography, a task he has very nearly completed. Mr. Alger, under the inspiration of writing the career of the great American tragedian, coupled, no doubt, with his long and careful study of the drama, chose 'The Church and the Theatre' as the subject of his discourse yesterday morning. It is unnecessary to state that the large congregation present listened with undivided attention. The theatre has never had a more earnest and plain-spoken champion. He took for his text Acts xix. 29. 'And the whole city with one accord rushed into the theatre.'" Mr. Frothingham's subject, according to the Herald, was "Prayer and Work."

At Unity Chapel, Harlem, Rev. John W. Chadwick preached the second in the course of special Sunday evening sermons. Next Sunday evening Rev. S. H. Camp will preach. Measures are being taken to secure a settled pastor immediately.

OLYMPIA, W. T.—We have received the first number of the Unitarian Advocate, a monthly "devoted to the interests and advocacy of Liberal Christianity on the Pacific Coast," edited and published at Olympia, W. T., by Rev. D. N. Utter, missionary of the American Unitarian Association. Subscription rates one dollar (gold) a year, in advance; currency, $1.25. In his "Greeting" to the public, Mr. Utter justifies the birth of his paper by stating that "he finds himself in a field so large that it is impossible to cultivate the whole of it with any degree of success by the plan of circuit preaching. The Unitarian Advocate is printed to help him in his work."

Mr. Utter has worked courageously and successfully in his difficult field; he and the people he has rallied about him are building a convenient chapel, paying as they go, after the admirable manner of the Roman Catholics. The basement is enclosed, and though quite unfinished, has been in use since the middle of September. The main audience-room is nearly completed, but the expense of furnishing will be considerable. People who help themselves as persistently and courageously as our Olympia friends especially deserve to be helped by others. Subscriptions, large or small, forwarded immediately to Rev. D. N. Utter, Olympia, W. T., will certainly be put where they will do ever so much good. If you can't do more, at least forward $1.25 in currency as a year's subscription to the Unitarian Advocate.

BOSTON.—The second in the course of lectures before the Free Religious Association was given last Sunday afternoon before a large audience in Horticultural Hall, by Rev. Minot J. Savage. His subject was "Immoral Religion and Irreligious Morality."

At the West church the pastor, Dr. C. A. Bartol, reviewed Mr. Frothingham's discourse on "Jesus," given the Sunday previous before the Free Religious Association. As reported in the Globe, Dr. Bartol said in the course of his discourse:

"American criticism should find better occupation in this nineteenth century than following other leaders in attempting to show that Jesus is a myth. Renan and his copyists in this country speak of the life of Jesus as narrowing toward the close. They think it to be the property of streams to widen as they draw near the end; and hence they argue that Jesus is no superior hero. Real greatness or goodness, they say, always and invariably grows more and more. The Greek Socrates, surely, by common consent, waxed to the end; and the last moments of Buddha showed a character purified and cleared from dross by suffering. And so these critics pronounce Jesus, whom the world has held in homage as the Son of God and Son of Man for so many years, to be a character not worthy to be called an example of the highest heroism. But, thank God, it is the critics and not the subject that are at fault, and their theory grows in no deep soil. As for the supposed and surprising diminution of Jesus toward the end of his life, when the thick shadows gathered about his path, neither fact nor text bears out the critics' assertion. What philosophy or history makes it possible that a man like Jesus should diminish and decline when but a little more than thirty years old? Renan and his copyists stand quite apart from the skillful commentators and wise judges who have given Jesus so high a rank. Dr. James Walker, colder by nature than Renan, a man of skeptical tendency, in his rationalistic view of Jesus says that in his character there is certainly to be noted a spiritual growth. What the Baptist foretold, that the student sees to have been fulfilled in Jesus' life. True, there is a sombre color in the closing scenes of his career. Jesus does denounce hypocrisy and predict doom. But the shadow about the cross does not obscure his character. His virtue was the more earnest because he was persuaded that just retribution or reward would be given to all men according to their deeds. If the stream of his life, like the Danube or the Saguenay, is hemmed in as it nears the end, it deepens. On that Canadian river the boat cannot anchor; it must be moored to the bank; while the Mississippi and the Euphrates, rolling through smiling meadows, grow shallow as they widen. Let Renan and his followers tell us if they have sounded with the plummet of their criticism the depth of the feelings of Jesus while they have cast their line across the stream. In the garden beneath Calvary, when the life of Jesus was indeed hemmed in, when the hour of his greatest trial had come, he was greater, not less, than in his walks through Galilean corn-fields on the pleasant Sabbath day when he unfolded to men the meaning of that day. His life was shut in a terrible gorge, a craggy cleft, a dangerous canon; but it had grown nobler than before."

[Advertisement.]

ELEGANT HAIR is woman's crowning beauty. When it fades, she fades as well. While it is kept bright, her personal attractions are still maintained. By preserving the hair fresh and vigorous a youthful appearance is continued through many years. Those who grieve over their fading hair turning gray too early should know that Ayer's Hair Vigor prevents it, and restores gray or faded hair to its natural color. It is a clear and healthful preparation, containing neither oil, dye, nor anything deleterious, and imparts to the scalp what is most needed—a sense of pleasant and delightful freedom from scurf or dandruff.—New Berne (N. C.) Times.

The Inquirer.

Published every Thursday, from the middle of September to the middle of July, in the Park Bank Building, 214 Broadway, New York.

To be in season for insertion the same week, communications intended for publication must be forwarded in time to reach this office not later than Tuesday. No attention is paid to anonymous communications. We require the name and address of every writer, not necessarily for publication, but as guarantees of good faith.

Communications relating to the editorial department of the paper should be addressed, "Editor of the Inquirer, P. O. Box 109, New York City;" all others to "Publisher," same address.

No person is authorized to collect money or make contracts for the Inquirer, who cannot show written authority from the Publisher.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

Three Dollars per year, in advance. Clergymen, Two Dollars per year. Postage, Twenty Cents per year, in advance. Remittances should be made by Registered Letter or by Post-Office Money Order, or Draft on New York payable to PUBLISHER OF THE INQUIRER.

ADVERTISING RATES.

Six cents per agate line per week; outside page and pages next reading matter, ten cents per line. Special Notices twenty cents per line.

Discount—Five per cent. on yearly accounts amounting to $250 and under $500. Ten per cent. on yearly accounts amounting to $500 or more.

Copy for Thursday's paper received until Tuesday afternoon.

Advertisements must be acceptable in every respect.

Office, PARK BANK BUILDING, 214 Broadway.

Address,

THE INQUIRER,

Box 109, New York.

Special Notices.

Protestant Leaders.

A COURSE OF LECTURES

BY
JOHN W. CHADWICK.

AT THE

Second Unitarian Church, Brooklyn,
Corner of Clinton and Congress Streets.

1876—77.

LECTURES:

- V. Emanuel Swedenborg. Sunday evening, Feb. 4, 1877.
- VI. Murray and Universalism. Sunday evening, March 4, 1877.
- VII. Thomas Paine: His Relation to his own and later Times in Matters of Religion. Sunday evening, April 1, 1877.
- VIII. Channing and Unitarianism. Sunday evening, April 15, 1877.
- IX. Theodore Parker. Sunday evening, May 6, 1877.

HOUR OF LECTURE, HALF-PAST SEVEN.

Morning Service at 10:35 precisely. Vesper Service, Third Sunday Evening of each Month, with the above exceptions.

The Address of Rev. John F.

LOCKE is to the care of W. H. Baldwin, President Young Men's Christian Union, 18 Boylston St., Boston.

"Admirably fitted to teach the art from the very beginning."—Chicago Tribune.

"Mr. Hope is one of the old masters' in this sort of work. He has prepared an excellent work, in which his subject is treated fully and clearly."—Chicago Post.

"Altogether the best book that can be placed in the hands of the amateur."—N. Y. Graphic.

"The diagrams are excellent and the instructions clear and direct."—N. Y. Evening Post.

SORRENTO AND INLAID WORK FOR AMATEURS, BY ARTHUR HOPE.

A practical manual of Scroll-Sawing, Overlaying, Polishing, Inlaying, Silhouettes, &c. Containing 50 full-sized designs, new and beautiful. The designs are worth more than price of book. Tastefully bound in muslin. For sale by booksellers generally. Sent by mail on receipt of price, $1.50. Descriptive circular mailed to any address.

JOHN WILKINSON, Publisher, 55 Lake St., Chicago.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, 122 Fifth Ave., New York.

HAIR DYE.

BATCHELOR'S CELEBRATED HAIR DYE is splendid. It never fails. The only true and perfect Dye. Harmless, reliable, instantaneous. No disappointment, no ridiculous tints; remedies the ill effects of bad dyes, leaves the hair soft and beautiful Black or Brown. Sold and prepared at BATCHELOR'S Wig Factory, 16 Bond St., N. Y. Sold by all druggists.

TROY BELLS.

THE JONES & CO.
Old Established Troy Bell Foundry continue to manufacture those superior Bells which have made Troy celebrated throughout the world. All Bells Warranted Satisfactory. Particular attention given to Church Bells, Chimes and Peals of Bells. Illustrated Catalogues sent free.

Ayer's

Hair Vigor,

For restoring Gray Hair to its natural Vitality and Color.

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color, with the gloss and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous, and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich, glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co.,

Practical and Analytical Chemists,

LOWELL, MASS.

BLYMYER MFG CO
BELLS
CHURCH, SCHOOL, FIRE-ALARM
Fine toned, low priced, fully warranted. Catalogues giving full particulars, prices, etc., sent free.
A BLYMYER MANUFACTURING CO.,
664 to 694 West Eighth St., Cincinnati, O.

THE HOWARD
INSURANCE COMPANY,
OF NEW YORK.—OFFICE NO 66 WALL STREET.
Cash Capital $500,000.—Chartered in 1825.
This Company insures property against loss or Damage
by Fire and the risks of Inland Navigation and Transportation, on the most favorable terms.
SAM'L T. SKIDMORE, President.
HENRY A. OAKLEY, Vice-President.

DIRECTORS:
SAMUEL T. SKIDMORE, HEWLETT SCUDDER,
THOMAS W. GALE, CHARLES H. CLAYTON,
JOHN H. SWIFT, JOHN L. RIKER,
JAMES R. TAYLOR, GEORGE W. TALBOT,
HENRY J. SCUDDER, FREDERICK STURGES,
HENRY A. OAKLEY, JOHN J. WHITE,
CHARLES MALL, R. LENOX BELKNAP,
HENRY I. BARBER, JAMES C. CARTER,
WILLIAM H. WISNER, EDMUND PENFOLD,
ALEXANDER MITCHELL.
CHARLES A. HULL, Secretary.
RICHARD W. CLARK, Asst. Sec'y.

HANOVER
FIRE INSURANCE CO.,
NO. 120 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Forty-seventh Semi-Annual Statement.
JANUARY 1, 1876.

Cash Capital.....	$500,000 00
Reinsurance Fund.....	587,717 75
Outstanding Liabilities.....	112,298 14
Net Surplus.....	392,759 20

ASSETS.
Cash in Bank and Office..... $102,756 92
United States Six Per Cent. Bonds..... 599,637 50
Bonds and Mortgages, being first lien on improved Real Estate in the Cities of New York and Brooklyn..... 328,025 00
Loans on Call (Market Value of Securities, ties, $136,790)..... 114,890 01
City and County Bonds..... 230,265 00
Bank and Trust Co. Stocks..... 41,650 00
First Mort. R. R. Bonds and Stocks..... 57,250 00
Balance in hands of Agents and Uncollected
Office Premiums..... 99,163 96
Accrued Interest on Bonds and Mortgages and and Call Loans..... 7,067 22
Real Estate..... 17,109 45
$1,592,775 09

BENJ. S. WALCOTT, President.
I. REMSEN LANE, Secretary.

W. A. Batchelor's Curative Ointment
Immediately cures Ring-Worm, Tetter, Itching of the Head, and all Eruptions of the Skin, Face or Body.
W. A. Batchelor's Alaska Seal Oil
for the Hair. The best Hair Oil in use.
W. A. Batchelor's Dentifrice for beautifying and preserving the teeth and Gums and deodorizing the Breath.
W. A. Batchelor's New Cosmetique,
Black or Brown, for tinting the Hair, Whiskers or Moustaches without greasing them. Sold at factory, 16 Bond Street, New York, and by all druggists. Ask for them.

The Toll Gate! Prize Picture sent free! An ingenious
gem. 50 objects to find. Address, with stamp, E. C.
Abbey, Buffalo, N. Y. 1491-ly

BABBITT'S TOILET SOAP.

Unrivalled for the toilet and the bath.
Non-irritating and deceptive odors to cover common and deleterious ingredients. After years of scientific experiment, the manufacturer of B.T. Babbitt's Best Soap has perfected and now offers to the public THE FINEST TOILET SOAP in the World.
Only the purest vegetable oils used in its manufacture.
For Use in the Nursery it has No Equal.
Worth ten times its cost to every mother and family in Christendom. Sample box containing 5 cakes of 5 ozs. each, sent free to any address on receipt of 15 cents.
Address B. T. Babbitt, New York City.
For Sale by all Druggists.

The success of Agents with the magnificent new combination of the ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY &
MARVELOUS.
Let no one fail to send for particulars. CHAS. CLUCAS & CO.
14 Warren St., New York.

$12 a day at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine.
$55 to $77 a Week to Agents. Samples FREE
P. O. VICKERY, Augusta Maine.

TAMAR
INSURANCE COMPANY,
OF NEW YORK.
Broadway, cor. John Street.
Capital, - - $200,000.

ASSETS, JANUARY 1, 1876.
Cash on hand and in Bank. . . . $13,269 20
U. S. Bonds, market value. . . . 304,220 00
Loans on Call, Good Stocks Collateral, 1,000 00
Bonds and Mortgages on Brick Dwel-
ings. . . . 58,900 00
Bills Receivable for Inland Prem's . . 1,820 65
Premiums in course of collection . . 7,394 70
New York Bank Stocks market value . 21,487 50
$408,092 05

Losses unadjusted estimated at $14,300 56
ISAAC R. ST. JOHN, President.
A. R. FROTHINGHAM, Vice-Pres't.
WM. R. MACDIARMID, Sec'y.

HOME
Insurance Co. of New York,
Office No. 135 Broadway.

Forty-sixth Semi-Annual Statement,
Showing the condition of the Company on the first day of July, 1876.

Cash Capital	$3,000,000 00
Reserve for Re-Insurance . .	1,845,521 47
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Dividends	247,326 66
Net Surplus	958,868 71
Total Assets - - -	$6,051,716 84

SUMMARY OF ASSETS:
CASH IN BANKS..... $426,946 71
BONDS AND MORTGAGES, BEING FIRST
LIEN ON REAL ESTATE WORTH $4,820,000 1,922,738 01
UNITED STATES STOCKS (MARKET VALUE) 2,642,125 00
BANK STOCKS (MARKET VALUE) 297,457 50
STATE AND CITY BONDS (MARKET VALUE) 69,250 00
LOANS ON STOCKS, PAYABLE ON DEMAND
(MARKET VALUE OF SECURITIES, $547,050) 423,650 00
INTEREST DUE ON 1st JULY, 1876 73,594 53
BALANCE IN HAND OF AGENTS 181,157 19
BILLS RECEIVABLE..... 10,833 34
PREMIUMS DUE AND UNCOLLECTED ON
POLICIES ISSUED AT THIS OFFICE..... 18,634 56
Total - - - - $6,051,716 84

LIABILITIES.
CLAIMS FOR LOSSES OUTSTANDING ON 1st
JULY 1876..... $245,926 65
DIVIDENDS UNPAID..... 1,400 00
Total, - - - - $247,326 66

CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.
A. F. WILLMARTH, Vice-Pres't.
D. A. HEALD, 2d Vice-Pres't.
J. H. WASHBURN, Secretary.
T. B. GREENE, } Ass't Secretaries.
C. K. FRANCIS, }

A Dividend of FIVE per cent. has been declared, payable on and after Tuesday, the 18th of July.
New York, 14th July, 1876.

THE NEW JERSEY MUTUAL
LIFE INSURANCE CO.,
NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.

J. H. STEDWELL, President.
C. H. BRINKERHOFF, Secretary.
J. H. CANNIFF, Cashier.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr.
Chase's Improved ($2.00) Receipt
Book." Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.
$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free.
BRINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

ATLANTIC
MUTUAL INSURANCE CO
NEW YORK,
OFFICE 51 WALL ST.
ORGANIZED 1842.

INSURES AGAINST MARINE AND INLAND
NAVIGATION RISKS.

And will issue Policies making Loss payable
in England.

Its Assets for the Security of its Policies
are more than
TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured, and are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated during the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearing interest until redeemed.

JOHN D. JONES, President.
CHARLES DENNIS, Vice-President.
W. H. H. MOORE, 2d Vice-President.
A. A. RAVEN, 3d Vice-President.
J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

P H E N I X
INSURANCE COMPANY,
OF BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Capital..... $1,000,000 00
Cash Assets, Jan. 1, 1876..... 2,549,958 77

OFFICES:
Western Union Telegraph Building, BROAD-
WAY, Cor. DEY St., New York.
Brooklyn Office..... 12 & 14 Court St
Brooklyn E. D. Office..... 98 Broadway.

The benefits to be derived by the public from Insurance against loss by fire are so great and numerous,
when compared with its trifling cost, as to render it an imperative duty on every one to avail themselves of the protection afforded by the PHENIX INSURANCE COMPANY
against the destructive ravages of FIRE, which in a few moments may lay waste the fruits of a whole life of industry.

STEPHEN CROWELL, President.
PHILANDER SHAW, Vice President.
WILLIAM R. CROWELL, Secretary.
ESTABLISHED A. D. 1850.

THE MANHATTAN
LIFE INSURANCE CO.,
OF
NEW YORK,

has paid $6,500,000 Death Claims :
has paid $4,500,000 return premiums to Policy-holders : has a surplus of more than $1,600,000 over Liabilities : and a ratio of $120 Assets for every $100 Liabilities, by New York Standard of Valuation.
It gives the best Insurance on the best lives at the mos
favorable rates.

EXAMINE THE PLANS AND RATES OF THIS COM PANY.

HENRY STOKES, C. Y. WEMPLE,
President. Vice-President,
J. L. HALSEY, S. N. STEBBINS,
Secretary. Actuary
H. Y. WEMPLE, } Assistant Secretaries.
H. B. STOKES }

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY

Manufacture those celebrated Bells for CHURCHES,
ACADEMIES, &c. Price List and Circulars sent free.
HENRY McSHANE & CO.,
BALTIMORE, MD.

MUSIC BOOKS for Schools, ACADEMIES AND SEMINARIES.

THE HIGH SCHOOL CHOIR.

($1. or $9 per doz.) is already a "proved and prized" book in a multitude of schools, and has songs in 2, 3 and 4 parts, by EMERSON & TILDEN.
Equally good are the older HOUR OF SINGING ($1), by EMERSON & TILDEN; CHOICE TRIOS ($1), for 3 Female Voices, by W. S. TILDEN; and DEEM'S SOLFEGGI (75c.), which has exercises in Italian style.

THE ENCORE.

(75 cts., or $7.50 per doz.) so successful as a Singing School book, is also a practically good class book for High Schools.

THE WHIPPOORWILL.

(50 cts.) by W. O. PERKINS, author of "Golden Robin," is filled with genial, pleasing songs for Common Schools.

American School Music Readers. Book I. (35c.), Book II. (50c.), Book III. (50c.), are well-made, Graded note readers, by EMERSON & TILDEN.

As collections of cheerful sacred songs, such as now enter so gracefully into School Life, we commend three books of uncommon beauty, our Sabbath School Song Books, RIVER OF LIFE (35 cts.), SHINING RIVER (35 cts.), GOOD NEWS (35 cts.).

Either book mailed, post free, for Retail Price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO.,

BOSTON.

C. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 Broadway,
New York.

J. E. DITSON & CO.,
Successors to Lee & Walker,
Philadelphia.

STEARNS & BEALE,

STATIONERS,

BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS,

PRINTING and LITHOGRAPHY,

147 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

(Between Broadway and Nassau Street.)

JOEL W. STEARNS.

WM. P. BEALE.

REDUCTION IN RATES TO SUIT THE TIMES.

THE BUTLER HEALTH LIFT EXERCISE.

Commended by Highest Medical Authority.

A SCIENTIFIC SYSTEM of Concentrated Cumulative Exercise, adapted to the Preservation and Restoration of Health.

Principal Office, Spacious and well ventilated,
PARK BANK BUILDING, NO. 214 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK.

BROOKLYN: NO. 158 REMSEN STREET.

PARLORS FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN.

"I have used THE BUTLER HEALTH LIFT with manifest advantage. A tendency to sleeplessness at night has been corrected, my animal spirits have been raised in tone, and my elasticity of frame increased. The sense of repose imparted is quite as great as the stimulus."—O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

"The most perfect apparatus in use."—[Evening Mail.

Call, or address

LEWIS G. JANES, Proprietor.

E. N. Freshman & Bros., ADVERTISING AGENTS,

186 W. FOURTH STREET, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Are authorized to contract for advertising in this paper.

ESTIMATES FURNISHED FREE. SEND FOR A CIRCULAR.

Employment Society for Poor WOMEN.

This Society now offers for sale at its store, No. 143 East 13th street, New York, a large quantity of garments, the remains of last year's stock, at very low prices. Those wishing to buy women's or children's clothing to give to the poor or to charitable institutions will find there a good supply of articles suitable for the purpose. Call and examine the garments, or send orders to

THE EMPLOYMENT SOCIETY,

143 East 13th Street,

New York City.

FEBRUARY ATLANTIC,

Now ready and for sale everywhere,

CONTAINS

WHITTIER'S ballad, The Witch of Wenham.
LONGFELLOW'S poem on A Dutch Picture.
DR. HOLMES' poem on the Presidential Question—How Not to Settle It.

HOWELLS' new story, Out of the Question.
BAYARD TAYLOR'S Studies of Animal Nature.
A SOUTH CAROLINIAN on The Political Condition of South Carolina.

THE CONTRIBUTORS' CLUB, bright and witty—full of good things.

MRS. THAXTER'S Sunset Song, with music by JULIUS EICHBERG.

TERMS: 35 cents a number; $4 a year; with life-size portrait of Bryant or Longfellow, $5; with both portraits, $6. Address

H. O. HOUGHTON & CO., Boston;
HURD & HOUGHTON, New York.

TUNIS JOHNSON,

AUCTIONEER,

OLD AUCTION HOUSE,

37 Nassau Street, New York.

Particular attention given to sales of

HOUSEHOLD FURNITURE,

at private residences and at store.

37 NASSAU STREET.

With and without Rockers;
heavy and light; large and small.
For OFFICE, LIBRARY,
STUDY, PIAZZA, PARLOR,
SEWING-ROOM, NURSERY—
wherever you want

SOLID COMFORT.

Send stamp
for an illustrated
Price-List

F. A. SINCLAIR,
Mottville, N. Y.

Be careful that the chairs are stamped with my name in full; others are imitations.

For sale by Furniture Dealers in New York and at 218 Fulton street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

OUT-SELLING IMMENSELY—THE Centennial Exposition.

DESCRIBED AND ILLUSTRATED.

The only complete, richly illustrated, low price work, 750 pages, only $2.50. Treats of the entire history, grand buildings, wonderful exhibits, curiosities, great days, etc. The best chance of 100 years to coin money fast, as everybody wants this work. 1,000 agents appointed first four weeks, 5,000 wanted. For full particulars address quickly, HOWARD BROTHERS, Publishers, Philadelphia, Pa., Cincinnati, O., Chicago Ill., or Springfield, Mass.

Be not deceived by premature books assuming to be "official," etc.

CAUTION. BALD HEADS

Can be covered with a piece exactly fitted to the Bald spot, so perfect, and with work so ingeniously contrived as to appear each hair just issuing from the skin, the hair being exactly of the same shade and texture as the growing hair; they are so perfect they cannot be detected. Made only at BATCHELOR'S Celebrated Wig Factory, 15 Bond Street, N. Y.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit, free H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine

MISFIT CARPETS.

English Brussels, Three Ply and Ingrain; also, Stair Carpets, Velvet Rugs, Crumb Cloths, etc., very cheap, AT THE OLD PLACE.

112 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

Carpets carefully packed and sent to any part of the United States free of charge.

SEND FOR PRICE LIST.

J. A. BENDALL.

BROOKLYN ADVERTISEMENTS.

OVINGTON BROTHERS,

246, 248, 250 and 252 Fulton Street,

BROOKLYN.

Fine China, Glass, Clocks,
Bronzes, etc., etc.

Just Received Invoices of

COPENHAGEN VASES,

LIMOGES FAIENCE VASES,

AND DOULTON WARE.

O'BRIEN & COMPANY,

IMPORTERS,

MANUFACTURERS and RETAILERS

or

DRY GOODS,

CARPETS,

CLOTHING

141 and 143, 151 to 159 Atlantic Ave.

We solicit an inspection of our magnificent assortment in all our Departments—forty-one in number—conceded to be the largest, most varied and best selected ever exhibited in Brooklyn, with a stock in value amounting to over half a million dollars.

Joseph O'Brien & Co.,

141 and 143, 151 to 159 Atlantic Avenue.

Lectures and Sermons,

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

FIRST SERIES.

The Education of Conscience.

Self Respect.

The Higher Reverence.

God on our Side.

Man and the Bible.

The Best Use of Sunday.

SECOND SERIES.

The Essential Piety of Modern Science.

A Rational Church.

Economy and Waste.

Also, WAY, TRUTH AND LIFE, a Biography of N. A. Staples, with sermons, price, $1.00.

For sale by CHARLES P. SOMERBY, 139 Eighth St., New York. Copies sent by mail at the rate of five cents each and postage.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.

Established in 1837.

Superior Bells of Copper and Tin, mounted with the best Rotary Hangings, for Churches, Schools, Farms, Factories, Court-houses, Fire Alarms, Tower Clocks, etc. Fully Warranted.

Illustrated Catalogue sent Free.

VANDUERN & TIFT, 102 E. 2d St., Cincinnati.

10 PER CENT NET.

Kansas, Missouri and Iowa Improved Farm First Mortgage Coupon Bonds Guaranteed. We guarantee, as an assurance, that we loan not to exceed one-third of the actual value. In over six years' business never lost a dollar; never delayed a day on interest or principal; neither we nor our customers ever took an acre of land under foreclosure. Send for particulars and references.

J. B. WATKINS & CO., LAWRENCE, KAN., or

HENRY DICKINSON, Manager, 72 Cedar Street,

New York

THE INQUIRER.

VOL. XXXII.—NO. 8. }
WHOLE NO., 1578. }

NEW YORK, JANUARY 25, 1877.

{ $3.00 PER ANNUM
{ 8 CENTS A COPY.

CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL NOTES:	133
LEADING ARTICLES:
Report of the Joint Committee.....	134
New Religious Movement in France.....	135
Eighteenth Century English Thought.....	136
The Sabbath and Creation Story.....	137
What is Orthodoxy?.....	138
LITERATURE:
The Religion of Evolution.....	139
Brief Reviews.....	141
New Publications Received.....	141
SELECTIONS:
Suggestions for Work and Improvement.....	141
HEARTH AND HOME:
The Mystery.....	142
Joseph and Benjamin. Chapter I.....	143
OUR BOYS AND GIRLS:
The Soul of the Appl.....	141
JOTTINGS.....	145
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT.....	146

HENRY W. BELLOW, John W. Chadwick, F. W. Clarke, Octavius B. Frothingham, Nicholas P. Gilman, James L. Hosmer, Charles C. Shackford and Henry M. Simmons are among the contributors to this number of THE INQUIRER.

THE Eastern Conference has adjourned, as seemed probable last week, without having accomplished anything, except the postponement for a time of warlike operations, and apparently adding considerably to Turkish prestige. There is not at this moment any immediate prospect of war, but the opening Spring at farthest must develop the ulterior designs of Russia. Rumors of ill-feeling between Paris and Berlin have been current, but are contradicted. It seems probable that the attitude of Bismarck will exercise very important influence upon the future course of the Eastern Powers.

ON Saturday last Albert Congdon, who was the master machinist of the Lake Shore road at the time the Ashtabula bridge was built, gave his evidence before the Coroner's inquest. From his frank statement it appears: 1st, that the material provided for the bridge was insufficient; 2d, that he who constructed it did not consider himself a competent bridgeman; and 3d, that Mr. Rogers, who was directed to erect it, did not know how. And this was on a road which, we are told, is one of the most carefully managed in the land. Charles Collins, the chief engineer of the road, has committed suicide.

MERCHANTS and business men generally continue to run a "waiting race." From the universal tendency to connect the general depression with the political situation it is natural to infer a readiness to move when the horn shall be sounded. But the wholesome influence of experience in the years that are past will probably restrain any widespread and violent speculative movement, even should February see the Presidential question amicably disposed of. The price of gold in currency remains quite steady at about 106½ to 106½, while silver continues to command more than 58d. per ounce in gold. The currency dollar is worth at present 94 cents and the silver dollar about 88½ cents. Demand loans in New York range from 4 to 6 per cent.

WE have a contemporary in the neighboring city of Brooklyn, called the Eagle, which last week favored us with a choice paragraph. We do not propose to reply to it, for our neighbor has the knack of a form of language with which we are unfamiliar and in which we should be distanced before we had fairly entered upon the race. Lest, however, some other good, innocent soul should have been misled by the unfortunate misplacing of a comma in the article entitled "Public Sentiment and the Presidential Dilemma," in our issue of January 11, we desire to say that we did not therein intend to assert that Mr. Tilden left the United States during the civil war, but simply that he "left the city and the country during our civil war in doubt, whether he felt a pang at the perils of the nation or a throb of sympathy with the cause of liberty, anti-slavery or union."

THE Executive Committee of the Western Union Telegraph Company ingloriously surrendered as soon as the House of Representatives cried havoc and let slip the dogs of war. We believe it has been a recognized rule of law that papers bearing upon a case in trial, which could be specifically identified and described, could be demanded and must be produced when called for by judicial authority. It seems to be now established until further orders, that in this free and enlightened country, where we have thrown off all the shackles so familiar under the effete despotisms of Europe, any one who suspects that there may have been dispatches sent over the telegraph wires which might prove interesting reading, has only to get a vote of the House of Representatives, and presto! the thing is done; his neighbor's correspondence is all before him, where to read.

REFERRING to our remarks in relation to Mr. Vanderbilt, the Jewish Messenger asks, "Pray, Mr. INQUIRER, whose example would you have us imitate if not that of the honest, industrious, and sagacious man of business?" Being ourself of an inquiring turn of mind, it delights us to have awakened the same disposition in another, and we take great pleasure in answering the question propounded to us.

In reply, then, we will say that we cannot conscientiously recommend the Messenger to imitate any one's example. We would earnestly advise an independent advance, with a firm grip upon some tangible principle or rule of life, and are strongly inclined to believe that it will be more successful if it simply undertakes to do the first right thing which presents itself, than it will if it stops to ask what would such or such an one have done in the same emergency.

THE election of Mr. Hoar as Senator from Massachusetts is the brightest gleam in our lately lowering sky! We have again a scholar, a gentleman, and an accomplished statesman in the Senate to answer when Massachusetts is called! What a victory over the spirit of partisanship and the juggleries of office-holders and the vulgar admiration for smartness and unscrupulousness, and the too frequent disposition Massachusetts of late years has shown in its elections to undervalue solid attainments, high culture, elevated tone and absolute purity of life, in its weak concessions to popular arts and political managers! It more than wipes out the disgrace the election of Butler brought upon the State, for it is an act of repentance and reformation. The threatened loss of Mr. Hoar from the House is now made up by his accession to the Senate, which we believe will become for him a throne of new power, and the beginning of new things in that House for the Republican party. All hail Senator Hoar! Mighty Mother Massachusetts! your absent sons proudly salute you!

A most remarkable statement is said to have been made last week to a reporter of a morning journal by a director of the Security Life Insurance Company, a gentleman well known "down town." It was to the effect that he did not know and could not be expected to know until the papers informed him of it, the financial condition of the company of which he was a director. He had supposed it was all right, but that was a matter which concerned the officers, not him. We give the sense of the interview as we understand it. He did not say what he directed, if not the business of the concern; in relation to that subject we are left to draw our own inferences.

If this is a true statement of the position, is it not about time for a new adjustment of ideas between corporate organizations and their customers—we do not want to have to say between swindlers and their dupes? We submit that there has been in the past a wide-spread feeling that the managers of a corporation, like the active partners of a firm, assumed a certain responsibility; that in the case of life insurance companies, for instance, long lists of well-known names composing their boards of direction were valuable, because impressible people supposed that the business of the companies was managed by those men, and were thus led to entrust dollars and cents to their keeping.

Would not perhaps a little judicious locking up, with rations of bread and water, on the charge of obtaining money under false pretences, applied to a few of the prominent men who have been engaged in sundry enterprises which have recently come to grief, tend to clear up the meaning of a few words and phrases, and so aid in the valuable work of adjusting our language to our ideas?

LAST Sunday morning and evening, it was our fortune to be present at the services held in a Methodist meeting-house just over the Connecticut border. It was a plain little rough-plastered building, standing on a hill overlooking the Sound, in the midst of the most lovely rolling country, now all white with snow, marked off into sections by irregular wandering stone walls, and showing, as only winter can show, the lovely tracery of graceful branches against hill and sky.

The evening services were especially interesting to us. During the earlier part the minister presided at the small cabinet organ very effectively, and the singing had the weird and plaintive character which is usually noticeable at such meetings. Then followed a prayer meeting in which a number of the older brethren took active part, both in exhortation and supplication. It happened that this was one of a series of revival meetings, and an organized effort was made to produce such a feeling as might lead to a public request, from individuals present, for the prayers of the congregation.

There was great apparent earnestness on the part of all the speakers, but their manner varied from that of ordinary conversation and communion to that of the exhorter, who, beginning slowly and quietly, gradually increased in vehemence and rapidity until he seemed possessed by a perfect whirlwind. We were particularly struck with the contrast presented by two men, who referred to the same incident at the time of their "conversion," in 1843; the one in stentorian tones, his long arms beating the air, and the tears running down his hollow cheeks, and the other in a sweet and gentle voice, with a kindly smile playing about his lips, and having an attitude of complete repose. We cannot say how those to the manner born may have been affected; for ourself, the gentle, pleading tone had a meaning that the other could never express.

The minister, a ready speaker, and a young man of more than ordinary ability, was peculiarly forcible in his call upon "sinners to come to Christ." The man whom he wanted to reach would say that he did not need to come; that he was honest in his business, upright in his conduct, correct in his life, faithful in the nurture and guardianship of his children. He was terribly mistaken. He was presenting a bad example to the young men around him; he was neglecting the great salvation; he was going downward, downward, to the everlasting hell. Now was the accepted time; would not at least one person step forward and ask the prayers of the congregation? But no, not one would move. The appeal was ingeniously put; no one could doubt the earnestness of the speaker; under favoring circumstances it was easy to see how a movement might begin and run like wild-fire through the crowded congregation. But the nerves were too steady, the charm would not work. We could not feel sorry that it was so; we sympathized with the devout faith of the preacher, but as we took the long walk back to our hotel, we could not but think how utterly impossible it was for him, able as he was, yet dominated by an idea, to conceive of the actual attitude toward his services and his scheme, of such an one as ourself, whom he would unhesitatingly class among the scoffers.

THE REPORT OF THE JOINT COMMITTEE.

THE report of the two committees, on a plan for regulating the count of the electoral vote, is probably as satisfactory as it could be made under the circumstances. It has one feature we much deplore—the introduction into the final court of arbitration of differences, of five members of the Supreme Court. We have all along resisted any proposition for needlessly embroiling the Supreme Court in matters that touch directly the partisan feeling of the country. It has already quite enough strain upon its functions, and must be called upon in the discharge of its regular duties to decide Constitutional questions that arouse much suspicion of its fairness. If cases are to be made for it outside its inevitable obligations and duties—which will still further task its repute for impartiality—we fear that it will be hopelessly involved in the distrust which already attaches to all other parts of the government.

But we are in no mood of fault-finding, and doubt not that the able committees, in their joint consideration of the whole question, have given this point a deeper study than irresponsible critics—necessarily without their means of estimating all the points of the crisis—are able to make. The agreement in any plan of such men of both parties as are found in the joint committee of the two Houses, (with one non-assenting member only, and that a silent one), is a triumph of peace and patriotism which ought to secure for it general respect and practical concurrence. It is probable that no other way than this devious one could be found out of the wilderness. Only a great sense of the importance of agreeing upon some forelooking plan could have brought about the adoption of a plan in many respects cumbrous, slow and objectionable. But statesmanship consists, not in devising the best ideal plans, but in seizing the best that are practicable. It is necessarily an art of compromises and expedients, and those who look upon it as capable of existing upon any higher plane, misread the history of politics, and confound philosophers and writers on civil law or morals with statesmen, who are to this order what pilots and navigators are to astronomers and students of meteorology. It is the business of our present statesmen to save the ship as it passes through the strait where Scylla and Charybdis both threaten it; and we must expect them to make some sudden tacks, and throw overboard, if necessary, some valuable portions of their cargo.

It is confessed by all candid men that the Constitution has not plainly provided the exact method in which the count shall be made. Precedent certainly gives the Vice-President, or acting President of the Senate, a right to decide what the count is. The only question has been whether the violence of party feeling, under the present circumstances of the country, would warrant the strain upon such a secondary form of authority as precedent. We think the committee have justly felt that it would not, and that the Tribune and Times have not shown a wise spirit or a statesman-like temper and foresight, in claiming for the right of the acting Vice-President, and presiding officer of the Senate, to decide the admissibility of electoral returns, and settle which set of returns shall be considered the legal one, where two sets are sent in from one State, and in fact, all the delicate questions that have arisen out of this disputed and closely balanced election. We do not question that law would justify their proposal, but is it a time when we can afford to rest the decision upon legal niceties? The object of the committee has been to devise a method which shall satisfy not the lawyers of the country, but the public mind. We surrender our serious scruples about the use of Judges of the Supreme Court in this plan because we recognize the exceptional and alarming difficulties presented by the present case. We have only an acting President of the Senate, not a man chosen for his office by the people, nor one, however deserving of their confidence, who has carried it by long and large services to the country. We have three States whose returning boards are of suspected purity. We have two States with double Governors and Legislatures. We have two sets of returns of electors in Oregon, and perhaps elsewhere. We have an angry democracy, sixteen years out of office; a President suspected of too great readiness to use military federal power in coercing States. We have a partisan Senate on one side, and a partisan House on the other. We are just at the end of a virulent campaign, wherein fraud, intimidation, bribery and corruption, have mutually, and with too many proofs, been charged by each party against the other. We have a set of Republican office-holders, drilled and banded, that do not possess the respect and confidence of the honest and intelligent portion of the Republican party. We have four millions of newly enfranchised negroes whom we can neither exclude from political power, nor trust with it, without almost equal danger, yet who must be dealt with on equal terms with white men. We have, besides, an almost unparalleled depression in business and in the value of property, with a bankruptcy of over 9,000 firms in the last year. There has been a dead-lock in Senatorial elections in Massachusetts, Illinois and Arkansas, happily just broken in the good old Bay State, and many other reasons besides for considering this a specially critical and perilous time in our national affairs. Amid all these threatening and trying circumstances, we say it is wise to consider the present exigency in all its seriousness and exceptional character, and adjust our conduct and plan of safety to it. Let us not vainly look too far ahead, when the 14th of February and the 4th of March are so near at hand. We want immediate relief, and a plan that suits the present urgency. Let Congress adopt the plan of the committee without needless debate and obtrusive party speeches. And let our Legislature proceed, after the crisis is passed, to devise future plans, by proposed amendments in the Constitution itself, which shall obviate all coming trials in the direction of a disputed Presidential election. We judge that this is the real feeling of sober patriots throughout the country, and we hope it will prevail with our Senators and Representatives, and with the President himself.

NEW RELIGIOUS MOVEMENT IN FRANCE.

AN interesting religious movement has, within a year, been commenced in Paris, precisely parallel—the national temperaments being allowed for—with the latest demonstrations here. In fact, its originator and high priest, M. Chark's Fauvety, compares it with the attempt of Charles Voysey in London, and with the enterprises of a corresponding character in American cities. It is called by its inaugurator, who is himself a layman, "La Religion Laique," as indicating its interest for people who are not committed to any ecclesiastical organization or system, and its sources in the sentiments that are common to human nature outside of technically religious associations, without respect for the authority of tradition.

This laical religion is not to be confounded with the "Secularism" of English Radicals, which is essentially a different thing, in spirit and in form. That is atheistical in temper as well as in doctrine,—this, in a fine, undogmatical sense, Theistical; that is materialistic,—this is spiritual; that is revolutionary,—this is regenerative; that is addressed to the feelings of working people,—this is commended to the thoughtful, cultivated class; that repudiates religion as a fraud, and hates it as an oppression,—this holds to religion as a power of emancipation and an inspirer of truth; that discountenances faith in ideal things and discourages the upward, onward look,—this is full of aspiration, and cherishes every immortal hope; that aims at the extermination of religious faith and observance,—this is an attempt to revive religious faith and reconstruct religious observance.

Equally distinct is this French conception from that of the German "Freie Gemeinden," that are so extensive among Germans at home, and the anti-Protestant, anti-Christian character of the German Free Religion is that by which it is most easily recognized. Its purpose seems to be less the building up of positive religious faith on new foundations of reason, than the pulling down of the popular structure. This may be a temporary phase of the movement—very likely it is,—but at present it is the phase the movement is best known by. The French movement, like the movement in this country, is in purpose constructive. It rather ignores the established system than assails it. It classifies instead of attacking; it is less polemical than inclusive, less controversial than sympathetic. It studies to comprehend the doctrines it rejects, and by placing them where they belong in the history of opinion, to express the reasons for its rejection of them. Errors, in its judgment, are truths in a state of arrested development, and are to be corrected by larger interpretations. Religion, it declares, is in essence always and everywhere the same; there is but one religion. The idea, thus far, is not new. The newness it possesses it owes to the fact that the position is taken in full view of modern science and philosophy, and with a definite intention of combating certain tendencies suggested by modern science and philosophy, which threaten disaster to personal character and to social life. The conception of "One Gospel in many Dialects," which has been a favorite one with mystical and sentimental spirits, is here entertained with intellectual clearness, and pushed with moral determination.

Such a movement as this in France is of great significance, for there, Christianity being identified with the Gallican Church, and religion associated with the jugglery of priests and the credulity of the vulgar, the intelligence and culture, the enthusiasm and earnestness of the best minds are trained in other and opposite directions; the natural ideality of the French genius is trained, as it were, against itself and feels rebuked when it is detected in the act of holding intercourse with religious ideas. Christianity has fallen into contempt as a system of superstition; to attempt any modification, any new adoptions or versions of that is as visionary as it is illogical. A rational Christianity is no more to be thought of than a rational idolatry, and the entire field of what we call the spiritual, the ideal, the potential world, the world of faith and hope, is abandoned to the attenuated saint and the wingless angel of an outworn mythology.

The situation elsewhere is different. The Protestant establishment in England is an aristocratic power of vast wealth and social influence, controlling education, affecting politics, standing in the way of industrial improvements. Secondly a system of opinions, primarily a social block or barrier, that affronts and exasperates the conscience of the working classes. Thence the natural outcome in England is "Secularism," a rude denunciation and denial in place of the contemptuous indifference of the unbelieving Frenchman.

In America, the situation is still different. Here, the freedom of religion from the trammels of Church and State establishment rebukes the French contempt and disarms the English violence; but this very freedom makes it easy to slip away from all religious associations, to lapse into indifference to ideal things, and thoughtlessly to follow the drift of loose scientific speculation. There is more of the French than of the English temper in the unreligiousness of our people. Hence, a closer correspondence between a movement like M. Fauvety's and our advanced religious rationalism, than there is between Charles Bradlaugh's atheism and anything that exists among us. The "infidelity" of the Paine school has no root here, and no future. The great achievement before us is to recall minds from Sensationalism to Idealism, from Materialism to Rationalism, from practical Atheism to faith in the realities of an invisible world. Christianity has agencies and potencies of its own, and is abundantly able to take care of itself. But rationalism, in the fine sense, needs fostering care. Would that in New York we had a Charles Fauvety to lead or animate an enterprise like that he has inaugurated so brilliantly in Paris. This monthly magazine, La Religion Laïque, of thirty-five octavo pages, has reached its sixth number, and is in most respects, a model journal of its class, bright, varied, hopeful, warm, sunny, but clearly intellectual, frank, sincere, brave, evading no question, avoiding no issues, appreciating all honest thoughts, and enlisting the good will of the best minds in the task of reviving religion in modern society. It was our purpose to give an account, in some detail, of the contents of the remarkable journal we have named, but our space is exhausted, and it is not necessary; for the most interesting feature in such a movement as M. Fauvety's is its spirit, and that has been sufficiently explained.

O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY ENGLISH THOUGHT.

FIRST NOTICE.

THE announcement a few months ago of a "History of English Thought in the Eighteenth Century," by Leslie Stephen, must have had a pleasant sound for all who had made the acquaintance of Mr. Stephen in his "Hours in a Library," and in various articles which, from time to time, he has published in the Cornhill and Fortnightly and other English magazines. For in these publications Mr. Stephen had proved himself to be a critic of the highest order; able to see a writer in his relation to his social and political environment, and note its action upon him and his reaction upon it; able to penetrate to the most characteristic quality of the writer or the book or phase of thought in hand, and state it in intelligible and luminous terms. But all of these writings, it now appears, were but the tightening of his armor and the sharpening of his sword for a tremendous spiritual encounter with the "sceptred spirits" of the eighteenth century, some of whom still "rule us from their urns," however impotent the great majority. The results of this encounter are now given to the reading world, in two generous octavos, pages 466, 469, which in this country bear the imprint of George P. Putnam's Sons. In this and in succeeding notices I propose to set forth these results with a view to interesting others in a work which I have found immensely interesting and suggestive.

In a short preface Mr. Stephen indicates the relation of his book to others of a somewhat similar character. It was suggested by Mr. Pattison's essay upon "Tendencies of Religious Thought in England from 1688 to 1750," which was included in the famous—some would say infamous—"Essays and Reviews." Leland's "View of the Deistical Writers" (1754-6) covers only the first half of the eighteenth century, and is besides a controversial, not a philosophical work. Of Lechler's "Geschichte des Englischen Deismus," Mr. Stephen speaks in a highly laudatory manner, but it is a history of those writers only who are known distinctively as deists, not of their orthodox opponents, who in different degrees were modified by the same general tendencies of thought. Mr. Hunt's "History of Religious Thought in England" differs from Lechler's, in giving an account of orthodox as well as heterodox, but his history is expository rather than critical. Mr. Stephen occupies a different standpoint, and differs widely from Mr. Hunt's estimates of the absolute and relative importance of various authors.

Mr. Stephen's first volume treats exclusively of the speculative and theological aspects of his subject; the second, exclusively of its moral and practical aspects. Thus he is obliged to go twice over the same ground, and in several cases to speak twice, in different connection, of one writer. Objections to this method are not inconceivable, but it would be difficult to settle on a better. The first volume is divided into eight chapters. Chapter First treats of "The Philosophical basis" of eighteenth century thought. In an admirable introductory section, the nature of the evolution of thought is set forth—its irregularity and inconsistency, the persistency of incongruous elements left over from discarded systems, the strained interpretations, the social and imaginative and romantic influences that retard the approximation to a higher truth. A second section treats of the Cartesian Philosophy, which, though it never obtained complete naturalization in England, furnished Locke and his school with their point of departure, and entered into combination with the most various and sometimes hostile forms of thought, especially with that of Dr. Samuel Clarke and his admirers. Section Third reviews the English criticism of the Cartesian system as it took form in the great founder, Locke, and afterward in Berkeley and Hume, in the "Common Sense" Philosophy of Reid and the materialism of Hartley and Monbodo.

Chapter Second gives the starting-point of Deism. Bossuet, in his history of the Variations of the Protestants, had demanded a uniform creed and civil punishment for all departure from it. But England, arriving at the idea of toleration, inferred the freest use of the privilege of thought thus granted. The starting-point thus given, Mr. Stephen proceeds to show what use was made of the privilege of free inquiry, and first, in Chapter Third, recites the story of "Constructive Deism"—that is, the attempt to substitute for Christianity a pure body of abstract truths, reposing on metaphysical demonstration. The names that signalize this attempt, directly or indirectly, are those of Locke and Toland, Clarke and Wollaston, Tindal and Chubb and Bolingbroke. Tindal was the greatest of the Deists, Clarke the protagonist of revelation. Chapter Fourth gives an account of "Critical Deism"—that is, the attempt to undermine the supernatural authority of Christianity by a critical examination of the Old and New Testaments. Here the great names, for or against it, are Leslie, Collins, Whiston, Sherlock, Bentley, Woolston, Middleton.

Chapters Fifth, Sixth and Seventh deal respectively with Bishop Butler and his famous "Analogy," David Hume and William Warburton. Butler is Mr. Stephen's hero of the eighteenth century, and Warburton his pet abomination, and he shows good cause for his admiration in the one case and his detestation in the other. Chapter Eighth, ending the first volume, is called "The Later Theology," and deals with "the Common Sense School" of Beattie and Jenyns; with "Science and Revelation," as regarded by the Hutchesonians, Campbell and Farmer, in their day famous writers on the miracles; with "Paley and his School," "The Subscription Controversy," "The Unitarians," Taylor, Price and Priestley; and, last of all, "The Infidels," Gibbon and Thomas Paine.

Interesting and attractive as the first volume is, the second is still more so, and is calculated to enlist the attention of a class of readers who will be comparatively indifferent to constructive or critical Deism, or any of their approximate conclusions. The first chapter in the second volume—the ninth in the book—treats of "Moral Philosophy;" first of the "Intellectual School" of Clarke and Price; then of the opposing optimistic and pessimistic schemes of Shaftesbury and Mandeville; then of "The Common Sense School" of Butler and Hutcheson and Reid; then of Hartley and Adam Smith, with their respective theories of association and sympathy; lastly of "The Utilitarians," Hume and Paley and Bentham, and their antagonists.

Chapter Tenth treats of "Political Theories," "The Principles of 1688," "The Walpole Era," "The French Influence," and so on. Burke has a section to himself, as he deserves, the Revolutionists another. Chapter Eleventh treats of Political Economy, giving a capital account of "The Mercantile System," "The French Economists," and "Adam Smith." In the closing chapter, "Characteristics," Mr. Stephen shows us how the Preachers, the Poets and General Literature were affected by the remoter discussions of the time. "The Reaction" is an admirable account, first of the religious reaction of Wesley and the Methodists, then of the poetic, headed by Cowper and Wordsworth.

The reader will see that we have here in these volumes a list of subjects of such great and varied interest that in the hands of an able writer, thoroughly equipped for his task by natural critical genius and immense research into the writings of the period, they cannot fail of proving deeply interesting and suggestive. Mr. Stephen is such a writer. He has more than talent. He has real genius for his work. If a good deal of criticism fails through defect of sympathy, as much more fails through too much sympathy. The critic takes the side of his subject, and becomes an advocate when he should be a judge. Mr. Stephen is always the judge, never an advocate. His own theological and ethical ideas are kept a good deal in reserve. But his whole book floats in them as in an atmosphere. He is an evolutionist, pure and simple; a believer in historic methods of inquiry. And he finds the entire history of eighteenth century thought an argument for evolution. His book will impress many readers as sad and hopeless, because so many brave hopes came to so little, because there was really so little to choose between the deists and their opponents, the optimists and pessimists. But looking closer, he will see that there was real advance; that failure was its method—failure to find in one place a true solution, obliging men to look for it elsewhere. Divinity students of Dr. Francis' time at Cambridge will not, without a pang, give up to Mr. Stephen's limbo of absurdity and contradiction the venerable names which Dr. Francis used to roll like sweet morsels under his tongue. But Mr. Stephen's dialectic convicts one after another of defective logic; all of defective knowledge of the origins of human creeds and morals and society. Without containing one direct argument for social evolution, his book is an argument for such evolution of the most impressive character. It is written in a singularly calm and clear and penetrating style. There is not an unintelligible sentence in the book. It is enlivened by a genial satire, in which there is not a particle of arrogance. It contains many sentences of aphoristic pungency and terseness. It teaches modesty and patience, but at the same time it teaches hope. It is a book which thoughtful men can hardly do without.

J. W. C.

THE SABBATH AND CREATION STORY.

THE present discussion of the Sunday Question revives our interest in the old story of God's rest on the seventh day of creation. Whence came that story? To say it descended from heaven and the Sabbath from it, is to give both, Sabbath and story, a poor foundation in many minds to-day. But to say the story grew out of that Sabbath which the Jewish nation had learned to love, is to give the Sabbath a surer foundation and the story a new beauty.

The Bible is not clear as to the origin of the Sabbath. The original law of the stone tables, as given in Exodus xxxiv. (so widely different from the accepted Decalogue), merely commands the Sabbath without explanation. The Decalogue in Deuteronomy v. explains the Sabbath as commemorative of the deliverance from Egypt. The Decalogue in Exodus xx. explains it as commemorative of God's rest from creation. Here are plainly successive deposits in the national thought and legislation, leaving the origin of the institution in doubt.

Rabbi Kohler, of Chicago, in a recently published sermon, advances views on this subject which, for their source and novelty, deserve notice. Considering the week and the Sabbath of astronomical or astrological origin in Chaldea, connected with the moon's quarters and "the seven planets," he thinks the Sabbath was not adopted by the Israelites till many centuries after Moses. He thinks it was strongly opposed by all the prophets before Josiah's reign, for its heathen origin; but as its blessings became apparent, it grew more and more in favor with them, obtained a place in the Mosaic code, and was at length treated by Ezekiel and others in the exile as the sign of a covenant with Jehovah. At first, however, it was considered only a national institution, commemorative of the deliverance from Egypt, as in the Decalogue in Deuteronomy. But later in the Exile, as the Jewish thought and hopes broadened, it came to be considered a blessing for all mankind, and was referred back to the origin of the race. "Inspired by this thought," says Rabbi Kohler, "the last composer of the Pentateuch, both in the Decalogue, Exodus xx., and in the first chapter of Genesis, entwined the Sabbath with creation itself, not refraining from representing God in the image of a human worker, in order to make man look up to God as his sublime pattern.

Probably few people would follow Rabbi Kohler in dating the adoption of the Sabbath among the Jews so late. But any explanation which derives the story of the creation from the Sabbath, makes the old story not a baseless fiction, but the natural outgrowth of a truth. The Sabbath, which, as the Jews regarded it, was no gloomy day, but a day of rest and freedom for servants and of domestic joy and spiritual elevation for all, proved itself a blessing more and more. And as it grew to be the most blessed feature of their religion, what more natural than that it should become a centre around which one thought after another gathered in the national tradition? And so the very story of creation shaped itself at length around the Sabbath, and the law of rest was found, as it is, linked with the foundations of nature.

H. M. S.

WHAT IS ORTHODOXY?

Nor long ago an evangelical paper, in describing the make-up of a certain popular clergyman, charged him with borrowing his "doctrinal indefiniteness" from the Unitarians. "Doctrinal indefiniteness" is good; but people who live in glass houses mustn't throw stones. We might dismiss the accusation with a "you're another," as the boys are wont to say, but it gives us a text for a longer sermon. It is really quite time that this assumption of definiteness of doctrinal belief, within the creeds of Orthodoxy, and of the indefiniteness in the uncreeded churches alone, was cast aside. If the Sphinx were to take her place outside any of our centres of population to-day and propound her question, "What is Orthodoxy?" we doubt if any Oedipus could be found to come out and answer it. What Orthodoxy was, we all know; but what it is now, is a vast conundrum. Some time ago, in his native New England, the writer thought he was upon the point of solving the question; but five years of Western life and contact have sent the solution farther off than ever, and he has now given up in despair. In fact, Orthodoxy, in these Western fields, is much oftener the color of Joseph's coat than at the East, where the population is more homogeneous and traditions more binding; and to know the doctrinal opinions of this man or minister, gives you no sure data for determining those of his next-town neighbor of the same denomination. Men are held to the old creeds by name and association merely; as a liberal Presbyterian said to me that he regarded the Westminster Confession in his body simply as a recognition of their denominational descent, and not as a transcript of to-day's belief; and that so generally was this understood, there could be no reasonable charge of moral compromise in the matter.

In the same denomination, along with rigid retainers of the old creed, you find those who have parted with nearly every vestige of it; and when you come right down to it frankly and honestly, the question "what is the doctrinal belief of the whole body to-day," it is as difficult to answer of the folds of Orthodoxy as of Liberalism. The articles, whether nine or thirty-nine, are twisted into more shapes than Hamlet's cloud, and change color like the chameleon to different visions. The minister of a leading Trinitarian church in one of our Western cities told me that he was in entire accord with the Rev. Dr. Peabody in his views of Christ; and another of the same denomination, unfolding his christology, answered to my remark, "But your Christ, then, is one with Mr. Frothingham's in his 'Religion of Humanity'; it is an idealization of humanity, and independent of the historic Jesus." "Well, I know it."

The writer once preached a sermon on exchange before one of the most radical congregations of the West, on the nature of religion, in which incidentally he considered some revival teachings on the subject, and in passing out of the church overheard the remark, "Yes, but he was too severe on them." But, on reading the same as an essay before a conference in another city, the Congregationalist minister of the place, who happened to be present, came to him and was pleased to commend the paper and express himself in essential agreement with it.

These are only a few illustrations that most men doubtless could multiply from their own experience. The fact is, the leaven of thought is working in all the sects. It is crumbling the old creeds as the frost rives the rocks. Men think they are riding at anchor, when really they are drifting; and in the rising flood of intellectual questioning, fancy they are keeping over the old ground, while they are being carried on and leaving their old horizon far behind. "But we hold to the essentials," they persist; and, if by essentials they mean what is really essential to religious faith, doubtless they do, and somewhat more, as time may show; but they who made the creed would never have recognized it nor admitted the claim.

Well, in the words of the great "statesman," "What are you going to do about it?" Just what we do with the law of gravitation or any other great fact of nature or human life—nothing. What is there to do except to recognize the fact and accept it and conform to it? Human thought moves on. The votes of synod and council may mark its past reach at any period, but they cannot stop its present and future flow. It comes not all at once through society or sect, but one by one, here and there, like stars along the evening sky or the leaves of the spring woods. So it has been in the past; so it probably will continue to be.

There are those ready to fling the charge of dishonesty and time-serving at such as linger inside the old limits after acceptance of the letter of the creed has ceased, and doubtless the charge is sometimes just, but far oftener it would not be; and for one, I learn to be more lenient in all such judgments with every year. Men's religious beliefs and outlooks are so much matter of slow and silent growth that their logical relationship is not easily and at once determined to themselves, and long-cherished organic interests and associations are naturally strong. We cannot but sympathize with that spirit which, having gained larger vision itself, wants to stay and widen the horizon of its own household of faith, even amid what may seem intellectual inconsistency and compromise to us, but not to it. Meanwhile, it is for us all, Orthodox and Liberal, in the "doctrinal indefiniteness" which characterizes every ecclesiastical fold taken as a whole, to see the onward movement of human thought touching the deep things of God, and to make sure that we are true to ourselves while we abstain from all harsh judgment of our brother.

F. L. H.

LITERATURE.

THE RELIGION OF EVOLUTION.*

THIS book, by a Unitarian clergyman of Boston, is one that deserves attention from all religious people who are concerned for the future of faith. In these times we are day after day hearing very much about "science and religion." It is quite open for those who will to believe, as we do believe, that too much is said on the subject, and that we might very well spare a large part of the discussion and disquisition in which it is the present fashion to indulge. We have two reasons for this belief. It is very natural, it is perhaps inevitable, that living in the midst of this controversy, undeniably of high importance, we should exaggerate the novelty and the consequence of the questions really at stake. Writers who, like some scientific lecturers of our day, are comparatively unacquainted with the long course of man's thought from antiquity till now, speak as if the issue which so deeply interests them were novel. Their tone is the tone of those who are handling subjects before untouched or but slightly treated. But in truth the seeming opposition of the religious mind and the scientific mind is as old as human nature itself. The difference has been illustrated in every literature; it has been manifest under every form of faith. It is the variation of two dispositions of mind which have always been, are now and will probably always continue to be—"All men are either Platonists or Aristotelians." The issue is not new, nor is it in its present shape of such momentous consequence as many imagine. The decision has not been made by any foregone generation between faith and knowledge. All our fathers have lived with the same great antithesis in their nature. They have died, and still it is neither faith nor knowledge that singly rules us, but faith and knowledge together still. We may define more sharply than those before us this or that phase of difference, but we cannot put an end to a diversity whose roots are in the nature of things. The slightly scientific and the rashly religious will come to blows here and there. Deceived by their own excessive energy, and blinded by the much powder they burn, they will mistake their skirmishes for campaigns, on whose result depends the mastery of the world. But the great army of mankind moves on, how slowly, but yet so surely; hearing "rumors of wars" and "battles" indeed, yet supported on either hand by that very faith and that same knowledge so often reported to be locked in fatal strife. The opposition of science and religion—it is in every man, and no man can put an end to it; the anxiety wherewith we trouble ourselves to settle the question once for all, must hereafter seem somewhat vain-glorious. The labor of solving every riddle of life is not for any generation. Our solution is never final.

But we doubt the value of much of the discussion of science and religion at present, for another reason. The general lines of distinction between knowledge and faith are easily laid down. The philosophical theory of their divergence is not difficult of construction. The ground principles are very simple. The chief occasion for dispute is here, as is almost always the case, in the application of the principles. Now too much handling of the matter of science and religion is easily proven when we hear nothing but iteration and reiteration of the fundamental principles, with no fresh applications of them to the latest matters in dispute. The Unitarian body is exceedingly given to broad disquisition on this general theme, wherein it is most emphatically stated that there is no "conflict" between true faith and actual knowledge of nature. But Galileo is, we think, compelled to over-much hard labor as an illustration and application of the thesis. And we doubt if it be well to refrain from any later example than the geological controversy of the last generation. No, the reason why this matter is in so many minds and on so many tongues to-day is, not because of Galileo, but because of Mr. Darwin; not because we are anxious to know the age of the earth, but because we ask, with a quite fresh interest, "Where did man come from?" We think, then, that all treatment of the question of science and religion which does not enter into the merits of the present theory of evolution is quite superfluous. And we believe that there is in fact much very vague discoursing upon these matters from Unitarian pulpits. "There can be no battle between sound science and essential religion." We hear this again and again. "And if evolution be sound science, or rational philosophy, then we will accept it." So the preacher declares. But these are plain points. They are emphasized and reiterated far too often. That which the people would like to know is the frank and honest opinion of the educated minister upon the special issue. "Your opinion is not final in matters of science." It is not final, indeed, in any matters. But, as a man of books, study, thought, tell us plainly what you think. Do you believe that Mr. Darwin has made a real addition to our knowledge of natural laws? Do you accept, in whole or in part, Mr. Spencer's theory of evolution? How do you stand, how do you lean, in regard to these subjects? Give point to your generalities by special applications here. You have nothing to lose by candor. The matter has certainly been before the public mind sufficiently long for you to have formed some opinion. We think it high time that our preachers should abandon their "ifs," and with entire frankness speak their minds for or against this philosophical theory of evolution.

It is, then, with great pleasure that we welcome Mr. Savage's "Religion of Evolution." The preface concisely states the object of the work. "It is only necessary in answer to the question, 'If evolution is true, what have we left in the way of religion?'" The "if" is the questioner's, not Mr. Savage's. He accepts the theory of evolution as expounded by Herbert Spencer. And the book gives us his own religious belief to show what, by one personal example, the Religion of Evolution may be. The title of the book might, for exactness, be the "Religion of an Evolutionist," for evolution is a philosophy. It must modify greatly many prevailing religious ideas, but it is not likely to establish any new form of faith with a fresh name. Religiously, Mr. Savage is a Christian; philosophically and scientifically, he is an evolutionist. The twelve chapters which compose the book were evidently first written for delivery as Sunday sermons. The revision which they have undergone for publication has probably been slight. This fact, while it may not fairly exempt them from criticism as sermons, may well blunt the edge of a criticism which would be appropriately applied to a treatise.

As a book of discourses, then, upon the various modifications which a believer in evolution must make in the popular religious creed, Mr. Savage's book deserves high praise. Both in manner and in matter it has many admirable qualities. The style is vigorous, clear, straightforward, at times blunt. The author has scarcely an obscure sentence, and this merit in a book on such a theme must be allowed to be a high one. With Mr. Savage "the style is the man." Those who have once listened to him learn to expect from him plain words used with a single meaning and sentences, about whose construction there can be no reasonable doubt. Without affectation, the style passes at times into the natural rhetoric of an earnest mind, and possesses a peculiarly convincing power. The illustrations really illustrate. We should have to search far for a writer whose figures of comparison and of contrast are more pertinent and striking. Take this, for instance, "Theology, in its attempt to exalt man, takes him out of and sets him apart from the order of nature, and then abuses nature as an untrustworthy guide in religious things, because it does not find moral qualities—love and mercy—in stones and mountains and trees, as if the mainspring of a watch should start into independent life and go to searching through the rest of the machinery in the attempt to find that of which itself was the representative, and should then declare on its honor as a good piece of steel that the watch showed no signs of a mainspring, and thus was radically defective!"

*The Religion of Evolution. By M. J. Savage. Boston: Lockwood, Brooks & Co. New York: James Miller.

As with the manner, so with the matter. It would be difficult to mistake Mr. Savage's thought in any single paragraph. Clearness of mind, vigor of reasoning, logical consecutiveness are very marked throughout the book. There are here no beatings about the bush, no evasions, no nebulosities. One feels that the frequent assertion by the writer of the supremacy of the truth is no empty formula with him. The work is one which could come only from a perfectly sincere, courageous and manly mind. And that it will have the effect of quickening such qualities in all who read we can hardly doubt.

Mr. Savage does not seek to prove the truth of evolution as a natural law; but, starting with a belief in its universal validity, he illustrates and confirms it from the history of the great ideas of religion. The results to which we have been brought by the process he summarises in the successive chapters upon the God of Evolution; the Man of Evolution; the Devil, or the Nature of Evil; the Evolution of Conscience; Love in Law; Prayer; Bibles, and the Bible; Atonement; Christianity and Evolution; and Immortality. To review these chapters in detail would be like reviewing a system of theology. But there is not one of them which we would not recommend to the earnest perusal of thoughtful men and women as a fresh, vigorous and strongly religious treatment of its special theme.

Mr. Savage has our entire sympathy in maintaining that the theory of evolution is, so far from being atheistic, the most theistic of theistic systems. The argument it offers for the unity of God is invincible, and it gratifies the deepest, most genuine religious instincts. But let no one expect to find in this book, or in any book written from such a standpoint, an entirely new system of belief. Let no rational religionist dread that a total reconstruction of faith awaits him if he embraces the evolution doctrine. For a prime argument in favor of its acceptance is the comprehensiveness with which it takes in all the best elements of existing doctrines. It is simply a universal doctrine of life, and growth because of life. And its general acceptance would be possible only through a general "revival" of sound thinking and real intellectual and spiritual humility in face of the facts of the universe. We believe that a philosophy of evolution is to be the philosophy of the future. We are confident that faith will gain and religion be confirmed by its triumph. It is most advisable for the ministers of religion to be first to see this fact and to lead the way in that gradual change of ideas which is inevitable and will in the end be salutary. In so doing they may well, they should, indeed, emphasize ideas which do not fall within the province of scientific inquiries. In the transition to the new doctrine in its fulness and entirety the teacher of religion should repeat again and again, "Nothing evolved that was not first involved" in the Divine Being. "He who planted the ear, shall He not hear? He who formed the eye, shall He not see?" "Supplemented as it should be with Plato's doctrine of Ideas," we have heard Rev. Dr. Hedge say, "the doctrine of evolution will triumph, and deserves to do so." Having a thorough confidence in the gradual advance toward universal reception of this philosophy, we feel ourselves less liable to misconception in criticising the efforts of its friends. We desire the day of victory as soon as may be; and that victory which consists solely in persuasion will be deferred by any partial and one-sided treatment of the subject. Mr. Savage's book, as the first American book taking so frank a position in favor of evolution, should have the friendly criticism which a forerunner demands. Its merits are very high. We only regret that it has been issued from the press without a more careful and thorough revision than it appears to have received. Its tone is generally admirable, and it cannot fail, as a whole, to leave a deep impression of its author's religiousness and substantial reverence of soul. But in numerous passages we think Mr. Savage is not true to the real spirit of a genuine disciple of evolution. For, beyond the adherents of every other philosophy, the evolutionist should be generous in his judgments of all forms of faith, and catholic in his appreciation of truth, however much mingled with error. Mr. Savage has frequently stated this duty in admirable terms, and if we were disposed to go into detail we should condemn him in one passage out of his own mouth in another. This is saying that we have found great inconsistencies of temper between different pages, and some statements we can scarcely reconcile with each other. The tone of the work is in many places too purely controversial for the best effect. The author seems, to us, to do much injustice to the religion of the Hebrews; and he makes assertions as to their beliefs and practices which we do not think careful scholarship would endorse. He seems to us to place too much emphasis upon the part of fear in all early religions, and, as a rule, to have too little appreciation of a "progress of doctrine" after the life-time of Jesus. He exaggerates the by amount of mention given to them, the importance of the physical sciences, and does not sufficiently emphasize the higher science of man. He has too little place for some very essential parts of religion—the sense of mystery and the awe and the wonder which must enter into faith in all times. He appears to set too much value upon many so-called "explanations" in nature and in man.

But we are not disposed to dwell upon the deficiencies of this book. It has the "faults of its virtues" indeed; but while perceiving them, we would not seem to be in any degree insensible to the high and noble tone which inspires by far the largest portion. It is a brave, powerful, edifying work, and we hope that it will be read very widely, and effectually prove to many that religion is in these latest days still the natural disposition of the courageous and thoughtful mind.

W. P. G.

WE have been glad to notice that Mr. Chadwick's Book of Poems, of which about two thousand are said to have been sold, has been received so favorably by the press. Mr. Chadwick preached a fine sermon on the evening of Sunday, the 14th, at Unity Chapel, Harlem, on "The Faith of the Doubters," whom he represented as the chief believers of our time, doubting the less to believe the greater truths.

REVIEWS.

THE ARUNDEL MOTTO. A Novel. By Mary Cecil Hay. New York: Harper & Brothers.

If this novel of 167 pages were condensed to one-half its present size, simply by the elision of insignificant episodes and trivial descriptions, it would make, in spite of its improbable plot, a very readable little tale. The story is of a girl who mistakes a man madly in love with her for another of the same name who had killed her (the heroine's) brother in a duel. The author seems to forget that under no circumstances could there be even the most distant social intercourse between any woman with a spark of self-respect and a man holding such a tragical relation to her. There could, at least, be no mistake about their position; nor could an éclaircissement be long deferred.

Miss Hay's style is decidedly amateurish; she indulges in a great deal of tautology, and her idea of colloquial English is rather startling. Witness the following specimen phrases put into the mouths of her most aristocratic characters: "like most little boys are," "those sort of people," "like you used," "who do you mean?", "thanks very much," "whatever do you mean," etc., etc. Moreover, it is noticeable that these aristocrats are frequently made to conduct themselves in a manner unbefitting ladies and gentlemen. But, to compensate for their rudeness, there is an immense deal of osculation introduced. Everybody kisses everybody else. The hero is the only man who does not kiss the heroine until he gets within a couple of chapters of the end. In that brief space, however, he makes up for his previous continence.

Apart from these defects, of which the worst is the extreme diffuseness of the narrative, "The Arundel Motto" possesses considerable merit. The sentiment is pure, the interest well sustained, and the author shows occasionally a sense of humor to which she might certainly allow a freer play. Some chapters are very good, and the novel as a whole will repay perusal.

RARE GOOD LUCK; A Fortune in Seven Strokes. By R. E. Fraucillon. New York: D. Appleton & Co.

"Rare Good Luck" is a wonderful tale of hairbreadth 'scapes and moving accidents, whereof the hero is a cheerful individual, a kind of sublimated Mark Tapley, who receives as the best of good fortune what most men would consider extremely bad luck—from falling over a cliff in the first chapter, to marrying, in the last, the heroine of the book, who is scarcely what one would call a sympathetic character. But for a writer of sensation novels, Mr. Fraucillon can boast a clear and easy style; he writes with vigor and conciseness, and his characters talk naturally. He must be, we should think, capable of better work than "Rare Good Luck."

THE MAGAZINE OF AMERICAN HISTORY. With Notes and Queries.

Edited by John Austin Stevens. New York: A. S. Barnes & Co. Subscription, $5 per annum. January, 1877.

We welcome this latest contribution to the wants of the historiographer, which comes in sumptuous form from the press of A. S. Barnes & Co. A small quarto, well printed on heavy paper, it is as handsome as need be, and the contents of the January number give promise that it will be made the depository of valuable and curious information. It embraces in its scope historical and biographical papers, original documents, reprints of rare documents, notes and queries, proceedings of the New York Historical Society and literary notices of historical publications, and being edited by the Librarian of the New York Historical Society, it emanates from a source which will command respect.

HISTORY OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK. By Mrs. Martha J. Lamb. New York and Chicago: A. S. Barnes & Co. Parts 5 to 10 inclusive.

The Spring of 1691 has arrived. Governor Stuyvesant has surrendered to the English. Admiral Evertzen has reconquered the colony for the Dutch, who in turn cede it to England. The stratagems and diplomacies are unravelled with simple and comprehensive statements. The social and political influences brought to bear, both in Europe and America at the period under review, are discussed with impartial candor.

The superior quality of this history is enough to render it popular wherever public spirit and culture are found. The portraits and signatures, the armorial bearings and other illustrations, are great additions. The maps and full-page illustrations at the commencement of each part are full of interesting features. The provincial life is admirably illustrated by the text, as well as pictorially. The work is admirably written, and the mechanical execution is especially commendable.

NEW PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

BOOKS.

From Scribner, Armstrong & Co., New York.
MICHAEL STROGOFF, The Courier of the Czar. By Jules Verne. Ninety full page illustrations. $3.00.

From A. S. Barnes & Co., New York.
HISTORY OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK. By Mrs. Martha J. Lamb. Parts V.-X. From Roberts Brothers, Boston.

Kismet. No Name Series.

MAGAZINES.

POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY. ATLANTIC MONTHLY. SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY. ST. NICHOLAS.

SELECTIONS.

SUGGESTIONS FOR WORK AND IMPROVEMENT.

[Rev. J. B. Harrison, in the Vinceland Independent.]

(Concluded.)

9. We need to understand, as few of our people yet understand, the fatal mischief of debt, the parent of so many evils. There is commonly a delusion connected with "going into debt." It is always harder to pay than we think it will be. It is a good subject for inquiry everywhere how much the towns owe for school-houses, or public buildings and improvements of any kind; whether our churches are in debt, and what incumbrances rest upon the business enterprises of the community. A man in debt nearly always thinks he is worth much more than he is really worth; and he unconsciously lives, and spends money, on the scale of greater wealth than he actually possesses.

These are very important practical matters, and they should be thought of and discussed by the people everywhere. No success of any political party, no financial legislation whatever, or "improvement in business," can make people permanently successful or prosperous while they are generally in debt. Nor can any system of morals or religion successfully oppose the pressure in the direction of dishonesty, which is connected with debt, failures in business, bankruptcy regulations, etc., except by opposing and removing these conditions and causes of dishonesty.

10. We should cultivate everywhere a public sentiment favoring and requiring a more strict obedience to the laws of our country. In many portions of the country some of the laws are habitually disregarded, sometimes openly violated by prominent citizens. In such cases, if any one tries to have the laws enforced, he usually receives no sympathy or co-operation from the leading members of the community. Such a course is extremely foolish, and cannot fail to encourage disorder and increase crime. It is the duty of all citizens to assist in the enforcement of the laws.

At the same time our people should be awakened to the dangers and evils of over legislation.

11. For a long time to come the people of our country will need more knowledge of subjects connected with political economy and the principles of government. Correct or intelligent views of such subjects as finance, the relations between capital and labor, and the best legislation for all classes of the people, are not to be reached by intuition. In regard to such subjects the "thinking" of persons whose minds have not been trained and disciplined is apt to be wrong. The methods and laws of scientific investigation, that is, of accurate and successful thinking, will command and reward greatly increased attention in the near future, and we should prepare for such improvements. The best minds among our young men should be directed to the lessons of national experience as recorded in history in regard to all subjects connected with government, citizenship, and national life and character.

12. The place of Art in culture, and in the life of the people, and the best means for expelling ugliness and coarseness from our homes and streets, are topics of deep interest for us as Americans. Also, the best methods of organizing our daily life, that is, of arranging all kinds of work so as to save time and strength. Under this head there is one great lesson for everybody to learn—that is, we must decide to do without some things—in property, in knowledge, in pleasure, and in all kinds of possessions and attainments, and to be content without them, so that we shall not scatter our powers in too many directions, and so fail in all. The popular teaching that everybody should “aspire” to everything is idiotically mischievous, and leads many people to disdain all useful work.

13. We must have everywhere a principle and spirit of patriotism, which shall give a deeper meaning to the word: not an affected and absurd sentimentality, but a sober, practical, intelligent love for what is good in our institutions and national life, a serious and reverent devotion to the interests of the country, as our country, as the home of our fathers and of our children; a sense of the high responsibilities and sacred duties of citizenship. We must nurture and strengthen a feeling of fraternity and comradeship for each other throughout the country, against all partisan and sectional prejudices.

14. The people who do not attend the churches should speedily awake to their own responsibility and duty in the moral culture of the country. They should reflect that finding fault with the churches cannot release anybody from the obligations to society and to our country which rest upon us all. If we are doing nothing, our own inaction vitiates our wisest criticism. Especially is it important that these people should come into some relations with each other and with their neighbors. People who will work with nobody fall into many crochets and conceits, and such narrowness brings a terrible retribution.

The church is imperfect, and should be criticised for worldliness, and for whatever is wrong in her life or teaching. But to be useful, criticism should be just, and it cannot be just if devoid of sympathy. The people who criticise the church are imperfect too. Our common infirmities should give us a feeling of fraternity for each other. Nobody need shrink from any just or intelligent judgment. We shall be tried by the standard of utility, of the real worth of our work.

15. The practice of living above our means in order to be equal with our neighbors, and the feeling of discontent if our dress and houses and furniture are not so good or so fashionable as those of other people, if not corrected, will lead to general personal unhappiness and failure. As there is no division into classes here, there is really no limit to this insane effort to live as well as the people a little above us. No degree of success ever satisfies those who once admit this feeling. This measuring ourselves by the style of our sofas, chairs and carriages, really comes from want of self-respect, and is unworthy of American citizens. Many people who are furnishing their houses with so much attention to style ought first to pay the laboring people who have done their work.

16. Let us think definitely what is the end, or object for which all good men or women should work in this country. It is that there may be as many healthy, cheerful, industrious, self-sustaining, orderly and useful people in the country as possible. As many prosperous homes, and as little idleness, disorder, ignorance, disease and crime as possible. These are the highest objects for which the people of a nation can work. The people who labor for these ends ought to value each other's work far more than they now do. Sensible, clear-minded people should be able to assist each other in the promotion of these rational objects without parade or gushing sentimentality.

17. One great means for the accomplishment of all these things is, that the people of our country should talk about them. If such subjects were habitually talked about everywhere, seriously and intelligently, important practical results would follow. There is wretched waste of time in most families, and of the opportunities of social life, because the talk at table and wherever the family assembles, is mostly so trivial and empty of thought and interest. The same drivelling gossip flows on year after year. Few things are more amazing than the pettiness and emptiness of the talk with which so many families are content to employ all their opportunities for companionship. This family conversation is the real education of the children of a family, and this accounts for the habits of inaccurate speech and “bad grammar” of many graduates of boarding schools and colleges. They always heard it at home. It is their “mother tongue.” The state of our country is a summons to earnest endeavor, especially for our young men and women. These suggestions are in accord with the aims and judgment of the most far-seeing men of all schools and parties. I shall be glad to hear from readers of these suggestions and to receive any one's thought about the methods of work; and I am always glad to meet practical people who are interested in such subjects.

HEARTH AND HOME.

THE MYSTERY.

BY F. W. CLARKE.

He is at rest.
The eternal mother clasps him to her breast.
Dead! and we weep;
We say, with streaming eyes,
He is in Paradise
Who seems to sleep,
And yet, in spite of faith, pale sorrows vigils keep.

Why flow our tears?
Is it that we, unthinking, harbor fears
For that dull clay?
Or is it that belief,
Too weak to conquer grief,
Itself gives way,
Casting the bitter lie at everything we say?

Or is it vain regret
That he who died is not among us yet,
To know indeed,
Our love for him was more
Than ever we before
Within our hearts could read?
Death scatters, always, love's most precious seed!

If he were with us now,
Light in those eyes and thought within that brow,
We could undo
Much that has made him frown,
Much that has cast him down,
Much that we rue;
And make this life to him like Paradise anew.

O! heavy thought!
How much more joy for him we might have wrought,
And gladness won!
We mourn not for the dead,
But for kind words unsaid,
And deeds undone,
Which might have made life's turbid current run
Brighter than dew-drops in the morning sun.

And thus it ever is;—
Mourning the death of opportunities
Our lives pass by.
Will their unresting ghosts
In dim, despairing hosts,
Confront us when we die,
To haunt us then eternal as the sky?
Or may we then forget,
And in oblivion lose all regret,
While only peace wins immortality?

JOSEPH AND BENJAMIN; OR, THE EMPEROR
AND THE REPUBLICAN.

[Retold from Berthold Auerbach for THE INQUIRER.]

BY C. C. SHACKFORD.

THE words of the Bible can frequently be applied to the Emperor Joseph, of Austria. It is written in the forty-second chapter eighth verse of the book of Genesis: "And Joseph knew his brethren, but they knew him not."

Yes, Emperor Joseph knew his fellow-men as brethren, but they, few only of them, knew his benevolent heart, so long as it beat with life. And yet, kindness and nobility of thought were no mere occasional moods in him; the desire and feeling of obligation to be a kindly brother to his fellow-men was always present in him. He went constantly about the world as if in a temple, earnest and reverent in the unceasing endeavor to ennoble himself and to be helpful to his fellow creatures.

In such a disposition, then, the Emperor Joseph was travelling toward Paris in the Spring of the year 1777. He had sent his suite forward, and had with himself in the carriage only his two attendants, the Counts Colloredo and Cobenzl; he was himself travelling under the name of the Count von Falkenstein.

CHAPTER I.

THE GOD-FATHER'S RELAY HOUSE.

"This is what one gets by travelling incognito. When it comes to the pinch, we have to unmask after all." So grumbled a grey-bearded servant in good Austrian German before the post-house at the last stage before reaching Paris. He then went to the carriage door, took off his hat respectfully, and said: "Your Majesty—I ask pardon, Herr Count—there are no post-horses here; now we've got to stay in this confounded hole."

"Patience, patience," answered the ringing voice of the Emperor; "I will get out."

The servant opened the door, let down the steps, and the Emperor alighted. He was then about thirty years old, of slender figure, and wore a grey coat with steel buttons, and a three-cornered hat trimmed with fine gold lace on his powdered head. As he now took off the hat and looked about him, a delicate, rather long, but handsome face was to be seen, from which shone mild, clear blue eyes, while around the mouth played an unmistakable expression of goodness and benevolence.

"I must wait," said he, smiling, to his two companions. "I must learn how other people feel, who don't always have the way smoothed before them."

The two attendants bowed in polite acquiescence, without answering a word. Colloredo, stiff and soldier-like in his bearing, and with a great scar upon his face, was a few years older than the Emperor, while the smooth-faced and handsome Cobenzl was about his equal in age.

The postmaster came up, took off his cap with a polite bow, but immediately put it on again defiantly, as if bethinking himself that, as a free man, he ought not to humble himself before the aristocrats; he said that without previous notice he could not have so many horses in readiness, at this moment, indeed, he had not any.

"And why not?"

"Because I have sent my horses away to bring back the guests to the christening."

"Ah! have you a christening in the house? It's a good sign to have uninvited guests arrive; it promises much unhoped for good fortune for the child."

The landlord heard the Emperor's French, and, as he had come on the road from Metz, was all the more sure that the new arrival was no Frenchman; he answered, dropping his chin upon his breast, "Thank you, sir! I am not at all superstitious, and do not wish to be, even when good fortune is prophesied. If one accepts one belief, the other will follow."

"Then you are entirely free from superstition?"

"Yes; let every one be happy in his own way, that's a good saying of your King Frederick, of Prussia. I have given my son a Protestant god-father too; he can't come himself, I'm sorry to say, but the child is to have his name. Our priest is shrewd enough to act as if he knew nothing about it."

The postmaster imparted this information with the cheerfulness and self-satisfaction which are so natural to the French, and with the easy flow of words which seems to belong to their language.

During this explanation, the guests had entered the inn with the landlord. The latter brought forward an engraving, saying, "That's the god-father of my first-born son; he's the greatest man of our century."

"Of the whole century?"

"Your King Frederick," answered the postmaster, with a friendly air of patronage, "is a great man too. I know that, though he has beaten us Frenchmen so horridly. But we're not to blame. Louis XVth's bad government, and the miserable creatures of generals are to blame. My god-father is much greater than King Frederick, to my mind, at least. I don't want to offend you, if you are Prussians; my god-father is a philosopher, a wonder-worker, who rules the lightning, a man of freedom from the New World."

"And has he written to you from the New World and given his consent?"

"He lives here in our own neighborhood, at Passy, and he has sat there where you are sitting now and drunk my wine and eaten my bread, and here's where I mean to hang his picture; whoever comes in shall see it and say: 'Look! there's one of the greatest men the world has ever seen, and he was a poor printer, and his motto ought to be spread abroad: Virtue is the only nobility.'"

The postmaster unrolled the picture, and the three men saw the portrait of Benjamin Franklin with his motto beneath it.

"I am glad," said Joseph, "that you set that man so high."

"But don't you believe," asked Cobenzl, "that there are also good princes?"

"Why not? Any one may be a good man. As I said, I have no prejudices and no superstitions. Herr von Voltaire has passed two nights in my house. Do people in Germany, too, know something of my god-father?"

"Certainly they do."

"And I tell you," continued the talkative host, "the Court of Versailles is still playing a hidden game, but we know everything! Three million livres and arms and vessels have already been secretly sent to the American States. It's just like two lovers who have confessed their love in private and exchanged gifts, they think the world knows nothing about it, but the world has known all a long time, and the public wedding must come soon. France must help to establish American independence, and if my son, who is to be christened to-day, were only old enough I would gladly send him over the sea. There we can cut off the right arm of the confounded English."

The merry notes of a post-horn were heard before the house. The postmaster went out hurriedly to welcome the guests. The Emperor sat still gazing before him, and he murmured as if to himself: "There is a strangely excited spirit abroad among these Frenchmen, and all over Europe it's just as it is here, while on the other side of the ocean the tumult has broken out. It must be possible to bend these aroused spirits instead of breaking them, to lead instead of binding them. It is a noble lot to be the ruler of a free people; to be their leader in all good things, and they shall know that manly courage and self-confidence are not to be punished as a crime, but protected and cherished. Not to darken minds, but to illuminate them, is the duty and privilege of us rulers."

The postmaster re-entered the room with a party of men and women, all adorned with garlands of flowers, and said to the three men that they could continue their journey as soon as their horses had been fed, meantime he respectfully invited them to be present at the coming ceremony.

The Emperor rose, and smiling pleasantly, said, in a merry tone: "Unprejudiced and open-hearted postmaster, have you a mind to let a stranger stand god-father to your child?"

"Willingly if he is an honest man."

"Do I seem to you an honest man?"

"Yes, an honest German. My good man," he added in broken German, "I learned German once, too, though not much. All men are brothers!" he exclaimed with noisy enthusiasm, as if he had already drunk some of the wine of the festival. "Here's my hand, Herr god-father! If the mistress only consents. Mother," he cried springing quickly toward the bed-room door, "come out here. A fine gentleman from Prussia wants to be our son's god-father. Voila, madame."

The stout landlady appeared and with repeated courtesies reiterated:

"If the grand gentleman pleases, I am satisfied."

"Are you married?" she then asked in a timid tone.

"I have been," answered Joseph.

"Have you children?"

"I had one."

The postmaster and his wife looked compassionately at the stranger, and each waited for the other to ask the god-father's name. The bell rang, the procession was formed to go to the church. The child, a bright, active boy, was carried in front by a maiden, and behind followed the relations and friends; the emperor walked near the mother. In the church, before the altar, the postmaster announced that beside the brother-in-law there present, Benjamin Franklin and the stranger were to be the god-fathers.

"What is your religion?" asked the priest.

"Catholic," answered Joseph.

"And your name?"

"Joseph."

"Joseph! Nothing else?"

"The Second."

"The Second? A strange surname. And your standing?"

"Before God there is no incognito," cried Joseph with beaming countenance. "I am the Roman Emperor of the German nation, Joseph of Austria."

The young godmother almost dropped the child in her alarm, but the Emperor took it in his arms, and his whole being thrilled with the thought that here in a strange land he was holding a human being just awakened to life, and with the feeling of consecration with which he greeted the young offshoot of humanity; and when the child opened its eyes and met his glance, the heart of the Emperor experienced one of those moments of reverential awe, when, to the inward eye, the whole earth appears in truth the gleaming star which shines in the firmament.

The baptismal service completed, the Emperor still held the child in his arms saying: "Blessings on you, my child! You bear the names of a simple citizen and of a prince; be strong in freedom and self-dependence as a man, and in obedience as the subject of a State. Take this as a keepsake."

He laid a medallion portrait of himself, set in brilliants, on the pillow.

Outside stood the carriage with its fresh horses; the Emperor quickly escaped from the torrent of thanks and entered the vehicle, while behind him rose shouts of "Long live the Emperor Joseph!"

So travelled the Emperor toward Paris on the 18th of April, 1777. On his left sat the Field-Marshal Colloredo, and opposite him the State-Counsellor Cobenzl.

The Emperor spoke not a word, and his companions were likewise silent.

A clucking hen that has hatched ducks and sees them swimming comfortably about in a strange element cannot be more frightened and perplexed than a genuine courtier when he is obliged to look on or assist, while his prince, released from the fetters of rank and ceremonial, takes part in the doings of simple commoners. He must take his share in it as if he were moved to do so by his own free will, and all the while he is only showing obedience, and stands ready every moment to uphold dignity, which may be insulted by ignorant lookers on, and to protect his prince.

It is a difficult task to be an attendant on a prince who has the fancy at unexpected moments to be only a man.

These thoughts were expressed on Cobenzl's face as he said to himself: "Strange whim. It's a philanthropic giddiness; and no one who is giddy can keep himself on the throne. There one can't trouble himself about how the world is scrambling along down below. Instead of travelling merrily through the world, to make such a fuss over a little brat by the road-side. Incomprehensible!"

And Colloredo said to himself: "It's a pity that at every station our Emperor wants to stop and perform a good deed instead of driving straight to his goal without looking back." And the subordinate attendants were still severer critics. Had the Emperor known their thoughts he would have pardoned them; he only pitied people who, through education and habit, have missed the best happiness of life—to know themselves at all times and places, to be near their fellow-men in pure love.

But the Emperor looked out on the landscape; in his soul were still sounding the organ tones from that little church.

This journey was consecrated to him; on the threshold of Paris he had performed his devotions at the altar of humanity.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

THE SOUL OF THE APPLE.

A soft wind was playing among the pink and white blossoms of an apple-tree one lovely Spring morning. Away up on one of the highest branches it found one blossom more beautiful than all the others, and the little breeze sighed as it touched its smooth leaves and whispered very softly: "You dear little flower, you are very pretty and sweet, but, alas! you will only live such a short time; you must soon fade and drop off the tree to make room for the beautiful red apple which is coming in your place." Then the breeze flew away, and our apple-blossom thought over its words until she grew so sad that she hung down her little pink head and could not nod brightly as usual to her companions on the lower limbs.

But after a day or two the sunshine and the sweet Spring air made her forget her sadness and be glad and happy once more.

So the days went by and the time came for the flowers to droop and wither. And when she felt her leaves shrivelling up and her head hanging heavily she remembered the words of the breeze, and she said aloud, "Yes, it was only too true; I have been very beautiful and the birds and the butterflies have loved me, but now I shall die and no one, not even the apple which is coming to fill my place, will remember or think of me." Just then a little bird came hopping along, and he listened very quietly, with his brown head on one side, to what poor little apple-blossom was saying. When she had finished, he perched very close to her and sang this little song in the very sweetest voice you ever heard:

"Oh, flower, be not sad,
For see, I am glad,
So surely I know
That God loves us so.
Not one thing on earth
But to Him has its worth.

"No beauty can die,
Be it lonely or high.
God will never forget,
Though we sorrow and fret.
Out of death He will bring
Some most glorious thing."

The little brown bird flew quickly away. And apple-blossom was quite comforted. So at last one day a wind passed over the tree, and the flower, with a great many of her friends, fell to the ground and died. But in its place was a tiny, hard, green apple, which all through the Summer hung there. And the sun shone on it and the rain washed it, and it grew larger and larger, and rounder and rounder, and redder and redder, until when the Autumn came it was the most perfect apple on the tree. At last the time came when the apples were gathered, put into barrels, which were stored away in the cellar, to be used during the Winter, and our apple lay on the very top of one of the barrels. For a great many long, cold days it lay in the dark cellar; but finally one afternoon it was put into a basket with a great many other apples and carried up stairs into the warm, bright dining-room, and there it was placed on the very top of a high silver dish which stood in the centre of the dinner-table. Around this table were seated five children, and at either end sat their father and mother. And the children seemed to be very merry, for they laughed and talked a great deal, and the apple enjoyed the light and fun as much as any one.

At length it was time to eat the fruit and papa himself took our apple in his hand and began to peel it very carefully; then he divided it directly through the middle, and next he cut off a very thin round slice and held it up to the light.

Now little Elsie had been watching her father very attentively for a long time, and when she saw him hold the slice of apple up to the light she was so full of curiosity that she jumped out of her chair and ran round to her father's side and said very eagerly, "Oh, please, papa, let me see too?" "Yes, dear, you shall all see," said her father. So the children came up one by one and looked, and what do you suppose they saw? Right in the centre of this thin slice was something which looked like the shadow of a flower with its leaves spread out wide. And they all thought it very beautiful and looked at it over and over again. Then papa said,

"That is the soul of the apple, dears; it is the picture of the little pink and white blossom from which our apple grew. It faded and died long ago, but you see it lives here in the beautiful red apple which came in its place."

So the little brown bird was right after all when he sang so sweetly to the poor, sad flower, "No beauty can die."

JANUARY 12, 1877.

E. A. O.

JOTTINGS.

ST. JOHN'S GUILD, which is actively engaged through its various committees in relieving the distress caused by the wide-spread destitution and misery now existing in New York, makes an urgent appeal for aid in its great work. We regret that as we go to press we are unable to give greater prominence to its call. The extreme depression in nearly all branches of business, which has now lasted so long, has inevitably produced acute suffering among many who have never heretofore been compelled to depend upon the charity of others. It is therefore not surprising to learn that "men whose education, business training and social standing should, and formerly did, guarantee to them prosperity and even affluence—merchants, book-keepers, salesmen, clerks and professional men—are now compelled, after having sold or pawned everything to keep their families from starving, to overcome their pride and solicit alms to save their wives and children from starvation." During the last month the Guild assisted nearly 25,000 persons, and the claims now made upon it demand the expenditure of one thousand dollars a day. The present period is what may be called the dead-point in the rolling year, and every shoulder is needed at the wheel. We believe that careful examination is made of all cases submitted, and that the work of the Guild is performed with some regard to its lasting effect upon the recipients of its bounty. If any of our readers feel able to extend the aid asked for, they should send contributions of money to Andrew W. Leggat, Treasurer of the Board of Trustees of the Relief Fund, Headquarters of the Volunteer Visitors, 42 East Fourteenth street; and contributions of groceries, dry goods, new and cast-off clothing to the Relief Office, 52 Varick street.

GIFTS amounting to nearly a million dollars were made to colleges in this country during 1876.

BERTHOLD AUERBACH has been knighted by the King of Bavaria, receiving the Maximilian order for art and science.

THERE are over one hundred prohibitionists in the Massachusetts Legislature, and they are preparing for a concerted movement.

REV. STOPFORD BROOKE is represented to have said in reply to an inquisitive lady: "My dear madam, I gave up theology long ago."

BOSTON, WARREN STREET CHAPEL.—The fortieth anniversary occasion, next Sunday evening, January 28th, will be full of interest to all who seek the welfare of children.

HARLEM.—At Unity Chapel last Sunday evening Rev. S. H. Camp conducted the services. Next Sunday evening Rev. Dr. Bellows will preach his sermon on "The Unitarianism of To-day."

ANTIOCH COLLEGE needs a piano. Contributions are requested for this purpose. Address the Matron, Mrs. E. G. Bridge, Yellow Springs, Greene Co., Ohio; or Emily A. Hayward, Lebanon, Warren Co., Ohio.

BOSTON glories in the statement that while New York acknowledges uncollected taxes for 1876 to the amount of nearly $7,000,000, the Hub has only to answer for $2,785,194.16 remaining for fifty-four years' work.

An effort is being made by interested parties for the preservation of Dighton Rock, in Taunton River, and a meeting in furtherance of that object was held at the rooms of the Board of Trade, in Boston, last week.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—The Rev. John Wills, formerly of Dighton, Mass., is now preaching at St. John, N. B. Under his ministry the congregation is gradually increasing and will probably soon have to remove to a larger hall.

TRENTON, N. J.—Rev. Mr. Silsbee has received leave of absence from his pulpit for four months and is now on his way to Aiken, S. C. During his absence his pulpit will be supplied by Rev. John Andrew, recently of Newark, N. J.

JACKSON, MICH.—The Unitarian society of this town is in a wholesome condition, though, like so many others, pinched somewhat financially. Since Mr. Pardee's departure the pulpit has been supplied by Dr. Parrott, recently of St. Paul.

R. DAVID SICHEL, the leading figure in Erckmann-Chatrian's new drama, L'ami Fritz, is a character somewhat akin to Lessing's "Nathan the Wise," and is said to be a copy from life of a rabbi at Phleburg, now deceased, as Nathan was a copy of Moses Mendelssohn.

ARNOLD TANZER, in the Jewish Messenger, says of George Eliot in Daniel Deronda:—"But when George Eliot appears to champion Jewish ideas, the mere fact that so great a mind has deemed them worthy of such deep study, is sufficient to accredit them in quarters where, till now, they have been despised; and, by producing a favorable state of mind in those who influence the masses, she has conferred a great benefit on the Jews. Even if her book should be productive of little practical benefit, we owe her a debt of gratitude for what she has done, and what it required a genius of the first order to undertake."

THE owners of the Brooklyn Theatre property propose to rebuild the theatre on a smaller scale than before, and promise that it shall be as safe as money can make it. It is difficult to imagine any one visiting that particular spot for pleasure for some considerable time to come, but perhaps it may be possible to draw audiences thither.

THE Tribune pokes fun at the language of the circular issued by the projectors of the latest proposed great scientific expedition, which, however, may yet prove a very good thing. It is to sail in the interest of Michigan University, and is managed by James O. Woodruff, of Indianapolis, who has the ducats, and Profs. Steere and Jenney, who have the brains.

THERE is a good deal of point in the story which is told in connection with the name of the English Justice Willes, who was in the habit of interrupting counsel. A lawyer who was thus annoyed one day said to him:—"Your lordship is even a greater man than your father. The Chief Baron used to understand me after I had done, but your lordship understands me before I begin."

REV. OSCAR CLUTE has begun a course of nine lectures, to be given on alternate Sunday evenings in his church at Keokuk, Iowa. The subjects are: "The Rise and Progress of Unitarianism in America," illustrated by Channing and Parker; "The Rise and Progress of Universalism in America," illustrated by Murray and Ballou; and "Transcendentalism in America," illustrated by Margaret Fuller and Ralph Waldo Emerson.

We learn that a rebellion of about one hundred boys in the Westboro'

State Reform School recently was speedily and effectually subdued by the free use of water from the hydrant. This recalls the effect of a sudden shower upon the mob during the July riots of 1863 in New York. There is nothing like throwing cold water upon such an enterprise as rioters engage in. It is worth all the blank cartridges between here and Dahomey.

THE Tabernacle prepared for the Moody and Sankey meetings in Boston is to be dedicated this evening. The services will consist of prayer, singing by one of the great choirs, and addresses by the Rev. Dr. Webb, Bishop Foster, Mr. Henry F. Durant, Rev. A. J. Gordon and others, and as the music has been placed under the charge of Prof. Eben Tourjee, it is evident that no pains have been spared to give the affair a good "send off."

THE vital statistics of Massachusetts for 1875, show the births of male children to female to be in the proportion of 104 to 100. The relative birth rate among foreigners and natives is 55 to 16. Eighteen centenarians were said to have died during the year, more than half of whom were born in Ireland. This fact or suggestion is similar in its meaning to the other well-known one, that the farther you get into the interior of our country, and the more distant you find yourself from accurate records, the greater the longevity of certain of the inhabitants. The victims of insanity are said to number about the same only as during the ten years preceding. The ordinary opinion is that the number has increased largely. There has been a large increase in the number of suicides.

MARRIED.

SMITH—WELLS. — In Quincy, Ill., January 18th, at the residence of the bride's father, by Rev. F. L. Hosmer, Mr. JAMES RUSSELL SMITH to Miss ELLA, daughter of Edward Wells, Esq.

The Inquirer.

Published every Thursday, from the middle of September to the middle of July, in the Park Bank Building, 214 Broadway, New York.

To be in season for insertion the same week, communications intended for publication must be forwarded in time to reach this office not later than Tuesday. No attention is paid to anonymous communications. We require the name and address of every writer, not necessarily for publication, but as guarantees of good faith.

Communications relating to the editorial department of the paper should be addressed, "Editor of the Inquirer, P. O. Box 109, New York City," all others to "Publisher," same address.

No person is authorized to collect money or make contracts for the Inquirer, who cannot show written authority from the Publisher.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

Three Dollars per year, in advance. Clergymen, Two Dollars per year. Postage, Twenty Cents per year, in advance. Remittances should be made by Registered Letter or by Post-Office Money Order, or Draft on New York payable to PUBLISHER OF THE INQUIRER.

ADVERTISING RATES.

Six cents per agate line per week; outside page, and pages next to leading matter, ten cents per line. Special Notices twenty cents per line.

Discount—Five per cent. on yearly accounts amounting to $25 and under $50. Ten per cent. on yearly accounts amounting to $50 or more.

Copy for Thursday's paper received until Tuesday afternoon.

Advertisements must be acceptable in every respect.

Office, PARK BANK BUILDING, 214 Broadway.

Address,

THE INQUIRER,

Box 109, New York.

Special Notices.

Protestant Leaders.

A COURSE OF LECTURES

BY

JOHN W. CHADWICK.

AT THE

Second Unitarian Church, Brooklyn,

Corner of Clinton and Congress Streets.

1876—77.

LECTURES:

- V. Emanuel Swedenborg. Sunday evening, Feb. 4, 1877.
- VI. Murray and Universalism. Sunday evening, March 4, 1877.
- VII. Thomas Paine: His Relation to his own and later Times in Matters of Religion. Sunday evening, April 1, 1877.
- VIII. Channing and Unitarianism. Sunday evening, April 15, 1877.
- IX. Theodore Parker. Sunday evening, May 6, 1877.

HOOR OF LECTURE, HALF-PAST SEVEN.

Morning Service at 10:35 precisely. Vesper Service, Third Sunday Evening of each Month, with the above exceptions.

The Address of Rev. John F.

LOCKE is to the care of W. H. Baldwin, President Young Men's Christian Union, 18 Roylston St. Boston.

"Admirably fitted to teach the art from the very beginning."—Chicago Tribune.

"Mr. Hope is one of the 'old masters' in this sort of work. He has prepared an excellent work, in which his subject is treated fully and clearly."—Chicago Post.

"Altogether the best book that can be placed in the hands of the amateur."—N. Y. Graphic.

"The diagrams are excellent and the instructions clear and direct."—N. Y. Evening Post.

SORRENTO AND INLAID WORK FOR

AMATEURS, BY ARTHUR HOFF.

A practical manual of Scroll Sawing, Overlaying, Polishing, Inlaying, Stippling, &c. Containing 51 full-sized designs, new and beautiful. The designs are worth more than price of book. Tastefully bound in muslin. For sale by booksellers generally. Sent by mail on receipt of price, $1.50. Descriptive circular mailed to any address.

JOHN WILKINSON, Publisher, 51 Lake St., Chicago.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, 125 Fifth Ave., New York.

HAIR DYE.

BACHELOR'S CELEBRATED HAIR DYE is splendid. It never fails. The only true and perfect Dye. Harmless, reliable, instantaneous. No disappointment, no ridiculous tints; remedies the ill effects of bad dyes, leaves the hair soft and beautiful Black or Brown. Sold and properly applied at BACHELOR'S Wig Factory, 16 Bond St., N. Y. Sold by all druggists.

THIS standard article is compounded with the greatest care.

Its effects are as wonderful and as satisfactory as ever.

It restores gray or faded hair to its youthful color.

It removes all eruptions, itching and dandruff. It gives the head a cooling, soothing sensation of great comfort, and the scalp by its use becomes white and clean.

By its tonic properties it restores the capillary glands to their normal vigor, preventing baldness, and making the hair grow thick and strong.

As a dressing, nothing has been found so effectual or desirable.

A. A. Hayes, M.D., State Assayer of Massachusetts, says, "The constituents are pure, and carefully selected for excellent quality; and I consider it the BEST PREPARATION for its intended purposes."

Price, One Dollar.

Buckingham's Dye FOR THE WHISKERS.

This elegant preparation may be relied on to change the color of the beard from gray or any other undesirable shade, to brown or black, at discretion. It is easily applied, being in one preparation, and quickly and effectually produces a permanent color, which will neither rub nor wash off.

Manufactured by R. P. HALL & CO.

NASHUA, N.H.

Sold by all Druggists, and Dealers in Medicines.

THE HOWARD INSURANCE COMPANY,
OF NEW YORK.—OFFICE NO 66 WALL STREET.
Cash Capital $500,000.—Chartered in 1825.
This Company insures property against loss or Damage by Fire and the risks of Inland Navigation and Transportation, on the most favorable terms.

SAM'L T. SKIDMORE, President.
HENRY A. OAKLEY, Vice-President.

DIRECTORS:

SAMUEL T. SKIDMORE, HEWLETT SCUDDER,
THOMAS W. GALE, CHARLES M. CLAYTON,
JOHN H. SWIFT, JOHN L. RIKES,
JAMES R. TAYLOR, GEORGE W. TALBOT,
HENRY J. SCUDDER, FREDERICK STURGES,
HENRY A. OAKLEY, JOHN L. WHITE,
CHARLES MALL, R. LENOX BELKNAP,
HENRY I. BARREY, JAMES C. CARTER,
WILLIAM H. WINNER, EDMUND FENFOLD,
ALEXANDER MATTIAND.

CHARLES A. HULL, Secretary.
RICHARD W. CLARK, Asst. Sec'y.

HANOVER FIRE INSURANCE CO.,
NO. 120 BROADWAY, N. Y.

Forty-seventh Semi-Annual Statement.

JANUARY 1, 1876.

Cash Capital.....	$500,000 00
Reinsurance Fund.....	557,717 78
Outstanding Liabilities.....	112,298 14
Net Surplus.....	$927,392 20

ASSETS.

Cash in Bank and Office.....	$102,756 92
United States Six Per Cent. Bonds.....	596,637 50
Bonds and Mortgages, being first lien on improved Real Estate in the Cities of New York and Brooklyn.....	326,023 00
Loans on Call (Market Value of Securities, ties, $136,790).....	114,890 09
City and County Bonds.....	230,265 00
Bank and Trust Co. Stocks.....	41,650 00
First Mort. R. R. Bonds and Stocks.....	67,250 00
Balance in hands of Agents and Uncollected Office Premiums.....	99,163 96
Accrued Interest on Bonds and Mortgages and and Call Loans.....	7,067 27
Real Estate.....	17,109 45
	$1,592,775 09

BENJ. S. WALCOTT, President.
I. REMSEN LANE, Secretary.

W. A. Batchelor's Curative Ointment
Immediately cures Ring-Worm, Tetter, Itching of the Head, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Face or Body.

W. A. Batchelor's Alaska Seal Oil
for the Hair. The best Hair Oil in use.

W. A. Batchelor's Dentifrice for beautifying and preserving the teeth and Gums and deodorizing the breath.

W. A. Batchelor's New Cosmetique,
Black or Brown, for tinting the Hair, Whiskers or Moustaches without greasing them. Sold at factory, 16 Bond Street, New York, and by all druggists. Ask for them.

The Toll Gate! Prize Picture sent free! An ingenious gem. 50 objects to find. Address, with stamp, E. C. Abbey, Buffalo, N. Y. 1491-ly

BABBITT'S TOILET SOAP.

Unrivalled for the toilet and the bath. No artificial and captiv odors to cover common and deleterious ingredients. After years of scientific experiment the manufacturer of B. T. Babbitt's Best Soap has perfected an now new and improved soap in the world.

Offers to the public The FINEST TOILET SOAP in the world. Only the purest vegetable oils used in its manufacture. For Use in the Nursery It has No Equal. Worth ten times its cost to every mother and family in Christendom. Sample box containing 3 cakes of soap each, sent free to any address on receipt of 75 cents. Address B. T. Babbitt, New York City. For Sale by all Druggists.

$12 a day at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine.

$55 TO $77 a week to Agents. Samples FREE P. O. VICKERY, Augusta Maine.

ASTHMA AND CATARRH REMEDY.
Having struggled twenty years between life and death with ASTHMA, I experimented by compounding roots and herbs and inhaling the medicine. I fortunately discovered a sure cure for ASTHMA AND CATARRH. I warranted to relieve any case of Asthma instantly, so the patient can lie down to sleep. By mail, $1.00 per box. Address O. L. LANGELL, Apple Creek, Ohio. For sale by Druggists.

LAMAR INSURANCE COMPANY,
OF NEW YORK.
Broadway, cor. John Street.
Capital, - - $200,000.

ASSETS, JANUARY 1, 1877.

Cash on hand and in Bank.....	$10,414 77
U. S. Bonds, market value.....	303,232 50
Loans on Call, Good Stocks Collateral.....	13,280 00
Bonds and Mortgages on Brick Dwellings.....	56,400 00
Bills Receivable for Inland Prem's.....	2,465 94
Premiums in course of collection.....	8,830 43
New York Bank Stocks market value.....	19,725 00
	$411,268 64

Losses unadjusted estimated at $10,100 00

ISAAC R. ST. JOHN, President.
A. R. FROTHINGHAM, Vice Pres't.
WM. R. MACDIARMID, Sec'y.

HOME Insurance Co. of New York,
Office No. 135 Broadway.
Forty-seventh Semi-Annual Statement,
Showing the condition of the Company on the first day of January, 1877.

Cash Capital.....	$3,000,000 00
Reserve for Re-Insurance.....	1,858,464 68
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Dividends.....	243,402 24
Net Surplus.....	1,002,783 90
Total Assets - - -	$6,104,650 82

SUMMARY OF ASSETS:

CASH IN BANKS.....	$312,311 22
BONDS AND MORTGAGES, BEING FIRST LIEN ON REAL ESTATE WORTH $4,894,000.....	2,011,433 00
UNITED STATES STOCKS (MARKET VALUE).....	2,517,625 00
BANK STOCKS (MARKET VALUE).....	286,602 50
STATE AND CITY BONDS (MARKET VALUE).....	165,433 00
LOANS ON STOCKS, PAYABLE ON DEMAND (MARKET VALUE OF SECURITIES, $700,379).....	519,631 35
INTEREST DUE ON 1st JANUARY, 1877.....	72,997 65
BALANCE IN HAND OF AGENTS.....	153,116 05
REAL ESTATE.....	6,500 19
PREMIUMS DUE AND UNCOLLECTED ON POLICIES ISSUED AT THIS OFFICE.....	8,339 26
Total - - -	$6,104,650 82

LIABILITIES.

CLAIMS FOR LOSSES OUTSTANDING ON 1st JANUARY, 1877.....	$212,027 24
DIVIDENDS UNPAID.....	1,375 00
Total, - - -	$243,402 24

CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.
J. H. WASHBURN, Secretary.

THE NEW JERSEY MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.,
NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.

J. H. STEDWELL, President.
C. H. BRINKERHOFF, Secretary.
J. H. CANNIFF, Cashier.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved ($2.00) Receipt Book." Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 (free). STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

Made of best material, in all sizes, for Adults and Children of both sexes; expands the chest, straightens up stooped shoulders; worth ten times its cost for Children and Students. Sold by the Trade and Cleveland Shoulder Brace Co., Cleveland, Ohio. Send $1.25 and chest measure. Ask for Pratt's new Patent Brace.

ATLANTIC MUTUAL INSURANCE CO
NEW YORK.

OFFICE 51 WALL ST.

ORGANIZED 1842.

INSURES AGAINST MARINE AND INLAND NAVIGATION RISKS.

And will issue Policies making Loss payable in England.

Its Assets for the Security of its Policies are more than

TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured, and are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated during the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearing interest until redeemed.

JOHN D. JONES, President.
CHARLES DENNIS, Vice-President.
W. H. H. MOORE, 2d Vice-President.
A. A. RAVEN, 3d Vice-President.

J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

P H E N I X

INSURANCE COMPANY,
OF BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Capital.....	$1,000,000 00
Cash Assets, Jan. 1, 1876.....	2,549,958 77

OFFICES:

Western Union Telegraph Building, BROADWAY, Cor. DEX ST., New York.

Brooklyn Office..... 12 & 14 Court St.
Brooklyn E. D. Office,..... 93 Broadway.

The benefits to be derived by the Public from Insurance against loss by fire are so great and numerous, when compared with its trifling cost, as to render it an imperative duty on every one to avail themselves of the protection afforded by the PHENIX INSURANCE COMPANY against the destructive ravages of FIRE, which in a few moments may lay waste the fruits of a whole life of industry.

STEPHEN CROWELL, President.
PHILANDER SHAW, Vice President.
WILLIAM R. CROWELL, Secretary.
ESTABLISHED A. D. 1850.

THE MANHATTAN LIFE INSURANCE CO.,
OF NEW YORK,

has paid $5,500,000 Death Claims; has paid $4,500,000 return premiums to Policy-holders; has a surplus of more than $1,600,000 over Liabilities; and a ratio of $120 Assets for every $100 Liabilities, by New York Standard of Valuation. It gives the best Insurance on the best lives at the most favorable rates.

EXAMINE THE PLANS AND RATES OF THIS COMPANY.

HENRY STOKES, C. Y. WEMPLE,
President. Vice-President.
J. L. HALSEY, S. N. STEBBINS,
Secretary. Actuary.

H. Y. WEMPLE, Assistant Secretaries.
H. B. STOKES, }

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY

Manufacture those celebrated Bells for CHURCHES, ACADEMIES, &c. Price List and Circulars sent free. HENRY McSHANE & CO. BALTIMORE, MD.

Miscellaneous.

MUSIC BOOKS.

* Each book may be safely received as among the very best.*

THE SALUTATION.

($1.38; $12 per dozen) By L. O. Emerson. First Class Church Music Book.

THE ENCORE.

(75 cts; $7.50 per dozen). By L. O. Emerson. First Class Singing School Book.

WORLD OF SONG.

($2.50 Bds; $3 Cl; $4 Gilt). Unrivalled collection of Songs.

GEMS OF THE DANCE.

($2.50 Bds; $3 Cl; $4 Gilt). The Most Brilliant Piano Music.

PERKINS' ANTHEM BOOK.

($1.50; $13.50 per dozen). An easy Anthem for each Sunday in the Year.

PERKINS' GLEE & CHORUS BOOK.

$1.25; $12 per dozen). Superb Collection.

MALE VOICE GLEE BOOK.

($1). Perkins. Brief, New, Spirited Glee's in abundance.

EMERSON'S CHORUS BOOK.

($1.25; $12 per dozen). The Best Sacred and Secular Choruses.

Either book mailed, post-free, for Retail Price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

C. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 Broadway,
New York

J. E. DITSON & CO.,
Successors to Lee & Walker, Philadelphia.

REDUCTION IN RATES TO SUIT THE TIMES.THE BUTLER HEALTH
LIFT EXERCISE.

Commended by Highest Medical Authority.

A SCIENTIFIC SYSTEM of Concentrated Cumulative Exercise, adapted to the Preservation and Restoration of Health.

Principal Office, Spacious and well ventilated,
PARK BANK BUILDING, NO. 214 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK.

BROOKLYN: NO. 153 REMSEN STREET.

PARLORS FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN.

"I have used THE BUTLER HEALTH LIFT with manifest advantage. A tendency to sleeplessness at night has been corrected, my animal spirits have been raised in tone, and my elasticity of frame increased. The sense of repose imparted is quite as great as the stimulus."—O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

"The most perfect apparatus in use."—[Evening Mail.

Call, or address

LEWIS G. JANES, Proprietor.

E. N. Freshman & Bros.,

ADVERTISING AGENTS,

185 W. FOURTH STREET, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Are authorized to contract for advertising in this paper.

ESTIMATES FURNISHED FREE.

SEND FOR A CIRCULAR.

Employment Society for Poor
WOMEN.

This Society now offers for sale at its store, No. 143 East 13th street, New York, a large quantity of garments, the remains of last year's stock, at very low prices. Those wishing to buy women's or children's clothing to give to the poor or to charitable institutions will find there a good supply of articles suitable for the purpose. Call and examine the garments, or send orders to

THE EMPLOYMENT SOCIETY,

143 East 13th Street,

New York City.

ARE PLANTED BY A MILLION PEOPLE IN AMERICA. SEE VICK'S CATALOGUE—300 illustrations, only 2 cents. VICK'S FLORAL GUIDE, Quarterly, 25 cents a year. VICK'S FLOWER AND VEGETABLE GARDEN, 50 cents; with elegant cloth covers, $1.00. All my publications are printed in English and German. Address, JAMES VICK, Rochester, N. Y.

STEARNS & BEALE,

STATIONERS,

BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS,

PRINTING and LITHOGRAPHY,

147 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

(Between Broadway and Nassau Street)

JOEL W. STEARNS.

WM. P. BEALE.

With and without Rockers; heavy and light; large and small. For OFFICE, LIBRARY, STUDY, PIAZZA, PARLOR, SEWING-ROOM, NURSERY—wherever you want

SOLID COMFORT.

Send stamp for an illustrated Price-List

F. A. SINCLAIR,
Mottville, N. Y.;

Be careful that the chairs are stamped with my name in full; others are imitations.

For sale by Furniture Dealers in New York and at 218 Fulton street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

EMPLOYMENT.

ANY PERSON of ordinary intelligence can earn a living by canvassing for The Illustrated Weekly. Experience is not necessary—the only requisite being, as in all successful business, industry and energy. Send for particulars. Address CHARLES CLUCAS & CO., 14 Warren St., N. Y.

CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION
DESCRIBED AND ILLUSTRATED.

The only complete, richly illustrated, low price work, 750 pages, only $2.50. Treats of the entire history, grand buildings, wonderful exhibits, curiosities, great days, etc. The best chance of 100 years to coin money fast, as everybody wants this work. 1,000 agents appointed first four weeks, 5,000 wanted. For full particulars address quickly, HUBBARD BROTHERS, Publishers, Philadelphia, Pa., Cincinnati, O., Chicago Ill., or Springfield, Mass.

CAUTION. Be not deceived by premature books assuming to be "official."

BALD HEADS

Can be covered with a piece exactly fitted to the Bald spot, so perfect, and with work so ingeniously contrived as to appear each hair just issuing from the skin, the hair being exactly of the same shade and texture as the growing hair; they are so perfect they cannot be detected. Made only at BATCHELOR'S Celebrated Wig Factory, 16 Bond Street, N. Y.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 out of free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine

MISFIT CARPETS.

English Brussels, Three Ply and Ingrain; also, Stair Carpets, Velvet Rugs, Crumb Cloths, etc., very cheap. AT THE OLD PLACE.

112 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

Carpets carefully packed and sent to any part of the United States free of charge.

SEND FOR PRICE LIST.

J. A. BENDALL.

BROOKLYN ADVERTISEMENTS.

OVINGTON BROTHERS,

246, 248, 250 and 252 Fulton Street,
BROOKLYN.

Fine China, Glass, Clocks,
Bronzes, etc., etc.

Just Received Invoices of

COPENHAGEN VASES,
LIMOGES FAIENCE VASES,
AND DOULTON WARE.

O'BRIEN & COMPANY,

IMPORTERS,

MANUFACTURERS and RETAILERS

OF DRY GOODS,

CARPETS,

CLOTHING

141 and 143, 151 to 159 Atlantic Ave.

We solicit an inspection of our magnificent assortment in all our Departments—forty-one in number—conceded to be the largest, most varied and best selected ever exhibited in Brooklyn, with a stock in value amounting to over half a million dollars.

Joseph O'Brien & Co.,

141 and 143, 151 to 159 Atlantic Avenue.

Lectures and Sermons,

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

FIRST SERIES.

The Education of Conscience.
Self Respect.
The Higher Reverence.
God on our Side.
Man and the Bible.
The Best Use of Sunday.

SECOND SERIES.

The Essential Piety of Modern Science.
A Rational Church.
Economy and Waste.

Also, WAY, TRUTH AND LIFE, a Biography of N. A. Staples, with sermons, price, $1.00.

For sale by CHARLES P. SOMERBY, 139 Eighth St., New York. Copies sent by mail at the rate of five cents each and postage.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.

Established in 1837.

Superior Bells of Copper and Tin, mounted with the best Rotary Hangers, for Churches, Schools, Farms, Factories, Court-houses, Fire Alarms, Tower Clocks, etc. Fully Warranted. Illustrated Catalogue sent Free.

VANDUZEN & TIFT, 102 E. 2d St., Cincinnati.

10 PER CENT NET.

Kansas, Missouri and Iowa Improved Farm First Mortgage Coupon Bonds Guaranteed. We guarantee, as an assurance, that we loan not to exceed one-third of the actual value. In over six years' business never lost a dollar; never delayed a day on interest or principal; neither we nor our customers ever took an acre of land under foreclosure. Send for particulars and references.

J. B. WATKINS & CO., LAWRENCE, KAN., or HENRY DICKINSON, Manager, 72 Cedar Street, New York

THE INQUIRER.

VOL. XXXII.—NO. 9.
WHOLE NO., 1579.

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 1, 1877.

$3.00 PER ANNUM.
8 CENTS A COPY.

CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL NOTES.....	149
LEADING ARTICLES:
The Economical Aspect of our National Experiment.....	150
Eleemosynary Education.....	151
Eighteenth Century English Thought.....	152
The Grace of God.....	154
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE:
From England.....	154
From Washington.....	155
Boston Chit-Chat.....	156
LITERATURE:
The Geographical Distribution of Animals.....	156
Brief Notices.....	157
New Publications Received.....	157
ART NOTES:
The Water-Color Exhibition.....	157
HEARTH AND HOME:
Old Sayings.....	158
Joseph and Benjamin. Chapter II.....	159
OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE:
South Middlesex Conference.....	161
Worcester Conference.....	161
JOTTINGS.....	161
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT.....	162

HENRY W. BELLWS, John W. Chadwick, F. W. Clarke, Frederick L. Hosmer, Minot J. Savage, Charles C. Shackford and S. Alfred Steinthal are among the contributors to this number of THE INQUIRER. In the last number, for James L. Hosmer read Frederick L. Hosmer, and for W. P. G. read N. P. G.

PROF. CURTIUS is not wholly satisfied that Dr. Schliemann has found the tomb of Agamemnon, though greatly interested in what he has found. The Doctor is undoubtedly an enthusiast, as he showed at Hissarlik, but he is of the stuff of which true discoverers are made, and scholars will follow his labors with the most intense interest.

ON Monday, Circuit Judge Carpenter, of South Carolina, rendered a decision in which he holds that neither Chamberlain nor Hampton has been legally installed as Governor since the election, and that under the law Chamberlain holds over until his successor is qualified. The question is now before the Supreme Court of the State. The electoral vote of South Carolina is not in any way affected by the action of the Court, all parties now conceding that the Republicans elected their ticket.

THE Churchman says, in an article upon one of our leading citizens, "There is one consolation to be derived from Mr. Frothingham's position. Now that the Saviour has been disavowed, the next step must be to select some one else as the prophet of the New Dispensation. Free religion will then sail under its true colors. There is only one thing more to be done, and that is boldly to disown the moral as well as the historical teaching of the New Testament." Different people find consolation in different things, and it is an instructive addition to our knowledge, to find what soothes the ruffled nerves of our neighbors. Is it not singular, however, that so little has yet been realized of the conditions to which the Churchman looks forward with such solemn satisfaction?

THE decision reached by Judge Cadwalader, on the case made by the Centennial Board of Finance, is to the effect that the United States Government cannot claim a prior right to $1,500,000 of the funds now in the hands of the Board, which many had supposed to be a sum simply loaned in aid of the enterprise. The decision is said to have turned upon the presence or absence of a comma in a clause of the bill. Those who supported the claim of the Government to a return of the money, say that the clause referred to reads, or should read:

"The appropriation hereinbefore made shall be paid in full into the Treasury of the United States before any dividend, or percentage of the profits shall be paid to the holders of said stock."

The other party claim that the clause should be read without the comma after "dividend" and the court seems to have agreed with them.

Nor content with what they could get by dredging for dispatches in the telegraph offices, the House of Representatives has within the last week been laboring in the same way in the memories of the telegraph operators. It requires some little time to adjust ourselves to the changes taking place around us, and at the first blush this kind of testimony seems a little odd. Still, let us not pass premature judgment upon it.

An idea has just occurred to us which may be of value in these investigations, and we cannot patriotically conceal it. Remembering that the electrical circuit is completed by the earth, it seems not unlikely that the telegraph may be constantly recording itself upon the soil. We have no doubt that if a man properly educated for the purpose, say a pupil of General Butler or of Mr. Morrison, would take his stand, armed with a spade, in some properly located potato-patch where the soil is light and friable, he would obtain really surprising results. Let not this suggestion be passed by without careful consideration.

SOME testimony was elicited on Monday by the House Committees engaged in the investigation of Louisiana affairs, which, if not very positively contradicted, will go far toward affixing indelibly the stamp of fraud upon the action of the Returning Board. The evidence comes in an involved and unbusiness-like shape, but it seems to be established pretty certainly that the returns of at least one parish, Vernon, were altered in the interest of the Republican candidate after they came into possession of the Board. The testimony points to J. Madison Wells as the party under whose orders the alterations were made, but it is as yet hearsay evidence, which would not be admitted in a court of law. Several witnesses have been examined since Monday, whose evidence is conflicting. If Ex-Governor Wells and those associated with him are innocent of the charge laid at their door, there is a black conspiracy somewhere. Meantime it is satisfactory to know that Grant does not propose to discriminate further between the rival Governors until the Presidential question is settled.

A MORE hopeful feeling is expressed by business men, in view of a near settlement of the Presidential muddle, and merchants begin to look forward with some confidence to a condition of renewed activity at an early day. So many have been crippled by the disasters of the last few years, and checks have been of so frequent occurrence, that the movement at first must be very slow. In the iron interest indications are still unpromising. On the other hand, the dry goods men report a better condition of affairs. Prices, on the average, are held to be about seven per cent. lower than a year ago. The money market continues easy, with call loans in New York at 4 to 5 per cent., and the banks continue to accumulate reserve. The President is said to feel confident that specie payments may be resumed almost immediately, and the price of gold in currency has fallen to 105½. It is easy to see how redemption might have taken place at this time if any accumulation of gold had been made; such not having been the case, it is only evident that the time is propitious for taking measures for laying up a store against the time agreed upon, or for use at an earlier day if it be judicious. The price of silver in gold has again fallen off to 57¼d. per ounce.

ANOTHER disastrous life insurance failure has been reported since our last. The New Jersey Mutual Life—we regret to say it appears on our advertising pages—after examination by the Insurance Department of New Jersey, was found to be “short” a very large sum, and has sought to escape further investigation by re-insuring in the National Capitol Life, a company which appears to be able to transact business as a sort of “free lance” not amenable to the laws of the States.

Mr. Kelsey, the Secretary of State and Superintendent of the Insurance Department, very naturally considers that a conversion of the assets of the Company in the manner proposed is an action worthy of careful scrutiny, and has made application for the appointment of a receiver. Two years ago this company was industriously circulating a certificate obtained from a prominent Boston actuary, to the effect that the Company was well managed and had a handsome surplus. On the faith of this certificate many operations were based by parties who received an assurance that it was strictly true. It is now a fair question whether this statement was false or whether the officers have since disposed of the large surplus then claimed.

A GENERAL feeling of relief pervaded the community when it was known that the President had signed the bill relative to the electoral count, and that it was actually a law. We say general advisedly, for observation induces us to believe that the extreme apprehension concerning this “invasion of the Constitution” expressed by partisan newspapers and by a few partisan politicians, and also by some cautious men who cannot be so classed, was not widely shared by the people at large in any part of the country.

The members of the Commission seem to have been, in the main, well chosen. An unseemly attempt was made in both Houses to appoint as representatives of the Republicans a majority who were violently opposed to the bill, apparently with the intent, if possible, to prevent action under it,—an effort which happily proved unavailing. The selection of Judge Bradley by his associate members of the judicial branch of the Committee is perhaps as good a one as could have been made, Judge Davis being practically out of the field. Probably no one honestly questions Judge Davis' fitness for the position, but there can be no doubt that the addition of five members of the Supreme Court to the Commission was made for the joint reasons, that they were supposed to be learned in the law and to be divorced by their office from active party affiliations. The acceptance of a Senatorship from the adherents of one of the parties in the midst of the debate is certainly therefore an imperative reason for setting the gentleman so accepting aside as not answering the requirements of the law. That this necessity left only three, whose antecedents connected them with the Republican party, to select from, cannot be considered an important incident, as those three have not been held to be partisans, and Judge Bradley especially has made for himself a record in Louisiana which entitles him to be classed as an independent jurist.

We shall now look forward hopefully for a decision of this vexed question, content to abide the result, be it what it may.

THE ECONOMICAL ASPECT OF OUR NATIONAL EXPERIMENT.

LORD MACAULAY's letter of evil prophecy for the future of this country, republished after twenty years' forgetfulness, is so far fulfilled that no doubt it will have much greater influence now than when it was written. A single generation has developed so much of the tendency he deplored that we cannot but ask in some consternation what a half century more will do to make agrarianism and a war of labor on capital a fatal source of weakness and revolution in the United States.

The weakness of our political institutions lies in the legal right which the people at large—being in general either holders of small properties or none at all—possess of voting taxes which only the industrious, energetic, and saving people, who have made themselves rich or comfortable in their circumstances, are called upon to pay. The fear that men who are hungry and needy and out of employ, yet possessing votes, would combine to send representatives to the Legislature to urge public outlays, or rates of wages, or methods of taxation, or modes of currency, which will most easily enable them to get work and secure bread, is a natural one which Lord Macaulay might fitly record. What can they be expected to think and feel in regard to the sacredness of property, or the rights of capital, or their own far future, with scarcity and enforced idleness pressing upon them and their children, and making oftentimes a choice between crime and beggary their only resource? In old countries this danger is well understood and provided against. Wealth, forethought, successful industry know how to keep command of legislation. They arm themselves with power to defend the citadel where their gains are stored up. But we have surrendered the power to the chances of universal suffrage. The property, the vested rights of the country, are in the hands of a minority, the powers of taxation in the hands of a needy and hungry majority, always growing larger and more mighty at the polls. Can the accumulated labor and wealth of the country stand the drain which the new labor and bare physical want of the country must soon make upon it? With equal rights in local and State legislation, what is to prevent hungry mouths and empty hands from decreeing just what wealth and competency and capital and intelligence shall do to buy their quietude or their contentment or their forbearance? They have the physical power and they have the legal power—this horde of people now living from hand to mouth—and how long, at the present rate of pressure in the labor market, of a broken commerce and a palsied trade, of a rapidly increasing class in cities of American poor, will the capital of the country be able to keep itself from intolerable taxes tending to drive it into other fields of investment, or from various forms of seizure and destruction by the legal assaults made upon it by an organized majority of paupers?

This is the problem which Macaulay states, though not precisely in these terms. And it has an ugly look. There can be no denial of the fact that we are losing by degrees all that was so long struggled for under the name of self-taxation. Property does not tax itself, but numbers tax property. There is no equivalency between representation and property. The received American principle disclaims the very idea of political power having any relation to property. It says, in effect, all are equal before the law and all are equal in making the law. Laws which are universal cannot be otherwise than just. The right to lay and level taxes belongs to the people, and it is no hardship if ten poor men lay a tax the whole of which one rich man must pay, if only he possesses ten times as much as all the poor men put together. Property is taxed evenly; power is evenly distributed; they have no connection with each other, but that is all the better. But, then, when it comes to this, that nine poor men can vote to build a needless bridge which one rich man must pay for, only that they may have occupation and wages in erecting it, rich men will soon emigrate to other countries, where they have more to do with inaugurating the measures and laws that control taxes.

This so-called American principle is founded upon a faith in ordinary and average intelligence, justice and provident study of consequences, which, though it does not at once hold good in all communities, still may, we think, be depended on in general and in the long run to an extent not anticipated by Lord Macaulay. We did not adopt it without knowledge of what it involved, nor without connecting with it certain other new methods, on the operation of which we depended for its safety. The chief of these was a system of common-school education, designed to be universal, conducted at the public expense, which it was hoped would utterly destroy everything like a peasantry, or class of hereditary ignoramuses, or persons who, with the ballot in their hands, should not be able to read the newspaper or the Bible or to acquire any notions of the true relations of labor to capital. We reckoned that our people would be universally taught to read and write, to know their rights and their duties, and thus be saved from the perils of abusing the power in their hands by learning that all such abuses reacted very shortly upon their perpetrators. The hope has not been wholly disappointed, and if we can survive the force of the evil wrought upon us by immigration of ignorant and untrained foreign paupers, and the slow adjustment of education to political rights—the rights coming faster and more certainly than the education—we still hope to show that mere brute force, or mere hunger and thirst, or mere numbers do not have the arbitrament of our national fortunes in their hands. We still stoutly maintain that a people who as universally read and write as they vote cannot be so blind to their own permanent interests as not to know that laws or taxes which are fatal to the security and growth of capital are fatal to the wages and the freedom of day-laborers. We think we see that the vote of all intelligent communities, and in proportion to their intelligence, is less and less controlled by demagogues and by passion and pressure of immediate interest. We would commend to all Lord Macaulay's endorsers the study of the hard-money question—where mere popular feeling and mere hunger and thirst were all on the soft side, and only reason and calculation and sense on the other side, and yet note how steadily the people have surrendered prejudice and folly and short-sighted opinion or wishes to the force of sober and solid reasoning. It proves that we had not wholly misreckoned in placing our confidence in a common-schooled people when we opened the suffrage to all.

The same may be said of the progress made in the present Presidential quarrel. What clearer than the rapid predominance of reason, fairness and patriotism over the popular passions and prejudices which at first threatened a new civil war? We forgive the newspapers all their other sins and mischiefs when we observe what ventilators they have proved for the pestilent gases of ignorance and thoughtlessness that, confined, would have burst the State. After all, our institutions are still upon trial, and those who most boldly assert their confidence are often those who inwardly tremble most. But we have a growing confidence that we shall weather our Hatteras and other capes, fear among them—and yet disappoint by a long and safe voyage the predictions of Lord Macaulay and other despairers of the Republic. But we hope with trembling, and are just as ready to confess our fears as our hopes, since they are equally patriotic in their origin and purpose.

ELEEMOSYNARY EDUCATION.

I.

IN President Eliot's last very interesting and encouraging annual report on the state of Harvard University, there is one passage of guarded criticism on the eleemosynary character of theological education, which, from its application only to the inexpediency of adopting the method in other departments of the University, may fail to draw the close attention of the clerical body who need most to consider it. President Eliot is well known as one of the stoutest opponents of the proposition to tax churches and universities, and he opposes it on the ground that these educational institutions too deeply favor the higher interests of society, not to be fitly encouraged by the State. It is clear that he wishes well to the clerical profession, without which the churches could not live, however exempt from taxes. But, as clearly, he thinks the educational societies and other charities which make it so easy for men of gentle mould in humble circumstances, and with no heroic shrinking from dependence, to get through college and the theological schools at the exclusive expense of the benevolent public, or of generous private benefactors, not favorable to a high standard of ministerial capacity or very noble self-respect.

It is no new thought. It has long been felt by many serious observers of the prospects of religion, that the quality of recruits for the Christian ministry was lowered by the facilities so profusely furnished for entrance into it; that a freer competition, and one which tasked the utmost energies of aspirants to the ministry, would raise the quality, if it diminished the quantity of candidates. It is pretty well established that at least half of the graduates from theological schools do not continue in the ministry, usually because they cannot succeed in filling it acceptably. Whether the half that do continue and who serve the cause could be secured without the education and experimental test of the other half, is somewhat doubtful. Perhaps it would be found that half the doctors and half the lawyers were obliged to betake themselves to other occupations, if the statistics in their cases were as well kept. Certainly, some of our best and ablest ministers have been helped largely by public friends and by private beneficence in their college and theological course. We suspect that successful ministers who have been the objects of such charities, are seldom easy in conscience and self-respect if they have not returned all that they had received at the earliest moment possible. As for the rest, it may be considered as a rule, that a large percentage are objects of eleemosynary support, in some form, to the end of their lives, and are never able to return any money they thus receive, their utmost exertions just enabling them to keep out of the poor-house.

It must be remembered, however, that money has an artificial sentiment connected with it in the minds of merchants and traders which many students never acquire. It is with them a necessity and a convenience, but a comparatively very low possession, and they never acquire a very high sense of gratitude toward those who, having it to give away, bestow it upon the indigent who have often what is much better in learning and goodness. Perhaps, too, the shrinking pride which feels a pecuniary gift, even when necessities are urgent, to be a degradation, however impossible it may be to decline it, is not a wholly noble, much less a strictly Christian sentiment. Ministers have not much chance as a rule to cultivate a pride of independence in respect to the means of living. Society and the church, not, perhaps, without some wise instinct, keep them, as a rule, at a poor, dying rate of salary. They enter the profession with the expectation of resigning wealth, income from increasing talents and success, accumulated savings and an easy and well-endowed old age. This consciousness doubtless takes away some portion of the feeling which men in the other professions have about being the objects of charity during the progress of their education, academic and theological. They set off the essential sacrifice of moneyed ends in the choice of their calling, against the support which the usages of the Christian world afford them in training for a self-denying profession.

But after all is said in justice and charity in extenuation of the custom of making the preparation for the clerical profession a special object of public and private charity, it remains an evil—a necessary one many consider it—but nevertheless an evil. Free education in any form tends to cheapen the sense of the value of education and to dampen the eagerness and earnestness of learners, as well as to weaken the sentiment of parental responsibility and the pride of independence. Moreover, it interferes with the laws of free choice and free tendency, which would make education various and accommodate it to individual preferences, while it withholds the natural stimulus which, by giving the resolute and the forelooking the rewards of their virtues, causes a wholesome rivalry in the race for success. Few can deny that it floods the country with a large class whose formal elementary education is a poor substitute for what they lose meanwhile of training in pursuits for which they are better fitted, while it often inspires false tastes and idle habits, and indisposes to the drudgery which is frequently the only open or possible method of an honest and useful life. United with other causes, it has tended to disqualify a large class of American girls for domestic service and an equal class of American boys and young men for the useful labors of the field and the work-shop. We are not arguing for the abandonment of free schools, or even against compulsory education. We think the weight of the argument in this country is still in the scale, which makes it our duty and policy to uphold both. But the argument is not all one way. And it becomes us to recognize the fact that it is a violation of some of the more important principles of freedom and self-reliance. Some of the objections to free schools will doubtless be overcome by a radical change in their character. They need to be kept more strictly elementary, and to be made in part industrial-training schools.

Probably the higher up we go in education, the more dangerous it is to interfere with the principle of selection—the intellectual tools being reserved for those who prove their right to hold them, by their ability to earn or seize them, and not kept open and free for all who are willing to accept them. There is nothing dangerous in the endowment of colleges and the public support of universities, provided pupils are compelled to prove their ability to derive advantages from them that will accrue to the common good, by submitting to thorough examination and showing their disposition and capacity to become thorough students. But it is wrong to the public and to public benefactors to accept on easy terms those who afford no promise of doing honor and service by properly improving the advantages offered. A great many young men of indolent intellect and small capacity for professional success are foisted by cheap colleges or free academic opportunities into all the professions, and add to the discredit they bring upon their guild an injury to society by being withdrawn from pursuits where they are needed and in which they are fitted to succeed.

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY ENGLISH THOUGHT.

SECOND NOTICE:—CONSTRUCTIVE DEISM.

THE avowed sympathies of the writers in the deist controversy by no means coincided with their true affinities of thought. Judged by the war-cries of the period the issues seemed definite enough: Christianity on the one hand, infidelity and atheism on the other; the Bible a forgery or the word of God; Christianity an imposture or a fount of plenary inspiration. But in fact, Mr. Stephen assures us, the orthodox flag covered wider differences than those which separated its followers from its enemies. The orthodox statement, thinly veiled, at times, in the old-fashioned phraseology the most radical deistical opinions. But as "no one is more offensive than the man who strips your thought of the disguises most carefully prepared," the defenders of the faith loved their opponents all the less because of their own half-conscious approximation to their heterodox conclusions. To men who view the conflict from the vantage ground of modern thought, the arguments on both sides are about equally worthless. They rested on historical assumptions long ago exploded, or they implied a partial glimpse of truths whose real bearing could not be appreciated. And yet, perplexed as are the issues, inadequate as are the methods, unconscious as are the various antagonists, what live coals they have mistaken for cool pebbles. The controversy is no mere historical curiosity, but a wilderness which had to be traversed on the way from seventeenth century to nineteenth century thought. Mr. Stephen is wonderfully impartial. Trojan and Tyrian, alike, he treats without discrimination. Himself a thorough anti-supernaturalist, he shows no favor to the deists, but handles their arguments with equal, if not greater, severity than the arguments of their opponents.

It was the faith of deism, pure and simple, that Christianity was no more or less than rational religion, plus a supernatural accretion which was prejudicial to its life. The orthodox objection was two-fold; first, that unassisted reason could not construct a clear and authoritative creed; second, that supernatural Christianity was on the ground and therefore must answer to an actual need of human nature. Deism, as opposed to the former, was constructive; as opposed to the latter, critical. In order of time constructive and critical deism were simultaneous. In order of thought the constructive had priority. Doubts of the record were logically subsequent to doubts of the principles involved. Locke's "Reasonableness of Christianity," and Toland's "Christianity not Mysterious," appeared in 1695 and 1696 respectively. But the "Christianity" in Locke's title meant supernatural Christianity; in Toland's, something less. Locke was the avowed protagonist of revelation. He accepted the plenary inspiration of the Bible; could conceive of no half-way position between this and the theory of imposture. But without quite allowing that no error of belief is sinful, he reduces to a minimum the belief that constitutes a man a Christian. It is that Jesus was the Messiah. And even without this belief salvation is possible. But if this be so, what is the need of supernatural Christianity? To sanction and encourage the morality which without such sanction and encouragement could never hope for universal acceptance. It is a new promulgation of the moral law. Himself a thoroughgoing rationalist, it never occurred to Locke to make the worth of Christianity consist in its superiority to reason or its opposition to it. This monstrous folly was reserved for later advocates, some of whom are still "alive and kicking." He thought that he could render Christianity no better service than to prove its teachings perfectly coincident with the teachings of the unassisted reason. In fact, by his appeal to reason, he evoked a Frankenstein which others found it difficult to quell. Toland avowed his adhesion to Christianity full as explicitly as Locke, but Mr. Stephen fears somewhat less honestly. There were temptations to dishonesty in 1696 which do not now exist. But while Locke is regarded a defender of the faith, Toland is always ranked among the infidels. The difference between his position and Locke's justifies no such estimate. Locke said that Christianity was reasonable. Then, said Toland, everything in pretended Christianity which is contrary to reason or inconceivable is not real Christianity. In so far as a mystery is inconceivable it can form no part of Christianity. Toland meant his test for doctrines rather than narrations, and even there applied it cautiously. Others were not so cautious. His book set Locke and Bishop Stillingfleet by the ears. The bishop saw, as Locke himself could not, that Locke and Toland were substantially agreed. But Toland had adventured on a problem where he soon found himself floundering beyond his depth. "The limits of Religious Thought" were not for him to settle. Far abler men have failed in our own time with all the advantages of Toland's and a hundred other failures from his day to theirs.

Mr. Stephen passes from his review of Locke and Toland, and the controversy which they excited, to Clarke and Wollaston. Samuel Clarke does not figure in these pages as the intellectual giant which he seemed to his contemporaries and which we were taught to regard him by Dr. Francis in our divinity-school days. Mr. Stephen finds him only a second-rate advocate of opinions which are only interesting in the mouths of greater men. A disciple of Descartes, he enervated his doctrines without making them more reasonable. He was the great English representative of the a priori method of constructing a system of theology. A great admirer of Newton, it was his ambition to construct a sort of theological "Principia." In a chain of twelve propositions he demonstrated the existence and the attributes of God. Another chain of fifteen propositions, equally mathematical, demonstrated the need and truth of revelation, and still another chain the universality and immutability of the moral law. But while there is no moral or theological truth which he cannot demonstrate, as all men are not Samuel Clarkes, a revealed religion is necessary to impress this body of truth upon mankind at large and by the sanctioning beliefs in heaven and hell to compel faith and obedience. Clarke is more truly than Tindal a Christian deist.

The method of Wollaston's "Religion of Nature" was not unlike that of Clarke. But Mr. Stephen is much more drawn to him than to Clarke, because of his perception of those facts upon which pessimism rests its argument. Mr. Stephen is himself no pessimist. His evolutionism saved him from being one. But pessimism, however crude, is not so distasteful to him as a crude and shallow optimism. For this he saves his sharpest weapons, his most stinging epithets. Even the pessimism of Mandeville, so coarse and brutal, is less distasteful to him than the optimism of Shaftesbury, wilfully or selfishly blind to the plain facts of human misery. But Wollaston was a pessimist only so far as this life was concerned. He was a pessimist with a purpose. He painted the miseries of this present life as darkly as he could to show that there must be another life in order that we may get as much pleasure, on the whole, as pain.

In 1730 appeared Tindal's "Christianity as old as Creation," a book which marked the culminating point of the whole deist controversy on its constructive side. Its rather dry and formal arguments are an attempt to exclaim, in the dialect of his time:

The Builder of this universe was wise;
He planned all souls, all systems, planets, particles;
The plan he shaped all worlds and æons by
Was—heavens! was thy small nine and thirty articles.

Not that he had the awful sense of God which dictated these lines; but his conception of God, though very definite, was sufficiently noble to prove the average Orthodox conception of his time outrageously incongruous. Starting from the immutability of God and human nature, he argued that, in simple justice, the truth of Christianity must have been revealed to primitive man. Whatever was not so revealed was not the truth. And so everything went except the acknowledged laws of ordinary morality. Obedience to these as "the rule of God" was Tindal's definition of religion. His deism was next door to Clarke's colorless Christianity. If reason was as competent as Clarke contended, it was manifestly absurd to lug in supernaturalism as a sort of fifth wheel to a coach. But Tindal's abstract human nature was severely tried by the concrete facts of every-day experience. An easy victor on his neighbor's grounds, his argument is absolutely worthless tried by the tests of modern sociology, with its array of proof that human nature is an exceedingly variable quantity. Tindal entirely fails to see, in common with all eighteenth-century writers, that the history of the human race is a history of development.

But if his contemporaries couldn't see this any more than Tindal, they could see that his doctrines didn't tally with the facts of human ignorance, and so won an apparent victory. But some of his opponents tried so hard to make Christianity appear reasonable that they very nearly went over to his side. Foster and Sykes were eminent examples. The more Orthodox reply was that the truths of Christianity were undiscoverable except by revelation. Leland and Conybeare are here the great expounders. It was their trick to belittle human reason when assailing natural religion, to exalt it when defending revealed, regardless of the inconsistency. "Man is a kind of Bentley-Caliban—a fetish worshipper on the one side, and an accomplished critic on the other." Mr. Stephen wonders how such books were popular and Wm. Law's quite unregarded. Here was a man who realized God's superiority to man as did few of his contemporaries, Christian or deist. But his method, also, was to depreciate reason, oblivious that by so doing he was befriending the absolute skepticism of Hume more than the partial skepticism of Tindal. Dodwell's "Christianity, not founded on Argument," pleaded for a miraculous communication of saving moral and religious truth to every individual—a very natural conclusion from the depreciation of reason by Leland and Law, but an unconscious reductio ad absurdum of their arguments. Mr. Stephen's account of constructive deism ends with Bolingbroke. His God was Paley's almighty watch-maker; the argument from design is his great argument. His shallow optimism provokes Mr. Stephen's keenest irony. Follow him, and you were landed in a theory contradicted by every fact before your eyes. Follow the Orthodox divines, and you were compelled to assert the absolute perfection of the Deity, and at the same time ascribe to him a cruelty and vindictiveness everywhere reflected in the character of his human offspring. Constructive deism left the world confronted by this horrible dilemma. Had it accomplished nothing? Nay, rather much, in that it could not be but that humanity would, soon or late, find out a way involved in no such contradictions. Honor to those who by their futile efforts proved that here or there was not the way which we are still feeling after, if haply we may find it, and not without profound encouragement.

J. W. C.

(FOR THE INQUIRER.)

THE GRACE OF GOD.

BY F. L. HOSMER.

"My grace is sufficient for thee."

'Mid life's strange vicissitude,
Seeming evil mixed with good—
'Mid its pleasure and its pain,
'Mid its losses and its gain,
Be thou still my staff and rod,
All-sustaining grace of God!

Like a pilgrim here I pass,
Darkly see as through a glass;
Little know I of the way,
What shall be I cannot say;
Let thy light upon me shine,
All-sufficient grace divine!

'Mid my ever-changing mood
One that changeth not is good;
And His word within I have,
He will guard the life He gave;
Thus I sing along the road
Steadfast in the grace of God.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM ENGLAND.

THIS is the idlest time of all the year, as far as matters of public interest are concerned. People are all engaged in private and family parties, and have no time to spare for public work which does not to a certain extent share in the festive nature of the season. Political societies are holding Christmas and New Year Tea-parties, as they used to be called before the modern word soirée came into fashion; Sunday schools and congregations are similarly employed; indeed, all the world is either dining or drinking tea, and has no time for serious business. Those of us who are actively engaged in public life are supposed to have some thirty hours a day to devote to attendance at these public festivities, with unlimited powers of endurance and a constant supply of original and witty speeches suitable to hospital Christmas trees, working men's club anniversaries, congregational dinners, and Sunday school tea meetings.

I have a strong faith in Christmas and all connected with it, and though I have a considerable experience of its fatigues, always look forward with pleasure to its recurrence, and just as regularly rejoice when it is all over, and when the world gets to work again, for a month's festivities mean having no evenings for one's-self, and all the days have to be spent in preparing to do one's share in the public rejoicings; while there is always an uncomfortable feeling that the folks do wish the speaking were over, and the amateur performance or the dance were going to begin. I almost think my pleasantest public Christmas festivity was in our Children's Hospital. We have, at least so the committee firmly believe, the best planned and the best managed Children's Hospital in England, and therefore of course in the world, for you know, we Britishers are just as sure that we are ahead of our neighbors as you Americans are. It has three wards now, or pavilions I suppose I ought to say, beautiful in being bright, cheerful, airy and always clean. In each we have about twenty-five children; some, of course, confined to their beds, while some are already so far convalescent that they can run about the room. A generous friend provides for these little sufferers three Christmas trees, and on the thirtieth of December they were lighted up, to the great delight of the patients. It was a touching sight to see the pleasure dancing in the children's eyes as the brilliant glory of the sight reached them; and when the various presents provided for each poor child reached the hand for which it was intended the joy was great. One poor little fellow could hardly believe that he was to call the toy which was handed to him his own.

I fancy if we had sick children in our own homes we should be afraid of the experiment of exciting them by Christmas trees and presents distributed by a crowd of visitors, however friendly. I had however, two days subsequently to the Christmas party, to visit the hospital again, and not one of the invalids was any the worse for the evening's enjoyment. Indeed, they seemed to have gained an experience of pleasure which would be a source of gratification forever to them. It is a touching sight to see so many suffering children, and at the same time a pleasure too; they are so well cared for, are evidently, whenever it is possible, receiving such aid as shall restore them to health, when disease is not too far gone, and such a cheerful atmosphere is round them, such friendly smiling faces, and such plenty of food and clothing, that a stay in hospital must almost seem a little paradise to the half-starved dwellers in the dingy courts and alleys of our smoky city.

Writing about the children reminds me that with the beginning of this year the amended Education Act of 1876 has come into force; and the law of England henceforth recognizes it to be the duty of "every parent of every child to cause such child to receive elementary instruction in reading, writing, and arithmetic." There are very many enactments in Lord Sandon's new law which play into the hands of the ecclesiastical authorities, and which will prove a hinderance to the future educational progress of the nation, but this one clause is so valuable that, coming as it did from a government of so conservative a character as our present one, it marks the great advance which has been made by the family since the Rational Education League was established in 1869. That society was looked upon as demanding quite Utopian conditions when it insisted upon "(1.) Local authorities being obliged to find school accommodation for every child in their districts. (2.) Necessary schools to be provided by local rates aided by Government grants. (3.) The Rate schools to be managed by local authorities and subject to government inspection. (4.) Rate schools to be unsectarian. (5.) Rate schools to be free. (6.) Children of school age to be compelled to attend school." I suppose that since 1874 even this last clause will not appear absolutely opposed to liberty in New York. Seldom has any agitation been able to boast such results as the League can claim for its seven years' existence. It was opposed by nearly the united force of the established Roman Catholic and the Wesleyan churches. All manner of misrepresentation was resorted to to impede its progress. We were told that we were gradually and surely overtaking the ignorance of the community, and that no change of system was needed. We were accused of desiring to bring up the children of the poor without a knowledge of God or Christ. We were accused of desiring to plunge the country into a profligate waste of money, and I don't remember how many awful things besides. Well, notwithstanding all obstacles, we now have over 1,140 school boards in the country, and where there are no school boards Town Councils or Boards of Guardians have to elect Attendance Committees to enforce the education of children. School rates are now levied wherever there is a school board; all sectarian formularies are by law excluded from rate supported schools; School Boards can admit children to their schools without charge, and can, as well as Attendance Committees, make compulsory by-laws. In a few years no doubt we shall see the result of this improved legislation, and notwithstanding the increase of grants to schools under ecclesiastical superintendence, I have little doubt but that by degrees the elementary education of the country will be entirely in the hands of locally elected authorities, responsible to the rate payers. It seems strange that over one million pounds sterling is paid to self-appointed school managers from Government funds; but the tide is turning, and school boards are growing in popularity, so that before long we may hope to see them exercising the full control they ought over the elementary education of the country. The reactionary section of the Established church has received a very emphatic check in nearly every recent School Board election, the unsectarian party returning its men nearly everywhere by large majorities and securing for them the management of the schools for the next three years. London, Birmingham, Newcastle, Sunderland, Manchester and other large towns will in consequence make great progress, we may rest assured, in educational matters.

Indeed, just now the Church is having anything but a pleasant time of it. Its internecine struggles are taking up a great amount of public attention. The growing energy of the extreme ritualist party is becoming more and more threatening to the unity of the church. The Public Worship Act, which was to secure uniformity, seems, like all previous acts for that purpose, to produce more diversity than unity, as conscientious High Churchmen seem to make it a matter of conscience to disobey the law. The Rev. I. Tooth, of Hatcham, is just now clamoring for martyrdom and setting both the court established by the Public Worship Act and his Bishop at defiance. He has been condemned for using a ritual which cannot be distinguished from the Roman Catholic, and has been inhibited by the Bishop of Rochester; but he continues his ornate services and refuses to admit the clergyman, sent by the Bishop to conduct the services, into his church. What will be the result no one can tell. Past experience leads me to grave doubts whether any of the ritualistic clergy will act with the honorable consistency of the martyrs of 1662, and lay down their livings for conscience sake. The self-sacrificing spirit of the 2,000 ejected ministers seems very unfashionable just now. It is much more profitable and pleasant to cling to endowments than to resign them.

The brotherly feeling of the different parties in the church is being very beautifully manifested in Manchester just now. We are to have a Church Mission here beginning next month, a kind of respectable Moody and Sankey revival under the patronage of an excellent Bishop. Much to his disgust, a quarrel has broken out between the Ritualist and the Evangelical sections of his clergy. The Dean, who belongs to the former, has invited the Rev. Knox Little, an extreme man of his own school, but a most indefatigable parish priest and eloquent speaker, to be the Mission preacher at the cathedral. Against this the Evangelicals are up in arms. We are to have the pleasant and edifying sight of a public meeting of churchmen to denounce the appointment of Mr. Little, who is spoken of in the advertisements as a notorious ecclesiastical law-breaker. How the Mission will fare no one can tell; but our good Bishop is already afraid of the prospect, and no doubt is truly grieved; for a better and more tolerant man than he is cannot be found in the Church of England. But though he is a Peer of the Realm, and one of the best and most genial workers for all good objects, even he cannot restrain the bigotry of his clergy or prevent their quarrelling. It is this kind of conduct which makes many of us outsiders believe that the established church is threatened by greater dangers from within the fold than by any which the Liberation Society can create by outside agitation. The really liberal thought of the country takes no interest in questions concerning vestments or incense, or the eastward position, except in so far as these things symbolize a growing tendency to priestcraft, but it is becoming more and more estranged from a church that is divided by them. We have been pleased by the evident awakening of liberal thought in the more educated classes, and the experience of those who have been attempting the establishment of a Free Christian church in one of our university towns is an encouraging sign of the readiness with which the most cultivated classes receive a manly expression of liberal thought. A few well chosen ministers, among them Charles Beard, H. W. Crosskey, John Gordon, Alexander Gordon, Henry Ierson and others have made an inroad on the University from which but a short time ago, dissenters were practically excluded, and have conducted Sunday services there with surprising results. Two young men, churchmen, studying there, have devoted themselves to the Unitarian ministry, and I trust that before very long we shall see a strong congregation established there, with no tests or creeds to limit the thought of either minister or people. There will be historical fitness in the University of Milton, Newton and Locke having a Free Church and a Unitarian congregation meeting for worship near its venerable colleges. If all who agreed with us in principle were but to come forward we should need a larger room than we have engaged for the present year; the prestige of the establishment and the reproach of dissent are very strong as yet amongst us, but the truth will prevail at length.

I am afraid from the look of things at Constantinople that I may have to write in a fortnight about more stirring scenes than ecclesiastical squabbles, but still hope again and, hope for peace. At any rate I think I may safely say we are not going to fight for Turkey.

S. A. S.

MANCHESTER, January 10, 1877.

FROM WASHINGTON.

THE "Library of Congress" attracts the attention of all who visit Washington. It might, perhaps, be better named "The National Library." It now contains 311,097 volumes or bound books and 100,000 pamphlets. There have been added during the year 1876 about 18,000 books and 9,000 pamphlets, 5,495 volumes and 745 pamphlets were purchased; 8,000 books and 5,000 pamphlets were contributed by authors and publishers under the law which requires two copies of every publication to be so contributed to secure a copyright. There were donations to the Library of 1,828 volumes and 345 pamphlets, besides 830 of the former and 373 of the latter received in the way of "exchanges." 2,500 maps and charts are also to be added to the annual receipts of this mammoth Library. Much is said of the depressed condition of the book publishing trade, yet it appears that the copyright entries made during the year 1876 exceeded those of 1875—being 14,882 in 1876 and 14,197 in 1875.

The addition of books to the Library during the past year by purchase are said to have been unusually important. Opportunities are watched in American and foreign auction markets for valuable acquisitions. Among the foreign purchases were publications of the Maitland Club and of the Chetham Society, debates of the Irish Parliament 1775 to 1789, besides many works of great value in architecture, sculpture, painting, and the mechanic arts, tending to make the Library more complete in books of reference. A new catalogue embracing 260,000 titles has been completed in manuscript. The parsimony of Congress has prevented or delayed its publication. An index to the documents, debates and laws of Congress is also nearly ready for the press. The value of the catalogue and index is apparent, and Congress ought not longer to withhold the necessary appropriation to make them available.

A publication of original documents relating to the discoveries by the French in the northwestern portion of the United States is in preparation. It will occupy six octavo volumes with an atlas of maps in quarto. An edition of only 500 copies will be printed. But altogether the most important subject in relation to this great library is the need of a building appropriated exclusively to its use. The present rooms are entirely inadequate. Their fair capacity would not exceed 240,000 volumes, yet over 300,000 are crowded within their walls. The floors are literally stacked with books for the want of shelf room.

Not only is the value of the library greatly impaired by this disgraceful condition of things, but great loss and damage accrues to the books. With the immense additions annually also considered, the future condition of the library becomes a serious subject. It has repeatedly been presented to Congress, but the suggestions of "them literary fellers" go unheeded.

The Librarian, Mr. A. R. Spofford, from whose brief annual report I have gathered these statistics, spares no labor within the limits allowed him to make this library a credit to the government. Senator Howe, the Chairman of the joint committee in charge of the library, is ever ready to act upon the librarian's recommendations. Mr. Howe's colleagues are senators Edmunds, of Vermont, and Ransom, of North Carolina, with Messrs. Clymer, Waddell and Monroe, of the House. Whether the members of this committee possess any superior qualifications for their duties, as managers of a great library, might be worthy of inquiry.

WASHINGTON, January 21, 1877.

Of George Dawson it is said that he hated theology and botany, but loved religion and flowers.

BOSTON CHIT-CHAT.

My Dear Inquirer:

IN speaking of the "size" of New England weather, Mark Twain says that frequently you will see it "sticking out beyond the edges, and projecting around hundreds and hundreds of miles over the neighboring states." He said that before our last spell of weather began. I don't think much weather has been exported lately. It has been pretty hard work; but I think it has been all used for home consumption. I never saw more weather, and Boston never saw more snow in a given time. Our present extravagance must have used up the supply that had been stored for several years to come.

The three lectures thus far given in the Horticultural Hall course have been very successful. Mr. Frothingham's was scholarly and fine, as everybody expected. The very next day, however, it was crushed beneath the tread of the "Elephantine Lectureship" of Mr. Cook. But we are sanguine that Mr. F. will still manage to survive to do good work yet, in spite of the disapproval of the Young Men's Christian Association.

Last Sunday Prof. Hyatt, of the Natural History Society, gave us a "New View of Evolution." The Professor is an old pupil of Agassiz, and now a pronounced Darwinian. In a recent conversation he expressed to me the opinion that if evolution were given up, no theory remained that could properly be called scientific.

The Professor is a singularly modest and simple man. One thing about him strikes me with much force; and, if I mistake not, it is an illustration of the natural result of scientific culture. I could not get him to speak of knowing anything beyond that which he had specially investigated and proved. Theologians are not troubled with any such limitations of knowledge.

Mr. Murray, every little while, treats us to some remarkable specimens of modern orthodoxy. If Mr. Murray's sermons were conscious of the relations in which they stand to each other it would hardly be safe to leave them alone together. The antagonisms of Barnum's Happy Family would be peace compared with their mutually devouring attitudes. Their relations are what Gail Hamilton calls "Kilkenny Cat-egorical"; they eat each other up. The claim of such preaching as his to the name orthodox ought to be regarded as the big joke of the season.

For the last two Sundays the Rev. J. L. Dudley, of Milwaukee, has preached at the Parker Memorial. For some years he has had a wide reputation. He speaks without notes, in a finished, racy, and logical style. Though he has stood on a nominally orthodox platform, he has not kept his position by any Pickwickian use of language. No one has had any reason to doubt what he believed. He occupies substantially a Free Religious position. Quite as broad as any Unitarian, he will not allow himself to be called one. Having given up one ism, he will not now be tied to another. He thinks it is time for a broad, cosmic religion that shall not claim that all the truth and good is in any one name. There are many strong men in orthodox pulpits who hesitate about becoming Unitarians because they do not believe in any sectarianism.

The Moody and Sankey Tabernacle will be dedicated this, Thursday, evening. Persons are to be admitted by envelope; and into this envelope all are expected to put at least one dollar as a contribution to the expenses of the enterprise. Quite a little breeze was started the other night in the volunteer choir, by their being told with rather unnecessary sharpness and energy, by Dr. Pentecost, that they were not expected to excuse themselves from giving the dollar because of their being members of the choir. One man boldly denounced it as an imposition. Whereupon The Globe remarks: "The choir will now sing, 'I'm glad salvation's free, and a collection will then be taken up.'"

Mr. Tilden preached on the revival last Sunday. He wished them god-speed, although he could not work their way. Mr. Hale has been preaching on their doctrinal basis for two or three Sundays. He has handled their theology without gloves.

I had a talk the other day with the Rev. J. Villa Blake; and though he did not say I might speak of it out loud, I think he will not care if I say to you, in confidence, that he is getting hungry for pulpit work once more. He is a man of rare ability, as those know who are familiar with his work in the 28th Society.

Carpenter is doing fine work this winter. One of his most intelligent men recently told me that he had never preached better than now. He is also lecturing somewhat on solar and lunar topics. But he has travelled there so often that he doesn't get lost in the infinite.

All who see the INQUIRER feel like congratulating the energy and ability that have put it on its present footing. It only needs to be widely known to insure the success it deserves.

14 WORCESTER STREET, January 25, 1877.

SILVUS.

LITERATURE.

THE GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION OF ANIMALS.*

IN the two beautiful volumes now before us, Mr. Wallace has conferred an immense service both upon the scientific naturalist and the general reader. Never before has the material relating to the distribution of animal life upon our globe been so well and so thoroughly systematized. Such a work as this has a double value. It furnishes at once a ready reference to vast masses of facts considered singly as facts, and it also illustrates very clearly the important principles of evolution. The key-note of the book is, perhaps, best sounded in the following passage:

"If we keep in view these facts, that the minor features of the earth's surface are everywhere slowly changing, that the forms and structure and habits of all living things are also slowly changing, while the great features of the earth, the continents and oceans and loftiest mountain ranges, only change after very long intervals, and with extreme slowness; we must see that the present distribution of animals upon the several parts of the earth's surface is the final product of all these wonderful revolutions in organic and inorganic nature. The greatest and most radical differences in the productions of any part of the globe must be dependent on isolation by the most effectual and most permanent barriers. That ocean which has remained broadest and deepest from the most remote geological epochs will separate countries the productions of which most widely and radically differ; while the most recently depressed seas, or the last-formed mountain ranges, will separate countries the products of which are almost or quite identical. It will be evident, therefore, that the study of the distribution of animals and plants may add greatly to our knowledge of the past history of our globe."

Starting out from this point of view, Mr. Wallace divides his work into four parts of very unequal length. Part First relates to the principles and general phenomena of distribution, taking up the means by which animals have been dispersed, their migrations, and the conditions of existence. Among other interesting illustrations of the mutual interdependence of species is cited Mr. Darwin's famous case of the cats and the clover. In Great Britain the red clover is fertilized only by humble bees. These insects are kept down by the field mice, which destroy both combs and nests. The mice in turn are destroyed by cats and owls. If, then, there were no cats nor owls, the mice would propagate much more rapidly than they do now; they would exterminate the bees, the clover would not be fertilized, and the plant would consequently die out. Hence the cats and the owls render the continued existence of red clover possible. Again, in Paraguay, a certain species of fly destroys new-born cattle and horses. Hence these animals have never run wild in that country, although they abound both to the north and south of it. Thus is inevitably caused a difference in the vegetation of Paraguay, and consequently a difference in its insects, reptiles, birds, and wild mammalia.

In Part Second the distribution of extinct animals is discussed quite fully, a good deal of space being given to the interesting American discoveries of Marsh, Cope and Leidy. Obviously, the distribution of species at the present day must depend in part upon the distribution in past times of those earlier species from which modern forms have been derived. By comparing the distribution of animals, in widely separated periods of time, much light is inevitably thrown upon the great problems of evolution.

* "The Geographical Distribution of Animals, with a study of the relations of living and extinct faunas as elucidating the past changes of the earth's surface." By Alfred Russel Wallace. Two vols., with maps and illustrations. 8vo. New York, Harper & Brothers. 1876.

In Part Third, which is by far the bulkiest division of the work, we have a full outline of what Mr. Wallace calls "Zoological Geography." Here are taken up, in due order, the different regions of the earth, and a brief summary of the fauna of each is presented. Of course a systematic division of the earth's surface into regions is necessary, and in this matter Mr. Wallace follows Sclater. First is described the Palearctic region, comprising Europe and the great mass of Asia; then the Ethiopian, which covers all Africa (except the extreme northern portions) and the adjacent islands. In the Oriental Region are the Indies and the Malay Archipelago; the Australian Region includes Australia, New Guinea and the many other islands of the Pacific; the Neotropical region extends from Cape Horn to Northern Mexico, taking in the West Indies; and lastly the Nearctic Region represents the bulk of North America. Each region is carefully discussed and its relationships to other regions pointed out, both resemblances and dissimilarities being traced. Since it would be obviously impossible to treat all forms of animal life, a few classes are selected for discussion, all lower orders being omitted. These classes are the vertebrates (mammals, reptiles, birds and fishes), the mollusca and the insects. Indeed, the vertebrates only are taken up at all thoroughly, the other classes coming in rather incidentally than otherwise. Species, as such, are systematically disregarded—the discussions relating chiefly to genera—because, as the author says, species are so numerous as to be unmanageable; and representing, as they do, the most recent modifications of form, are not so clearly connected with geographical changes.

Part Fourth, "Geographical Zoology," is in a certain sense an inversion of Part Third. Now, instead of discussing the fauna of a region, the author takes up each family of animals, and describes its range. For example, the order of primates is first taken up, family by family, and its distribution among the various geographical districts indicated upon a sort of condensed chart or diagram which refers to more elaborate maps. We have thus a very convenient reference book, by means of which, at a glance, we can tell in what parts of the world any given family of animals is represented.

In finally laying down these volumes the reader cannot but be impressed with the immense industry of the author. It is a very difficult matter to collect and arrange great numbers of heterogeneous facts, and yet Mr. Wallace has bravely faced the difficulty. He has presented a book which is both interesting to read and useful for reference, and he has filled with remarkable success what has hitherto been a serious gap in the literature of science.

F. W. C.

BRIEF NOTICES.

SUGGESTIONS FOR A PUBLIC RELIGIOUS SERVICE, in Harmony with Modern Science and Philosophy. London: Trübner & Co.

This is an English pamphlet intended to suggest an Order of Public Worship on the ground of Theism. The anonymous authors, who write with earnestness and ability, appear to take substantially the same views of the religious situation as those with which Miss Francis Power Cobbe has made her readers familiar. The introductory remarks (by far the larger part of the matter) touch briefly a large number of theological topics, and show strong thought and deep feeling. But persons acquainted with the order of services in Unitarian churches in America and England, which represent "the most advanced thought," will find nothing novel in the order proposed here. The congregation is to take part in the hymns and prayers. One reading is from the Bible, and one is from another religious literature. A Book of Religious Service is suggested to be drawn from all accessible sources, with a supplement of extracts from ancient and modern writers on religion. Clergymen and others dissatisfied with the prevalent one-sided and little-worshipful order of services in most Protestant churches will find some valuable hints here.

N. F. G.

THE LIBRARY TABLE. New York: Henry S. Hinton & Co. Vol. I. No. I.

This is a connecting link, being both December and January number. Its named contributors are Charles S. Harrower, O. B. Frothingham, Francis Gerry Fairfield, Howard Hinton, Samuel Osgood, and J. Brander Matthews. Beside the signed reviews, it contains numerous shorter notices and items, a "Record of New Books," and an "Index to Periodical Literature," which, if continued regularly and well edited, should be of great use. The proprietors appear to be making an honest effort to have their work well done, and The Library Table should, consequently, prove of much value to the student and, indeed, to all readers.

NEW PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

BOOKS

- From Harper & Brothers, New York.
CENTRAL AFRICA: Naked Truths of Naked People. By Col. C. Chaille Long. Ill.
THE PAPACY AND THE CIVIL POWER. By R. W. Thompson.
A PRINCESS OF TRULLE. By William Black.
MADCAP VIOLET. By William Black.
THE SUN-MAID. A Romance. By the author of "Artiste," etc.
From D. Appleton & Co., New York.
THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD. A Romance. By Robert Buchanan. 75 cents.
From Lee & Shepard.
THE WINE-BIBBER'S TEMPERANCE SOCIETY. 75 cents.
THE ART OF PROJECTING. By Prof. A. E. Dolbear, of Tufts College. Ill. $1.50.
From Nelson & Phillips, New York.
OLD TALES RETOLD FROM GREEK MYTHOLOGY. By Augusta Larned. Ill.
From J. E. Osgood & Co.
POEMS OF PLACES. France. Edited by Henry W. Longfellow. Vols. 1, 2. $1.25.
THANKFUL BLOSSOM. A Romance of the Jerseys, 1779. By Bret Harte. Illus. $1.
From Hurd & Houghton.
A STATEMENT OF THE NATURAL SOURCES OF THEOLOGY. By Thomas Hill, D.D., LL.D. $1. Cloth. 75 cents. Paper.

ART NOTES.

THE WATER COLOR EXHIBITION.

FIRST NOTICE.

The first exhibition of American Water Colors a few years ago was a display of crude, imperfect and tentative work, in which little warrant could have been found for a prophecy of the results now shown at the Academy. The best that could be said of the majority of the pictures was that the intention was better than the performance. In the collection now on view at the Academy few are bad, and many are excellent.

The transparent and the body-colorists are both well represented; and it is observable that, while the modern practice of body-color favors solidity and depth of effect, crispness, decision and transparency are sacrificed. A comparison of one of Van Elten's paintings with the best work of the other school will verify this statement. The blended intricacy of nature's lines and her superpositions of color are best rendered in water-color; while gradation, depth and the qualities that represent space, solidity and texture are most adequately expressed in oil.

The desire to get results by the use of some means or material other than the most direct, appropriate and effective infects all art-practice; it is incident to that spirit which exalts technique above thought, which elaborates the iridescent hues of a vase and makes the human face wooden and repulsive.

A quick reconnaissance at the Academy furnishes the following notes:

The landscape painters are in the majority; a necessity in an American exhibition. There are two large works by Colman—views of a cathedral—excellent, but not so good as the two pictures in last year's exhibition; a study of rocks by Richards, not pleasing in color; a charming landscape by the same artist—"why did he not do it in oil?" was the comment of an artist. Several good drawings by Smillie, not entirely satisfactory in color; a road-scene by Robbins, too elaborate; another by Bellows that may be called a water-color painting, but cannot be called a water-color drawing; good marines by Nicoll; an excellent wood-interior and sketch by F. Hopkinson Smith; a coast scene by Bricher and a summer scene, one too metallic, the other too "sweet"; several delightful pictures by Van Elten; and essays by Wyant, McEntee and Cropsey. Tiffany contributes two or three studies and a large painting full of colors appropriate to mural decoration or textile fabrics, with figures in the foreground very badly drawn and very weak.

Genre is represented by Magrath, who repeats his ideal face in two or three good pictures; by E. K. Johnson, in two pictures, one of which, at least, is exquisite; by Homer, bizarre, of course; by Perry, who is truthful, and who will sometime be poetic; and by Reinhardt, for whom Boughton is "so near and yet so far."

There is good work in fruit and flower painting; and the exhibition in the black-and-white room is interesting. Several good foreign pictures are in the collection, but they are badly hung.

PROF. JOHN K. PAINE, of Harvard University, is working on a new musical composition, entitled the "Spring Symphony."

THE South Kensington Art Hand-books are cheap and excellent. Those infected with Ceramics who cannot afford to buy an expensive book, will find interesting matter and fine illustrations in the work entitled Maiolica.

IN landscape art those well endowed, who, to their inspiration and gift of observation, joined a practical experience acquired by work, have succeeded in the art struggle. It is true that many painters look upon nature with the eyes of realism, and their works are of an inferior sort; but, on the other hand, many regard her with the gaze of the lover and thus discover their ideal, the ideal which is the object of all love.—CHESNEAU.

LET me think

Of form and the external less. Trust the Spirit,
As sovran Nature does, to make the form;
For otherwise we only imprison spirit,
And not embody. Inward evermore
To outward. So in Life and so in Art,
Which still is life.—E. B. BROWNING.

The above is good advice for the imitator and the realist, and for those critics whose tests are botanical, anatomical and topographical—in a word, external. But let it give no comfort to that legion who regard bad drawing as a sure mark of genius, who splash and call it breadth, and who strive to get the quality of mystery, not by suggesting anything, but by expressing nothing.

BUT while our architects were content to put columns that supported nothing, roofs that covered nothing and parapets and balustrades that protected nothing; to contrive sham attics to hide the construction of ugly roofs, or to make the pedestal of a statue into a chimney-pot, how was it likely to fare with furniture which became a sort of toy architecture? Was it to be wondered at that all constructive shams were increased tenfold when used as ornament? Was it surprising that Grecian stone-altars formed our side-boards, Roman temples our cabinets, sarcophagi our cellarets and wine-coolers, or that our harpsichords stood on lyres instead of legs; that constructive truth, in short, was wholly and entirely disregarded, in order that some favorite type might be reproduced? Was it to be wondered at, moreover, that men broke loose from these dead shams, and, getting sick of these classicities, entirely deserted constructive truth and symmetrical arrangement; went mad, first after Rococoism, and then, in our days, after picturesque naturalism?—REDGRAVE.

THE experience of some good artists has taught them to prefer the smallest and plainest chamber, with one chair and table and with no outlook, to any picturesque liberties. In Turner's house, however, there was not even this austere poetry of asceticism which gives nobility to the cell of the monk and the tent of the soldier. There was no poetry in the place whatever. A place may be bare and simple, yet affecting in the extreme. In Goethe's study "no arm-chair is to be seen, no sofa, nothing which speaks of ease." We like the absence of material luxury in the personal belongings of a great man; but then in Goethe's house the staircase and reception-rooms made a thousand appeals to the mind. There were the Olympian gods, there was a colossal bust of Juno, there were cartoons, sketches of great masters and etchings, a collection of gems, another of bronze statuettes, lamps and vases. In Turner's house there was little to show that he cared for any other art than his own, and not much evidence that he cared even for that, since he treated his own pictures with less care than the humblest picture-dealer will give to his least valuable merchandise.—Hamerton. Portfolio, December, 1876.

HEARTH AND HOME.

OLD SAYINGS.

As poor as a church mouse,
As thin as a rail;
As fat as a porpoise,
As rough as a gale;
As brave as a lion,
As spry as a cat;
As bright as a sixpence,
As weak as a rat.

As proud as a peacock,
As sly as a fox;
As mad as a March hare,
As strong as an ox;
As fair as a lily,
As empty as air;
As rich as Croesus,
As cross as a bear.

As pure as an angel,
As neat as a pin;
As smart as a steel-trap,
As ugly as sin;
As dead as a door-nail,
As white as a sheet;
As flat as a pancake,
As red as a beet.

As round as an apple,
As black as your hat;
As brown as a berry,
As blind as a bat;
As mean as a miser,
As full as a tick;
As plump as a partridge,
As sharp as a stick.

As clean as a penny,
As dark as a pall;
As hard as a millstone,
As bitter as gall;

As fine as a fiddle,
 As clear as a bell;
 As dry as a herring,
 As deep as a well.
 As light as a feather,
 As hard as a rock;
 As stiff as a poker,
 As calm as a clock;
 As green as a gosling,
 As brisk as a bee;
 And now let me stop,
 Lest you weary of me.

—Hartford Courant.

JOSEPH AND BENJAMIN; OR, THE EMPEROR AND THE REPUBLICAN.

[Retold from Berthold Auerbach for THE INQUIRER.]

BY C. C. SHACKFORD.

CHAPTER II.

A MEETING ON THE NEW BRIDGE.

"THERE is Paris!" the valet, sitting by the postillion, called down from the box of the state-coach. The carriage stood still for a moment, and a roar was heard like that of the waves of the sea.

The Emperor looked out. "Paris," he said, half to himself, after he had sat down again; "thus then we greet the city to which all the children of humanity make their pilgrimage. You smile, Cobenzl; tell me what you are thinking of. You used to know Paris; what is passing in your mind?"

"May I speak frankly, your Majesty?"

"Who ever asks that," answered the Emperor impatiently, "wants to conceal something, and to slip off with a false pass, by means of the permission to speak frankly."

"My gracious master!" began the courtier, smiling, as he received the reproof gratefully as if it were a favor, "my gracious master! I become a sinner, as soon as I breathe the intoxicating air of this city. Our good Vienna enjoys life too, but what a fair, simple, unsophisticated maiden she is compared with this fascinating, dancing, sparkling Paris. It is true,—alas! our German language is too heavy, and always moves in wooden shoes,—it is true, call it if you please a sinful and wicked life under Louis XV. and Madame Pompadour; it was, indeed, a most frivolous and dissipated life, but it was merry, entertaining and enjoyable. The pleasure of life was not spoiled by any kind of moralizing pedantry, and, I confess, I hope now to go home again with cheerful memories. I am sorry that your Majesty's lofty nobility of mind and modest simplicity scorn princely splendor. It would have been fine to be met by the guards and the state-carriages, to be escorted to the presence of his Majesty the King and your illustrious sister Marie Antoinette, with the ringing of bells and roar of cannon; and the people would have had the pleasure of shouting; and since these French know nothing of our German empire, and devote themselves to a special ignorance of geography, they would cry, "Long live the Emperor of Austria!"

"I believe now that you have really spoken out, Cobenzl, but I don't like such parade. With all the bell-ringing and cannon-firing, one doesn't hear the inward voice of the people's soul. I should like to know what is stirring in this nation. I want to become acquainted with the brave and great minds, which move the world more than all the diplomatists or commanders of armies; and whose voices sound louder than all the clash of bells and thunder of artillery. I hope too, to go home enriched with memories, but also enriched in knowledge and in insight how to make my people happy."

"Mind is certainly an excellent ally," Coloredo interposed,

"if your Majesty can only make real allies of your brother-in-law, the amiable King of France, and her Majesty the Queen, who has bewitched the hearts of this capricious nation——"

"How do you know that?" interrupted the Emperor sharply. "My sister has fallen into the French tone only too easily. That frivolous Abbe Vermond was sent to us in Vienna, to educate her from a child as the Dauphiness of France."

The Emperor looked down in silence, pressing his lips tightly together. The deep pain which filled his whole life, rose to his lips for utterance, but he held it back. He constantly felt it anew, that he was alone, alone like every genius. Everything that met him, and everything that he undertook, awoke in him thoughts and opinions which no one shared, and yet from the very depths of his heart he desired to bless the world.

When the Emperor again looked up, there was an expression of suffering on his handsome, youthful face, and there was a light in his moist eyes which spoke of deep inward emotion.

The postillion blew a merry blast in the bright sunshine. Those who were coming in vehicles or on foot from the city, whether laden with burdens or walking unburdened, all looked cheerful, as if here were a perpetual Sunday. The French, every one of whom moves and bears himself as if something quite original were going on within him, greeted the carriage approaching from Metz, and its inmates, with a friendly smile, as if to say: "I am a representative of the most amiable nation on earth. Only come, you rich grandee from the uncivilized world yonder, you have too much money, too much youthful strength; here with us, you will get the fine polish; you will be well served. . ." So spoke every glance, every slight wave of the hand.

The Emperor had on purpose arrived in Paris a day sooner than the time he had named for his coming, in order to avoid any ceremony of reception, and to take up his abode quietly in an unpretending hotel. Afterwards, according to the court etiquette of France, he would be obliged to appear in state with his sister at Versailles.

They drove at once to the house of the Austrian ambassador, Count Mercy. As he was ill, the ambassador extraordinary to the court of England, Count Beglioso undertook to be Joseph's guide in Paris.

The day was fine; Joseph felt no fatigue, and soon prepared to stroll on foot, with his companion, through the streets of the city.

"What does your Majesty wish to see first?"

"Take me to the statue of Henry IV."

The ambassador stood astonished for a moment, but quickly recovering himself, he said with an expression of genuine warmth: "It is the privilege of noble natures to do the most fitting thing. Out of all the throng of lives in the past and present, what could Joseph first seize upon? Now I see that it could not be otherwise, he makes his pilgrimage to his saint, whom no church, but the eternal spirit of virtue and brotherly love, has canonized.

"We have at least the same enemies," answered Joseph. "They aim now, as then, at every heart that wishes to be free and pure, and that hates all priestly lust of power. The Jesuits, who drove Ravallac's dagger into the breast of Henry IV. are now indeed, after a hundred and sixty years, disbanded, and so far as my power extends, they shall never rise again, even if I know that their invisible daggers are constantly pointed at me."

On the new bridge, Joseph took off his hat before the statue of Henry IV., at which he stood gazing for a long time. The life of Henry passed before his memory, the hard struggle he had taken upon himself, to heal and unite his broken and distracted France, his forcing himself to adopt the Catholic faith, though always remaining true to his fundamental principle that no man should be deprived of his rights as a human being or a citizen, on account of his creed, and finally, his martyrdom on account of his pure and lofty views.

"How many lies are told to the face of princes while they live," said the Emperor, "and how many are written on their monuments,—but this one deserves the inscription: Father of his people! I covet such a name; there is none more beautiful."

After a short pause Beglioso added: "And like a true father, Henry wished to feed his people well. On Sundays, a fowl in the pot of every peasant; he would not rest till he had brought that about."

"Yes," answered Joseph, "to place men at ease, in a comfortable position in life, is the necessary foundation for fitting them for free thought and a higher civilization."

While the two were still lingering by the statue, a dignified looking man approached from the opposite direction. They could see far off how every one saluted him, though he bore no outward sign of high position. He held by the hand a handsome, slender, light-haired boy of about fourteen years, and the boy was like a youthful copy of the man, who thus appeared in a double form. As he drew near, Beglioso also saluted him; he wore a plain brown coat, which came almost to his feet, on which rough shoes were fastened by great ill-formed buckles. He raised his broad-brimmed, black Quaker-hat, and a noble face, shaded by long, silver-white hair, uncurled and unpowdered, acknowledged the greeting gently and modestly.

"Who is that man?" asked Joseph.

"His position is the very reverse of your Majesty's. He has risen from the lowest rank, from poverty and trouble, to the most honorable standing; and your Majesty descends from the highest rank to the lowest, to watch what is going on—"

"Who is the man?" repeated Joseph.

"Doctor Franklin, confidential agent of the English colonies in America, now in a state of insurrection."

"Benjamin Franklin?"

"The same, your Majesty!"

It had a strange effect on the Emperor, to meet now at his very entrance into Paris, the man himself, with whose name his own was inscribed in the church records as sponsor. "The man," he said, "seems very much beloved in France. What do you think of him?"

"He is a man who sets at nought all the diplomatic traditions, and introduces a new power, public opinion, as it is termed, in State transactions. I have never imagined that a man could be so honored by the highest as well as the lowest, as this man is. He is not even received at the Court of Versailles as an ambassador, but his credentials are so much the more valid with the French nation; and Franklin is the main hinderance to our projects."

"How so?"

"His views run directly across our track. The Court of Versailles imagines that it has some choice in the matter; but it is under the necessity, after the first success of the insurgents, of making an open alliance with America. There can be, in that case, not the slightest prospect of effecting an alliance with France for our operations in Bavaria and the Danubian provinces. Circumstances are in favor of this Franklin. France wishes to be revenged on England for her humiliation through the last treaty of peace. The so-called 'rights of man,' heretofore only proclaimed in books, have been for the first time embodied as law by the American insurgents, and Franklin, with Jefferson and Adams, has the renown of drawing up the Congressional resolutions to that effect. It flatters the French people to help in establishing a republic for another nation. But what a school for France itself! They will not see this at Versailles, and are thinking only of humiliating England. Nothing is talked of here now, your Majesty must understand, except the American republic. They are playing a double game here at the Court. The Marquis Lafayette has furnished a frigate at his own expense; they let him escape after he had been arrested as a deserter, and at England's demand sent two ships of war to overtake him; but the people know very well that it was a mere farce, and the French love to play these theatrical tricks on themselves and other people."

"Do you think so poorly of the French?"

"By no means; they are a very amiable nation, and susceptible of the noblest inspirations. It pleases them most when they can render ostentatious assistance, and so this expedition to America——"

"This whole American affair," said Joseph in a tone almost of displeasure, "interests me very little. It is my vocation to be a Royalist; I shall not be in the way of this Doctor Franklin. I want to see what may be done for our interests—yes, I should like to speak with this man for once."

"Your Majesty has only to order it; but I must add that it will make a great noise. I have often met him, and I must confess that this real or pretended simplicity is deserving of the highest admiration. Here he appears in society like one of the old Biblical prophets, or as this comparison is not liked very well, and something of the heathenish classical is preferred, they call him a Solon, a Plato, an Aristides, a Republican of the days of Cato and Fabius. But amidst all this enthusiastic homage, Franklin maintains his cool equanimity, and follows out his ends with persistent determination. He never puts himself forward, and he is everywhere in requisition. He has the peculiar faculty of being able to dispense with other people and of being sufficient for himself; and he knows how to bear himself towards those whom he needs for his own ends in such a way that they are compelled to make suit to him and to thank him for——"

"Bring it about," interrupted Joseph, "that I shall have an informal interview with this man. Where do you mean to conduct me now?"

"Would your Majesty not take a look at the cathedral?"

"No," said Joseph, curtly. "But do not address me as 'your Majesty'; my title is Count Falkenstein. We will drive to the Hotel Dieu."

"The large hospital has just been burned down."

"I will see, then, how they now take care of the patients."

As Joseph was driving in a hired carriage to the temporary hospital, his companion, Beglioso, said that the Emperor must rely upon everything that he did and said being reported to the government and to other courts. There were spies everywhere.

"Even in hospitals?" asked Joseph.

"There especially; there they have the richest harvest. In pain and in lonely nights men speak out most freely. Not only are the attendants spies, but persons are sent thither to feign themselves sick, in order to get acquainted with the life and secret motives of the other patients."

Joseph smiled bitterly to himself at the thought how tyranny, because it feels itself insecure, makes all life insecure, and at the same time he realized that the king himself was also surrounded by spies. What a mad carnival masquerade was this world!

Joseph visited all the wards, and his heart revolted at the suffering, the filth, the number of patients in one bed, the want of proper supplies, while the Court was revelling in lavish festivals. He could not refrain from saying aloud and frequently, "This institution is no blessing;" and he left behind a large sum of money for procuring additional beds.

On the same day the report of what he had said and done spread through all Paris, and also it was known at the Court, and then soon at all the courts of Europe.

OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE.

SOUTH MIDDLESEX CONFERENCE.

To The Editor of The Inquirer :

THE session of this conference, January 17, with the Cambridgeport parish (Rev. Dr. Briggs) was well attended and full of interest. The essay of the day was from Mrs. Charles Lowe, on "The Church as a Centre of Social Life," a paper abounding in important suggestions on the mutual obligation and privileges of parishes and their ministers, and delivered with quiet emphasis and impressive calmness.

Rev. Dr. Newell offered a vote of thanks to Mrs. Lowe, which vote was unanimously passed. Rev. Mr. Tiffany spoke with great force of class distinctions in parishes, citing the absence of such differences in college or in the army. Where there is unity of purpose there is unity of spirit. Rev. F. G. Peabody dwelt on the words of the essay, "The Parish makes the Minister," and on the force with which the younger ministers feel this. Rev. Mr. Metcalf compared the church with the central Corliss engine, giving life and motion to all activities. Rev. Mr. Hussey repeated Rev. Dr. Putnam's phrase at the opening of a social parlor, that he hoped the steps thence to the place of worship would be well trodden.

Rev. Messrs. Wilson, Humphreys, Muzzey, C. Palfrey and Shippen also spoke at the morning session, at the close of which the election of officers took place, and Hon. E. R. Hoar, of Concord, was chosen President, Hon. W. L. Whitney, of Cambridge, declining re-election.

After enjoying the liberal hospitality of Dr. Briggs' people the Conference listened to further words from Rev. Mr. Metcalf, Hon. E. R. Hoar, Rev. Mr. Waterhouse, Rev. Mr. Seaver, Hon. J. C. Park and Rev. Mr. Emerson. Judge Hoar said that his father was once asked to join a society for the abolition of slavery, and replied that years before he had joined an association which comprised that with other purposes—the Christian church. Mr. Waterhouse spoke on the judicious care and help of the poor, as taught in the experience of the Children's Mission. Mr. Seaver proposed that Mrs. Lowe's paper should be printed as a Unitarian tract, which proposition was voted on and carried. Rev. Mr. Cutter, the retiring secretary, made a farewell address. Hon. J. C. Park summed up the lesson of the meeting in words used by Mr. Shippen, "Consecrated Action."

This was indeed the watchword of the day, and the Conference dismissed its large audience of delegates and friends with a renewed purpose of such consecrated action in their parish life.

THE WORCESTER CONFERENCE.

To The Editor of The Inquirer :

THE Worcester Conference held its eleventh annual meeting in the city of Worcester January 23d and 24th. Rev. J. F. W. Ware, of Boston, gave the opening sermon on the evening of the 23d. The discourse was a pungent and stirring arraignment of the long-standing sins of Unitarians, indifference and neglect of missionary labor, and predicted a not-distant decease of the denomination unless radical measures of prevention were adopted. The wisdom, however, of such doleful prophecies may be questioned unless they be accompanied by a clear and definite statement of the means of cure. The lamentation that the Unitarian body is dying out are nearly as old as the body itself; and the tone of the sermon was often exceedingly hilarious for a funeral occasion, if not indeed for any religious service.

The devotional meeting, on the 24th, was led by Rev. George M. Bartol, who, in his remarks, emphasized the superiority of essential unity over superficial uniformity. The essay by Rev. James T. Hewes, of Fitchburg, was a forcible development of the idea that the kind of preaching most needed is that which, proceeding from a strong personality and seeking truth with earnestness, is yet chiefly inspired by a love of man himself.

The discussion was an animated one. Most of the speakers took occasion to express their belief that the denomination is neither dead yet, nor likely to die. On all but a few minor points, the clergy present seemed of one mind with the essayist, and they could only regret that the subject drew remarks from only one layman. The officers elected for the ensuing year are: President, Hon. C. A. Stevens, of Ware; Vice-Presidents, Rev. Geo. S. Ball, Upton, Hon. C. H. Merriam, Leominster; Secretary, Rev. H. P. Cutting, Sterling; Treasurer, J. C. Otis, Worcester; Executive Committee, Rev. Geo. M. Bartol, Lancaster; Rev. Hilary Bygrave, Hudson; Mrs. J. W. Wetherell, Worcester; H. L. Butterworth, Brookfield; C. C. Stone, Clinton. The meeting was large and full of interest; the entertainment of the delegates was such as to sustain the well-known reputation for hospitality of the Unitarians of Worcester.

JOTTINGS.

HARTFORD.—Rev. James Freeman Clarke conducted the services here on Sunday.

QUINCY, MASS.—We understand that this society is unwilling to accept Rev. Dr. Putnam's declination as conclusive, and still hopes to induce him to reconsider it.

HARLEM.—Rev. Dr. Bellows preached last Sunday evening to a large audience. Next Sunday, both morning and evening, Rev. F. W. Holland, of Newburgh, will preach.

THE Star in the West of January 25th prints the able sermon on "The Modern Minister" which was delivered by Rev. C. W. Wendt as an installation discourse Jan. 14th.

GEROME's personal appearance is peculiar. He has deep-set, large eyes, wild masses of gray hair and a pointed gray mustache. He is very thin and is distinguished for extreme industry, excessive irritability and great dislike to visitors.

STERNE's apothegm, "God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb," printed in 1768, is traced to Herbert, 1640: "To the shorn sheep God gives wind in measure," which is a close translation from Henry Estienne, 1594, "God measures the wind to the shorn sheep."

THE American Israelite thinks Mr. M. D. Conway is very much mistaken as to there being any movement of importance among the Jews in the direction of Palestine. It thinks the members of the Jewish race scattered over the world, are very well content to remain where they now are.

PROF. SWING said, in the course of a sermon delivered a week or two ago, "Christ's religion began as one of character rather than as one of opinion." "It is not at all probable that by belief Christ implied any such acceptance or espousal of articles as is demanded of religionists in modern times."

SCULPTOR.—We regret greatly that we are unable to give you the information which you desire. The times are eminently unpropitious to the cause in which you are interested. The best suggestion we can make is to advertise in the Nation, but we cannot encourage you to place much reliance on any such effort.

ANDOVER calls aloud for some rich man to fill the place once occupied by William Bartlett and provide the means for the education of young men in the ministry, to the end that they meet and conquer the scientific men of to-day. On another page we have expressed some general views on the effects of education so applied.

A FEW days ago an omnibus, heavily laden, stuck fast in Stamford-street, London. The horse pulled in vain. An elephant came along at the time, the keeper called his attention to the position of the omnibus, and, like a good fellow, he went to the end, put his shoulder to the 'bus, and sent the whole party on their way rejoicing.

MISS OGLE, a young English woman, a student at Newnham Hall, the Cambridge college for women, has been subjected to the same examination in natural science as that which the members of the University went through. She acquitted herself in such a manner as would have entitled her, had she been an undergraduate, to a place in the first class.

ITALY has declared its seventeen universities open to women. The like action has been taken by Switzerland, Norway, Sweden and Denmark. A ministerial order has been issued in Holland opening every university and gymnasium to women. France has also opened the Sorbonne to women, and Russia its highest schools of medicine and surgery.

We have received some leaflets published by Western Unitarian Publication Society, Janesville, Wis., containing a valuable list of books of reference for Sunday Schools, prepared by Rev. J. C. Learned, with pertinent hints as to method of reading, etc., together with a plan of study for Bible-classes in both Old and New Testaments. We find the reference list peculiarly good and suggestive.

THE Renaissance (organ of the Liberal Protestant party of France) of Dec. 8, 1876, contains the following extraordinary news from Transylvania. It says that a Roman Catholic baron of that country, Anton de Baldache (possibly a misprint for Orban Balass) has given all his real estate to be divided after his death among the three Protestant churches of the country—the Lutheran, Reformed, and Unitarian.—J. FRETWELL.

ALBERT BRISBANE has commenced, in the American Socialist, a series of articles on Fourierism. The changes which have occurred since the days of Brook-Farm and the North American Phalanx, have left us with a different atmosphere and in a far different attitude from that of the active men of those days. But it will be strange if Mr. Brisbane does not, in his study of "Social Evolution," suggest some ideas which are worth considering.

MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY began their services in the Tabernacle on Sunday afternoon with their usual success in drawing immense crowds. Mr. Moody's text and opening words at the initial service were significant: "Let us go up at once and possess the land, for we are able to overcome it."—Numbers xiii. 30. "Caleb and Joshua are great friends of mine. They were not all the time looking at the dangers and obstacles in their way; they had their eyes above. Now, if we can only get a few hundred Calebs and Joshuas here in Boston, I have no doubt about the success of this movement."

PACIFIC COAST NOTES.—Rev. David Cronyn, recently of San José, goes to San Diego to take charge of a new Liberal movement for six months.

Rev. Mr. McKaig, formerly a Presbyterian clergyman in Chicago, is called to Unity Church, San José.

The friends at Santa Barbara are holding services Sunday afternoons in the Orthodox church, under the ministry of Rev. George H. Young, recently of Troy, N. Y. We congratulate our Santa Barbara friends upon their good fortune in obtaining the services of so earnest, devoted and experienced a man as Mr. Young.

MAURUS JOKAI, the Sir Walter Scott of Hungary, and one of the most talented and productive novelists in the world, is writing for his paper Hon (the Fatherland) a novel entitled "One is the Lord; or the people who love but once." The first part, which has been translated into English by Mr. John Fretwell, Junior, plays in Rome in the year 1848, and contains vivid sketches of revolutionary life and the Catholic and reactionary intrigues of that time. The second part has its scene among the Unitarians of Thoroczyko. Of Jokai's works more than 1,250,000 volumes have been sold in Hungary; and this translation of his latest work will introduce to English readers a most interesting and novel phase of European life.

THE fortieth anniversary of the Warren Street Chapel Association occurred last Sunday evening. From the report of the pastor and superintendent, Rev. William G. Babcock, it appears that during the past year he has expended $490 for charitable purposes in connection with the work of the association, and that three scholars have died within that time. There are now under his supervision 200 families, and in the Sunday school 650 scholars. The treasurer reported that the receipts during the year had been $2,879.83, and the expenditures $3,780.02, making a deficit of $900.19. The association has received a legacy of $3,000 from the estate of Miss E. P. Seves, and to the poor's purse has been contributed $427.93. Of the amount expended nearly one-half had been given by those who were immediately engaged in the work.

THE HORTICULTURAL HALL LECTURES.—The lecture last Sunday afternoon was by Rev. William B. Alger, upon "The Laboring Classes and the Rulers." According to the report in the Globe, the lecturer thought that "it could not be long before capital and labor would be reconciled. Justice must be the basis for the adjustment of every social problem. The supreme interest of humanity must be respected. Laborers would yet be partners with the upper classes. Every increase in productivity increased the supply for consumers and the profit of distributors. The inherited selfishness of society was the sole cause of present evils. The conflict of ages must be settled by co-operation of all—there was superabundance for every one. History would no longer be an alternation of struggles and conquests, but an equilibrium of mutual benefit. Weak classes would conquer the strong by using the weapons of Omnipotence. A better era was coming, when humanity would look back on its long probation and enjoy ample compensation for past suffering."

BOSTON YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN UNION.—A course of sermons to young people, in the Union Hall, 18 Boylston street, has been arranged for successive Sunday evenings, beginning January 28, 1877. The first three and the fifth and sixth will be by Rev. J. F. W. Ware, and will be respectively upon "Temptations: what they are, to what they lead," "Young Man's Duties to Himself," "Young Man's Duties to Society and the Public," "On making Mistakes" and on "Bowling to Rimmon." Feb. 18, Services Commemorative of Washington. Addresses by Hon. Alexander H. Rice and Hon. John D. Long. The others will be as follows: March 11, Rev. R. H. Neale, D.D.—"Heart Religion." March 18, Rev. Horace A. Cleveland—"Wanting the Chief Place." March 25, Rev. Wm. Burnet Wright—"Prayer." April 1, Rev. S. E. Herrick—An Easter Sermon. April 8, Rev. Wm. Wilberforce Newton—"The Hidden Talent." The opening sermon was delivered last Sunday evening before a crowded congregation, many persons indeed being unable to obtain even standing room. It was full of very direct, positive and wise counsel to the young.

MARRIED.

THORNE—CLEVELAND.—On Wednesday, the 24th inst., at the residence of the bride's parents, by Friends' ceremony, William H. Thorne to Ida Cleveland, daughter of Cyrus and Emily P. Cleveland, all of Yonkers.

The Inquirer.

Published every Thursday, from the middle of September to the middle of July, in the Park Bank Building, 214 Broadway, New York.

To be in season for insertion the same week, communications intended for publication must be forwarded in time to reach this office not later than Tuesday. No attention is paid to anonymous communications. We require the name and address of every writer, not necessarily for publication, but as guarantees of good faith.

Communications relating to the editorial department of the paper should be addressed, "Editor of the Inquirer, P. O. Box 109, New York City;" all others to "Publisher," same address.

No person is authorized to collect money or make contracts for the Inquirer, who cannot show written authority from the Publisher.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

Three Dollars per year, in advance. Clergymen, Two Dollars per year. Postage, Twenty Cents per year, in advance. Remittances should be made by Registered Letter or by Post-Office Money Order, or Draft on New York payable to PUBLISHER OF THE INQUIRER.

ADVERTISING RATES.

Six cents per square line per week; outside page, Scale and prices next matter, ten cents per line. Special Notices twenty cents per line.

Discount—Five per cent. on yearly accounts amounting to $25 and under $50. Ten per cent. on yearly accounts amounting to $50 or more.

Copy for Thursday's paper received until Tuesday afternoon.

Advertisements must be acceptable in every respect.

Office, PARK BANK BUILDING, 214 Broadway.

Address,

THE INQUIRER,

Box 109, New York.

Special Notices.

Protestant Leaders.

A COURSE OF LECTURES

BY

JOHN W. CHADWICK.

AT THE

Second Unitarian Church, Brooklyn,

Corner of Clinton and Congress Streets.

1876—77.

LECTURES:

V. Emanuel Swedenborg.

Sunday evening, Feb. 4, 1877.

VI. Murray and Universalism.

Sunday evening, March 4, 1877.

VII. Thomas Paine: His Relation to his own and later Times in Matters of Religion.

Sunday evening, April 1, 1877.

VIII. Channing and Unitarianism.

Sunday evening, April 15, 1877.

IX. Theodore Parker.

Sunday evening, May 6, 1877.

• HOUR OF LECTURE, HALF-PAST SEVEN.

Morning Service at 10:35 precisely. Vesper Service, Third Sunday Evening of each Month, with the above exceptions.

The Address of Rev. John F.

LOCKE is to the care of W. H. Baldwin, President Young Men's Christian Union, 18 Boylston St., Boston.

"Admirably fitted to teach the art from the very beginning."—Chicago Tribune.

"Mr. Hope is one of the 'old masters' in this sort of work. He has prepared an excellent work, in which his subjects are treated fully and clearly."—Chicago Post.

"Altogether the best book that can be placed in the hands of the amateur."—N. Y. Graphic.

"The diagrams are excellent and the instructions clear and direct."—N. Y. Evening Post.

SORRENTO AND INLAID WORK FOR

AMATEURS, BY ARTHUR HOPE

A practical manual of Scroll-Sawing, Overlaying, Polishing, Inlaying, Silhouettes, &c. Containing 51 full-sized designs, new and beautiful. The designs are worth more than price of book. Tastefully bound in muslin. For sale by booksellers generally. Sent by mail on receipt of price, $1.50. Descriptive circular mailed to any address.

JOHN WILKINSON, Publisher, 65 Lake St., Chicago.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, 132 Fifth Ave., New York.

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY

Manufacture those celebrated Bells for CHURCHES, ACADEMIES, &c. Price List and Circulars sent free. HENRY McSHANE & CO. BALTIMORE, MD.

TROY BELLS.

THE JONES & CO. Old Established Troy Bell Foundry continue to manufacture those superior Bells which have made Troy celebrated throughout the world. All Bells Warranted Satisfactory. Particular attention given to Church Bells, Chimes and Peals of Bells. Illustrated Catalogues sent free.

Fine toned, low priced, fully warranted. Catalogues giving full particulars prices, etc., sent free. BLYMYER MANUFACTURING CO., 664 to 694 West Eighth St., Cincinnati, O.

THE HOWARD
INSURANCE COMPANY,
OF NEW YORK.—OFFICE NO 66 WALL STREET.
Cash Capital $500,000.—Chartered in 1825.
This Company insures property against loss or Damage
by Fire and the risks of Inland Navigation and Transportation, on the most favorable terms.
SAML T. SKIDMORE, President.
HENRY A. OAKLEY, Vice-President.
DIRECTORS:
SAMUEL T. SKIDMORE, HEWLETT SCUDDER,
THOMAS W. GALE, CHARLES H. CLAYTON,
JOHN H. SWIFT, JOHN L. RIKEL,
JAMES E. TAYLOR, GEORGE W. TALBOT,
HENRY J. SCUDDER, FREDERICK STURGES,
HENRY A. OAKLEY, JOHN J. WHITE,
CHARLES MALL, R. LENOX BELKNAP,
HENRY T. BARREY, JAMES C. CARTER,
WILLIAM H. WISNER, EDMUND PENFOLD,
ALEXANDER MITTLAND.
CHARLES A. HULL, Secretary.
RICHARD W. CLARK, Asst. Sec'y.

Ayer's
Cherry Pectoral
For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs,
such as Coughs, Colds,
Whooping Cough,
Bronchitis, Asthma,
and Consumption.
The reputation it has attained, in consequence of the marvellous cures it has produced during the last half century, is a sufficient assurance to the public that it will continue to realize the happiest results that can be desired. In almost every section of country there are persons, publicly known, who have been restored from alarming and even desperate diseases of the lungs, by its use.
All who have tried it, acknowledge its superiority;
and where its virtues are known, no one hesitates as to what medicine to employ to relieve the distress and suffering peculiar to pulmonary affections. CHERRY PECTORAL always affords instant relief, and performs rapid cures of the milder varieties of bronchial disorder, as well as the more formidable diseases of the lungs.
As a safeguard to children, amid the distressing diseases which beset the Throat and Chest of Childhood, it is invaluable; for, by its timely use, multitudes are rescued and restored to health.
This medicine gains friends at every trial, as the cures it is constantly producing are too remarkable to be forgotten. No family should be without it, and those who have once used it never will.
Eminent Physicians throughout the country prescribe it, and Clergymen often recommend it from their knowledge of its effects.
PREPARED BY
Dr. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass.,
Practical and Analytical Chemists.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

The Toll Gate! Prize Picture sent free! An ingenious
gem. 50 objects to find. Address, with stamp, E. C.
Abbey, Buffalo, N. Y. 1191-1y

$12 a day at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUK & CO., Augusta, Maine.

LAMAR
INSURANCE COMPANY,
OF NEW YORK.
Broadway, cor. John Street.
Capital, - - $200,000.
ASSETS, JANUARY 1, 1877.
Cash on hand and in Bank. . . . $10,414 77
U. S. Bonds, market value. . . . 300,232 50
Loans on Call, Good Stocks Collateral. . 13,200 00
Bonds and Mortgages on Brick Dwell-
ings. 56,400 00
Bills Receivable for Inland Prem's . . . 2,465 94
Premiums in course of collection. . . 8,830 43
New York Bank Stocks market value . . 19,725 00
$411,268 64
Losses unadjusted estimated at $10,100 00
ISAAC R. ST. JOHN, President.
A. R. FROTHINGHAM, Vice Pres't.
WM. R. MACDIARMID, Sec'y.

HOME
Insurance Co. of New York,
Office No. 135 Broadway.
Forty-seventh Semi-Annual Statement,
Showing the condition of the Company on the first day of January, 1877.
Cash Capital $3,000,000 00
Reserve for Re-Insurance . . 1,858,464 68
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Dividends 243,402 24
Net Surplus 1,002,783 90
Total Assets - - - $6,104,650 82
SUMMARY OF ASSETS:
CASH IN BANKS. $342,311 22
BONDS AND MORTGAGES, BEING FIRST
LIEN ON REAL ESTATE WORTH $4,894,000 2,011,430 00
UNITED STATES STOCKS (MARKET VALUE) 2,517,625 00
BANK STOCKS (MARKET VALUE). . . . 236,002 50
STATE AND CITY BONDS (MARKET VALUE) 185,435 00
LOANS ON STOCKS, PAYABLE ON DEMAND
(MARKET VALUE OF SECURITIES, $700,379) 519,631 35
INTEREST DUE ON 1st JANUARY, 1877. . . 72,997 65
BALANCE IN HAND OF AGENTS. . . . 1,416 05
REAL ESTATE. 6,840 19
PREMIUMS DUE AND UNCOLLECTED ON
POLICIES ISSUED AT THIS OFFICE. . . . 8,330 26
Total - - - - $6,104,650 82
LIABILITIES.
CLAIMS FOR LOSSES OUTSTANDING ON 1st
JANUARY, 1877 $212,027 24
DIVIDENDS UNPAID. 1,375 00
Total, - - - - $243,402 24
CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.
J. H. WASHBURN, Secretary.

THE NEW JERSEY MUTUAL
LIFE INSURANCE CO.,
NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.
J. H. STEDWELL, President.
C. H. BRINKERHOFF, Secretary.
J. H. CANNIFF, Cashier.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr.
Chase's Improved ($2.00) Receipt
Book." Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.
$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free.
STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

PRATT'S
PATENT BRACE
FOR MEN AND WOMEN
LATEST IMPROVEMENT
Made of best material, in all sizes, for Adults and Children of both sexes; expands the chest, straight-
ens up stooped shoulders;
worth ten times its cost for
Children and Students.
Sold by the Trade and Cleveland Shoulder Brace
Co., Cleveland, Ohio. Send
$1.25 and chest measure.
Ask for Pratt's new Patent Brace.

ATLANTIC
MUTUAL INSURANCE CO
NEW YORK,
OFFICE 51 WALL ST.
ORGANIZED 1842.
INSURES AGAINST MARINE AND INLAND
NAVIGATION RISKS.
And will issue Policies making Loss payable
in England.
Its Assets for the Security of its Policies
are more than
TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured, and are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated during the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearing interest until redeemed.
JOHN D. JONES, President.
CHARLES DENNIS, Vice-President.
W. H. H. MOORE, 2d Vice-President.
A. A. RAVEN, 3d Vice-President.
J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

PHENIX
INSURANCE COMPANY,
OF BROOKLYN, N. Y.
January 1st, 1877.
Capital..... $1,000,000 00
Gross Surplus..... 1,792,902 92
Gross Assets.....$2,792,902 92
OFFICES:
Western Union Telegraph Building, BROAD-
WAY, Cor. DEY St., New York.
Brooklyn Office, 12 & 14 Court St
Brooklyn E. D. Office, 85 Broadway.
The benefits to be derived by the public from Insurance against loss by fire are so great and numerous,
when compared with its trifling cost, as to render it an imperative duty on every one to avail themselves of the protection afforded by the PHENIX INSURANCE COMPANY
against the destructive ravages of Fire, which in a few moments may lay waste the fruits of a whole life of industry.
STEPHEN CROWELL, President.
PHILANDER SHAW, Vice President.
WILLIAM R. CROWELL, Secretary.
ESTABLISHED A. D. 1850.

THE MANHATTAN
LIFE INSURANCE CO.,
OF
NEW YORK,
has paid $5,500,000 Death Claims;
has paid $1,500,000 return premiums to Policy-holders; has a surplus of more than $1,600,000 over Liabilities; and a ratio of $120 Assets for every $100 Liabilities, by New York Standard of Valuation
It gives the best Insurance on the best lives at the mos
favorable rates.
EXAMINE THE PLANS AND RATES OF THIS COM
PANY.
HENRY STOKES, C. Y. WEMPLE,
President. Vice-President.
J. L. HALSEY, S. N. STEBBINS,
Secretary. Actuary
H. Y. WEMPLE, Assistant Secretaries.
H. B. STOKES
$55 & $77 a Week to Agents. $10 Outfit Free.
P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

Miscellaneous.

MUSIC BOOKS.

* Each book may be safely received as among the very best.*

THE SALUTATION.

($1.58; $12 per dozen) By L. O. Emerson. First Class Church Music Book.

THE ENCORE.

(75 cts; $7.50 per dozen). By L. O. Emerson. First Class Singing School Book.

WORLD OF SONG.

($2.50 Bds; $3 Cl; $4 Gilt). Unrivalled collection of Songs.

GEMS OF THE DANCE.

($2.50 Bds; $3 Cl; $4 Gilt). The Most Brilliant Piano Music.

PERKINS' ANTHEM BOOK.

($1.50; $13.50 per dozen). An easy Anthem for each Sunday in the Year.

PERKINS' GLEE & CHORUS BOOK.

$1.25; $12 per dozen). Superb Collection.

MALE VOICE GLEE BOOK.

($1). Perkins. Brief, New, Spirited Glee in abundance.

EMERSON'S CHORUS BOOK.

($1.25; $12 per dozen). The Best Sacred and Secular Choruses.

Either book mailed, post-free, for Retail Price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

C. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 Broadway,
New York

J. E. DITSON & CO.,
Successors to Lee & Walker, Philadelphia.

REDUCTION IN RATES TO SUIT THE TIMES.THE BUTLER HEALTH
LIFT EXERCISE.

Commended by Highest Medical Authority.

A SCIENTIFIC SYSTEM of Concentrated Cumulative Exercise, adapted to the Preservation and Restoration of Health.

Principal Office, Spacious and well ventilated,
PARK BANK BUILDING, NO. 214 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK.

BROOKLYN: NO. 158 REMSEN STREET.

PARLORS FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN.

"I have used THE BUTLER HEALTH LIFT with manifest advantage. A tendency to sleeplessness at night has been corrected, my animal spirits have been raised in tone, and my elasticity of frame increased. The sense of repose imparted is quite as great as the stimulus."—O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

"The most perfect apparatus in use."—(Evening Mail.

Call, or address

LEWIS G. JANES, Proprietor.

E. N. Freshman & Bros.,

ADVERTISING AGENTS,

183 W. FOURTH STREET, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Are authorized to contract for advertising in this paper.

ESTIMATES FURNISHED FREE.

SEND FOR A CIRCULAR.

Employment Society for Poor
WOMEN.

This Society now offers for sale at its store, No. 141 East 13th street, New York, a large quantity of garments, the remains of last year's stock, at very low prices. Those wishing to buy women's or children's clothing to give to the poor or to charitable institutions will find there a good supply of articles suitable for the purpose. Call and examine the garments, or send orders to

THE EMPLOYMENT SOCIETY,

143 East 13th Street,

New York City.

Miscellaneous.

STEARNS & BEALE,

STATIONERS,

BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS,

PRINTING and LITHOGRAPHY,

147 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

(Between Broadway and Nassau Street)

JOEL W. STEARNS.

WM. P. BEALE.

With and without Rockers; heavy and light; large and small. For OFFICE, LIBRARY, STUDY, PIAZZA, PARLOR, SEWING-ROOM, NURSERY—wherever you want

SOLID COMFORT.

Send stamp for an illustrated Price-List

F. A. SINCLAIR,
Mottville, N. Y.

Be careful that the chairs are stamped with my name in full; others are imitations.

For sale by Furniture Dealers in New York and at 218 Fulton street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION
DESCRIBED AND ILLUSTRATED.

The only complete, richly illustrated, low price work, 750 pages, only $2.50. Treats of the entire history, grand buildings, wonderful exhibits, curiosities, great days, etc. The best chance of 100 years to coin money fast, as everybody wants this work. 1,000 agents appointed first four weeks, 5,000 wanted. For full particulars address quickly HUBBARD BROTHERS, Publishers, Philadelphia, Pa., Cincinnati, O., Chicago Ill., or Springfield, Mass.

CAUTION. Be not deceived by premature books assuming to be "official," etc.

BALD HEADS

Can be covered with a piece exactly fitted to the Bald spot, so perfect, and with work so ingeniously contrived as to appear each hair just issuing from the skin, the hair being exactly of the same shade and texture as the growing hair; they are so perfect they cannot be detected. Made only at BATCHELOR'S Celebrated Wig Factory, 16 Bond Street, N. Y.

HAIR DYE.

BATCHELOR'S CELEBRATED HAIR DYE is splendid. It never fails. The only true and perfect Dye. Harmless, reliable, instantaneous. No disappointment, no ridiculous tints; remedies the ill effects of bad dyes, leaves the hair soft and beautiful Black or Brown. Sold and properly applied at BATCHELOR'S Wig Factory, 16 Bond St., N. Y. Sold by all druggists.

W. A. Batchelor's Curative Ointment

Immediately cures Ring-Worm, Tetter, Itching of the Head, and all Eruptions of the Skin, Face or Body.

W. A. Batchelor's Alaska Seal Oil

for the Hair. The best Hair Oil in use.

W. A. Batchelor's Dentifrice

for beautifying and preserving the teeth and Gums and deodorizing the breath.

W. A. Batchelor's New Cosmetique,

Black or Brown, for tinting the Hair, Whiskers or Moustaches without greasing them. Sold at factory, 16 Bond Street, New York, and by all druggists. Ask for them.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine

MISFIT CARPETS.

English Brussels, Three Ply and Ingrain; also, Stair Carpets, Velvet Rugs, Crumb Cloths, etc., very cheap, AT THE OLD PLACE.

112 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

Carpets carefully packed and sent to any part of the United States free of charge.

SEND FOR PRICE LIST.

J. A. BENDALL.

BROOKLYN ADVERTISEMENTS.

OVINGTON BROTHERS,

246, 248, 250 and 252 Fulton Street,

BROOKLYN.

Fine China, Glass, Clocks, Bronzes, etc., etc.

Just Received Invoices of

COPENHAGEN VASES,

LIMOGES FAIENCE VASES,

AND DOULTON WARE.

O'BRIEN & COMPANY,

IMPORTERS,

MANUFACTURERS and RETAILERS

OF

DRY GOODS,

CARPETS,

CLOTHING

141 and 143, 151 to 159 Atlantic Ave.

We solicit an inspection of our magnificent assortment in all our Departments—forty-one in number—conceded to be the largest, most varied and best selected ever exhibited in Brooklyn, with a stock in value amounting to over half a million dollars.

Joseph O'Brien & Co.,

141 and 143, 151 to 159 Atlantic Avenue.

Lectures and Sermons,

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

FIRST SERIES.

The Education of Conscience.
Self Respect.
The Higher Reverence.
God on our Side.
Man and the Bible.
The Best Use of Sunday.

SECOND SERIES.

The Essential Piety of Modern Science.
A Rational Church.
Economy and Waste.

Also, WAY, TRUTH AND LIFE, a Biography of N. A. Staples, with sermons, price, $1.00.

For sale by CHARLES P. SOMERBY, 139 Eighth St., New York. Copies sent by mail at the rate of five cents each and postage.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.

Established in 1837.

Superior Bells of Copper and Tin, mounted with the best Rotary Hangings, for Churches, Schools, Farms, Factories, Court-houses, Fire Alarms, Tower Clocks, etc. Fully Warranted. Illustrated Catalogue sent Free.

VANDUSEN & TIPP, 102 N. 2d St., Cincinnati.

10 PER CENT NET.

Kansas, Missouri and Iowa Improved Farm First Mortgage Coupon Bonds Guaranteed. We guarantee, as an assurance, that we loan not to exceed one-third of the actual value. In over six years' business never lost a dollar; never delayed a day on interest or principal; no investor through no error did or ever will get an acre of land under foreclosure. Send for particulars and references.

J. B. WATKINS & CO., LAWRENCE, KAN., OR

HENRY DICKINSON, Manager, 30 Pine Street,

New York

THE INQUIRER.

VOL. XXXII.—NO. 10.
WHOLE NO., 1580.

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 8, 1877.

$3.00 PER ANNUM.
8 CENTS A COPY.

CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL NOTES.....	165
LEADING ARTICLES:
Eleemosynary Education II.....	166
Free Religion in Spain.....	167
Eighteenth Century English Thought III.....	167
The Lone Voyager.....	169
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE:
From England.....	169
From Paris.....	170
From Chicago.....	170
LITERATURE:
February Magazines.....	171
Blackwood's Magazine.....	172
Literary Notes.....	172
New Publications Received.....	172
SELECTIONS:
The Workingman's Sunday.....	172
SCIENCE:
Instinct.....	173
HEARTH AND HOME:
"Little People of the Snow".....	174
Joseph and Benjamin. Chapter III.....	175
OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE:
The Turks in Europe.....	176
The Yellowstone Park.....	177
Daniel Deronda Again.....	177
JOTTINGS.....	177
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT.....	178

HENRY W. BELLOWS, Edgar Buckingham, John W. Chadwick, Octavius B. Frothingham, William I. Marshall, Edward P. Powell, Minot J. Savage, Charles C. Shackford, S. Alfred Steinthal, and Charles W. Wendte, are among the contributors to this number of THE INQUIRER.

THE Churchman of the 3d has an editorial entitled "Unitarian Degeneracy," which is founded upon a review of "A New Service Book" in a recent number of THE INQUIRER, and seems to call for two or three remarks.

In the first place, we desire it to be distinctly understood that we are not to be held responsible for the opinions expressed in all the articles appearing in our columns, which, like the one alluded to, have signatures appended. We shall endeavor to publish nothing which is unfit for publication, but, on the other hand, we do not class as unfit for publication all articles which are not written from our own point of view.

In the second place, it would be presumptuous for us to speak for the Unitarian body, or for any of our contributors to do so, unless properly authorized, and to such authorization we believe the writer of the article mentioned laid no claim. For ourselves, we shall be glad of the approval of Unitarians and of all other good citizens, and we shall esteem ourselves happy in gaining any support that may be offered to the cause in the interest of which we are working. But we shall not go out of our way to obtain the endorsement of any one, and we make no claim to represent any one but ourselves.

Does it not seem that complaisance was a little overdone in the letter which Mr. Geo. F. Hoar addressed to the friends of Senator Boutwell last week? Here is an extract:

"I was confident that the support of Governor Boutwell was inspired in your mind and that of other gentlemen by the highest and purest motives. I supposed, until the surprise of the final vote, that these motives would in the end prevail with a large majority of the Legislature, and cause his return to a position which he has adorned with so much strength, wisdom and integrity."

Now it appears to us that—be Mr. Boutwell's integrity what it may, and we do not question it—there was enough doubt of his wisdom and of the "highest and purest motives" on the part of many of his supporters afloat to give rise to a long and severe struggle in the Legislature and to produce wide-spread joy when the result was announced. It really scarcely seems necessary that Mr. Hoar should have put himself upon record in such loose fashion under the circumstances, and we confess that the fact that he has done so has led us to modify a little the trust we have been inclined to place in his judgment, and to feel a little more uncertainty than hitherto as to his future. America is appealing for outspoken honesty and frankness. Let it be understood that the age of unconsidered compliment is past, we beg of you.

THOSE of our readers who live within easy reach of New York are to be congratulated upon the opportunity offered them for the examination of the exceedingly valuable collection of Antiques belonging to Signor Castellani under more favorable circumstances than in the crowded rooms of the Centennial Exhibition. The arrangements for their display at the Metropolitan Gallery are admirable, and we have been surprised to find how much we had missed in numerous visits made to them while in Philadelphia. For those who have not yet seen this interesting collection we can scarcely even hint at its treasures. The exquisite engraved gems alone are a revelation in early art, and the Majolica, especially the Della Robbia and Gubbio wares, will convince the most skeptical that those "infected with Ceramics" have some ground for the faith that is in them; the statuary and the engraved chests afford room for valuable study of the early treatment of the figure, while curious relics of the toilet bring the past into strangely close relationship with the present.

The proceeds of the exhibition are to be applied toward the purchase of the collection if sufficient interest is manifested to make that possible.

DURING the week the price of gold in currency at one time reached as low as 104½. This price was not maintained, however, the reaction carrying it to 106½, whence it fell off again to 105¾. Silver has remained reasonably steady at 57¾ to 57¾d. per ounce in gold, the latest quotation being 57½. The majority of the Congressional Silver Commission have reported in favor of the double standard, as every one expected they would. The promised message of the President advocating measures to facilitate the return to specie payments, has appeared. It does not contain the anticipated clause, fixing upon the first of March as the proper time for resumption, and is for the most part a sound and sensible document. The suggestion that 4½ per cent. bonds be sold for coin, and that greenbacks be convertible into a long 4 per cent. bond, is one which should be acted upon at the earliest possible moment.

The weak point in the message is a recommendation for the repeal of the limitation now imposed upon the amount of issue of subsidiary coin, and unhappily this is the one proposal which is most likely to be acted upon. But we will hope.

THE Electoral Commission has settled down to its work and is moving steadily forward. The Florida case, the first submitted to it, seems by general consent to be accepted as the pivot upon which the action of the Commission will turn. Everything depends upon the place where the limits to the right of inquiry into the returns from the States is fixed. The drift of opinion is in favor of the probable acceptance of the States-rights doctrine as against the Federal one. It is one of the odd features of the case, that the Republicans are chiefly using Democratic arguments to support their side of the case, and the Democrats, though with some caution and inconsistency, Republican arguments to support their view.

Thus far the Republicans seem to have the advantage of the legal argument before the tribunal. The speech of Mr. Evarts was terse, compact, and vigorous in its application of the law, and could not fail to have great weight with the Commission. That of Mr. O'Connor was addressed more to the people than to the court, and represented what might be called the common sense view, that the actual will of the people should be carried out. It seems hardly probable, however desirable, that the law will permit of a roving Commission to find what the will of the people actually was. The country is placed in this unhappy predicament, that that which is legal may not be that which is equitable.

In the case of Louisiana, it would be a relief, should the Commission be able to decide legally that the State has forfeited her right to have her vote counted at all. It is hardly probable, however, that this can be done. The testimony taken before the several investigating Committees, while very conflicting, all goes to show that the prevalent want of confidence in the character of the members of the Returning Board and their satellites has a very sufficient basis.

ELIEMOSYNARY EDUCATION.

II.

IF to the general public charity, which all highly-endowed colleges and schools extend to all their pupils, is added a large provision for the further facilitation of the enjoyment of these privileges, in the shape of educational societies, fellowships and loans, made accessible to all who ask their use—there can be little doubt that a dangerous encouragement is given to weak and careless young men to go to college, who would be much better occupied at mechanical trades or in farming or shop-keeping. Everybody knows that many of the best scholars at every college are charity students, but we judge that those capable of becoming the best scholars would force their way if the charities were far less than they are. Everybody knows also that a great many charity students are incapable of doing any profession credit, and had much better be engaged in the ordinary hand-work of the masses of our fellow-men. We often "spoil a horn to make a spoon," by this method.

The experience of the clerical profession does not encourage us to hope that any special advantages would accrue to the legal, medical or scientific departments in our colleges by making them any easier of access. We desire with all our heart to see the professorships better endowed, the apparatus improved, the museums enriched by public and private bounty; but the lowering of the fences, whether in respect to qualifications or fees of tuition, would be, we judge, to increase the quantity and lower the quality of our graduates. We want better graduates before we want more; better lawyers, better doctors, better mining engineers and bridge-builders and chemists, and not more of them. Such as they are, we have quite enough deploma-ed lawyers and doctors and engineers. There is always room at the top in any profession, anywhere and at any time. But the professions are fast becoming crowded with men who hinder each other and lower the respect which is felt for any. And we doubt not that cheap academic and professional education is partly if not principally to blame for it.

It may be partly this cause and partly larger causes which have tended to make the clerical profession less honorable and less dignified and less useful than it was once in America. It is clear that fewer first-rate men enter it; that the best ability seldom now seeks the pulpit for its sphere. There are fine exceptions, but they only prove the rule. It is not that classical talents and high ministerial gifts are less prized or have a less substantial reward. The reverse is true. But it is popular talents that are called for, and they often enable men to succeed in the pulpit who ought not to succeed, and would not if a substantial knowledge of their calling were considered necessary to their office. Learning, literary culture, dignity, even purity of character, are considered in many, we might almost say all parts of the country, as less indispensable qualifications than a knack of story-telling, a dramatic faculty, a flow of words, a bold personality and a fair aptness in the use of pulpit currency. It is instructive to consider how many successful and popular preachers are men who never had any proper collegiate or theological education. They prove that natural aptness will often outrun all academic advantages. But what might not such men have done if they had been carefully and thoroughly trained? If one thinks of the mischief which a popular evangelist does by making his great natural gifts the vehicle and cover for a stupendous mass of narrow superstitions, which careful culture would have made it impossible for him to use, one sees the vast importance of a learned and instructed ministry and deplores the unwisdom of the policy of snatching at every smooth-tongued or even fiery-hearted pietist and making him a teacher of religion. If it be said, and it often is said, that a sound or learned education actually quenches faith and piety and disqualifies evangelists for public usefulness, it is a mournful confession that truth, light, self-discipline, knowledge, are foes of faith; and thoughtful men will doubt—if this be true—whether religion can subsist at all except in the form of superstition, and whether in that form it is worth while to give it any encouragement.

Meanwhile our theological schools, with all the facilities we furnish for the free support of students, are not crowded by students of any sort—a proof that the alleged evil of their eleemosynary character is not the chief difficulty with the profession. Facilities for educating ministers will not make ministers half as soon as they would make doctors or lawyers or engineers if offered as freely. There are great reasons why our American institutions do not favor the clerical profession in its average product, and they are not all bad reasons. There is no large class of persons left to think the way to heaven or the way of duty guarded and tended by priests. There is too much private judgment, too much common sense in the people to give the pulpit or the minister the old pre-eminence. The pastoral office is exceedingly abridged and weakened by the decay of the feeling that only the minister can direct the moral and religious life of a family or supply its solaces. Society has largely outgrown the old leading-strings which made the minister so important. And when the pulpit alone is left as the sphere of his influence it requires gifts or arts or genius to fill it. It appears even to men of solid knowledge and serious purposes an unattractive field and one unlikely to reward their efforts. Politics, platform oratory, literature, the law, offer larger rewards at less sacrifice and with equally honorable and useful results. We must doubt whether free theological education does much to prevent or to favor the supply of the ministry with its needed recruits. That is not the chief weakness or the chief cause of a decline in the quality of our American ministry. But we are convinced that the ministry is not helped by it. And we should be very glad to see what the effect of an absolutely unassisted system of theological education would be after a trial of ten years. Meanwhile we are sorry we cannot think it the main cause of the deterioration in the quality of the profession, for it is one that might be dealt with summarily. The actual reasons, we fear, lie too deep for any remedies in our generation to reach them. We must slowly grow out of them if we get out at all.

FREE RELIGION IN SPAIN.

WE have received from Madrid a volume entitled "Jesus y la Religion de Razon," (Jesus and the Religion of Reason), by Nemesio Uranga. The author is unknown in the world of letters—a layman, intelligent, observing, travelled; a man of reading and reflection, of fervent aspirations, ardent feelings and gorgeous anticipations; a republican in politics, a humanitarian in religion, and his book expresses it all. The new faith, always the same in certain cardinal principles, bears the stamp of the nationality of its interpreters. It assumes different aspects in different lands. In philosophic, scientific, literary Paris, it has a brilliant intellectual cast, penetrating and thoughtful, swift, comprehensive, and ingenious, however audacious. Renan never forgets to be intellectual; Fauvety contemplates the whole subject from the height of philosophy. The rationalism of Germany is studious and critical. Its successive schools have simply worked new veins of analysis. Cold and erudite, the critical understanding, well furnished with learning, has pushed its way from conclusion to conclusion, the philosophical thread, if it had one, being concealed beneath the scholarly process. In England rationalism, so far as it possessed a character of its own, has devoted itself to the task of combating the doctrines of the established church and the tenets of the dissenting bodies, challenging the authority of the Bible, the claims of the Sabbath, the rights of the clergy. In Spain it has the hot blood of the Southern clime. It is not philosophical, for philosophy is not at home in Madrid. It is not learned, for learning has been appropriated by the church, which has kept a jealous eye on the diffusion of knowledge. It is not polemical, after the English fashion, for this requires a patience which the Spaniard does not possess, and supposes a controversial public which in Romanist communities does not exist. It is rather the expression in religious forms of the temper which rebels against despotism alike in state and church. It is impassioned, exuberant, unrestrained.

M. Uranga makes no pretension to philosophical calmness or critical thoroughness. Jesus is, in his view, the apostle of the heart, the leader of spiritual aspiration, the prophet of humanity. Precisely what he said cannot be determined; precisely what he did cannot be discovered. The specific doctrines he taught will not reveal themselves to any searcher of the Scriptures. The air of mystery that has been thrown about him hides from view his genuine character. The miracles that are recorded as wrought upon him, or by him, are set down to the glorifying power of imagination or the influence of dogma. All this, M. Uranga contends, must be stripped off if we would come at the man. They conceal, not express him. What he was is rather to be conjectured than to be told, rather to be felt than to be asserted. Sympathy with the age in which he lived, with its needs and sorrows, its hopes and its aspirations—sympathetic apprehension of the social and moral conditions of the time, will put one on the track of discovery here better than theory or scholarship. Neither the wit of Renan nor the ingenuity of Strauss will assist the mind in comprehending the character of that mighty spirit who gathered up and freshened with his fervent inspiration the ideas of his age, East as well as West, "stamped them with the seal of an august consecration, and laid the basis for the supreme religion of humanity." The cardinal beliefs of this religion are, in his interpretation, few and simple—God, the supreme Creator of heaven and earth, our Spiritual Father; Man, the rational child of God; the universe God's temple; love to God and man the substance of the Divine law; the Beatitudes the rule of the perfect life; the consecration of the human faculties to the good of humanity the ideal purpose of existence; absolute freedom of conscience; complete separation of church from state; the moral law supreme in all human affairs, personal, social and political.

The application of these first principles, as made by a fervid temperament in a country like Spain, king-ridden and priest-ridden, may readily be surmised. The judgment of feeling is essentially the same everywhere, but will be more vehement where the feeling is not held in check by the colder temperament or the severer training of the North. The impulsive, impetuous, inconsiderate character of some of his incidental opinions must be ascribed to personal temperament. The principles of the rational faith are not responsible for them. M. Uranga's book proves that rationalism, wherever taught, in Paris, London, Madrid, is not a cold, intellectual system, but warm, sympathetic, humane. That Frenchmen and Germans, Englishmen and Spaniards can entertain it, shows the breadth of its fundamental principles. Romanism is the religion of southern Europe; Protestantism is the religion of northern Europe and of England; Rationalism is at home on all soils.

O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY ENGLISH THOUGHT.

THIRD NOTICE:— CRITICAL DEISM.

By critical deism we are to understand the attempt to invalidate the supernatural claims of Christianity by showing up the inconsistencies and absurdities and contradictions of the Bible. In witnessing both the assault and the defense, we are impressed with the feeling that somehow we are permitted to behold a duel in the dark, in which the combatants not infrequently change weapons—weapons which, however poisoned, are not deadly. The controversy was exceedingly virulent. To admit that intellectual errors were innocent was by no means to acknowledge that such errors or even the persons holding them were not proper objects of antipathy. Any really scientific or philosophic criticism of the Bible was still far in the future. On both sides there was absolute ignorance of the nature of the genesis and evolution of sacred writings, worships and beliefs. What was not the truth in them must be a lie. There was no middle ground of error and illusion. Pope could praise the "invention" of Homer, as if he had manufactured his Olympian deities and heroes entirely out of his own brain.

Orthodoxy, casting the burden of proof on its opponents, considered itself victor when it had reconciled apparent contradictions, and the deist generally allowed the claim. He was obliged to fight the battle upon the Orthodox ground. His only hope was to make the supernatural commit suicide. He could not strike it from without. Where it was not obviously absurd and contradictory, he gave a credence to the statements of the Bible which similar statements in Herodotus and Livy would not have received. "The deists, one might almost say, admitted the miracles, but attributed them to men instead of God." Equally with their opponents they broke in two the history of the world and failed to see that it was no continuous process of development. Their utter lack of any genuine historic sense showed itself in first supposing a difference where there was none, and then a likeness. "The ancients were conceived as men of the modern type under the action of a totally different set of laws, instead of being regarded as men in a different mental stage under the action of precisely the same laws."

The first book of any importance in the critical controversy was Leslie's "Short Method with Deists," a reply to Charles Blount's "Oracles of Reason." Blount shot himself in 1693 because he could not legally marry his deceased wife's sister. Blount's worst offence was skepticism in regard to the Old Testament miracles and the stories of the Fall. By arresting this little rivulet of unbelief, Leslie imagined that he could dry up the whole mighty current of revolutionary belief. Or rather he did not imagine that any such current was preparing in the atmospheric conditions of the time. Leslie allowed that if Christianity was worthy of universal acceptance, its teachings ought to be "as plain as a pike-staff." His short method included four rules for testing the Biblical narrations: First, that the facts reported should be addressed to men's outward senses. Second, and this publicly. Third, that there should be commemorative movements and actions, and that these (Fourth) should commence from the time of the fact in question. By this method, Leslie fancied he could not only establish the Biblical doctrines and narrations, but also his High Church sacramental and sacerdotal theories, he being a very manly specimen of a non-juring High Churchman. To the majority of his contemporaries, his "Short method" seemed tremendously effective. But nothing could be more absolutely worthless, from the standpoint of modern criticism, seeing that it assumes the authenticity and contemporaneity of the Biblical record. Could anything be more delicious, as we see it, than the absurdity of this? "Could Moses have persuaded 600,000 men that he had been through the sea, in the manner related in Exodus, if it had not been true?" Certainly not if they had been through with him. But for a long time the Orthodox argument was based on Leslie's assumption of the authenticity and contemporaneity of the Biblical record. Grudgingly allowing so much, it is no wonder that the critical deists had a difficult task.

Few names in the deist controversy have been in worse odor than that of Anthony Collins. His "Discourse on Free Thinking," (1713) brought down on him "the sledgehammer of Bentley's criticism." Collins' first point was that all sound opinion must be based on free inquiry. This, Bentley hastened to allow. His second, that it tended irresistibly to deism. His argument was the variety of opinions based on the text, and the 30,000 various readings of the New Testament text which Dr. Mills had recently pointed out. It was sufficient for Bentley's triumph, always more dear to him than victory, that he could ridicule the scholarship of Collins, while leaving his argument intact. Another of Collins' antagonists was Dean Swift, to whom not deism, but avowed deism, was a deadly sin. One could almost anticipate his argument. All men are fools; therefore free thinking is an absurdity. Even the good-natured Steele or admirable Berkeley could write in the Guardian: "If ever man deserved to be denied the common benefits of air and water, it is the author of A Discourse on Free Thinking." Lest it should come to this, Collins retired to Holland, but only for a time. In 1724 he published "Grounds and Reasons of the Christian Religion." The hint was taken from William Whiston, successor to Newton in his mathematical professorship. Whiston, perceiving that the fulfilment of the Old Testament prophecies in the New were far from satisfactory, argued that the Old Testament had been tampered with by the Jews, so as to put the New Testament fulfilments in the wrong. Collins' book was avowedly an attack on Whiston. He proved conclusively enough that Whiston's method of clipping and docking the prophecies to fit them to New Testament events was altogether absurd. At the same time—and here his real power and purpose were disclosed—he showed that without such clipping and docking the prophecies could not be made to tally with the events, unless the prophecies were allegorical. He argued that they were, but evidently with little heart. This part of his book, and the reply to Whiston, are the harmless bread of a sandwich the meat of which is the insistence on the inapplicability of the prophecies, considered literally, to the events. Great was the excitement produced by this book. The like had not been seen before. In his next book (1727) Collins recites the titles of thirty-five opposing treatises. The most that came from any of these was certain ecclesiastical preferments. A book against the deists was the regular price of a bishopric. It is really comical to see to what an extent the argument turned on Daniel, and how completely his authenticity was established, when we consider the estimation in which the book is held at present, the critics being few indeed who are so poor as to do it reverence as a genuine writing of the time of the Captivity, the most assigning it to the last half of the second century B. C.

The argument from miracles was thought to be impregnable, even if that from prophecy should fail. Collins had promised to consider this also, but the task devolved—perhaps by some arrangement with Collins—on Thomas Woolston, a fellow of Cambridge. His book is an application of the allegorical method to the miracles. He declared that the miracles had not a particle of historical truth. He had no a priori objections to miracles; but on their face he found the narratives preposterous. Fines and imprisonment were very naturally his portion; insanity and poverty his fate. Absurd as was the criticism and the device by which Woolston proposed to remain "sound as a rock" in his Christian profession, the replies which his book elicited, though sometimes panoplied in a great show of learning, were on his level or below it. Thus Bishop Smalbroke argues for the miracle of Gadara, that the permission of Jesus to the evil spirits to enter into the swine was amply justified by his casting a whole legion of devils out of one person "by suffering about three of them to enter each hog instead of about six thousand of them keeping possession of one man." No wonder that this bit of pious arithmetic earned for the bishop the soubriquet of "split-devil!" One result of the controversy was to concentrate the orthodox defence upon the resurrection; another, that the miracles are beginning to be regarded as encumbrances rather than as supports to faith; things to be proved instead of things proving. Sherlock's "Trial of the Witnesses" and Aunet's "Resurrection of Jesus Considered" are the most significant books in the later stages of the controversy until we come to Middleton. He first assumed the authenticity of the record as innocently as Leslie, and so had an easy victory. To Aunet it seemed more reasonable to suppose the Gospel writers dupes or liars, the brutality of his method being an anticipation by some fifty years of Thomas Paine's.

In 1748 appeared two books, by far the most remarkable of any in the history of critical deism. One came from David Hume, the other from Conyers Middleton. Middleton's "Free Inquiry into the Miraculous Powers which are supposed to have existed in the Christian Church through several successive ages" was the most effective assault upon the orthodox dogmas of the whole deist controversy. But the assault was covert. Avowedly it was confined to miracles of post-apostolic times. Its real force, however, was equally great against the miracles of these times. And faulty as his method often is, it was the discordant prelude to a genuine historical method. He received no serious answer, and so the skeptics had the last word of the controversy, and that the most effective word which had been spoken. Already orthodoxy had retreated a long way from Leslie's theory of a body of evidence so compact, flawless and coherent that it could only be rejected by the most reckless skepticism. From this extended line of battle it had fallen back upon the fortress of the resurrection. And now came Hume, asserting that no evidence could prove a miracle, and Middleton, that stories of miracles only prove the credulity of the narrators. The practical result was a pretty general agreement to believe everything, but not believe anything very heartily. There were spirits whom this could not satisfy; believers like Wesley, on the one hand, and skeptics like Thomas Paine, on the other, and a whole world of historical and constructive criticism was left still unexplored. Nevertheless, in critical as in constructive deism, with much failure and absurdity, there was some real progress, and, best of all, the conscious need, however dimly felt or unexpressed, of some further development.

J. W. C.

[FOR THE INQUIRER.]

THE LONE VOYAGER.

BY M. J. SAVAGE.

'T WAS ever so, that he who dared
To sail upon a sea unknown,
Must go upon a voyage unshared,
And brave its perils all alone.

Columbus, with his faith alone,
Sailed for new land beyond the sea:
Trusted behind by few or none,
Around him faithless mutiny.

And he who, not content to sit
And dream upon the shores of truth,
Watching the sea-bird fancies flit
And wavelets creep through all his youth,—

Must sail unblest of those behind,
While love turns to reproach her tone,
The loving God alone is kind
To him who dares to sail alone.

HERBERT SPENCER thinks that George Eliot is the greatest woman that ever lived, and most people seem inclined to agree with him. There are not a few, however, whose opinion usually carries weight, who regard the author of "Daniel Deronda" as a much overrated woman, whose shortcomings and deficiencies of both heart and head will one day be quite as generally recognized as her many remarkable qualities now are.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM ENGLAND.

WE are still living in quiet times, though nobody knows what a day may bring forth. The Constantinople Conference has broken up and Turkey has gained a diplomatic victory. How all this has been brought about nobody really knows, though rumor is busy enough, and, if we are to believe all we hear, Lord Beaconsfield and Sir Henry Elliott could tell the world some of the reasons. There is an uncomfortable suspicion abroad that while Lord Salisbury was working in perfect harmony with the other European Powers, our ambassador was encouraging the Turks to be firm in their resistance, and was doing so in obedience to instructions from the Prime Minister. I can hardly believe that this is true; but it is well known that Sir Henry Elliott is as enthusiastic a friend of Turkey as can be found, so that if such instructions did reach him he would not at all regret the opportunity of thwarting Russian policy. Every one is now anxiously awaiting the next move, and Mr. Gladstone has made a speech which almost reads as if he would not be opposed to England supporting Turkey should she go to war to secure the guarantees which she has not been able to obtain at the Conference. But a few weeks must elapse before all is revealed. Parliament meets in about a fortnight, and in the debate on the address we shall no doubt hear much that will enlighten us as to the past as well as give us a clue to the future. The electric telegraph is a great boon to mankind, but I fear it will rob your correspondent of the opportunity of sending anything of special interest to your readers, as you will know all that is said in London as soon as he will.

The ecclesiastical world is much exercised about Mr. Tooth's case at Hatcham. The full rigor of the law is being put in force against him, and I suppose the end of this week will see him imprisoned for his pertinacious disobedience to his superiors. I am, of course, opposed to everything like persecution, but I cannot feel any sympathy with Mr. Tooth, who, on entering the church, undertook certain responsibilities in return for the privileges he was to enjoy as a clergyman of the Established Church. If he and his people are desirous of conducting their worship with ceremonies and vestments, which are not permitted by ecclesiastical law, he has only to leave his position as a member of the Establishment and no one will interfere with his imitation of the Mass any more than with the Roman Catholic clergyman, who upholds the real thing without let or hindrance. I cannot help feeling something very much akin to contempt for the pretensions of our extreme High Churchmen. They speak as if they were supported by the authority of the church, while in reality they are exercising the right of private judgment just as much as the freest Unitarian. They select from Roman usage what they like and reject what they dislike, and instead of bending with sublime humility, like that of the true Romanist, to a tradition which has at least its fourteen centuries to appeal to, they make themselves ridiculous in the eyes of all sensible men. At the annual meeting of the Unitarian Home Missionary Board the Rev. Charles Hargrove, who has lately left the Catholic church for our free communion, spoke out the plain truth about the pretences to authority made by the orthodox churches of Christendom. He had been a priest, a member of the Dominican order, the one especially devoted to theological study in the Catholic church. He made his hearers feel the solemn awe which every true Catholic must feel for the power which undoubtedly lies in the venerable tradition on which the Papal power is founded. Once grant the truth of the authority of the church, and everything else is easy to be accepted. With great truth he pointed out that if the church is infallible, then when its chief speaks as its mouthpiece he must speak with infallible truth. If you can accept as true the unspeakable miracle that the Infinite God was once a little child, what can be the difficulty of accepting transubstantiation? If you believe indeed that Christ was God, what is more natural than to bow before Mary, who was permitted to be his mother, or to St. Joseph, who tended him in his early days? And when once, Mr. Hargrove continued, a man has cast aside his faith in the authority of the august Church of Rome, how can he fail to look with contempt upon the Anglican claim for his church, or accept the rule of Methodist or Presbyterian, putting forth as an infallible guide a book which men cannot fail to interpret differently according to the peculiarity of their own intellectual conceptions. It was a pleasure to listen to Mr. Hargrove, and I have only heard one universal expression of congratulation that a man of such evident power, and at the same time of such truly reverent religious mind, has cast in his lot with our free churches. He is settled as the minister of Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds, a church that has noble traditions, as to the men who have occupied its pulpit. Mr. Hargrove will, I am sure, maintain to the full the reputation his predecessor gained for it.

I hardly know whether I ought to congratulate you in the United States upon the emigration to your shores of a gentleman who has been for the last four years the minister of the Free Christian church in Bolton. He has been a very active and, I am told, a very effective speaker at many political meetings. It would be very absurd in me to condemn men for holding extreme opinions, at least those who know me would think so, but I think Mr. Applebee has made himself better known in political than in religious circles, and he has especially kept himself aloof from Unitarian gatherings or associations of late, though in former years he occupied the pulpits of acknowledged congregations among us. He said some strong things at Newington Green when he left them, but he has exceeded his former exploits in bidding farewell to his congregation at Bolton. To give a few examples of his style of eloquence I quote from the Bolton Evening Guardian, now before me: "The Bolton Free Christian church is not A. 1 at the Celestial Lloyds. It is a rotten old tub, incapable of keeping any longer afloat." He began his speech by calling his congregation "Ladies and Gentlemen." "If he had addressed them as 'dear friends,' or even as 'friends' or 'dearly beloved brethren,' or even as 'brethren,' he would have used words which would not have been correctly expressive of the emotions he felt. He was a friend and a brother to everybody connected with that church, but that was a very different thing from saying that everybody was a friend and brother to him. He was a friend and a brother to the veriest worm that crawled, yet nevertheless when the worm misinterpreted the meaning of his wormy life and made his (the speaker's) higher life uncomfortable, then, without any remorsefulness, he proceeded to do execution upon the worm. This was what he was about to do that day; but as they ought to be polite, even to worms, he addressed those before him, worms included, as ladies and gentlemen." He scattered flowers of eloquence like this over his audience both morning and evening; but I should not have troubled you with these elegant extracts if it had not been that he declared his conviction that his speeches would not only be read all over England, but also "in the United States, that bright and beautiful land of social, political and religious hope, wherein he would seek, and seeking find a happy home." I hope he may find his expectations of happiness fulfilled on your side of the Atlantic, but I warn you not to raise his anticipations too high or you may have ere long to be reckoned as belonging to the same class as the worms he left behind him in Bolton. Truly yours, S. A. S.

MANCHESTER, JAN. 25, 1877.

FROM PARIS.

THE colder weather which we have been having here for the past three or four days, has come most opportunely for Paris. Before it, we had had a dreary succession of heavy, murky days, with no sun to vivify and no wind to stir the air, and as a result, typhoid fever showed itself to a somewhat alarming extent in several portions of this much sewered but badly drained city. Fears of an epidemic were felt by many, and unusual precautions were taken to ward it off. The analysis made by the Meteorological Society, of air taken from several parts of the city, showed that germs of the disease existed in almost all. The air taken from the Chateau d'Eau and from the neighborhood of the demolitions for the new Boulevard de l'Opera, was especially full of these germs, and the soldiers barracked at the former place were ordered to other quarters. The works on the new Boulevard opened up many an old cess-pool and sewer, and filled the air with malaria. Now, however, has come this colder weather, the best preventive of such sickness.

Much interest is felt here in the new bill of M. Marvais relating to foreign physicians. The bill has passed the Senate and become a law. It prohibits all doctors who have not received the diploma of the French Ecole de Medecine from practicing in France. The bill was caused by the number of quacks who have, of late years, located themselves in the country, and the investigations incident to it, have brought to light many interesting facts. On the island of Jersey a medical "college" was founded some years ago which purported to be a branch of the famous or infamous "Pennsylvania University," and which, for the modest sum of forty pounds, furnished any applicant, sending a certificate of good character, (a thing very easy to obtain) with a duly signed and attested diploma creating him an M.D. His presence was not required. The exchange of money and diploma was effected by means of the mails, and the applicant was at once a fully fledged and qualified doctor of medicine. Similar institutions exist in Germany and Belgium; but in these, the course of study and the examinations are more severe. The presence of the applicant is required that he may pass an "examination." The rigor and value of this examination is shown by the fact that the diploma is given with the understanding that its holder shall not practice in Germany or Belgium as the case may be. It is at this class of men that M. Marvais' bill is aimed, but, of course, it affects some of the better class also. That its effects may not be too severe upon these, the bill provides that all doctors already established shall be permitted to continue in practice, but that as these die or go out of the profession, their places shall be supplied by regularly constituted physicians of the French école. Very few foreign physicians will ever attempt to pass the examinations, as the French nomenclature and pharmacopœia are very complex. The foreign physicians will gradually die out, and foreigners of the next generation visiting France will find themselves compelled to employ French skill. This, of course, will be unpleasant. The barrier of a different language, coupled with the impossibility of the average Frenchman ever understanding the feelings and character of a foreigner, will necessarily weaken the mental influence which every practitioner should have over his patients and which often does more than medicine in effecting the cure.

JANUARY 17, 1877.

H. C. A.

FROM CHICAGO.

GLOBE to God! Hoar for Boutwell, Judge Davis for John A. Logan, and a prospect for a reasonable settlement of partisan difficulties! But what do ministers know about politics? When Pitt sent out a governor to one of the West Indies he gave him these orders: "Don't you do anything without a good reason; but never tell your reason." So we will chuckle over what really is good in political affairs; and have very decided reasons for the faith, or no faith, that is in us; but never, never give our reasons for it.

I have just come in from a ramble among the book-stores. The choicest place for a good literary tete-a-tete is Hadley's. Colgrove, with his shining head and smiling face, will make you feel that it is home. If you want to know just where a passage is he will turn to it and lay his finger on it; if you want posting in any direction he is the man. He will save you a month's useless reading in a year, and sell you what you need. Here you will be likely to meet Sunderland or Forbush. If not the latter, the Athenæum is just overhead, and you will enjoy a climb from the office to the class-rooms and gymnasium. Busy everywhere. O! for some Croesus to die, comfortably, and leave a fortune for the Athenæum. What a grand idea! inspired of God, via. Wendte. All liberal people like it. On the walls of the reading-room hangs the portrait of one of its best patrons, Prof. Hevens, of the Congregationalist Seminary. Powers was a warm friend; so is Swing.

By the way, Swing did a grand thing last Sunday. His sermon was fully as bold as some of Parker's. He showed the narrowness that confines inspiration to the margins of Hebrew thought. Cautious, but not to be mistaken, he is moving lightward.

If you want to know where there is some good, steady religious building going on, ask after Thompson, of Bloomington, or Miller, of Geneseo. Cooke, at Grand Haven, is up to his eyes in really thorough work, and if the people there half appreciate him they will build a new church within a year. "Hold fast is a good dog!" we used to say. But I begin to think he is the best sort of Christian. He is needed in all our churches. We have him in the Third Church; and if we don't work him to death he will carry us all to glory in spite of "blue times."

That was not meant for a joke at all; but then "it reminds me" that the great sensation of Chicago is "blue glass." General Pleasanton has written a letter to the Tribune reviewing his experiments on calves, vines, pigs and himself; and all Chicago is buying blue glass for every conceivable disease. White light is ostracised and henceforth the sun must shine with blue effulgence into drawing-room as well as conservatory. The exact power, or relative power of the chemical ray abstracted from the heat and light rays not one in ten thousand understands; but they, nevertheless, mean to try it. It is a scientific age, you know. Advertising columns teem with "Blue Glass for Sale;" and, of course, somebody will be advantaged. Probably no scientific question is of more value than the relation of various colored lights to animal and vegetable economy. Such experiments as those of Father Secchi and others on the insane; such researches as those of Dr. Ogle, and Wallace, and Helmholtz, and Draper are to be of incalculable value, but it is to be regretted that quackery must first do incalculable damage.

Moody is gone, but the age of miracles is revived to fill the aching void. Fanaticism first, and then miracles. Dr. Mitchel electrified the people last week at one of the noon-day prayer meetings by announcing that a paralytic had been made whole in answer to prayer. Mrs. Robinson, however, on inquiry, is now confined to her bed from a sprained hip caused by a fall when returning from one of Mr. Moody's meetings. The unreasonable skeptics hardly think it fair on the old lady to cure her of paralysis caused by a fall from a street car; and then lay her out with a sprain when coming from so good a place as the Tabernacle. The question is egregiously asked why prayer does not cure this case. Is it a judgment on the good woman?

A royal good time at Collyer's church; all the Unitarian churches massed in a good, old-fashioned, informal sociable. I should like to steal some of Collyer's folks. They have been under his broad sunshine till they make capital reflectors. Everybody at home, and a jolly time for young and old.

POWELL.

LITERATURE.

THE FEBRUARY MAGAZINES.

It is rather late in the day, we confess, but we must make some note of the monthlies which are bearing so much really valuable literature into a hundred thousand homes.

The Atlantic Monthly.

The Atlantic, with its new departments fully systematized, is a host in itself. A magazine which can offer Whittier and Longfellow, Holmes and Bayard Taylor, Howells and James, Stedman and Fawcett in one number, and then leave a margin for others who have something to say, needs to be read, not noticed. The February Atlantic is very good. The "Contributors' Club" affords an opportunity for bright comment on some things, where an essay might be less effective, and this second number fully sustains the promise of the first. Mr. Howells' opening, in "Out of the Question," is characteristic, and we can only hope that his closing will be less so, for his closing is certainly apt to be his weak point. Mr. Stedman has been wrought to a poetic height by the "News from Olympia," and his stanzas are worthy of the subject. We wish we could more fully particularize the contents of this rich number, but space will not allow, and we can only quote and endorse one verse of Dr. Holmes' "How not to Settle It:"

"I say once more, as I have said before,
If voting for our Tildens and our Hayses
Means only fight, then, Liberty, good night!
Pack up your ballot-box and go to blazes."

Harper's Monthly

Has a happy knack in illustrated articles, full of information, which rarely deserts it. The most attractive in the current number is by Wirt Sikes, leading us into Wales—a strangely un-hackneyed land for one so full of interest. Cardiff, Caerphilly, Merthyr Tydvil—the names themselves fill the mind with visions all the more interesting perhaps because of their vagueness. "The Land of the Incas," by A. H. Guernsey, and "Barbadoes," by A. Van Cleef, are also illustrated. The question, "And who was Blennerhassett?" is answered by J. S. C. Abbott in popular fashion—a sad story and unique in our country; the three continued stories, "Erema," "A Woman Hater" and "Garth," run on, and a new one, "Noel Brewster's Secret," is begun by C. Welsh Mason, and there is about the usual assortment of shorter articles, including the letters from Lord Macaulay, which have been attracting so much attention, and to which we referred in our last number. The Easy Chair discourses briefly concerning these letters, and more at length about Webster, the Brooklyn Theatre horror and the Johns Hopkins University. The last enterprise is full of hope to all who are interested in the cause of culture and the higher education.

Scribner's Monthly

Has fallen upon a healthful subject, of perennial interest, in "White of Selborne," which is well illustrated. Of the other illustrated articles, "The Microscope Among the Flowers," by S. B. Herriek, is full of curious information on propagation among plants, directly and by the agency of insects. Another is on "Trout Fishing on the Rangeley Lakes," calculated to stir up a longing for the wilderness; another General McClellan's second paper on "A Winter on the Nile," in which he voyages from the first cataract to Abou Simbel. In "Home and Society" there are some valuable hints for mothers on the ever-new subject of the management and education of young children.

The Popular Science Monthly

Gives a portrait and sketch of Prof. Josiah P. Cooke, Jr., with an incomplete list of his published papers on subjects connected with his chemical investigations. The illustrated articles are upon the "Distance and Dimensions of the Sun," by Prof. C. A. Young; "Ups and Downs of the Long Island Coast," by E. Lewis, Jr., and "Compressed Air Locomotive in St. Gothard Tunnel," by C. M. Gabriel. J. Fitzgerald contributes a translation of the careful paper by A. Mézières in the Revue de Deux Mondes, on "The Trial of Galileo," and other articles are by Alexander Bain, R. A. Proctor, C. Chamberlain, Dr. G. M. Beard, William E. Simmons and the editor.

The Catholic World

Contains a criticism of Huxley's lectures, in which the critic seems to consider he has fully demolished the Professor. His opinion is frankly stated: "To say what we think of this long argumentation, we believe that it demonstrates nothing but the immense talkative faculty of the lecturer." "The Home Life of Some Eighteenth Century Poets" is the kind of gossip about Swift, Pope, Thomson, Goldsmith, etc., which people always read with avidity. "A Story of the Far West" relates the redemption of a mining town, as seen from Roman Catholic ground. "Frederic Ozanam" is an elaborate biographical article concerning a professor at the Sorbonne. "Modern Melodists" treats of Schubert, and there are other parts of the number having a general interest, but for the most part the interest is restricted.

The Phrenological Journal

Opens with an article on "The Phrenological Characteristics of Lord Macaulay, as inferred from his Writings." This is followed by a "Glimpse of Rocky Mountain Scenery," poorly illustrated; an illustrated article on "American Sheep Husbandry," a portrait and sketch of "Philip Schaff, D.D.," and numerous other articles of about the usual character.

The Bankers' Magazine

Contains more than twenty articles, a number of them devoted to the statistics of 1876, others to banking and financial movements, etc. Mr. George Walker contributes a translation of an article by Emile de Laveleye, in the Revue de Belgique, on "Bi-Metallic Money." M. de Laveleye agrees with M. Cernuschi in favoring the double standard, but seems to go beyond him in actually feeling gratification in the thought that the establishment or continuance of the double standard is likely to favor debtors at the expense of creditors.

From the table of premiums it appears that the highest quotation of gold during 1876 was 115, March 3d; the lowest 107, December 9th.

Magazine of American History.

This magazine, as the leading article of its second number, presents an account by E. F. De Lancey, of the capture of Fort Washington, November 16, 1776, with a fac simile of an old map, showing Knyphausen's attack. Following this, we have a sketch of "Pierre Daillé, the first Huguenot Pastor of New York," by Chas. W. Baird, some interesting original documents and reprints, Notes, Queries, etc., as promised in the first number. The publishers already announce the contents of the March number, and their enterprise shows much vitality.

St. Nicholas

Brings the young folks a monthly budget which includes a letter from Thomas Hughes, entitled "Festina Lente," and the customary variety for the little ones. The Peterkins go to the Centennial and meet with their usual fate, and as usual are helped out of the scrape by the lady from Philadelphia. A new serial, "Pattikin's House," is accompanied by a sketch—not very beautiful, but very natural—"The Blackberry Party at Jahonnet's Acre." There is also a pleasant picture of Pattikin herself. Herbert P. Copeland gives some curious front views of fishes. The frontispiece represents Major André drawing his own portrait.

The Library Table

Does not claim to be a magazine, but aims at a permanency which entitles it to consideration. The February number continues its Index to Periodical Literature and Record of New Books. At the same time the editor acknowledges that more completeness is to be desired in these, and solicits the assistance of publishers therein. The leading reviews in the current number are of Miss Preston's "Troubadours and Trouveres," by Abby Sage Richardson; "Hutton's Essays," by Julius H. Ward; Schuyler's "Turkistan," by O. B. Frothingham; "The New Poet" (the author of Deirdré), by Henry C. Matthews, and "The Financial Alphabet," by T. Frank Brownell. E. C. Stedman promises a Biographical and Critical paper on Longfellow for the March number.

Blackwood for January.

In a defence of Lord Beaconsfield, his policy in regard to the Eastern Question is claimed to be the safest, wisest and most efficacious, and Mr. Gladstone is taunted for his policy regarding Jefferson Davis and the insurgents of the Southern States. A description of the operations of the House of Commons is entertaining,—moreover the author affirms, as "our sincere conviction, that the House of Commons is the first assembly of gentlemen in the world."

George Sand's writings are analyzed at considerable length, and in a friendly spirit. "The Woman Hater" is developing rapidly. Two other stories are given, both well written, but rather too tragic to leave pleasant impressions. A gay little ditty in rhyme is calculated to relieve any sombre effects in them.

LITERARY NOTES.

A CURIOUS rumor appeared in the Examiner that Mr. Samuel Morley had bought the Contemporary Review, and was "looking out for an editor who believes in the Atonement." Mr. Strahan wrote at once to the Times, stating that Mr. Morley has not purchased the Review, which still remains in the same hands as hitherto. It is certain, however, that the accomplished editor, Mr. James Knowles, has seceded, and, as we announced last week, is about to establish a new monthly under the name of The Nineteenth Century, which, if it lasts for twenty-three years, will, no doubt, change its name to The Twentieth Century. It appears also from some further particulars which are given by the Examiner, that a joint-stock company (limited) was registered on December 14 last, "for the purpose" (as stated in its articles of association) "of purchasing the interest of the said Alexander Strahan in certain publications known as the Contemporary Review, The Day of Rest, Good Things for the Young, and Peepshow, and the name of Mr. Samuel Morley stands first on the list of directors. The names of Mr. Francis Peek, the well-known member of the London School Board, and of the Rev. Mr. Paton, of the Independent College at Nottingham, stand first among the "subscribers." It appears, therefore, to be a joint-stock company of Mr. Samuel Morley and his friends, and not Mr. Samuel Morley alone, which has bought the Contemporary, or rather "Mr. Strahan's interest" in it. According to the same articles of association, the Contemporary Review "remains in the hands" of the directors of the new company, who are empowered "to do any act or acts, thing or things, for the more effectually carrying out the objects of the said company." These changes indicate, we fear, that the Contemporary Review has seen its best days, and that its honorable traditions will be preserved in The Nineteenth Century. It is stated that the following, among others, have promised their support to The Nineteenth Century: Mr. Tennyson, Professor Huxley, Cardinal Manning, Dr. Tyndall, the Deans of Westminster and St. Paul's, the Rev. Dr. Martineau, the Revs. J. Baldwin Brown and J. Guinness Rogers, Mr. Grant Duff, Sir John Lubbock, Sir J. Fitzjames Stephen, Sir Henry Thompson, Sir George Bowyer, Lord Arthur Russell, Mr. Matthew Arnold, Dr. Carpenter, Mr. W. R. Greg, Mr. Frederic Harrison, Mr. C. T. Newton, Mr. W. Spottiswoode, and Mr. Arthur Arnold.—London Inquirer.

SLOTE, WOODMAN & CO., of 121 William street, send us "Mark Twain's Scrap-Book." Why Mark should allow his name to be attached to so prosaic a thing as a scrap-book only those who have purchased his patent will be able to understand. The happy possessors of this treasure will have no further need of paste-pot or mullage-bottle, Mark having ingeniously arranged a book to the pages of which your excerpts readily adhere after the manner of postage stamps. To all keepers of scrap-books the "Mark Twain" is simply indispensable.

NEW PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

BOOKS

From G. P. Putnam & Sons.

THE CHILDHOOD OF THE ENGLISH NATION. By Ella S. Arncliffe. $1.25.
MODERN MATERIALISM IN ITS RELATIONS TO RELIGION AND THEOLOGY. By James Martin. 8vo, LL D. $1.25.
SELECT BRITISH ESSAYISTS. Sir Roger de Coverley. With an Introductory Essay by John Habberton. $1.

From Ginn & Heath, Boston.

A MANUAL OF INSTRUCTION IN LATIN. Prepared by J. H. Allen and J. B. Greenough. $1.50.

SELECTIONS FROM ADDISON AND GOLDSMITH. For use in Schools and Classes. By Rev. Henry N. Hudson. Paper, 40 cents.

From A. S. Barnes & Co., New York.

FOURTEEN WEEKS IN ZOOLOGY. By J. Dorman Steele. Ph D., F.G.S. $1.10.

From Palmer, Augir & Co., Chicago.

GATHERED LEAVES. By Frances A. B. Dunning.

SELECTIONS.

THE WORKING MAN'S SUNDAY.

A PLEA FOR REST, RECREATION, EDUCATION.

REST, Recreation, Education: those words mark the three parts into which the subject falls the moment that we touch it. And I will say at once, in rough, where I am coming out. I think that the present use of Sunday determined by New England law and custom, and extending far beyond New England, involves a waste of opportunity to working-men so sad and great that the makers of public opinion can hardly do a better thing for their generation than to take up earnestly the question, Cannot this waste be somehow utilized for culture? At present, New England law and custom compel Sunday rest, forbid Sunday recreation, and do nothing for Sunday education save in a single direction,—that indeed the most important. The change that will be advocated (under, let me confess, a strong sense of its difficulty and danger, yet with strong confidence that it looks in the right direction) may be summed up thus: So far as the State deals with the matter, it should encourage Sunday rest, without directly enforcing it; should encourage Sunday recreation also, without directly aiding it; and should positively and actively promote Sunday education by opening whatever libraries, reading-rooms, art and mechanic exhibitions it may control in fit localities, and by extending the public school system so far as to include free Sunday classes and lectures on "secular" subjects. Of course, before public opinion will authorize the State to do so much as this, private philanthropy must lead the way, and seize on this waste field of opportunity, and prove that in the vacant lot right here beside our doors there lies a gold-mine!

Now to go over the ground a little more carefully.

I. REST.

For the working man Sunday must still be, as now, a day of Rest, a pause in the busy week. The command seems written in our flesh and blood, confirmed by centuries of history, attested under many climates, races, civilizations; the command, "Six days shalt thou labor, but the seventh shall be Sabbath," i. e., rest. So ancient is it that it seems to date from the creation; so imperious that it seems to have come from God; so sure that it seems to have been revealed. Strip off these symbols by which man thinks the thought, and the thought is true. No accidental choice, no chieftain's word is old, and strong, and wide of spread like this. It is from Nature—the Nature that lies in man announcing her strong law through his deep need. No beliefs in Sinai-revelation or resurrection-miracle can add to its real weight, however much those beliefs have served to make men feel its weight and yield obedience. The tired muscles claim Sabbath, if the week's work has been with muscles. The tired nerves claim Sabbath, if the week's work falls on nerves.

The Sabbath-law is growing plainer, then, than ever; the Sabbath command is growing more imperious. Rest is still the greatest gift the Sunday can bring, it is the great gift the Sunday must bring, the workingman. Any change, therefore, that would seriously endanger that, whatever good it otherways might do, would do more harm than good.

I doubt whether the Sunday law be needed as protection, and whether it is the real protection of the Sunday rest we credit it with being. I believe the institution is inherently so strong that the abolition of the law would have but little tendency to rob the workingmen of it; and am inclined to think that the phrase used at the beginning suggests the just, safe, policy. "The State should encourage Sunday rest without directly enforcing it." As long, however, as it still persists in keeping the workshop and the saleshop closed, it should at least strike out the clause that now makes thousands of us law-breakers, forbidding "any manner of labor, business, or work, except works of necessity and charity,"—should at least strike out a clause like this, and restore to us by law that freedom which plainly harms no other. I know not whether public opinion is ripe for even so much change. I suspect it is, although since 1860 there have been five alterations in the Massachusetts Sunday law, and, in four, the change instead of dulling has sharpened its cutting-edge.

II. RECREATION.

Given the rest-day, what shall be done with it?

The difference between nerve-work and muscle-work shows at once that even Rest must have a varied usage to be rest for all the workers. What is real rest for one would be simply continued labor for another. Much more is this true of Recreation, so much greater is the difference between taste and taste. What is recreation to one taste is direst bore to another. What makes one smile makes another yawn. What takes one early out of bed of a Sunday morning keeps another late in bed. Now the State undertakes to be very maternal in this matter, and she is a mother who ignores the differences between her children. She treats us younger ones as if we all were like the good brothers two hundred years our elders. She says, "They did not, and you shall not, go to any show or entertainment, shall not take part in or be present at any sport or game or play; you shall not fish or hunt, or travel even, except from necessity or charity, upon Sunday."

The "Puritan" Sabbath and the "Continental" Sabbath are set off against each other as two great types, and each is praised, each heartily hated, by opposite parties. In both cases injustice is done both to the thing praised and to the thing condemned. New England Puritanism was much more than the ascetic monstrosity which its modern scoffers mock at. That austere moral strength of which the Puritan Sabbath was the natural seventeenth century sign—its sign and not its cause—has been the iron in the nation's blood down to the seventh generation. Would we had more of it! On the other hand the Continental Sabbath is by no means the abomination of desolation and profligacy described by those who fear it. Sunday is the home-day there as here; the general rest-day there, though not so much as here; the day of worship there as well as here, though in a less degree; and besides this, it is there far more a recreation-day than here,—and by this last difference it goes so far towards redressing the balance of comparative good between the two days there and here, that I am not at all sure, on the whole, that our American Sunday deserves the higher praise. The late Dr. Guthrie, of Edinburgh, was true Scotch Presbyterian on the subject of Sabbath observances, and his testimony is noteworthy. "We counted on one occasion in Paris thirty-three theatres and places of amusement open on the Sabbath day," he writes. Coming home, "in one hour we saw in London and Edinburgh, with all our churches and schools and piety, more drunkenness than we saw in five long months in guilty Paris." Or again: "At the Synod of the Scotch Church in 1867, the Puritan Sabbath was openly proclaimed a failure, and ample evidence was adduced in proof; one of the speakers declaring that Continental Sabbaths produced no parallel to the disgraceful behavior which marked the day in Scotland." I do not mean to correlate the two as simple cause and effect,—the Sabbath-keeping and the drunkenness,—though there is doubtless some connection of that sort between the sombre day and the number of reellers on the street. The "workingmen" will have recreation, and if the higher kinds are shut to them, there will only be the more idle men to seek the lower kinds,—the den if not the garden, the saloon if not the concert or the gallery. But however related, facts like those referred to should be remembered in comparing the two Sabbath-types.

I know by the very strength of my own preference how hard it is to wholly discharge our minds of these religious predilections. But just that we should do, if we would view the Sunday-question with perfect fairness. Even the most

Evangelical of the descendants would hardly claim to-day that the old homestead Sabbath of the fathers can be justly forced upon the vast and complex populations of strange blood and foreign customs that have been invited to the family adoption. For ourselves it may still be holy-day; when judging for others we must remember that we judge a holiday. The State knows no holy days,—I speak of what ought to be, not is. To the State, Sunday should be simply the people's rest, with equal right to each person of the people to use that rest as he may choose. In the eye of the law church-going should be but one among the recreations chosen. The church-goers have no more right to say to the riders and the ball-players and the show-seekers, Stop! than these latter have to say to the church-goers, Don't you do it! "On Saturday," pleads the horse-car company, "we carry you a pleasure or a rest-ride at our profit, and at our risk if we damage you; on Sunday, by Massachusetts statutes, we carry you the pleasure or the rest-ride at our profit still, and at your risk if we damage you." What right has Parson A. or Deacon B. to ordain meanness like that by refusing to order up this statute from the book? It is not a question of practical interference; for the two kinds of Sunday usage do not interfere,—if neither party claim superior rights. There is room in the city or the town for both usages, under the same forbearance that is practised and enforced on week-days, without a thought of calling it forbearance then, but simple justice. Why should week-day injustice become just on Sundays? Or why should Saturday "justice" become even "toleration" on the next day? The street is made for all the wagons; for the torch-light procession of both the parties. The Town Hall first echoes to Tilden's name and then to Hayes'. So should it be with Sunday. All ears have to bear the bells; all ears should bear the band,—or bells and band should agree on separate times and places. Let the morning park have the silence of its trees or hold the preacher's tent, if the preacher will; let the park in the afternoon have the stir of music and hold the family throngs that the music would draw there. Church-doors stand open, and those who will may enter; the concert-doors, the theatre-doors, the bath-house-doors, the gymnasium and the garden-gates, have a right to stand open that those who will may enter there. As to the employees, the employees in the one place correspond to the employees in the other; and the loss of their rest-day—that of the few for the sake of the many—may be similarly justified and similarly made good.—Extract from an address by W. C. Gannett, reported in the Index.

SCIENCE.

INSTINCT?

Extract from a public Address of the eminent Prof. Baer in St. Petersburg, and communicated by Prof. E. Desor to the Swiss journal, "Reform."

TRANSLATED BY CHARLES W. WENDTE.

In no class of animals does the power of instinct show itself so variously modified and so wonderful in its operations as in the insect world. Many excellent works have been written concerning the instincts of insects, and discriminating students of nature, like the two Hubers, have devoted their whole lives to the observation of these hidden impulses in the bee and the ant. We are not to entertain for a moment, therefore, the thought that I can here exhaust the many-sided topic. But you will allow me to attempt, with a few rapid strokes of my brush, to show how and why I hold these secret springs of action to be something originally implanted; that is, not a product of the bodily structure, but as something which stands above, and is a law unto it. I will refer only to a few of the most familiar examples.

The gnat, in the earlier stages of its development, lives only in the water, and can live only in water, since its whole organization is arranged solely for this element, and its food also is found only in the water. During its last metamorphosis, however, it acquires wings, a long proboscis, and air-tubes which open on the side of its body. It now raises itself into the air, and shuns the water, for now it would suffocate in the latter element. As soon, however, as the eggs have fully ripened in the female, she seeks the water again, in which she must meanwhile not be immersed, for fear of losing her life. Cautiously, therefore, she seeks a leaf swimming in the stream, or a blade of grass overhanging it, in order that, resting on this, she may let her eggs fall into the water. The male feels no such impulse to seek the water. Is not the instinct here a supplemental completion of the life-process? The life process of the gnat has as its product an animal which begins its life in the water and concludes it in the air. In order that this process may be re-enacted in the newly-formed germs, the latter must be laid in water. This compulsion which controls the will of the female gnat in the decisive moment, and which we are accustomed to call instinct, may therefore well be considered as a consummation of the life-process. And so in a thousand other instances.

The butterfly makes use of its wings and its proboscis to suck honey-dew from the flowers; but when it must lay its eggs it uses the same motive power to seek out those green parts of the plant on which the caterpillar crawling from the eggs can subsist, and on these it lays its eggs. The common house-fly, a more un congenial than expensive boarder, like a dainty child, prefers the sweet dishes on our table, but when the time arrives for it to breed, it has to seek the most filthy localities, since only in these can its young brood prosper. Let us throw one more glance at the wonderful conditions of bee-life. A single individual, the so-called queen-bee, has a perfect female organization, that she may be able to deposit eggs. She lays them to the number of several hundred on a single day. The larvæ which issue from these eggs need the honey as food, and yet cannot gather it for themselves, having neither wings nor feet. The queen cannot provide for them, as she is constantly occupied with depositing eggs. To accomplish this end, there are a great number of working bees, faithful servants of the house, which is so populous as to be well compared to a state. Themselves incompetent to breed, they know no greater joy, next to their own nourishment, than to care for the coming generation. For them they build cells out of wax; for them they gather stores of honey. They feed the growing brood, and close up their cells with wax when the time of the metamorphosis of the larvæ has come. But all this self-sacrificing activity continues only as long as there is a queen-bee among them, or a young brood out of which a queen may soon be expected. If the queen-bee is taken from the hive, and there is no hope to soon see her replaced, the formation of cells and the orderly collection of honey ceases. It is indeed no longer necessary, for no more eggs are being laid.

It is true these and similar exhibitions of instinct would seem to be based on insight into the relations of nature. But it is impossible to give one's self over to the opinion that the bee possesses this insight. We find, even among animals which most resemble man, and whose brain in other respects has a structure like the human—among the ape tribe, for example—so little insight into the conditions of nature, or so little judgment, that while they will warm themselves at a fire kindled by men, they run away when it goes out, and never hit upon the idea to add new fuel to it. The apes most resembling man have therefore not even been able to make that first of discoveries which the human race had to make before all others, and which it has everywhere made. How unlikely it is that insects with a brain so slightly developed should be capable of such extended combinations! Still more, one finds by observing insects of a similar character, but with a somewhat different development, that the one kind displays the particular instinct which is necessary for the preservation of its kind, while the other, which has no need for such instinct, remains also without any apparent agitation of its thinking powers.

For these reasons instinct seems to me a fulfilment or completion of the life-process. The life-process itself we hold to be not a product of the organism, but the rhythm, or, as it were, the melody according to which the bodily organism builds itself up, and rebuilds itself. It is true, the organism must contain the means through which the various purposes of the life-process can manifest themselves. But these do not constitute the life-process itself, or it would lack the necessary unity. A piano, on which a melody has just been played, must, to be sure, contain the different strings by means of which can be made audible the various notes of the composition. For all this, however, the piano itself did not play off the tune which we heard from it; it can sound forth many other and different tunes or musical thoughts. In the organisms, however, the separate parts are built according to the type and rhythm of the life-process peculiar to them, and through their operation, so that they cannot serve any other life-process.

Hence, comparing these different life processes to musical thoughts and themes, I shall venture to call them creative thoughts which build up their own structures. That which we call in music harmony and melody is here the type (aggregation of parts,) and the rhythm (succession of forms.)

That these creative thoughts are thus able to embody themselves through their organisms, indicates a certain degree of individuality. A higher degree is attained when they become conscious of themselves, and of an external world as distinct from themselves, and feel the possibility of making some impression on it, i. e., the will. But this will is not yet free, least of all among the lower animals. It is controlled by an irresistible power which compels it to care for the preservation of itself and its kind. It is this impelling power which we call instinct. The young fishes and amphibians are capable of seeking their own nourishment as soon as they have slipped out of the egg. The instinct of the mother only extends to placing the eggs in a spot suitable for their development. The eggs of birds need warmth in order to be hatched, and their fledglings must be fed for some time after. Nature has accordingly given to the birds these instincts of nest-building, brooding and maternal care which are needed to complete that which is wanting in the physical life-process of reproduction. The young of the mammalia are formed and brought into life by another and internal process. Hence the instincts of nest-building and brooding would be superfluous, and they are accordingly wanting in mammals. But the nourishment of the newly born is found in the breasts of the mother. In order that she might proffer this food to them the instinct of maternal love was necessary, and it is implanted there—and the more active, the more helpless the young are without the mother.

Man, as the most individual and self-determining of these developed thoughts of our earthly creation, has retained of all these animal instincts little more than that of maternal love. His will is emancipated from the "must" or necessity which controls the will of animals. On the other hand, he feels within himself an "ought," i. e., a sense of obligation, which manifests itself as "conscience," or a feeling of obligation towards others, and as "faith," or an impulsion towards the universal source of being. I commit no sacrilege if I call these pre-eminent faculties of man the highest forms of instinct. These are the sensibilities through which the human race has developed and ennobled itself. The animal instincts serve only to preserve the species, not to ennoble it. For this reason there is no progress on the part of animals.

If this train of thought is a correct one, as I believe it is, then it follows that instinct itself is an effluence from the world-all, and not a mere product of bodily relations. The insight which lies at the bottom of it, is not the insight of the animals themselves, but a constraint laid upon them by a higher discernment.

HEARTH AND HOME.

"LITTLE PEOPLE OF THE SNOW."

A GROUP IN THE EXPOSITION.

I.

DIDN'T you feel a sudden strain
Tug at your heartstrings, like a pain,
When you were standing all agaze,
One of those blissful Autumn days,
Under a sky of cloudless blue,
Soaked with the sunshine through and through,
Looking with curious eyes, perhaps,
Over that group of fur-clad Lapps?
Didn't you feel, as you turned away,
Shadows were round you all the day,
Cast by their figures everywhere,
Making you sigh: "How sad they were!"
Just as if merriment, play-time, joy
Never had come to them, girl or boy,
Living in pitiful patience so—
Poor "Little People of the Snow."

II.

WEREN'T you sorry to think how few
Pleasures they have the whole year through?
You, with your glad skies overhead;
They, with their skies of sombre lead.
You, with your forests fresh and bright;
They, with their pine paths always white.
You, with your banks that the flowers emboss,
They, with their lichens, cones and moss,

You, with your birds from all the climes;
 They, with their faint, frost-tingled chimes.*
 You, with your meadows grassy green;
 They, with their wastes of icy sheen.
 You, with your brooks of silver hum;
 They, with their streamlets frozen dumb.
 You, in your dear, sweet, warm home shut;
 They, in their huddled birch-bark hut.
 Is it so strange, then, they are sad?
 Is it a wonder that you are glad?
 Glad, even while you whisper low:
 "Poor little People of the Snow!"

—Margaret J. Preston, in the Independent.

JOSEPH AND BENJAMIN; OR, THE EMPEROR AND THE REPUBLICAN.

[Retold from Berthold Auerbach for THE INQUIRER.]

BY C. C. SHACKFORD.

CHAPTER III.

A PUPIL OF FREDERIC THE GREAT.

THE Spring of 1777 had opened in all its loveliness, and its joyous bloom was shed over the earth; but more glorious still was the Spring that had opened in all those minds and hearts which were receptive of the blessed influences of freedom. All was yet so pure, so rich in promise, full of purity and hope like the Spring time of the year, and all human bosoms were expanded with the gladsome exhilaration. Every one felt as if a new Spring had dawned for humanity, and no one foreboded what storms and tempests would rage in the Summer, and how little ripe fruit would be gathered in the Autumn.

In the little village of Passy, near Paris, on the fresh May morning, a man steps from a house surrounded by a garden—it is Benjamin Franklin. The peaceful calm which was spread over the earth seemed to be expressed also in his whole being; and yet he was living here as the envoy of his native country, now struggling in a severe war. Men felt when he came among them, that here was one who had descended from the heights of thoughtful contemplation; his sublime repose refreshed their restless and contending spirits, and the admiration which he excited became veneration and homage.

In a long life full of vicissitude, Franklin had learned the difficult art of self-government and self-mastery; and thus he had become the sage, who, thrown into the midst of a stormy period of the world's history, stood immovably poised, turned the passions of men by his considerate gentleness, and met every crafty assault with wise circumspection. He had invented the lightning-rod, which renders harmless the thunderbolt from the black and threatening clouds, and now in France, when black and threatening clouds were massing together over his country, Franklin knew how to draw away the forked lightning, and turn it into a blessing for his native land.

"I have struck a lucky vein for our good cause," cried a man hurriedly entering the garden.

Franklin extended his hand and gave him a cordial welcome.

"And you do not even ask what it is?" exclaimed the man, who was very handsomely dressed, and, in every feature as well as every movement, exhibited the strongest emotion.

"I will wait and let you get breath," replied Franklin.

The mercurial Frenchman placed his delicately shaped hand on Franklin's shoulder, and looked at him with a friendly smile. He was the poet Beaumarchais, now at the very height of his fame as the author of Figaro. But this poetic glory did not satisfy him. He labored very zealously in collecting and sending to America money and arms, shipping on a vessel, at his own expense and his own risk, war-material in the name of a Spanish merchant. After a while Beaumarchais said: "You are a diplomatist of the very highest rank."

"If I have any qualifications for a diplomatist," replied Franklin, "I do not owe them to my lofty birth. I am an old man, and my experience has taught me that prudence is as much a virtue as goodness; they belong together like the two eyes and the two hands."

"And are you not aware of your calmness and discretion?"

"I possess, perhaps, something of that quality so absolutely essential to human well being—patience. I can wait, and, so far as my limited insight extends, that appears to me the chief requisite in diplomacy. I have schooled myself in that all my life, not imagining that I should have occasion to employ it in such great public affairs. My noble friend, I need to rely calmly upon myself. He who leans on anything external—yes, even on such a noble and firm support as the grand enthusiasm of the French people—he who has his centre resting on any support outside of himself, he must fall when the external support is removed."

The lively Frenchman cooled off and informed the grey-haired old gentleman that a German General, an adjutant of King Frederic, of Prussia, "a baron," as he added with a roguish expression—for he knew that this made a deep impression upon the Americans, in spite of their Democratic equality—a baron from one of the first families wanted to enter the American army. "France," cried he, "has first sent her Lafayette, then Poland her Kosciuszko, and Germany now sends her Baron Steuben. I inform you confidentially that our minister has already had interviews with the General. Vergennes holds him in high regard, and he is now in the palace at Versailles, although it is not known. With this man, the American struggle for freedom will gain a fresh and incredible power. O friend, do you not share my joy, and will you not hasten to welcome the man in the name of your father-land?"

"I share your joy and thank you; but there is no haste, as you say that the General is under the mansard roof of Versailles. I cannot allow myself to compromise, openly or secretly—for they are the same—the ministers of the King, and oblige them to deprive me of my humble position. I have no mansard roof to my modest house, and I must decline to receive the General as my guest."

"You must decide quickly, and act at once, or your opponent will get possession of him."

"My opponent? I wish I had only one. I have legions of them."

"But this opponent is himself a legion. It is a curious thing how popular favor is divided between you and the Emperor Joseph. He is, like you, a friend of philosophy, and a friend of free thought, a clever, benevolent, open-hearted man. There could be nothing worse for our cause, than for this alliance with Austria to become a fact. It is only an alliance with dynasties; but from the exaltation of America there beam forth fresh inspiration and freedom. You gain the victory over an Emperor!"

"Not I gain it, but the united heart and soul of America and France gain the victory. I like this Emperor; he must have a stout, pure heart, King as he is, to become a clever, free and open-minded man. It must be very hard for a prince to attain this elevation. I shall not cross his path."

"But we, the friends of freedom and of your native country,

* The traveller in Lapland constantly hears a fairy-like music, made by the frost-crystals, with which the air is filled.

will cross it. It is carefully provided for at court, that the universal philanthropy of the Emperor, which he displays with such unheard of, naive simplicity, should alienate the King's heart from him."

"It is not good to abuse virtue," deprecated Franklin.

"We do not; it is the Emperor himself who abuses it. The Emperor does it all in good part, I admit. But his Majesty, Louis XVI., must be vexed when a foreign King shows him that one must be a simple, pure friend of philosophy. He who is discontented with himself sees in every good quality of another a reproach, or at least, a provocation and a vexation."

"You are a poet," interposed Franklin, "and it is a part of a poet's art to amuse himself with the play and counterplay of human motives and feelings."

Just as Beaumarchais was telling that it was said that the Emperor Joseph desired to meet Franklin, the conversation was interrupted by the entrance of Franklin's colleague, Silas Deane, in company with Baron Steuben, a man advanced in the forties, tall and strongly built, with a winning exterior that commanded respect. Beaumarchais introduced him, and Franklin treated him with very great reserve, repeatedly declaring that he was not empowered to commission even such a desirable officer.

"I offer myself as a volunteer," replied Steuben. "I make no conditions. I desire neither money nor rank. I wish to serve a people engaged in such a noble struggle for its rights and for liberty. Twenty-two years' service in the King of Prussia's school ought to warrant me in making a claim to be an experienced officer. I should be glad to shed my blood to obtain the honor of having my name enrolled among the defenders of a republic such as I hope the United States of America will yet become."

A perceptible change came over Franklin's countenance. This man of the widest knowledge of men and things was puzzled. He knew Englishmen, Frenchmen, Spaniards, but the German nature he was unacquainted with. This union of burning enthusiasm with common sense deliberation; this solid force, which did not look for the fame of the battlefield, but wanted to employ itself in the laborious and unrenowned sphere of drilling and disciplining the army, this resolute surrender to the moment accompanied by a looking far beyond self and the present into the future of history, where the name only would live—this was German, and it was what he was unacquainted with.

"As you offer yourself as a volunteer," said Franklin, "I will give you a letter to General Washington; I give you my hand and bid you welcome in the name of my country."

"The republic will prove itself grateful to you," added Deane.

"As I offer myself unconditionally as a volunteer, without claiming any rank and without any expectation of compensation after the war is ended," resumed Steuben, and his sinewy form became taller and his voice more powerful, "I assure you that I take into account neither the indirect assurances of the French minister, nor Republican gratitude. The republic has not perhaps the virtue of gratitude, because it wishes to be trammelled by no services of the past, but to hold itself open as the sphere of new influences, and of freshly operating strength. I know this, and yet I am ready to serve it. I hear that the army is undisciplined and ill regulated, and the enlistments for only a short period. Here is my vocation."

The two Americans and the Frenchman looked in astonishment at the man, in whose words there was something of the unflinching, ringing tone of Frederic II.

Franklin's grandson now entered with a courier, the bearer of a letter from Paris. Franklin read it and handed it to Deane, who read it in common with Beaumarchais. The letter was from the ambassador of the Grand Duke of Tuscany, and it read as follows:

"TO DR. FRANKLIN:—Abbé Niccoli begs Doctor Franklin to do him the honor to breakfast with him on Wednesday, May 28th, at nine o'clock; he shall drink a cup of good chocolate.

With great respect."

"LITTLE LUXEMBURG, May 26, 1777."

"Here is the interview at last," cried Beaumarchais.

"You will meet the Emperor Joseph at the Abbe's, and our former minister, Turgot, will also be there, in order to avoid all misconstructions in regard to this interview. He has imparted this to me."

Franklin became thoughtful, and Beaumarchais said in a low tone to Deane, but so loud that Steuben could hear: "This interview must be taken advantage of to make a public demonstration; the nobility must throng the ambassador's saloon, and the people collect in the streets and cheer Franklin alone, and thus humiliate the Emperor and make the alliance with Austria impossible."

Beaumarchais became so enthusiastic over this refined bit of strategy which was to be brought into play, that Deane had to caution him to speak lower, as Doctor Franklin would consent to nothing of the sort. Steuben was startled. An Emperor of Germany was to be maltreated in order to exalt a favorite of the people. He considered how he should thwart this attempt, and, in deep reflection, returned to Versailles.

OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE TURKS IN EUROPE.

To The Editor of The Inquirer :

A WRITER in the New York Daily Bulletin attacks the spirit of a late meeting in this city designed to express sympathy with the oppressed and suffering Christians in Bulgaria and neighboring provinces. He calls it "a meeting to express sympathy with the attitude of Russia toward Turkey." It was no such thing. We might as well call the editor of the Bulletin a paid spy because he tries to give a political aspect to a meeting that was purely and wholly humane and Christian in its sympathies. The meeting was designed to give moral support to the Christians in the Turkish provinces, in their revolt against a barbarous and atrocious government, animated by the cruel and hateful spirit of the Moslem creed. If Christians are cruel and inhumane, it is in spite of their faith and against its teachings and spirit. If Moslems are cruel and inhumane, it is in accordance with their faith and in behalf of it. To resist and even destroy them, if so only they can be resisted, is the duty of all religions that believe all men entitled to freedom in religion, except only those that make the first and characteristic article of their religion war upon all who do not accept it. The Turks have made themselves fera natura. They are not entitled to be treated with comity in Europe any more than wild animals can claim the right to ravage peaceful sheep-folds unmolested and unresisted. It is not their religion that is attacked, but the people who make a religion of hatred and persecution. The babble about toleration as the principle of American Christianity, meaning toleration for breakers of the law of humanity and modern civilization, is simply a plea for universal license. If it is un-American to hate a fanaticism that murders its own opposers as the enemies of God, then we are ready to bear the charge. If it is unchristian to resist with physical force those who would, under the plea of religion, exterminate all who do not pray toward Mecca, we are willing to be called unchristian.

H. W. B.

THE service before the Boston Young Men's Christian Union last Sunday evening was one of great interest. Rev. Mr. Ware gave the second sermon in the course, his subject being, "Young Man's duties to Himself." The hall was filled in every part. Next Sunday evening his subject will be, "Young Man's duty to Society and the Public."

THE YELLOWSTONE PARK.

To the Editor of The Inquirer :

SIR: In your issue of the 11th inst. you very kindly noticed my attempt at acquainting the Eastern people with the wonders and beauties of our marvellous National Park on the Yellowstone, by means of a lecture illustrated with photographs projected on a screen by the calcium light and by the publication of stereoscopic views of the more striking scenery of that region. Perhaps I was not careful enough to guard my hearers against the impression, which the writer seems to have received, that there is little of interest in that extraordinary portion of our country except the phenomenal. Few, I suppose, would care to live long among spouting geysers and boiling springs, or even upon the banks of the brilliantly colored Grand Cañon of the Yellowstone; but these cover only a small part, probably not more than two or three per cent. of the surface of the Park, which embraces 3,578 square miles or 2,289,920 acres, an area almost one-half as large as the State of Massachusetts, and, of course, extensive enough to contain an immense variety of scenery. There are scores of miles of beautiful valleys traversed by rivers of the purest of water, swarming with trout, grayling and white-fish, and furnishing the finest hunting-grounds for ducks, geese, swans and other water fowl. These valleys are generally covered with fine grass, on which numerous antelopes pasture, while the greater part of the mountains which bound them is covered with forests (interspersed with those great grassy slopes which are so marked a feature of the timbered areas of the Rocky Mountains) in which those fond of rifle shooting can find elk and black-tailed deer and white-tailed deer and mountain sheep, and occasionally a band of mountain buffalo and other large game.

There are countless quiet nooks where one can camp under the fragrant pines, beside green meadows gemmed with numberless lovely wild flowers, and watered by bubbling brooks, across which the beaver still builds his cunning dam, and beneath whose banks and in whose deep pools the dainty little speckled brook-trout watches for his prey. Not only are there scores of grand mountains lifting their craggy sides and rugged summits (few of which have ever felt the tread of civilized man) far up among the clouds, but innumerable sunny glades and shady dells, charming bits of quiet, picturesque scenery, where one will see nothing of the striking, but only the gently beautiful.

I presume the headquarters for tourists, when the Park shall be made a little more accessible, will be established on the shores of the lovely Yellowstone Lake, which, lying at an altitude of 7,788 feet above the sea, or 1,500 feet higher than the summit of Mount Washington in New Hampshire, covers 300 square miles with cool, clear water, which in places is three hundred feet deep and rolls its waves, of as deep a blue as the open sea, on 175 miles of shore line, now of loveliest beauty and now of wildest grandeur.

With its opportunities for rowing and sailing and fishing and hunting, with the grandest of mountains bordering it and the purest of air ever sweeping over it, and with the inducements to open-air life offered by its surroundings, it is surely destined to become a most delightful Summer resort for those who love Nature, and who, when they wish to see her strangest and most wonderful phases, can sail or ride in a few hours to the spouting geysers, the boiling springs, the stifling solfataras, the roaring mud volcanoes, the lofty cataracts and the gorgeously colored Cañon of the Yellowstone; and when they would enjoy her quieter and more subdued aspects can find them on every hand in endless profusion. Those who travel to see the triumphs of industry and the treasures of art, to behold the ruins of ancient or the splendor of modern cities; those who wish to revive historical associations or to survey the beauty of the earth as affected by human effort and connected with human life, will, of course, go to the Old World; but there are many, and the number seems to be constantly increasing, who, for a longer or a shorter time, love yearly to leave behind them the bustle of towns and the roar of cities, the vexations of business and the conventionalities of society, and live face to face with Nature, resting in her solitudes or communing with her ceaseless health-giving activities, and to these the varied features of the Park will offer endless attractions and constant charms.

Situated between 44° and 45° N. Lat., and with its lowest valleys 8,000 feet and more above the sea, it is too cold for successful agriculture, and is unfitted for the permanent residence of man; but from about the first of August to the middle of October its climate is delightful, eminently fitting it for a Summer pleasure-ground. My photographs happen to be mostly of only its more wild and wonderful scenes, and many are apt to get the impression that it contains little else. One may easily find a surfeit of wonders there, but he may also, if he will, live there days and weeks and see little of the striking and phenomenal portions of its scenery.

WILLIAM I. MARSHALL.

FITCHBURG, MASS., January 15, 1877.

DANIEL DERONDA AGAIN.

DEERFIELD, JAN. 25, 1877.

To The Editor of the Inquirer :

I AM greatly obliged to you for your critical notice of Daniel Deronda in last week's INQUIRER, for its courage, its discrimination and its fidelity. I have read Whipple's review, and am surprised that he fails to note, in his extravagance of laudation, some of its points that, to my mind, deserve a great deal of reprehension. The impression left by the book on my mind is a very dreary one. I see the power of genius displayed in it, the wonderfully clear conceptions of human character, the great depths through which the author leads the personages she has introduced and the elevation over which she has led them. But it is not a good book. It does not afford pleasure, though it awakens admiration. It leads one through no green fields, through no bright sunshine; the reader feels at last as if he had been drenched with the cold spray of the ocean, or had been dragged for a season helplessly through its waves. His comfort is not much increased by thinking that the waves were sparkling with the sunshine, or the land is bright on to which he is thrown at last.

The author seizes powerful hold on the interest of the reader, not with the necessity of finding out the denouement of relationship, but with the far higher interest of knowing the moral triumph or ruin which the heroine is to achieve. But how cold for many pages her character and surroundings are! Not a ray of beauty anywhere strikes the mind of the reader till he has made great advances into the body of the work. Then, and to the conclusion, the mind is filled with the deepest compassion and with great tenderness of love. But the character of Gwendolen is not pleasant to contemplate. She is not one that a mother would be glad to introduce to a family of sons and daughters, or that society in general would be glad to receive. The relation of Deronda to her excites the profoundest admiration for the author, for its purity and its justice and its assurance of a just and hallowed friendship on the part of a man towards a woman.

Yet the book is not, in my mind, a good one. What a horrible question to be put into the mouth of a young girl, the question asked by Gwendolen of her mother about the relationship of Mrs. Glasher's children to Grandcourt, and of Deronda to Sir Hugo Mallinger, and offered as a general observation by her. And what principle or sentiment can she have worthy of any one's respect to marry Grandcourt after her knowledge of his relationships? What moral sentiment is there pervading the work, and directed toward impressing the mind of the reader concerning these two relationships, while they constitute essential elements of the story? Are such relationships pleasant to talk about? Do they make the work an agreeable one for family reading? The cold indifference manifested in this subject is not to be atoned for by all the shrewd reflections in the midst of which the narrative and conversations are interspersed. And yet the book is wonderful. But so is the sirocco of the desert; only, in this instance, when the wind has breathed its last and the storm subsided and the clouds are blown away, we look up and find no Heavens overhead.

JOTTINGS.

HARLEM.—Rev. F. W. Holland preached morning and evening last Sunday at Unity Chapel. Next Sunday he will preach in the morning, and in the evening he will give a lecture on Egypt at the same place.

BOSTON.—Invalids or authors can secure the services as readers for an hour or more daily, of ladies specially adapted for such positions upon application to the Ladies' Committee, Young Men's Christian Union, Boylston street, Boston.

HORTICULTURAL HALL COURSE.—Prof. E. S. Morse lectured on Sunday before a large audience on "Evolution." The lecturer dealt with some detail upon both ancient and recent changes in the forms of organic life, illustrating his statements with blackboard drawings, and was heard with great interest.

SHELBYVILLE, ILL.—Rev. John Ellis writes that he and Rev. Mr. Doubit have plenty of work to do, having five churches and six Sunday schools under their charge in and about Shelbyville and Holiday, and feel great encouragement in their work. Accessions are made from week to week in considerable numbers, and everything is done decently and in order.

DAVENPORT, IOWA.—Rev. S. S. Hunting is giving a course of free Sunday evening lectures in his church on "Protestant Leaders and their Works." The following are the subjects and dates: Jan. 7 and 14, "Martin Luther and the Reformation;" Jan. 28th, "John Calvin and Dogmatism;" Feb. 11, "George Fox and Quakerism;" Feb. 18, "Cromwell and his Career;" Feb. 25, John Wesley and Methodism;" March 18, "The Puritans and a Free Church;" March 25, "Channing and Unitarianism;" April 15, "Parker and the Open Door;" April 22, "The Protestant Harvest."

ST. JOHN, N. B.—The First Unitarian Society, of St. John, N. B., have extended to the Rev. John Wills, late of Dighton, Mass., a unanimous call to become the pastor of their society. Mr. Wills who has been preaching very acceptably to the society for the last eight weeks, has accepted the call, and we hope to establish in this city a strong liberal organization. This society is the only one representing the liberal faith in our Province. We want the readers of the INQUIRER to know that for this object we are making a united and strong effort. Our society was organized September 22, 1875, and a growing interest in the movement is manifested by our gradually increasing congregations.

CARLETON, St. John, Jan. 3, 1877.

G. E. BAXTER, Secretary.

JANESVILLE, WIS.—One of the many good things Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Jones, of All Souls Church, have done for this town is the organization of the "Mutual Improvement Club." The Gazette, of January 20th, in a notice of the Club says: "On the 28th of January last was inaugurated, at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Jones, the first of the literary conversations which soon outgrew the capacity of private houses and have been held in the parlors of the church, with an attendance ranging from thirty to a hundred people. Sixteen conversations have been held and the following authors have been discussed: Whittier, Lowell, Holmes, Longfellow, Goldsmith, Scott, Cowper, Byron, Southey and Shelley. Fifty-nine different papers, consisting of studies, criticisms, etc., have been given, which have provoked discussion, and informal conversation, at the meeting and led to a large amount of home reading. In addition to this, the club has given five public entertainments, held one general picnic, and has collected during the year $306.20 in cash.

THE Boston papers are full of reports of the Moody meetings, which appear to be "drawing" quite as well as was expected. The movement calls forth much expression of opinion from the pulpits. Last Sunday Rev. James Freeman Clark told his people of "The Need of a Revival in Boston," and Mr. Savage gave a sermon on "Moody's Doctrine of God." At the New South Church the Rev. W. P. Tilden gave his idea of "Coming to Jesus." Dr. Bartol contrasted "The Moody Movement and the Unitarian Galileo." At the Second Church the Rev. Robert Laird Collier, D. D., preached on "Coming to Christ." Mr. Chaney told his people, at Hollis Street Church, about "The Church and How to Belong to It." At St. Paul's Church the new rector, Mr. Newton, lectured on "Wrestling Jacob." Rev. O. T. Walker, at the Harvard Street Baptist church, gave a sermon on "Religious Enthusiasm." The Rev. George H. Vibbert, at the Somerville Universalist church, spoke of "Moody's First Sermons in Boston" in the morning, and in the evening "The Blood of Christ." At the Unitarian church, Jamaica Plain, the Rev. C. F. Dale treated of "Religious Revivals."

THE London Inquirer of January 13th has a frank letter from a correspondent on "Theodore Parker in England," which distinctly marks the progress made in the Unitarian body there, as well as here, during the last twenty years. Mr. Cobb acknowledges that then, if, as acting trustee of the Banbury chapel, he had been consulted as to Parker's occupation of the pulpit, he would decidedly have objected, and, failing his remonstrance, he would probably have absented himself in protest. Later, however, he has revised many of his opinions, and he has relinquished none more gladly than those which he held regarding Parker.

"Whose name I revere, and most of whose works I have read with delight, and I trust, with profit also. We live and learn, or at least we ought to do so; indeed, the mind of man, where it has free scope for action, is expansive, and, generally speaking, progressive; and it would be as difficult for a thoughtful man to predict what opinions he will hold ten years hence, or even much less, as it would be to predict the policy of the Disraeli ministry for three months together, or to define the course of an unknown comet."

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The public mind is at its utmost tension and will be interested in nothing else than the arbitration of the presidential question. It is a good sign that both international and national arbitration are gaining favor. I think we may also be encouraged with the gain in character made by the Senate of the United States lately in its action and as well in the new members to be infused into it.

It is a matter of surprise and inquiry to many that Judge Davis should prefer the Senate to the Supreme Court. I am reminded of the estimate Chief-Justice Chase placed upon a judicial office compared with a political one, or the Chief-Justiceship with the President's place. Soon after Mr. Chase was made Chief-Justice a friend was congratulating him on his accession to that eminence, and laid considerable stress on the idea that a Chief-Justice in the United States occupied a higher position than a President, and that the former was much the more desirable place. After elaborating this opinion, as he thought to Mr. Chase's delight, the latter turned upon his friend with the brief but conclusive remark, "Presidents make Chief-Justices." This was a perfect key to Mr. Chase's mind and the subject was dropped.

THE Messrs. Reynolds & Totterdale, the great corset manufacturers at Landport, England, write: "We like the 'Domestic' sewing machine, and have ordered one hundred and fifty, with the option of three hundred and fifty, the latter being about the number we have in work." Such a testimonial from such a house is proof of the value of the "Domestic" for manufacturing purposes, for which it is as well suited as for family use.—Adv.

The Inquirer.

Published every Thursday, from the middle of September to the middle of July, in the Park Bank Building, 214 Broadway, New York.

To be in season for insertion the same week, communications intended for publication must be forwarded in time to reach this office not later than Tuesday. No attention is paid to anonymous communications. We require the name and address of every writer, not necessarily for publication, but as guarantee of good faith.

Communications relating to the editorial department of the paper should be addressed, "Editor of the Inquirer, P. O. Box 109, New York City;" all others to "Publisher," same address.

No person is authorized to collect money or make contracts for the Inquirer, who cannot show written authority from the Publisher.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

Three Dollars per year, in advance. Clergymen, Two Dollars per year. Postage, Twenty Cents per year, in advance. Remittances should be made by Registered Letter or by Post-Office Money Order, or Draft on New York payable to PUBLISHER OF THE INQUIRER.

ADVERTISING RATES.

Six cents per agate line per week; outside page and pages next reading matter, ten cents per line. Special Notices twenty cents per line.

Discount on Five or more insertions will be given at similar rates to all parties.

Copy for Thursday's paper received until Tuesday afternoon.

Advertisements must be acceptable in every respect.

Office, PARK BANK BUILDING, 214 Broadway.

Address,

THE INQUIRER,

Box 109, New York.

Special Notices.

Protestant Leaders.

A COURSE OF LECTURES

BY

JOHN W. CHADWICK,

AT THE

Second Unitarian Church, Brooklyn,

Corner of Clinton and Congress Streets.

1876—77.

LECTURES:

- VI. Murray and Universalism. Sunday evening, March 4, 1877.
- VII. Thomas Paine: His Relation to his own and later Times in Matters of Religion. Sunday evening, April 1, 1877.
- VIII. Channing and Unitarianism. Sunday evening, April 15, 1877.
- IX. Theodore Parker. Sunday evening, May 6, 1877.

Hour of Lecture, HALF-PAST SEVEN.

Morning Service at 10:35 precisely. Vesper Service, Third Sunday Evening of each Month, with the above exceptions.

The Address of Rev. John F.

LOCKE is to the care of W. H. Baldwin, President Young Men's Christian Union, 18 Boylston St., Boston.

"Admirably fitted to teach the art from the very beginning."—Chicago Tribune.

"Mr. Hope is one of the 'old masters' in this sort of work. He has prepared an excellent work, in which his subject is treated fully and clearly."—Chicago Post.

"Altogether the best book that can be placed in the hands of the amateur."—N. Y. Graphic.

"The diagrams are excellent and the instructions clear and direct."—N. Y. Evening Post.

SORRENTO AND INLAID WORK FOR

AMATEURS, BY ARTHUR HOPK.

A practical manual of Scroll Sawing, Overlaying, Polishing, Inlaying, Stenciling, etc. Containing 50 full-sized designs, new and beautiful. The designs are worth more than price of book. Tastefully bound in muslin. For sale by booksellers generally. Sent by mail on receipt of price, $1.50. Descriptive circular mailed to any address.

JOHN WILKINSON, Publisher, 53 Lake St., Chicago.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, 132 Fifth Ave., New York.

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY

Manufacture those celebrated Bells for CHURCHES, ACADEMIES, &c. Price List and Circulars sent free. HENRY McSHANE & CO. BALTIMORE, MD.

Fifty pages—200 Illustrations, with Descriptions of the hands of the best Flowers and Vegetables in the world, and the way to grow them—all for a Two CENT postage stamp. Printed in German and English. VICK'S FLORAL GUIDE, Quarterly, 25 cents a year. VICK'S FLOWER AND VEGETABLE GARDEN, 30 cents in paper; in elegant cloth covers, $1.00.

Address JAMES VICK, Rochester, N. Y.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 out free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine

THE HOWARD INSURANCE COMPANY,

OF NEW YORK.—OFFICE NO 60 WALL STREET.

Cash Capital $500,000.—Chartered in 1825.

This Company insures property against loss or Damage by Fire and the risks of Inland Navigation and Transportation, on the most favorable terms.

SAM'L T. SKIDMORE, President.

HENRY A. OAKLEY, Vice-President.

DIRECTORS:

SAMUEL T. SKIDMORE,
THOMAS W. GALE,
JOHN H. SWIFT,
JAMES R. TAYLOR,
HENRY J. SCUDDER,
HENRY A. OAKLEY,
CHARLES MALL,
HENRY L. BARREY,
WILLIAM H. WISNER,
ALEXANDER MAITLAND.

HEWLETT SCUDDER,
CHARLES H. CLAYTON,
JOHN L. RIKER,
GEORGE W. TALBOT,
FREDERICK STURGES,
JOHN J. WHITE,
R. LENOX BELKNAP,
JAMES C. CARTER,
EDMUND PENFOLD,

CHARLES A. HULL, Secretary.

RICHARD W. CLARK, Asst. Sec'y.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

For Scrofula, and all scrofulous diseases, Erysipelas, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Eruptions and Eruptive diseases of the skin, Ulcerations of the Liver, Stomach, Kidneys, Lungs, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Blotches, Tumors, Tetters, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Ulcers, Sores, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Pain in the Bones, Side and Head, Female Weakness, Sterility, Leucorrhoea, arising from internal ulceration, and Uterine disease, Syphilitic and Mercurial diseases, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, General Debility, and for Purifying the Blood.

This Sarsaparilla is a combination of vegetable alteratives—Stillingia, Mandrake, Yellow Dock—with the Iodides of Potassium and Iron, and is the most efficacious medicine yet known for the diseases it is intended to cure.

Its ingredients are so skillfully combined, that the full alterative effect of each is assured, and while it is so mild as to be harmless even to children, it is still so effectual as to purge out from the system those impurities and corruptions which develop into loathsome disease.

The reputation it enjoys is derived from its cures, and the confidence which prominent physicians all over the country repose in it, prove their experience of its usefulness.

Certificates attesting its virtues have accumulated, and are constantly being received, and as many of these cases are publicly known, they furnish convincing evidence of the superiority of this Sarsaparilla over every other alterative medicine. So generally is its superiority to any other medicine known, that we need do no more than to assure the public that the best qualities it has ever possessed are strictly maintained.

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass.,
Practical and Analytical Chemists.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

The Toll Gate! Prize Picture sent free! An ingenious gem 50 objects to find. Address, with stamp, E. C. Abbey, Buffalo, N. Y. 1491-ly

$12 a day at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine.

LAMAR INSURANCE COMPANY,

OF NEW YORK.

Broadway, cor. John Street.

Capital, - - $200,000.

ASSETS, JANUARY 1, 1877.

Cash on hand and in Bank. . . . $10,414 77
U. S. Bonds, market value. . . . 300,232 50
Loans on Call, Good Stocks Collateral. . . 13,200 00
Bonds and Mortgages on Brick Dwell-
ings. . . . 56,400 00
Bills Receivable for Inland Prem's . . . 2,465 94
Premiums in course of collection. . . . 8,830 43
New York Bank Stocks market value . . 19,725 00
Total Assets. . . . $411,268 64

Losses unadjusted estimated at $10,100 00

ISAAC R. ST. JOHN, President.

A. R. FROTHINGHAM, Vice Pres't.

WM. R. MACDIARMID, Sec'y.

HOME Insurance Co. of New York, Office No. 135 Broadway.

Forty-seventh Semi-Annual Statement,
Showing the condition of the Company on the first day of January, 1877.

Cash Capital $3,000,000 00
Reserve for Re-Insurance . . . 1,858,464 68
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Dividends 243,402 24
Net Surplus 1,002,783 90
Total Assets - - - $6,104,650 82

SUMMARY OF ASSETS:

CASH IN BANKS. . . . $312,311 22
BONDS AND MORTGAGES. . . . 2,011,430 00
LIEN ON REAL ESTATE WORTH $4,394,000 2,011,430 00
UNITED STATES STOCKS (MARKET VALUE) . 2,517,625 00
BANK STOCKS (MARKET VALUE) 236,602 50
STATE AND CITY BONDS (MARKET VALUE) . 185,433 00
LOANS ON STOCKS, PAYABLE ON DEMAND
(MARKET VALUE OF SECURITIES, $700,379) . 619,681 35
INTEREST DUE ON 1st JANUARY, 1877. . . 72,997 65
BALANCE IN HAND OF AGENTS. . . . 153,416 15
REAL ESTATE. . . . 6,500 19
PREMIUMS DUE AND UNCOLLECTED ON
POLICIES ISSUED AT THIS OFFICE. . . . 8,330 26

Total - - - $6,104,650 82

LIABILITIES.

CLAIMS FOR LOSSES OUTSTANDING ON 1st
JANUARY, 1877. . . . $212,027 24
DIVIDENDS UNPAID. . . . 1,375 00

Total, - - - $243,402 24

CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.

J. H. WASHBURN, Secretary.

THE NEW JERSEY MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.

J. H. STEDWELL, President.

C. H. BRINKERHOFF, Secretary.

J. H. CANNIFF, Cashier.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved ($2.00) Receipt Book." Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & CO., Portland, Maine.

Made of best material, in all sizes, for Adults and Children of both sexes; expands the chest, straightens up stooped shoulders; worth ten times its cost for Children and Students. Sold by the Trade and Cleveland Shoulder Brace Co., Cleveland, Ohio. Send $1.25 and chest-measure. Ask for Pratt's new Patent Brace.

ATLANTIC MUTUAL INSURANCE CO

NEW YORK,

OFFICE 51 WALL ST.

ORGANIZED 1842.

INSURES AGAINST MARINE AND INLAND
NAVIGATION RISKS.

And will issue Policies making Loss payable
in England.

Its Assets for the Security of its Policies
are more than

TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured, and are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated during the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearing interest until redeemed.

JOHN D. JONES, President.

CHARLES DENNIS, Vice-President.

W. H. H. MOORE, 2d Vice-President.

A. A. RAVEN, 3d Vice-President.

J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

PHENIX

INSURANCE COMPANY,

OF BROOKLYN, N. Y.

January 1st, 1877.

Capital.....$1,000,000 00

Gross Surplus.....1,792,902 92

Gross Assets.....$2,792,902 92

OFFICES:

Western Union Telegraph Building, BROAD-
WAY, Cor. DEY St., New York.

Brooklyn Office, 12 & 14 Court St
Brooklyn E. D. Office, 93 Broadway.

The benefits to be derived by the public from Insurance against loss by fire are so great and numerous, when compared with its trifling cost, as to render it an imperative duty on every one to avail themselves of the protection afforded by the PHENIX INSURANCE COMPANY against the destructive ravages of Fire, which in a few moments may lay waste the fruits of a whole life of industry.

STEPHEN CROWELL, President.

PHILANDER SHAW, Vice President.

WILLIAM E. CROWELL, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED A. D. 1850.

THE MANHATTAN

LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

OF

NEW YORK,

has paid $6,500,000 Death Claims;
has paid $4,560,000 return premiums to Policy-holders; has a surplus of more than $1,000,000 over Liabilities; and a ratio of $120 Assets for every $100 Liabilities, by New York Standard of Valuation.
It gives the best Insurance on the best lives at the most favorable rates.

EXAMINE THE PLANS AND RATES OF THIS COM-PANY.

HENRY STOKES, C. Y. WEMPLE,
President. Vice-President.

J. L. HALSEY, S. N. STEBBINS,
Secretary. Actuary

H. Y. WEMPLE, Assistant Secretaries.
H. B. STOKES.

$55 to $77 a Week to Agents. $10 Outfit Free.
P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

Miscellaneous.

Music Books for Reed Organs.

CLARKE'S NEW METHOD

For Reed Organs, ($2.50) is universally known as one of rare merit, both in the instructive course, and the well-chosen airs for practice.

GETZE'S SCHOOL

For Parlor Organ, ($2.50). The sale of more than 20,000 copies is the best proof of its great popularity.

EMERSON'S NEW METHOD

For Reed Organs, ($2.50) is the work of two distinguished musicians, and is equal to the best.

ROOT'S SCHOOL

For the Cabinet Organ, ($2.50) is one of the oldest and best methods. Widely known and used.

CLARKE'S $1 INSTRUCTOR

For Reed Organs, is an abbreviated but very good method for beginners.

WINNER'S NEW SCHOOL

For Cabinet Organ, (75 cts.) is the cheapest, and an excellent, easy instruction book.

ORGAN AT HOME,

($2.50 bds.; $3 clo.; $4 gilt) has 200 well chosen Reed Organ pieces.

Either book mailed, post-free, for Retail Price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

C. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 Broadway,
New York

J. E. DITSON & CO.,
Successors to Lee & Walker, Philadelphia.

Simplest! Surest!! Best!!!

THE LIGHT RUNNING

"DOMESTIC"

SEWING MACHINE

Is the most satisfactory machine ever offered to families.

It makes a double-thread lock-stitch; has the Automatic, self-regulating Tension and Take-up, conical steel bearings, compensating journal, and is noiseless.

It does not fatigue the muscles or irritate the nerves; sews every fabric, and has never failed to give perfect satisfaction.

"DOMESTIC" SEWING MACHINE CO.,
Cor. Broadway and Fourteenth St.,
New York City.

REDUCTION IN RATES TO SUIT THE TIMES.THE BUTLER HEALTH
LIFT EXERCISE.

Commended by Highest Medical Authority.

A SCIENTIFIC SYSTEM of Concentrated Cumulative Exercise, adapted to the Preservation and Restoration of Health.

Principal Office, Spacious and well ventilated,
PARK BANK BUILDING, NO. 214 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK.

BROOKLYN: NO. 168 REMSEN STREET.

PARLORS FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN.

"I have used THE BUTLER HEALTH LIFT with manifest advantage. A tendency to sleeplessness at night has been corrected, my animal spirits have been raised in tone, and my elasticity of frame increased. The sense of repose imparted is quite as great as the stimulus."—O. B.
FROTHINGHAM.

"The most perfect apparatus in use."—[Evening Mail.

Call, or address

LEWIS G. JANES, Proprietor.

Miscellaneous.

STEARNS & BEALE,
STATIONERS,
BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS,

PRINTING and LITHOGRAPHY,

147 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

(Between Broadway and Nassau Street)

JOEL W. STEARNS.

WM. P. BEALE.

WORK FOR ALL.

There are no hard times for those who can set themselves to work. There is no lack of money for those who earn it. There is no want of thrift in a household where the children are brought up to habits of skill and industry. A movement founded on this idea was commenced about two years ago by the publishers of the YOUTH'S COMPANION, and has now spread into nearly every town in the United States until more than 100,000 people are using our Bracket Saws and Amateur Tools. An outlay of $1.25 will make a beginning, and all further expense is paid out of the earnings. On receipt of $1.25 we will send by mail, prepaid: One highly polished Spring Steel Saw Frame 6x12 inches, six Saw-blades, fifty full-size Designs, embracing a great variety of fancy and useful articles. One awl, one sheet of Impression Paper, and full directions. The articles, when made from these designs, are worth more than $50, and can be made without further instructions than those given in the printed directions.

We are now sending large quantities of manufactured goods to other countries, so that many factories are working up to their full capacity in these dull times. When the boys who are now being educated in their own homes come to the front, we shall be able to command all the markets of the world.

We make nearly all the Amateur Tools used in this country and keep on hand a full stock of hand and foot-power Saws, Carving Tools, Tool-chests, Saw-blades, Fancy wood of all kinds, ready for use, Designs, etc., etc. We supply dealers throughout the country, and our goods can be bought of them at our regular prices.

MILLERS FALLS COMPANY,
74 Chambers St., cor. Broadway, New York.

With and without Rockers;
heavy and light; large and small.
For OFFICE, LIBRARY,
STUDY, PIAZZA, PARLOR,
SEWING-ROOM, NURSERY—
wherever you want

SOLID COMFORT.

Send stamp
for an illustrated
Price-List

F. A. SINCLAIR
Mottville, N. Y.

Be careful that the chairs are stamped with my name in full; others are imitations.

For sale by Furniture Dealers in New York and at 218 Fulton street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

CENTENNIAL EXPOSITION
DESCRIBED AND ILLUSTRATED.

The only complete, richly illustrated, low price work, 750 pages, only $2.50. Treats of the entire history, grand buildings, wonderful exhibits, curiosities, great days, etc. The best chance of 100 years to coin money fast, as everybody wants this work. 1,000 agents appointed first four weeks, 5,000 wanted. For full particulars address quickly, HUBBARD BROTHERS, Publishers, Philadelphia, Pa., Cincinnati, O., Chicago, Ill., or Springfield, Mass.

CAUTION. Be not deceived by premature books assuming to be "official," etc.

MISFIT CARPETS.

English Brussels, Three Ply and Ingrain; also, Stair Carpets, Velvet Rugs, Grub Cloths, etc., very cheap, AT THE OLD PLACE.

112 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

Carpets carefully packed and sent to any part of the United States free of charge.

SEND FOR PRICE LIST.

Miscellaneous.

OVINGTON BROTHERS,

246, 248, 250 and 252 Fulton Street,
BROOKLYN.

Fine China, Glass, Clocks,
Bronzes, etc., etc.

Just Received Invoices of

COPENHAGEN VASES,
LIMOGES FAIENCE VASES,
AND DOULTON WARE.

Lectures and Sermons,
BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

FIRST SERIES.

The Education of Conscience.
Self Respect.
The Higher Reverence.
God on our Side.
Man and the Bible.
The Best Use of Sunday.

SECOND SERIES.

The Essential Piety of Modern Science.
A Rational Church.
Economy and Waste.
Immortal Life.

Also, WAY, TRUTH AND LIFE, a Biography of N. A. Staples, with sermons, price, $1.00.

For sale by CHARLES P. SOMERBY, 139 Eighth St., New York. Copies sent by mail at the rate of five cents each and postage.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.

Established in 1837.
Superior Bells of Copper and Tin, mounted with the best Rotary Hangings, for Churches, Schools, Farms, Factories, Court-houses, Fire Alarms, Tower Clocks, etc. Fully Warranted. Illustrated Catalogue sent Free.

VANDERZEE & TIPP, 102 E. 2d St., Cincinnati.

10 PER CENT NET.

Kansas, Missouri and Iowa Improved Farm First Mortgage Coupon Bonds Guaranteed. We guarantee, as an assurance, that we loan not to exceed one-third of the actual value. In over six years' business never lost a dollar; never delayed a day on interest or principal; no investor through us ever did or ever will get an acre of land under foreclosure. Send for particulars and references.

J. B. WATKINS & CO., LAWRENCE, KAN., OF HENRY DICKINSON, Manager, 30 Pine Street,
New York

BALD HEADS

Can be covered with a piece exactly fitted to the Bald spot, so perfect, and with work so ingeniously contrived as to appear each hair just issuing from the skin, the hair being exactly of the same shade and texture as the growing hair; they are so perfect they cannot be detected. Made only at BATCHELOR'S Celebrated Wig Factory, 16 Bond Street, N. Y.

HAIR DYE.

BATCHELOR'S CELEBRATED HAIR DYE is splendid. It never fails. The only true and perfect dye. Harmless, reliable, instantaneous. No disappointment, no ridiculous tints; remedies the ill effects of bad dyes, leaves the hair soft and beautiful Black or Brown. Sold and put up applied at BATCHELOR'S Wig Factory, 16 Bond St., N. Y. Sold by all druggists.

W. A. Batchelor's Curative Ointment
Immediately cures Ring-Worm, Tetter, Itching of the Head, and all Eruptions of the Skin, Face or Body.

W. A. Batchelor's Alaska Seal Oil
for the Hair. The best Hair Oil in use.

W. A. Batchelor's Dentifrice
for beautifying and preserving the teeth and gums and deodorizing the breath.

W. A. Batchelor's New Cosmétique,
Black or Brown, for tinting the Hair, Whiskers or Moustaches without greasing them. Sold at factory, 16 Bond Street, New York, and by all druggists. Ask for them.

J. A. BENDALL.

THE INQUIRER.

VOL. XXXII.—NO. 11.
WHOLE NO., 1581.

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 15, 1877.

{ $3.00 PER ANNUM.
{ 8 CENTS A COPY.

CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL NOTES.....	181
LEADING ARTICLES:
The Electoral Commission.....	182
Professor Henry B. Smith.....	183
A Word About Ourselves.....	183
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE:
"L'Ami Fritz".....	185
LITERATURE:
The Unitarian Review.....	185
Old Tales Re-told.....	186
Thankful Blossom.....	18
Brief Notices.....	187
Literary Notes.....	188
New Publications Received.....	189
SELECTIONS:
The Workingman's Sunday.....	188
HEARTH AND HOME:
A Lesson.....	190
Joseph and Benjamin. Chapter IV.....	190
OUR BOYS AND GIRLS:
Narcissus.....	191
OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE:
From Chicago.....	192
A New Church.....	193
JOTTINGS.....	193
PUBLISHERS' DEPARTMENT.....	194

HOLLAND C. ANTHONY, Henry W. Bellows, John A. Bellows, Robert Collyer, Charles C. Shackford and Celia P. Woolley are among the contributors to this number of THE INQUIRER.

OUR European advices are confused and conflicting. The indications seem to point toward a probable compromise between Turkey and Servia, but are less favorable as to the relations between Russia and Turkey. Cabinet difficulties are reported in France and England, and a general feeling of unrest pervades the whole of Europe.

THE action of Congress and the Electoral Commission is followed with interest, and general confidence that a settlement will shortly be reached which will be quietly acquiesced in by all parties. We however note considerable dissatisfaction on the part of the extreme Democratic press, and a determined effort on the part of the extreme Republican organs to spread a belief that the Democrats are not acting in good faith and are ready for any fiendish movement to make trouble. The New York Times is especially engaged in this work. An interesting letter from Judge Edmunds has been published in which the action of Congress in previous counts, is very clearly and succinctly stated.

It appears that the Methodist Recorder, New York Independent and other papers—all, probably, on the faith of the first named—have been circulating a report to the effect that the late Athanase Coquerel, filis, had, on his death-bed, recanted his heresies, and died "in the peace of the Gospel," claiming "the Lord Jesus Christ as his Redeemer and Saviour." His brother, M. Etienne Coquerel, writes to the London Inquirer that this story is a sheer fabrication, manufactured out of the whole cloth; that M. Athanase died as he had lived; that there had been no change at all in his mind.

We may add that it has hitherto been found impossible to induce the Evangelical organ which gave currency to this piece of precious "good tidings" to publish any denial of the same.

It is reported that a committee of the Chamber of Commerce of this city has determined to report favorably in relation to a proposition for the sale of the dock property by the city. In view of the vast interests involved, the great need of some proper system for the utilization and conservation of this property, and the many schemes which have been proposed, some of which would involve the expenditure of enormous sums of money, this proposition is one worth considering, and worth considering carefully and at leisure. Were citizens and officials all that they should be, it would doubtless be convenient to continue the present tenure, but, under such circumstances, any tenure would be satisfactory.

The simple question seems to be, Would it be practicable, in case of a sale, to establish such rules as should effectually prevent infringement by private parties on the rights of the public? If it would, it is certainly vastly to the interest of the city that the sale should be made, and the large sum which ought to be realized applied toward the extinction of our frightful public debt.

IN connection with this subject, we cannot but deplore the tendency of the abnormal condition of our politics to draw excessive attention to Washington and away from our home concerns. Leaving aside for the moment all State interests, there is matter enough in the financial position of this city to call for the gravest consideration and the most radical measures of reform. The public debt, as we have said above, is simply frightful, and the annual expense of conducting the public business of the city is beyond belief to one who hears it stated for the first time. Mayor Ely appears to have set himself earnestly at work to ascertain what, if anything, can be done to remedy this state of things, and should have the hearty support of every citizen. That in any radical measures which he may endeavor to carry out he will have a hand-to-hand fight with the most powerful administrative machine on this continent is very evident already, and he can only succeed through the generous assistance of honest men of all parties.

THE frequent recurrence of disastrous failures, accompanied by revelations of long-continued insolvency and gross mismanagement and dishonesty on the part of managers and clerks, in banks and other financial institutions, is one of the most discouraging features of the business situation, and calculated to check any sanguine hopes of a rapid revival. The collapse of the companies engaged in mining and carrying coal is another, and interesting as an exemplification of the folly of any artificial system of interference with the natural development of production and trade, of which so-called "protection" is the most flagrant instance.

Perhaps, however, the strongest hint to keep close to shore is to be found in the fact that the real-estate bubble has been punctured, but has not yet been fully burst. The magnitude of this interest it is difficult to exaggerate, and any sudden change in it must be followed by wide-spread trouble.

Sixteen years of abnormal business relations cannot be immediately followed by perfect repose and prosperity.

The price of gold has not fallen so low during the week as during the previous one, and as we go to press is about $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. lower than at our last report, being quoted at 105 $\frac{1}{4}$. Silver is also a little lower—57d. per ounce in gold, though higher prices seem to be looked for in London.

A LETTER in the New Age, on the "Labor Question," reminds us that we have been negligent of our duty in this matter, and because of that fact, we now feel called upon to act with all the more vigor and promptness. One peculiarly pertinent suggestion in the letter alluded to, is the following: "The moral turpitude and robbery of the masses, traceable to the rich, cannot be fixed on certain individuals to the exclusion or exoneration of the rest of their caste. All rich men are guilty as one man."

We think this kind of statement has been made frequently enough, without having yet produced the desired result. It is now the time to do. Let a meeting be called immediately—a mass meeting—to be held in Boston. At this meeting, let the following resolutions be voted upon and passed:

Resolved, That on and after Thursday, the first day of March, prox. human nature shall be differently organized.

Resolved, That on and after that date, nobody shall have any hard work to do, but all the hard work shall be done by somebody else.

Resolved, That thenceforward, the four-penny loaf shall be sold for one penny, and the penny shall go to the purchaser.

Resolved, That the nineteenth century is an anachronism, and shall be suspended after said first day of March.

Resolved, That paper money is exactly as good as gold and a great deal better.

Resolved, That everybody shall have as much paper money as he wants.

Resolved, That he that has no money shall not be prevented from obtaining other things by that circumstance.

Resolved, That property is robbery.

Resolved, That every one shall have whatever he desires, and nobody shall take it away from him.

We cannot believe that such action as this would fail of its proper effect.

THE misery and destitution, so wide-spread during the present season, call up anew the question of the great accumulation of population at the centres, and the wish that the superabundance might be scattered abroad through the rural districts, where it is commonly assumed that labor is needed.

Now undoubtedly it would be greatly to the interest of all, if a larger number could be induced to devote themselves to the cultivation of the soil, but there are certain difficulties in the way, which are apt to be overlooked. In the first place, most effective farm labor, like most other kinds of labor, requires some knowledge. In the second place, farm labor does not continue active throughout the season, and hunger does. In the third place, few of the extremely poor have enough means to enable them to move to a distant state with an uncertainty whether they will find remunerative employment at the end of their journey. It is easy to say, "Go West, young man," but it is not so easy to comply with the advice.

There is this, however, to be said. There are vast tracts of exceedingly valuable land in the South, and that not many hundred miles from New York, and within easy reach of a market.

If the South is ever to become civilized, it will probably be through colonization by white citizens. Rather than to support them in idleness here, it would be wise economy and a saving of money to transport such as may have a reasonable chance of success, to the lands where they are needed; to put them in possession of the soil, to provide them with implements, to feed them until they can raise a crop. The money so employed could be gradually returned for use again in similar cases. This, we say, would be the wisest economy. Is the civilization of New York far enough advanced to recognize it and put it into practice?

THE ELECTORAL COMMISSION.

THE imputation of partisanship on the Electoral Commission seems to us very indecent, if by partisanship is meant default of principle and voting for the interests or a party and not according to conviction of what is law and justice. That different men have different views of law and justice, in their application to delicate questions, is recognized in all tribunals—in juries and in courts of several judges, as well as in the world at large; and it is expected, in deciding questions submitted to them, that they will act upon their own convictions of what is the law or the equity of the case. Are they partisan in any bad sense, if, when selected with reference to their known views, they act in accordance with them in the judgments they pass? Are they to be assumed to have joined a party without reasons which appear to them conscientious, rational, constitutional? Why should we set up a clamor of "partisan," if men act upon their well-known convictions of policy and duty and law? And is it to be conceded that parties themselves have at bottom no ideas and principles to which honest men may attach themselves, with profound conviction of their importance, and for which they may feel bound to contend?

That there are serious differences in the construction of the Constitution, in the policy of the Government, and the interests of the country, among equally good and wise men, is certain; and we cannot see the propriety of throwing it into any man's face, that he holds one or the other only as a partisan, unless it is clearly shown that he is not acting by his own clearest light and with conscientious fidelity to his convictions of what the good of the country requires. Certainly it would be madness to pack a judicial commission selected to decide questions about which the country is nearly evenly divided, with men known in advance to be all on one side, honestly and by deep conviction. The Electoral Commission was wisely selected, with as even a partition between members whose sympathies were with one or the other side, as the necessity of an odd number allowed. It was not assumed that these men would act as partisans, nor have we any decent right to say that any of them have done so. On the other hand, it was not expected that they would act against their established character and views. It was assumed that they were men who respected their own opinions and convictions, and would act according to them. It was assumed that they would act with judicial impartiality, and without reference to party wishes or dictation. But certainly this does not mean that they were to concede that their own views, if they accorded with the conviction of either party, were on that account to be disowned, and a way found that should not be in accordance with any party's wishes or opinions.

A decision must be arrived at, which will suit one party rather than the other; but we hold it in the highest degree irrational and indecent to insinuate that this decision, whatever it is, will be a merely partisan one. It will be the decision of honest and fair-minded men, acting in an independent and judicial way, but acting as men must act who have convictions and lawful biases of opinion, not in harmony with each other upon the points on which the great parties differ. If these points were fundamental, they would lie below the lawful action of parties, which differ not upon essentials, but only upon important questions. The questions at issue are not fundamental, or they would not be submitted to a commission created by agreement of parties. They are party questions, and they will be settled as they must be, by the convictions of the members of the Court who have been properly selected, with reference to their political views. This was known beforehand, and it is only foolish and angry people that will complain when it comes of what they must have anticipated. The real object of the Commission is to find the exact bearing of the law upon the questions at issue. If this bearing is found to be in favor of one or the other party, it will not be for party reasons, but for legal reasons, satisfactory to the majority of the Commission. We have no ground to doubt that some bearings will be found favorable to the Democratic and some to the Republican side, or that argument and investigation by experts will clear up some hitherto obscure questions. We expect a wholly fair and impartial decision, but that it will be properly influenced more or less by the foregone opinions of the judges is inevitable and proper.

PROF. HENRY B. SMITH.

THE death of this distinguished scholar and beloved man has deeply moved that somewhat narrow world of appreciating spirits in which great scholars live. His few peers know that a prince in learning has fallen, and the Presbyterian church feels herself bereaved of one of her most useful and honored leaders. The Union Theological School, to which the best part of Prof. Smith's life and labors have been devoted, is the chief mourner, as it has lost most and lost what it best understood. Probably its students of a quarter of a century past are those on whom his mental and moral image is most deeply stamped. They have been the children of his spirit, the receivers of his system of theology—unhappily existent only in those minds, or in notes that will probably never be reduced to a systematic form. This is a great misfortune to the Christian world. We should be greatly surprised if Prof. Smith's theology, systematically set forth, were not found to enlarge and elevate the whole body of Presbyterian divinity far beyond and above that known as Princeton theology. Dr. Smith was undoubtedly a sound orthodox divine, with no leanings toward the Unitarian theory of Christianity. But so is Prof. Park, and so was Schleiermacher. Yet who does not know and feel that these men stand in possible relations of harmony with Unitarian opinions, instead of being directly antagonized by them, as the old New England divinity was and the Princeton theology still is? But whatever Dr. Smith's theology was, he held it in such a catholic and inclusive way that he made warm friends of Unitarian ministers, and met them on the most affectionate and Christian grounds of social brotherhood and intellectual and spiritual communion, though not in ecclesiastical fellowship.

But, apart from all theological sympathy, Prof. Smith had such obvious claims, in his learning, his compass of mind, his fine and broad culture, his purity of heart and sweetness of disposition, that none could know him without admiration and love. His scholarship is admitted to have been extraordinarily full and thorough, his philosophic reading and acumen great, his industry and persistence wonderful in a man so frail in body. To the solidity of the scholar and thinker, he added the charms of humor, wit and geniality. He never aged nor stiffened, but seemed almost a youth to the last, in the eagerness and teachableness of his spirit. He put on no formal authority or magisterial distance, but wore his crown of wisdom with the modesty of a subject, instead of the pride of an intellectual prince. His face, though beaked like an eagle's, was as mild as a dove's, although his eyes showed the hidden lightnings of his soaring spirit, and his brow and parted hair had, with all its beauty, a knotty vigor which his small head seemed not to suggest, but almost to forbid. He was, like Dr. Channing, a remarkable contradiction to the prevailing idea that size and weight of frame and brain are essential to force and quality of intellectual being. Where he kept his learning and his thoughts, or whence, except from a soul that was largely independent of its physical habitation, issued his vivacity of feeling and thinking, would puzzle the materialists to answer.

We feel poorer and humbler and sadder now that New York has lost such a noble, full and sweet spirit—such a ripe and generous scholar, such an unaffected saint. We could better have lost many millionaires than this one Christian scholar. But God's will is best, and so we bow our heads to His decree.

HENRY W. BELLOWES.

A WORD ABOUT OURSELVES.

I WONDER whether it is not a good thing for the minister to take stock now and then of the business God has put into his hands, so that he may be able to guess whether it is worth his while to keep on, or whether the ever-growing poverty of his balance-sheet is not a warning that if he keeps on much longer he has nothing to expect but ruin.

For it must be true that, in our business also, there is a real profit or loss, primary indeed where that of many other men is secondary. So that if David Hume was right when he said every piece of broadcloth made in England in his day was made better through the teachings of ethics in the schools, then a business like this of ours, which in its essence may be to ethics what fire is to frost, is of an importance in proportion to its potency, though for the moment we only try to look at it by the level lights of earth and time. For I take this to be past all controversy true—that wherever the Christian ministry is at all what it should be, we shall find all other things feel its power down to the clods of the valley. And while no wise man will question for a moment the worth of science, philosophy, education and that power of the press which, as we hear every little while, is to supersede the power of the pulpit, we have still to feel sure that the true minister fills a place no other man can fill, and does a work no other man can do or his power fails at the spring. It is not in the literary excellence of his sermons, or the fineness of his delivery, in the comeliness of his presence or the ability with which he can "run a church;" these things may all be good enough in their way, yet a man like Paul had probably not more than one of them. It is that influence of the preacher over his hearers and of the pastor with his people and the world about him we need to make this life tolerable, even though there were no assurance of a life to come.

Bancroft quotes from an old writing of North Carolina in the early days that when, as yet, the people spent their Sundays in hunting, horse-racing and the like, every man did what was right in his own eyes, and paid tribute neither to God nor Cæsar. And Governor Reynolds, of our own State, chronicles a curious scene in Galena just as the minister was beginning to get the pull on his hearers—how being at an open-air meeting one Sunday, he found the preacher pleading with men for a better life in one corner of the square, and in another, within eye and ear-shot, a crowd engaged in drinking, gambling and cock fighting. I think, therefore, it is fair to say that if you should take the influence of the pulpit out of a city like Chicago, the steady, personal appeal for truth and righteousness on the barest ground you can well imagine, on the last Sunday of 1877, as many decent men and women as we had left would be looking out for another place to settle; real estate would be worth no more than prairie mud on a turnpike in April, merchandise would seek other markets and merchants, and, as in the old days, when the church issued her ban closing all the sanctuaries, the King crept on his knees to have the ban lifted, so this sovereign people would take to its knees to beg, if not for the sake of the world to come, then for the sake of this world we live in, the old lights might shine again and the old serious word be said once in seven days. If the ministry could be closed, and those who affect to believe there is no great use in it have their own way, we should find that, in a far deeper and surer way than the most of us support the Christian ministry, such a ministry supports us; and if we did nothing for the church as Christians, we should do what we were able as citizens, and never think of getting this bread of life free of cost when we were able to take our share of the common burden.

Now it is just as well that the truth should begin here, though it cannot end here. We seldom mention this power of the pulpit over the common life, because it rarely enters our minds, as the man who raises good crops of fruit and grain rarely thinks of what a sight his quarter section would be if he let it run back into the wilderness. But there are larger and finer uses than this to a true ministry or it fails of its high purpose. Old Dr. Nichols, of Portland, put his hand one day on the head of a little boy he was passing on the street, touching him tenderly for Christ's sake, and as many years after as made that boy a man of middle age, he was telling the story to me with a sweet pathos in his voice as if he was talking to me about his mother. In the early days, a young fellow came over here and went in, as young men say, for a good time. He lived to be quite an old man, empty of all grace, and then, one day, some words he had heard John Howe say before he left home came to him like the tongue we are born to, but have forgotten in a strange land; they broke the hard heart of him and he became a new man. Travelling often, as I do, in New England, I come sometimes to places where some man died years ago who had a divine word in him, and I find the people still treasuring that word and listening to it as to a far-reaching, penetrating echo. So I think of the old Scripture, "Ye shall be salted with fire," as I see how that man has invaded human souls, and held his own in them against the subtle powers of the world, the flesh and the devil. I had read Shakspeare, Goldsmith, Burns, and what I could find of Longfellow, before I was twenty-five and gladly confess to their noble influence on my life. But there is a Methodist preacher at work now in Quebec who used to preach right at my soul. Spirit to spirit, sun to seed, he caught me with a living word poured instantly out of his heart and quick with strange emotion, and smote me as I was never smitten by a book, so that, under God, I have to ascribe what little I have done as a minister to the sacred fire I caught from that man.

Here, then, is the better secret of our ministry. The true minister is true to this power. He touches the heart of the childhood, the youth and the manhood about him with the subtle, searching fire of the truth and life of God. And as our government selects and maintains men to live on forelands and reefs, and on rocks out at sea, whose business it is to trim the lamps and keep them lighted with the oil; it also sends to keep the glasses and reflectors bright and clear so that the seaman may be guided and guarded on his lonesome way. So does the true minister hold a commission from the divine government of guidance and succor to keep the lamp of truth aflame on its high place, the glasses and reflectors clear; and he must be faithful in the deepest darkness and the wildest storm. We have to do the very best we can with such oil and reflectors as heaven gives us, and see that no wreck comes through our carelessness, but by all means guide and inspire men by our sincerity even when we cannot command them by our genius.

One thing more rises out of all this. I must mention the true worth of a minister lies also in a certain comradeship and close friendship. If I live long and well with those I gather into my church, I touch all their sacred times and seasons, the summits of their joy and the deeps of their sorrow, as no other man can touch them. Just as many children as are born into my parish are born into a home I keep open for them in my heart, every babe I baptize comes to me as in some holy sense my own child, and every death smites me also with a quick sorrow.

Does a man close to my side go down in the world, I go down with him; I am troubled by his trouble, poor in his poverty or sick for his sin. I keep track, if I can, of the doubts and perplexities of those that belong to me, try to think my way through them under the thin disguise of taking a text, talk to them as if there were only two people in the church. Yet, because his troubles are not of any private interpretation, but are touching men and women far and wide, the talk I meant for one has gone right home to a hundred by the time I get through. Or if the trouble has come up in my own nature and I have had to fight my way out of it, I simply report how the land lay and the light, and call it a sermon, and lo! another man or woman comes to me and says, How could you know what I was waiting for? That sermon was meant for me. The truth is, it was not a sermon at all, but the report of a battle. "Met the enemy at such a point, found him strongly entrenched, fought so long and routed him; or, he drew off, doubt whether he is conquered, but mean to hold my ground if I can." This is about what a great many so-called sermons mean, and when we are defeated we are apt to make no report, but wait and try again. This is comradeship and friendship. We are all in the turmoil together, and have to scramble through, so as not to disgrace the flag; and the minister, under God and Christ, is captain of his company.

And the last thing in the true minister is a certain power for that reason to stand at the front. Evermore the true minister hears a cry out of heaven to push on in the line of the larger promise, and so sometimes God helps him to hang on only to the hearts of his people. But if these hold, he is all right. You never stone your prophet if he is so near to you that there is no room to "get a purchase;" you can only groan and say, Why will he persist in saying such things? He has to do it; God has spoken once, yea, twice, perhaps, before you heard him say a word. Instructions have come to him from head-quarters; he is under sealed orders, and when he breaks the seal there is the word, Fight this battle, ask no questions, stand to your guns; it is the Master's business, see it is done. So the true minister never asks, Is this pleasant? or, will my people like it and thank me for it? but, is it true? have I caught the Master's meaning? Then there is no more to be said or done. He backs down, then, at his peril, but if he is the man I mean he never backs down, and when he dies they bury him among the kings and prophets of the race.

ROBERT COLLYER.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM PARIS.

"L'AMI FRITZ."

THE play to which all Paris is going now, and the one to which he can take his wife and modest daughters without fear of their blushing, is Erekmann-Christian's "L'Ami Fritz." It stands out in startling contrast to the usual run of French plays, which depend for their interest upon some love intrigue in which the "villain" is generally successful and the injured party shows himself extremely weak and ready to smooth matters over. In this play the plot is one of the simplest, and the great success it has had and has now is due mainly to the perfect acting (that is a thing of course at the Theatre Française), and the way in which the sympathy of the audience is carried unbroken through each act.

The scene is laid in Alsace, and the time is to-day. Fritz is a jovial land-owner, rich, fond of the good things of life, and wishing all around him to have their share in them. He is a bachelor, and in the first act, at a birth-day dinner which he gives to some of his intimates, he has to listen to a flood of eloquence from the Prêtre of the village, who tries to convince him that marriage is the only fitting condition for him. Fritz answers ably, avers he will never marry, and agrees to give his best farm to the Prêtre in case he ever does. Suzil, the heroine, is also introduced in this act. She is the daughter of Fritz's chief farmer, and comes to bring a bouquet of violets.

In the second act, Fritz is at the house of Pere Christel, Suzil's father. He is found here by the Prêtre and other friends, who inform him, to his surprise, that the three days which he fixed as the duration of his visit have lengthened themselves to three weeks. The Prêtre suspects that the attraction is Suzil, and proceeds to try experiments. When he and Fritz are alone he tells him of a match he knows of for Suzil and notes the effect. His suspicions are confirmed. The other friends, who have been inspecting works on the farm, return, and Fritz beats an ignominious retreat with them during the absence of the Prêtre. Suzil is much affected by his sudden departure, and the Prêtre finds that Cupid has been at work here too.

In the third act Fritz is at home, cross, gloomy, undecided whether to boldly face the ridicule of his friends and make Suzil his wife. The Prêtre comes in and adds another thorn, by telling how nicely all things are going on regarding the match for Suzil. He leaves, and Suzil, who has been asked by Fritz's servant to look after the house during her absence, breaks in upon Fritz's melancholy fit. She comes to answer a bell which she thought she heard, and enters wiping her eyes. She tells Fritz, in answer to his inquiry as to the marriage proposed for her, that she is forced into it against her will. He urges her not to sacrifice herself, but still cannot bring himself to declare his passion. The entrance of the Prêtre with Pere Christel puts Suzil to flight. They come to ask Fritz's consent to the proposed union. He hears them at length, and refuses to grant it. He has at last made up his mind to speak, and tells Christel of his love. Christel reminds him of the difference of position between them, but finally gives his consent. Suzil is called in, and of course joyfully accepts.

Mere child's play, this plot; but when well acted and well put upon the stage, "L'Ami Fritz" is a rare treat. The right of reproducing it in England and America has recently been sold, and probably it will soon be brought out in New York. H. C. A.

LITERATURE.

THE UNITARIAN REVIEW.

THE Unitarian Review for February contains (I.) an instructive and laborious article by Dr. A. A. Livermore on "The American Physical Man." He proves, by a large presentation of the best statistics, that the common impression that the American is physically degenerate is a prejudice, and bears no careful examination. This impression, we may add, seems to rest more upon the less ruddy complexion of the American than upon his lack of height, bulk or endurance. The evidences of thoughtfulness and ambition in the American countenance are characteristic, and take away the burly and beefy look that mark Englishmen of a parallel class. American women certainly look more fragile than almost any others, but it is more their pale complexion than their want of muscular development that produces the appearance.

Article II., by Rev. J. H. Allen, on "The Old Testament and the New Criticism," is timely, and comes from one who, for twenty years, has been specially interested in Old Testament studies. It will be wise for readers of this comprehensive and careful article to compare it with one of much power and learning in the January British Quarterly, on "The Poetry of the Hebrews," as it gives a sketch of Old Testament criticism, since the law of literary interpretation in its universal spirit, was first applied to the Bible. The article in the Quarterly is masterly in almost every way—in its learning and its insight and its æsthetic quality—but it is limited by the theological prejudices of the writer, the English theologian scarcely ever becoming bold until he has wholly broken with the National church, if not with the Christian faith. Mr. Allen is able to be both bold and reverent, and he presents without disguise the last results or tendencies of criticism upon the alleged claims to supernatural inspiration, without allowing the value and sacred quality in the record to lessen in his hands. He is generous enough to defend Matthew Arnold's definition of the essence of the Hebrew testimony. The estimate which Mr. Allen puts upon Kuenen's "Religion of Israel" is somewhat higher than the British Quarterly's. It seems to be conceded by both that it is learned, careful and thorough, but lacks intuition and fervor. But the British Quarterly thinks the writer disqualified by his thorough rationalism for any successful dealing with his theme. We suspect it is not his rationalism that hurts him, but only that unspiritual and unpoetic constitution, which makes men who could not do any more justice to Homer or Milton or Wordsworth than they do to Moses and David and Isaiah such wearisome critics of any portion of the Bible. Ewald, with all his extravagancies, is worth ten thousand Keunens, Colensos and other literalists. The half dozen closing pages of Mr. Allen's article are singularly broad, sensible and helpful as a summary of the frames of feeling in which modern criticism has left reverential minds.

Article III. Dr. Clarke rebuts the attack by the Nation upon the presumption of clergymen mingling in the fray with scientific experts over their own questions. He shows the fallacy of the Nation's position, by exhibiting the falsity of its definition of science, as "a body of facts which lead people familiar with them to infer the existence of certain laws." The statement is hasty and inadequate. All real science has three steps—observation, induction, verification. The first and third steps are physical; the second, metaphysical. The first and third steps belong to experts; but the second, to all who are able to reason or to criticise an argument. Clergymen do not make themselves judges of the facts, but only of the inferences; and we think, with Dr. Clarke, that they are criticised by men in sympathy with the materialistic tendencies of modern scientists because they have already put a very serious check upon their assumptions and their haste. We should like to know why Mr. Martineau, Mr. Peeton, Dr. Hill and Mr. Bixby are not entitled to deal with the metaphysics of science. The truth is, the experts and specialists everywhere need to have their microscopic view corrected by people who have the broader sweep of their natural eyes. The telescope and microscope hide as much as they reveal. They disclose details that hinder the vision of complete wholes. Few men are blinder to the import of nature than those who only study it as a subject of science. It is not only metaphysics, but spirituality, imaginative insight and moral feeling, that are needed to complete the testimonies of the closest observers of the physical facts in nature. Leave science to itself, and it will soon empty the world not only of God, but of the soul. It is, for the same reasons, fatal to poetry and faith, and the world would dissolve, as a world fit to live in, were these driven out. But happily there is no danger. Only the scientists just now are very angry that the man of faith will not allow all the stones to be thrown from the other side of the hedge. They will find themselves not near as victorious as they now fancy themselves before they get through with "the clergymen."

Dr. Morison gives, in the fifth article, "Italy," a very judicial and exhaustive estimate of the present condition of that country, so dear to all lovers of beauty and antiquity. We have seen no account so fair and so little affected by the feelings and prejudices and hopes of the writer. Mr. Morison does full justice to the abolition and motives and success of the reformers in politics and economics in that long oppressed and distracted country. Its resurrection is certainly the miracle of our time. The recovery of its unity, the crowning of its king at Rome, the introduction of schools and modern commerce, the conquest of liberty for all, with the protection of life and property—these are glorious attained results, and furnish cause for wonder and exultation. But Mr. Morison thinks the lack of fresh or improvable agricultural resources a very dark factor in the problem of finance. Italy has used up her land, utilized her soil to the utmost, and nothing more is to be got out of it. (We had supposed, however, that the Campagna might be reclaimed by science.) But, worse than this, Catholicism seems to have used up the utmost capacity for religion among Italians. They are either Roman Catholics or atheists. Religion is the Church of the Pope or it is nothing. This, alas! is the issue Rome likes to present. We doubt not that Mr. Morison's fears that existing Protestantism will find no easy and perhaps no final root in Italy, are well founded. Our hope is that Romanism will, by the same sort of throes by which she ejected Luther and his school from her own bosom, be compelled by the remnant of sincerity and piety still left in connection with larger views of life and general truth, than is compatible with her present pretensions, to give birth to a reformation—not at all on the basis of the old one—but having a much more radical and natural principle at the bottom of it, and to issue in far more important results. The Roman church was the mother of the great Reformation, and its expiring energy will yet, we trust, make it the mother of a still greater one. When was the world so ready to welcome a simple and natural theology, clothed in a richer and more symbolic worship? Is it not what is most wanted now—a cultus which shall satisfy the social and the æsthetic instincts—with a simple dogma, untroubled with scholastic metaphysics and accessible and penetrated with newly-discovered truth? Italy's religious regeneration will not, we judge, come from without, any more than her political regeneration has done. One of her sons once said to us: "A generation of atheism must stand between Italian superstitions and any chance of true religion." We hope that generation is nearly exhausted. We have faith to believe that great religious reformers are yet possible in Italy, and we hope that St. Peter's and Maria Maggiore and St. John's may yet be the homes of a pure, simple, heart-felt worship and faith, which shall have no need to call itself Protestant, because there will be no pontifical church left to protest against. When Italy becomes the seat of a true Christianity, the great changes so long delayed in the English and Lutheran and the American churches, will follow easily. It is the shadow of Roman Catholicism that has stifled Protestantism, as a thoroughly brave and whole-souled movement. Rome may again make herself the religious head of the Christian world, when she asserts the simple faith which alone can succeed the artificial one that has lost its power most where it has been longest known and tried.

Mr. Bixby, in his acute and learned article on "Lotze," shows his fine comprehensiveness and capability of the nicest discriminations. He is broad, and he is sharp too. He has excited in us a lively curiosity to make an immediate acquaintance with his hero, who seems to be a sort of James Martineau in a German garb—more scholastic and learned, not less broad and wise, with just as high spirituality and reverence, if not quite as beautiful and elegant a style.

But we leave no room to name Dr. Bartol's striking sermon, nor the Editor's Note Book and the Foreign Periodical Literature. They are always interesting, and our readers must this time judge them for themselves, for we are out of space.

H. W. B.

OLD TALES RETOLD; from Grecian Mythology, in Talks around the Fire. By Augusta Larned. New York: Nelson & Phillips.

Hawthorne's "Wonder Book" and "Tanglewood Tales," gave a rare charm to the old Grecian legends of gods and goddesses. They were among the best books that could be placed in the hands of young people, who were just beginning to seek the rich fields of classical lore and who needed some such direction and guidance. But their aim was rather to amuse and interest than to instruct, and Miss Larned in re-telling these "Old Tales from Grecian Mythology" has enough fresh and untried ground to fill.

We are not acquainted with any book that fills just the same place and fills it so admirably. In a series of "talks around the fire" between an aunt and her nephews and nieces the whole realm of Grecian Mythology is thoroughly gone over. The subject is so familiar that it would almost seem impossible to put much freshness into its treatment. But this very thing Miss Larned has done. She has put life into what might have been mere dead bones, dust and ashes. The secret, of course, is that she herself is enthusiastic and has caught the real spirit of that about which she is writing, has had a clear vision of the beauty and deep significance of what to common minds seems only a silly fable, or at best the crazy wanderings of a dream. Indeed, there is more than an appreciation of the æsthetic value of the Grecian myths. Miss Larned's "Talks" have a truly philosophical basis. They show clearly enough that the Greeks were not mere forgers of fables, the makers of airy conceits and fancies; but that their "mythology" was truly to them a religion, and that in the high sense in which we use the word to-day. Take for instance these few thoughtful sentences, showing how truly the author has understood or felt the importance of her theme. In the introductory "Talk" Aunt Abby says: "These mythological stories I am going to relate are some of the purest poetry. They sprang in great measure out of an intense love of beauty with an underlying truth. We ought not to regard them as mere fantastic tales, nor old and vagrant fancies, for they all have a germ of deep meaning and took hold of the religious life of the people."

Now nothing can be truer than this: Whatever these old myths seem to us, whatever they meant to the Greeks of the time of Socrates and Plato—that is, in the skeptical age—at the first, in the days of Homer and Hesiod, their "mythology" took strong hold of the religious life of the people. And all our best modern scholars are teaching us not to despise these early systems—if systems they can be called—of religious faith. Miss Larned further says: "Those gods and goddesses came out of the awe, fear, love and reverence of souls reaching out toward something to worship." Any such outgrowth must be recognized as having the divine right to existence, however puerile it may seem to us.

In telling the stories of the different gods—Zeus, the god of the sea, the divine mother, the god of music, the divine huntress, the god of war, etc.—Miss Larned follows a very simple yet ingenious method of questions and answers which bring out all the principal points of interest and religious significance in the characters of the various gods and goddesses, and tells all the legends concerning them in a very satisfactory manner. And it is curious to see how much information is thus inwoven in a single chapter, so that if the book were actually used in schools, pupils would find enough in a few pages to make a sufficiently long "lesson."

Miss Larned seems to be familiar with the researches of modern scholars, and she contrives to present her knowledge in a very simple and attractive form. We are sure that young people—and people not so very young—will be greatly helped by her charming presentation of "Old Tales" that can hardly be told too often and which shed new grace and lustre when touched by such a dexterous hand. Moreover, a perusal of the book can hardly fail to make the fair-minded reader more just and tolerant, and truly liberal in his feeling toward a noble people, who held a faith which, however childish it may now appear to us, was to them full of dignity and sweetness and even solemn religious meaning.

THANKFUL BLOSSOM. A Romance of the Jerseys. By Bret Harte. Boston: James R. Osgood & Co.

A bright, fresh little story of Revolutionary days, that takes us away from Mr. Harte's favorite field—"the great, unlimited West." And we cannot help saying that we are slightly grateful for the change. It may be that we were becoming just a trifle weary of his rough, swearing miners and wicked gamblers and abandoned outcasts. They certainly did not form "the best society"—though of course we were glad to find that, under all their outward barbarism, they still retained some sparks of nobility, which came out now and then in strange gleams and flashes.

But this story of "Thankful Blossom" is in pleasant contrast to all these horrors. It is a simple tale of a pretty young girl, living in the exciting times of the American Revolution, who was not treated very well by one lover, who herself behaved very badly to a second gentleman, but who ended by adoring him and doing him a great service. Thankful is a quaint, charming, coquettish, and extremely impulsive young woman, who, for all that we can see might live now-a-days just as well as one hundred years ago. But the setting in which she is placed lends additional piquancy and grace to her dainty figure, and very pretty and bewitching it is. The other characters are not very strongly individual; but the hero is gallant and brave enough for a love story, and the fickle Captain Brewster is not badly drawn. We even have a glimpse of General Washington and his lady, who are sufficiently "historical" to satisfy our very unhistorical mind.

Here and there are graceful descriptions and some very clever passages, which show Mr. Harte has not lost his old power. For example, "There is no flattery, however outrageous, that a man will not accept from the woman who he believes loves him. He will perhaps doubt its influence in the colder judgment of mankind; but he will consider that this poor creature, at least, understands him, and in some vague way represents the eternal but unrecognized verities, and when this is voiced by lips that are young, and warm, and red it is somehow quite as convincing as the bloodless, remoter utterances of posterity."

We find it extremely difficult to criticize this story. Indeed, it is hardly a book to be criticized at all. It is a bright, cheery tale, —not over full of passion or philosophy, perhaps,—to be read at a sitting, smiled over, laughed over, or cried over, as the case may be. It "reads of itself." But, after some reflection, the reader may discover that it has required no little art to make the simple story so fresh and attractive—the heroine so natural and, in spite of her naughtiness, so charming—as has been done at the hands of Mr. Harte.

BRIEF NOTICES.

SAPPHO. A Tragedy in Five Acts. By Franz Grillparzer. Translated by Ellen Frothingham.

GOETHE'S WEST-EASTERLY DIVAN. Translated, with Introduction and Notes, by John Weiss. Boston: Roberts Brothers.

The first of these will be much the more attractive to most readers, and a very interesting little book it is, making much the same impression upon the mind as Talfourd's "Ion." The reader's sympathy is powerfully drawn toward each of the leading characters, and the divided interest continues to the end of the play. Miss Frothingham has done her work thoroughly, and we heartily commend the book to our readers.

The West-Easterly Divan was the product of the Napoleonic period, when Goethe, sick of political intrigue, and not participating strongly in the fever of the time, sought to bury himself in a phase of life and thought as far removed as possible from that by which he was surrounded. He steeped himself in the Oriental and sang as a bird in Persian groves, but a bird of a German strain. To the American reader the poems vary greatly in clearness and interest. The form is often a cramped one—at least in the English version—and sometimes seems unnecessarily to hamper the sense; then again you chance upon the sweetest and tenderest verses. In the "Book of the Singer," "Book of Ill Humor," "Book of Love," "Book of Suleika," "Book of the Cup-Bearer," "Book of Paradise," and half a dozen others, the thought runs from one end of the gamut to the other, emitting sparkles all the way.

Mr. Weiss has prefixed to his translation an historical preface, and has added to it copious notes.

POEMS OF PLACES. Edited by H. W. Longfellow. France. I., II. Boston: James R. Osgood & Co.

We have here the latest gleanings from Mr. Longfellow's Scrap-book, and feel anew our indebtedness to him for gathering so many choice poems into such dainty volumes. The selections are from widely scattered authors, American, English, French, German, etc., from the familiar and the obscure, old and new, and where translations are given we have the names of both author and translator. Not the least satisfactory are some of Miss Preston's recent translations from the Trouvères of Provence. The second volume includes a brief section devoted to Savoy, and mainly referring to Mont Blanc and Chamouni.

It was, certainly, a pleasant idea thus to group together the winged verses which various poets had let fly to hover over favorite spots.

SIR ROGER DE COVERLEY. From The Spectator. Edited by John Haberton. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1877.

Dear old Sir Roger! How far it carries us from our life of to-day, here in America, to turn over the pages of this record, and follow thee again in the even tenor of thy peaceful and decorous life!

As Mr. Haberton says, there is no doubt that the De Coverley papers have been previously collected, but we can hardly regret that the collections have disappeared since the circumstance has induced the Messrs. Putnam to place upon the market this pretty little book. And that they intrusted the preparation of it to good hands, is evidenced by the fact that Mr. Haberton here presents the essays unaltered, and merely offers a brief and pertinent introduction. May the handy volume circulate far and wide, and act as a sedative upon the excited nerves of many a one among our hurrying, over-worked, and over-anxious people, bringing visions of a life which had some virtues which the present has not, that we may well afford to recall.

THE HISTORY OF THE CITY OF NEW YORK. By Mrs. Martha J. Lamb. New York, and Chicago: A. S. Barnes & Co. Parts 9 and 10.

By these numbers the record is brought to 1710. In addition to the dry facts of political history Captain Kidd and the pirates are briefly alluded to, and the administrations of Governors Fletcher, Bellomont, Cornbury and Lovelace are made interesting by the relation of many incidents, while a curious romance in the life of Sir Gilbert Heathcote, founder of the Bank of England and Lord Mayor of London, is shown to have produced important results here in New York. The DePeyster, Livingston, Van Cortlandt and Philipse families, and others receive due mention. Maps of New York are inserted, also portraits and full-page court scenes. The letter-press is remarkably good. The pictorial illustrations are less meritorious.

THE DUCHESS OF ROSEMARY LANE. A Novel, by B. L. Farjeon. New York: Harper & Brothers.

Farjeon is a poet, and his prose is full of that exquisite imagination which is often lacking in those poets who write in verse and rhythmical metre. Some may think that his stories lack strength and dramatic power, but the power is there, and it lies in the subtle comprehension of forces lying dormant in people of modest exterior. His keen sense of humor and pathos remind the reader of Dickens, but his characters are more life-like, and his insight more delicate and profound. The Duchess of Rosemary Lane is a poor little waif of gentle but illegitimate extraction, who, for certain reasons, is conveyed into a poor family, who worship her for her beauty and refinement. She has no name, and they give her this aristocratic title as a sort of acknowledgment of her right to superior consideration and deference. Her protectress, Sallie, is a plain, unattractive child, full of a passion for worship which she pours upon the little Duchess, and so satisfies her own quaint, original nature. Sallie reminds us of Little Dorrit in her devotion to her charge, and really wins a stronger interest than her selfish little idol. The story is the oft repeated one of shame and suffering, with a prosperous betrayer, a broken-hearted woman, and a "lovely lad" who has a "fortunate mole" on his cheek, which is supposed to insure him wealth and happiness, but instead he breaks his mother's heart by theft and drunkenness. The story is not remarkable, but the delicate descriptions and refined coloring recall the author's best novel, Joshua Marvel, which is full of the same vivid imagination and poetical expression.

GATHERED LEAVES. Poems by Frances A. B. Dunning. Chicago: Palmer, Augir & Co. 1877.

This book is, as the title indicates, a collection of many poems which have from time to time unfolded in the author's thought, as occasion has called them forth. Unlike "gathered leaves" however, they still keep their freshness and life; and here and there a choice flower peeps through them prophetic of fruit and seed.

The poems are on various themes. Many are inspired by domestic love,—especially by maternal joy and sorrow—and the author shows a hearty sympathy with children.

She thus finely expresses the deeper truth about sorrow:

"Foolish comforters are they
Who in hopeful accents say,
Time will pass and grief will die,
Joy will conquer by and by.

"Love is love, till that be past,
Grief for love's sake too will last;
Time can wed in one the twain,
Grief alone makes loss a gain."

Many of the poems will be recognized as having already appeared in the LIBERAL CHRISTIAN or Christian Register. In all of them the moral tone is high, the sentiment true and pure.

H. M. S.

SHADOWS ON THE SNOW. By B. L. Farjeon. New York: Harper & Brothers.

Here is another story by Farjeon, but very inferior to his best efforts. It is written carelessly, and a tinge of superstition spoils the imagery and makes it coarse and unreal. What a pity that a man of such genuine genius should write a book merely to sell. A very dingy light, we must confess, seems to be the source and cause of these somewhat colorless "Shadows on the Snow."

FROM DREAMS TO WAKING. A Novel. By Mrs. E. Lynn Lynton. Harper & Brothers. 1877.

A fair novel, but not remarkable either in description or characterization. Two women in love with a handsome scapegrace; the one a passionate, but weak and scheming Southern girl, unscrupulous and fascinating; the other, strong, high-toned, imaginative and trusting. Such elements must always excite a certain degree of interest, but there is no lasting power in the particular combinations of them in this book, and we forget the characters as we would casual acquaintances who make no strong impression upon us.

LITERARY NOTES.

Six London publishers have issued as many editions of "Helen's Babies."

"L'AMI FRITZ" is to be translated into English, and published by Scribner.

THE February number of the Fortnightly Review will contain articles by Mr. Lowe and Dr. Lyon Playfair.

WORCESTER'S dictionaries have changed publishers. J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia, have purchased the plates and copyright of the entire series (seven), and they will hereafter bear their imprint.

THE Rev. O. B. Frothingham has been for several years engaged in the preparation of a work of research sufficiently defined by its title, "The Cradle of the Christ: a Study in Primitive Christianity." It will be issued within the month by G. P. Putnam's Sons.

THE illustrations of Clarence Cook's papers on furniture (of which the ninth will soon appear in Scribner) were all executed under Mr. Cook's personal supervision, and cost the magazine about five thousand dollars. There will be eleven or twelve papers in all.

M. RENAN is now correcting the proofs of the fifth volume of his "Origines du Christianisme," which will appear in April next. This volume, which was originally to be the last of the series, only comes down to Trajan, and will be followed by a sixth, which will come down to Marcus Aurelius. M. Renan will probably undertake, after its publication, a History of the Jewish People.

PROFESSOR FAWCETT, the English political economist, has in preparation a work on protection and free trade, in which will be considered the arguments of the advocates of protection in this country and in the British colonies, and an inquiry into the causes which have prevented the realization of the predictions of the general adoption of free trade which were so constantly made at the time of the repeal of the corn laws and of the negotiation of the commercial treaty with France.

JOHN RUSKIN, it is said, has "carefully projected," amassed materials for, and in some instances begun, a history of fifteenth-century Florentine art, in six volumes; an analysis of Attic art of the fifth century B.C., in three volumes; a history of northern thirteenth-century art, in ten volumes; a life of Turner, in four volumes; a life of Scott, in seven volumes; a life of Xenophon, in ten volumes; a commentary on Hesiod, in nine volumes; and a general description of the geology and botany of the Alps, in twenty-four volumes!

THE Commissioner of Education has recently given to the public a report on the public libraries of the United States. It is a remarkable document, comprising nearly 1,200 pages, full of interesting information on the subject.

The summary is, that in the United States there are 3,682 libraries, numbering 300 volumes each and upwards. The total of volumes is 12,276,964, not including Sunday school or district school libraries. Nearly ten millions of these books are in active use annually. Over 1,500,000 pamphlets are reported in these libraries. The names of 1,600 librarians are given. The permanent fund of 1,722 libraries is $6,000,000. The annual income of 830 is about $1,500,000. In 1776 there were 29 libraries, with 45,623 volumes. In 1800, 49 libraries, with 80,000 volumes. 2,240 libraries have been formed since 1850. More than thirty millions of dollars have been given by individuals for libraries.

The libraries of ten large cities in the United States are compared.

The reports of the libraries in the Southern States will attract attention. The officers of Catholic libraries, in their reports exhibit an interest in the subject and marked liberality and toleration towards Protestant books. California has expended $138,564 for libraries in the last ten years, besides individual contributions.

NEW PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

BOOKS

From G. P. Putnam's Sons.

"THE JUKES," A Study of Crime, Pauperism, Disease and Heredity. By R. S. Dugdale.

From Scribner, Armstrong & Co., New York.

AN INTRODUCTION TO POLITICAL ECONOMY. By Arthur Latham Perry, LL.D. $1.50.

THE LIFE AND CORRESPONDENCE OF THOMAS ARNOLD, D.D. By Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, D.D. Two volumes in one. $2.50.

From Macmillan & Co.

SCIENCE LECTURES AT SOUTH KENSINGTON. Outline of Field Geology. By Prof. Geikie. LL.D., F.R.S. Paper, 20 cents. The Absorption of Light and the Colours of Natural Bodies. By Prof. Stokes, F.R.S. Paper, 20 cents.

From Harper & Brothers, New York.

SELECTIONS FROM THE WRITINGS OF LORD MACAULAY. Edited by George Otto Trevelyan, M.P.

A RIDE TO KHIVA: Travels and Adventures in Central Asia. By Fred Burnaby. With maps, etc.

WEAVERS AND WETS. A Novel. By Miss Braddon. Paper, 25 cents.

ANNIE WARWICK. A Novel. By Georgiana M. Craik. 50 cents.

From State Board of Health, Lansing, Mich.

FOURTH ANNUAL REPORT STATE BOARD OF HEALTH.

SELECTIONS.

THE WORKING MAN'S SUNDAY.

III. EDUCATION.

It still remains to hint what might be done with Sunday in this third aspect, as the people's education day. I speak of intellectual education. Rest, recreation, both are familiar thoughts of the day. This other is comparatively a modern view, not yet systematically adopted by any of our States.

The broad fact to be remembered is that the day must be occupied in order to be saved. An idle Sunday is not a rest Sunday, and it is the kind of Sunday that makes the recreation dangerous. A fact almost as broad is that it is not and will not be occupied to any large extent by workmen in church going. Fill the churches full and outside there are multitudes who cannot get in, and would not if they could; and yet the day must be occupied in order to be saved. Where recreation is debarred and nothing is done for education, is it not a hard case? Where recreation is allowed, and nothing is done for education, then, as I said, the heart grows sick. In either case, remembering how much the week-day's work ministers in various ways to the good of body, mind and character, it may be seriously doubted whether the Sunday, in spite of all the churches do, is not the least inspiring day for true manhood of all the seven. If the cities could be polled of a rainy Sunday, inaction, idleness, listlessness, would be found, I fear, the actually prevailing characteristic. Not one-half the population can handle a leisure day so as not to be bored or harmed by it! And, below a certain grade of mental resource and of home-attractiveness, it is that idleness, inaction, listlessness, which leads to the low companionship, the drunkenness, the profligacy of the Sunday waste.

Summer and Winter must be here distinguished. In our Northern cities for six months of the year the day can hardly be an outdoor day. Here, then, is an empty Winter Sunday, and an average city clerk or mechanic. He is not going to church, or if he goes, that takes but a long hour. Can nothing be done to help him save his day?

There is the public library reading-room on Sundays; there it wasn't till three or four years ago, thanks to some of the clerks' good friends. But in Boston, after ten separate struggles during a seventeen years' campaign, it has stood open to him since Feb. 9, 1873. He has scanty time for papers or magazines through the week, and there he will find a feast of them. If you go there you will see him any Sunday afternoon or evening. According to the last report of the Boston Library, at the central reading-room it takes on the average that day four hundred and seventy-six periodicals to feed him and his fellows—the Winter average, apart from the Summer, much exceeding this—and on full Sundays the congregation overflows into the next room. "A very considerable proportion are persons who do not, or cannot, visit the library on week-days—reporters, mechanics and those who work early and late." At the Christian Union reading-room in Boston they read books as well as papers. When that institution was reorganized in 1868, without a word said to any one, it simply left the book-shelves free on Sunday, and no one said a word against the liberty. "Probably three times as many readers there as on the week-days; before the morning church and through the afternoon and evening. I would rather close it any other day than Sunday," says the President. The Milwaukee Library ventured to do the same in 1869 or 1870. In Philadelphia, also, the Mercantile Library followed suit in 1870. Before the second year was out the attendance averaged seven hundred, "nearly all young men," and it reports gradually increasing numbers ever since. The Cincinnati Public Library, opening its doors on a March Sunday of 1871, has, the past year, averaged over eleven hundred in its Sunday reading-rooms. "How many were genuine, how many are loafers in search of a warm place on Sunday, I know not," writes the friend I quote. But where might the loafers have been otherwise?

After all is done that can be done, the reading-rooms will hold but a few hundreds, or, at most, small thousands, of the idlers. Where else, then, can our clerk go on his Winter Sunday? To some museum, some art exhibition? Alas! no. That indeed would win him; but that is still among things tabu in New England. Moreover, the State has none to open. But private citizens have. Will they not soon be moved to organize the "Loan Collection" as the next new instrument of education in the cities—to generously resolve together that what their wealth and refinement open to themselves all months and days shall be also opened, regularly opened, for a Winter month or two, to those less fortunate? And opened most freely on that day when it could be used by the thousands who have no other day than Sunday on which, with fresh minds and clean clothes and the feeling of leisure, they can use it; the day on which it would, perhaps, do as much good as during the whole week besides? Will not the directors of the Natural History collection, of the new art museums now forming, of the recurring mechanics' exhibitions, consider earnestly whether it lie not in their power and within their privilege to help the idle population to keep their Sunday better?

The lecture is a third lever of Sunday education lately taken in hand by us here in America. In Boston, for the seven or eight past winters, the Free Religious Association has arranged a course of ten or twelve Sunday afternoon lectures in Horticultural Hall. The lecturers have been Jew, Roman Catholic, Protestant of more than one denomination, Theist, Atheist,—as thinkers having equal rights. Individual freedom, with fellowship in religion, is the Association's motto. Its members have usually very definite convictions of their own, some having one kind, some another; but they are allied in their society to maintain one public platform where differences of belief shall meet on friendly terms in virtue of a common love of truth and of charity—where the differences of belief shall meet as in sects only the similarities meet. Accordingly many speakers have been sought to speak for various phases of religious thought, many more than have felt able or else willing to accept the invitation. But not religion only or morals,—social problems, history, biography, science, art, have furnished topics. The lectures are meant to be "solid"; and the audience, a thoughtful set of listeners, ranges from three or four hundred to occasionally thrice that number.

Chicago bravely led the way in a more popular movement, and has this story to tell about it: Some thirty months ago a company of young men began the work "with abundant faith and a cash capital of six dollars." They have provided three courses of lectures. Last winter's course lasted seven months, and the audience present averaged thirteen hundred and seventy-five persons; the audience absent being all whom the circulation of the city newspapers printing verbatim reports could reach. The lecture-topics embrace nearly all the great themes of thought except theology, which is let alone. And this present winter the purely popular speakers occasionally engaged hitherto have been dropped from the list.

We know in Boston how the Lowell Institute is overcrowded to hear any good narrator who goes there with a stereopticon. Let the chance be widely known, and on the winter Sunday afternoon or evening which so many people know not what to do with, at a ten cents' admission, our Music Hall would be well filled to travel with such a man through any country on the globe, or to follow him into the wonder-lands of science or along the tracks of history and biography.

More than this. No one wants the common school to go on and make a seventh day's work for children and teachers that have already been working five or six. But it would be keeping a rest-day in the true sense, if on Sundays—as, of late, on winter evenings—extra classes should be taught of youths whose six week-days are six long work-days: industrial classes, especially, in which practical training should be given to beginners who often have to leave the school so early for the work-shop and the warehouse. It is no new thought. Abroad it is a common practice. Norway and Sweden, Prussia, Saxony, Austria, Bavaria, Baden and Wurtemberg, and some few towns in France, all have such Sunday-schools for apprentices and journeymen and factory-hands; classes where those who have only half learned what the regular school gave, may clinch that little, and where those who wish to carry their scanty education farther may do so. For these latter, besides the common studies, the science that comes into his handicraft is practically taught the young mechanic; book-keeping and the languages are taught the clerk. And almost invariably such schools are drawing-schools. From eight to eleven o'clock in the morning, or perhaps from two to five o'clock in the afternoon, they meet. "Industrial Schools of Improvement" they are called in Wurtemberg, where seventy out of a hundred apprentices receive instruction in them. Why should not something of that kind be done here? Why on Sunday should not an empty school-hall hold the voluntary singing-class and drawing-class? Or the teacher guiding older listeners than children through the elements of science, political economy, the laws of health, the lessons of history? There might be occasion for Sunday-school teachers of this kind to volunteer and give their hour or two, as others do in the Sunday-school of the usual kind. Or the support of such a Sunday teacher would worthily be grafted on the churches as part of their mission-work.

And now to end. I have spoken of three uses of the Sunday,—Rest, Recreation, Education. Let the “working-man” cleave to the first as he values the other two. It is their indispensable condition. But let not society by its customs or its laws hinder him from giving noble meanings to these other two. Even were the Bible-stories true, the best memorial of a creation-day would still be to use it for wise re-creation; the best memorial of a Redeemer’s resurrection-day would be to make it minister to true redemption for our fellows and ourselves. It is for a greatened, not a lessened, Sunday reverence that I plead. Because the single systematic improvement of the day does not avail for all, shall we oppose, or rather favor, an ampler system of improvement? Who abolishes the Sunday? No class of earnest citizens so much as they who try to limit it to but one use, worship. Why? Because, so doing, they tend to abolish even that use. Who save the Sunday even for worship? They who would open it to many uses, but who spur themselves and others to make, among the many, the higher uses win the day. To do that is to save the Sunday to the “working-man,” and put more sun into it that it may bless him through and through.—Extracts from an address by W. C. Gannett, reported in the Index.

HEARTH AND HOME.

A LESSON.

I HEARD a pouting little maid,
In childhood’s dewy morn,
Lamenting that the rose was stemmed
Upon a cruel thorn.

I saw a sweet-faced mother,
In life’s hushed evening hour,
Smile, grateful that the thorns were crowned
With such a glorious flower.

New York Tribune.

JOSEPH AND BENJAMIN; OR, THE EMPEROR AND THE REPUBLICAN.

[Retold from Berthold Auerbach for THE INQUIRER.]

BY G. C. SHACKFORD.

CHAPTER IV.

BROTHER AND SISTER ON THE THRONE.

The gardens of Versailles were bathed in the peaceful, tender moonlight, the fountains plashed, the nightingale sang. General Steuben paced the ornamented walks, hoping to be able to speak to the Emperor or to one of his suite. But he met no one, for that evening a grand banquet was given at the palace. While strolling in the more retired paths, remote from the ringing laughter and music, all at once he heard a man’s voice saying in German: “You have at least gained this by your journey, dear Colloredo; you have studied the French musketry practice, but I, I go home poor; and the Emperor carries back nothing but the knowledge of some free thinkers, of a few deaf and dumb institutions, foundling hospitals and trash of that sort.”

“If the Emperor would accompany his sister, Marie Antoinette, to the hunt to-morrow he might yet gain something; but he must needs see this sly revolutionist, Franklin.”

At these words Steuben stepped up to the men and said: “Count Colloredo! we have stood as enemies on the field of battle, but now in a foreign land we are Germans. I have to give to you, to the Emperor, a warning.”

“With whom have I the honor?” inquired Colloredo.

“My name is of no consequence in this matter. I am not permitted to mention it, out of regard to my friends with whom I here live. All I have to say is, that the Emperor should not be at the Abbe Niccoli’s breakfast to-morrow, where he expects to meet the American Franklin.”

“Why not?”

“There are some intrigues on foot—their contrivers I must not name. There are men to whom Joseph’s popularity with the French people is offensive. The plan is to put the Emperor in the shade, if not to humiliate him.

“Unknown friend,” said Colloredo, “we believe you and we will warn the Emperor. But will you not give us your name? I pledge you my honor to impart it only to the Emperor. He will show himself grateful to his secret friend.”

“I only fulfil my duty, as a German, to our Emperor. The mention of my name would compromise my friends. Give me your hand, Count. I bid farewell now to my fatherland.”

Joseph, who had remained at the palace after the night of the banquet, was the next morning walking in the garden with his sister, Marie Antoinette. The Court had gone to the hunt, of which Louis XVI. was passionately fond.

“You are frightfully painted,” said the Emperor in good-humored familiarity.

“And you would like to wash off the paint from all Paris,” replied the Queen. “You take particular delight in seeing the world in undress.”

The Emperor kept silence. After awhile he began in a gentle tone: “I am soon to leave you. I have declined to go to the hunt, in order to pass this morning hour in a brotherly way with you. I have had no success in my measures of State policy with the king. He is thoroughly well meaning, but timorous, and lets himself be compelled by circumstances, rather than to decide for himself.”

“I understand nothing of government and political matters. The king and I, when we heard of the death of Louis XV., fell on our knees and prayed, ‘O God, protect us, we are still too young to reign!’”

The Emperor looked with emotion at his sister’s countenance; her eyes glistened, her innocent nature was revealed, and Joseph appealed now directly to her heart to lay aside that proud confidence in virtue, which led her, conscious of the purity of her own motives, to expose herself to misconception.

The delicate mouth of the queen at first expressed displeasure and defiance, but she soon resumed her smile. “Joseph,” said she jestingly, “you came here with your glue-pot to stick the alliance more firmly together. And what do you do? You try to show us that all our household furniture is mere useless lumber; you come into a foreign land and want to have the people talk in your own language.”

“Him whom I would have for my friend I try to bring over to my views,” replied Joseph; “otherwise I should be dishonorable, and our relation would have no permanence.”

“I know you mean well; but you might take your antipodes for a pattern.”

“My antipodes? Who is that?”

“The Solon of Passy; he is one of the most significant, and at the same time one of the most agreeable of men. He says that no man can get clear of death and blame, and therefore no man should wilfully bring them on himself. This Franklin wishes to win us over and—come here, Diana,” interrupted she suddenly, as she spoke to a grey-hound.

“Do you see, brother, if you want to win one you must whistle to him and stroke him, not scold and chase him away."

"Are you, too, a worshipper of this Dr. Franklin?"

"By no means! His virtue is too rough for me. Plain forms of address, a republican frock, a grey-haired man with silver locks, holding a curly-headed grandchild by the hand—this pleases the French. But this giddiness, this enthusiasm for liberty, is only a fashion, which will soon be of yesterday. Instead of whist it is all the mode to play Boston now, in honor of the Bostonians, because Boston was the first place to revolutionize. And this Franklin understands very well how to coquet with that simplicity of his."

Joseph endeavored to make it out to her that she was also charmed with the man, and that she now was trying to excite a laugh by her railery.

"And now," said Marie Antoinette of a sudden, "I beg you, dear brother—I know that you wish to see Franklin to-day—I beg you not to do it. There's some plan against you."

Joseph looked up astonished, for this was the second time to-day that he had been warned in regard to compromising his dignity. But he was not willing to give up his intention. His sister entreated to devote the morning to her. Seven years before, on the 30th of May, when she and the dauphin made their first entrance together into Paris, one hundred persons had been killed, and nearly a thousand seriously hurt, in the crowd assembled in the Place Louis XV. to witness the fireworks. "This 30th of May is always a terror to me; I never can shake off the feeling that it will bring to me some frightful disaster," said the Queen sadly. And it was as she had foreboded, for in fifteen years from this day, her innocent life was sacrificed on that same square where the accident had happened. The Emperor, seeing his sister so affected, dismissed the carriage and remained with her.

The hour struck nine at the ambassador's, where statesmen, noblemen and philosophers were assembled, but the Emperor did not come. It struck ten, and still he had not arrived; it struck eleven, and they waited in vain. The populace in the streets became impatient; they sang ribald songs concerning the Court; there was a universal restlessness, as when they are deprived of some expected spectacle. The carriages at last drove away and the populace scattered.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

NARCISSUS.

Long, long ago, when the world was quite a young world, and much more simple in its ways than to-day, people believed in a great many things that we are much too wise and clever to have any faith in now. For even a little child, who loves to hear fairy tales read by the nursery fire, knows that the Enchanted Princess and the White Cat, dear little Cinderella and her kind godmother, and little brave Jack with his beanstalk, have all vanished from the world and only live now in story-books and on the lips of mothers and nurses.

But in these funny old times of which I am going to tell you, even the big people believed that a great many races of strange and beautiful creatures lived in this world beside them, and helped to take care of it, and sometimes to make it a better place. Among these creatures were many beautiful maidens who were called nymphs, and who, like our friends the fairy folk, lived in the woods and glens and forests and in the mountains. The work given them to do (for they were not idle) was to see that the brooks and rivers flowed clear and bright, that the flowers in the valleys grew and the trees blossomed, and that the herds and flocks were kept from harm. For in that old time the springs and fountains, rivers, mountains and trees, and everything that we are now taught to call the works of nature, were worshipped as living beings, who gave life and health and blessing to all around them, and this beautiful thought has been wrought into many delightful stories which people love to read now, and carved into statues and painted into pictures which many travel a long, long way to see.

Now in a part of the world where the sun always shone, and the days passed by like a bright summer holiday, there lived and grew a beautiful youth who was called Narcissus. All his days were passed in the woods and valleys and under the bright open sky, and he knew where the birds built their nests and reared their little ones, where the shy little wood-flowers hid their cups under the fallen leaves, and where the enshrined tufts of moss were greenest and roundest. For playmates he had all those beautiful nymphs we have been hearing about, and when he grew weary of wandering in the forest glades, and making garlands of wild flowers, he could lie down beside some cool rippling stream, or play with the sparkling diamond sprays of a fountain. Everybody liked to be with Narcissus, because he was very beautiful to look upon, so tall and straight and fair; but he had one very sad fault, which to any one who knew him well and looked closely at him, threw an ugly shadow, like a veil, over his beauty. Narcissus cared for no one except himself.

All the keen pleasure of giving back love and affection was denied to him; and, as it always brings a warmer glow to our hearts to give out than to take in, you may be sure that even Narcissus would have had a happier life if he had had a friend to care for and to love.

Among his playmates, the one who loved him the most was a nymph called Echo. Now we know what a very silly and foolish maiden Echo is, and how she cannot speak at all till some one else speaks, and even then can only repeat what others have said, whether it is wise or foolish. But I must tell you that this was not always the case. Echo was once a lively and gay nymph, who spoke so much and so fast that if she had lived in our day I think we should have called her a chatterbox. And this same gift of speech which she might have used to some good end, led her once into the great sin of deception, and as a punishment, the gods, who ruled the world in those days, decreed that never more should Echo utter words of her own framing. So, partly because of this sad disgrace, and partly because Narcissus would show her no love or kindness, poor Echo pined and faded away till nothing of her was left but the voice which children yet love to rouse among the rocks with gay repetitions of their own names. Even in those days, you see, though people had not the bright hope that we have to help them to do right, they yet knew very well that wrong-doing is always followed by punishment. And because of this sad fault of hers, poor Echo could never again speak anything true, or pure, or kind out of her own heart, but always only imitate the thoughts and wishes and words of other people.

And something very sad happened to Narcissus too, because of this ugly black spot in his heart, for he lived on from day to day in a dream of loveliness which he thought was made for himself alone, and took all the wonders of the woodland, the warmth of the sunshine, and the gladness of health and life as so many tributes to his youth and his beauty, and not as delights given him to share with others.

It came to pass that one day, wearied with sport, he left his playmates and wandered alone in a shady glade of the forest. And so, with lingering, enjoying footsteps he came at length to a corner where the shade fell cool and deep, and the flowers grew into perfect life and beauty, fed by a fountain which stood in their midst. It lay like a clear, shining mirror, set in a border of greenest moss. Stooping down by its rim to drink of its pure waters, Narcissus, gazing into the cool depths, saw, gazing back at him, a face of wonderful beauty.

Was it the Naiad of the spring who had come thus to greet him? Ah no! It would have been better far for the youth if it had been so, for then by the power of giving love he would have escaped from the prison in which this wicked self had shut up his heart. This vision of beauty which entranced him so was only the reflection of his own face, which smiled as he smiled, and gave back all his fleeting expressions. Could anything have been sadder than this? For so dear to him was this new pleasure, that day by day he returned to the fountain and fed himself afresh with gazing.

By-and-by his playmates found out this haunt of his; but in vain did they try to entice him away with lures of some freshly-discovered flower, some newly-invented sports. Narcissus had become servant to the hardest of all masters, and the chains which bound him to his own companionship were too hard for him to break. Morning succeeding morning found him ever by the mossy well, vainly trying to reach this mocking vision, which seemed to rise towards him as he stooped, but always eluded his grasp.

And so, caring for nothing else but this hopeless pursuit, and growing daily sadder and more weary, trying always, and failing always, the face in the fountain began to grow wan and thin too, and gave him back no more smiles or bright glances. So there came a day at length when the youth who had so long haunted this quiet spot was seen no more. The face had vanished from the fountain, and its depths reflected only the reeds and grasses and the green canopy overhead. And his playmates coming once more to entreat him to join them, found his place empty, and, though they searched the woods and called for him long and loudly, there was no answer save the plaintive voice of Echo, who gave back the accents of his name. Coming back to the hill with sorrowful hearts, one of them saw on the spot where he had been used to kneel, a cluster of tall and fragrant blossoms, newly sprung up, and then they knew that their old companion was gone from them for ever, and that this fragile flower was all that was left to them—a tender memory, always springing fresh and lovely by the crystal fountain.

Some of you who live in great cities where poor flowers cannot breathe and grow, like, I know, to rise up early in the morning and go to one of the great markets where there are for sale large baskets full of sweet-smelling blossoms, with the dew which fell on them in some country garden, lingering on their petals still.

In the spring-time, just when the violets are almost over, you will see great golden and white bunches of daffodils, and when you give your pence in exchange for one of these, and take it home to make your room gay and sweet, perhaps you will remember the lesson taught by this tender old fable, and think of the youth who gave his name to the flowers.

For, I fear, the spirit of Narcissus still lingers in this world, and that there are yet boys and girls too, who fall in love with their own image, and who make every person and thing around them only a mirror in which to reflect themselves. There is no more hopeless love than this; it hems us in and shuts us out from all truth and beauty and goodness, and slowly but surely cuts the very life out of us. Keep the mirror of your heart pure and shining and bright with other reflections than your own; if you make it as a picture-gallery wherein to store the clear and living faces of your friends, you will find in your fountain depths of joy which poor Narcissus never knew.—G. Keith Johnstone, in "Good Things."

Cold wind, Cold wind,
You may whistle shrilly;
Snug in bed this Christmas eve,
Lies our little Willy.

Round moon, round moon,
O'er the snow you glisten;
You may hear our Willy laugh
If you will but listen.

—Selected.

OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM CHICAGO.

MRS. JULIA WARD HOWE, in a recent visit to this city, read her essay on "Paternity" before the Chicago Woman's Club. This subject has as yet received but little attention, most of the time and argument having been generously bestowed on the other side. Mrs. Howe began by alluding with grave sarcasm to Napoleon's sagacious remark: "France needs mothers." The arrogant folly of this bit of Cesarism is none the less apparent because of the corrupt social state of the time in which it was spoken. That the man who had done the most to bereave mothers should so pompously decree that France needed mothers, was a true Napoleonic hit. In spite of their dissoluteness and shallowness, mothers loved their children then, as they always had before, and as they will ever continue to love them. "There is no missing link in motherhood," said the speaker. Woman for the most part fulfils her share of this relation, both on the practical and ideal side, but "paternity as well as maternity has its ideal aspect," and this men have been slow to learn; it is a new truth which women are to teach them. Men have been very free to urge the necessity to society of an enlightened motherhood, and cannot take it amiss, if in looking at the number of homes where the "mother is vigilant, wise and tender," we raise the question whether the one thing lacking be not fatherhood. "The birth of the child surprises both parents with the revelation of an unselfish affection," and in each alike the light of this revelation should illumine the path of duty.

Mrs. Howe thought that Jesus did not assume that women only need instruction in this matter, and that the cares and responsibilities of parentage fall chiefly upon her. It is undoubtedly true, as she said, that he had many things to say to men about virtue and faithfulness; but when she proceeded with the assertion that "it was by upholding the ideal of fatherhood, that Jesus expected to revolutionize the world," one cannot but wonder how she makes out her case. The words of Jesus are continually being given new and strange significations. The world is fond of reflecting back the lustre of its new discoveries in thought and finding their source and secret spring in some one of the parable-like sentences. Biblical critics are pretty well agreed that it is hard to determine just what he did say. It is still more difficult to determine what he meant. Nothing is easier, as Lewes has somewhere said, than to read new meanings into old words.

The essayist concluded by saying that as society developed, the "dignity of human relations becomes more evident," and that an excellent final test to the professors of our colleges, when every year they send out their crowd of "youthful omniscience," might be put in the words, "show us the father." The greater portion of the paper was taken up with a consideration of the difference in moral standards between the sexes. This subject affords food for much unpleasant thinking; but it is one which above all others requires careful, honest, unabashed investigation, and that by refined and cultivated woman, before permanent cure of the evils of society can be wrought. In the discussion which followed some of us rated the men in fine style. Women like to revenge themselves by an occasional public scold, for the private petting and humoring they are expected to practice at home. But you will be glad to learn, Mr. Editor, that others took your part, and with sparkling eyes and flushed cheeks proclaimed your merits and descanted on your virtues, until the rest of us hung our diminished heads and were more than ever disgusted with men for giving us occasion to make them a topic of discussion at all. Woman is always a good partisan, especially on the side where her heart is engaged. If she is not too much of a lover to make a good missionary, she is, at least, too little of a friend. She needs to add wisdom to her zeal, and to be able to inflict a pain which shall hurt, not herself, but one she loves better.

Your special correspondent, Rev. E. P. Powell, will not, it is to be feared, tell you much concerning his own work here. It is a good work, well begun, and promising, after slow and steady effort, a splendid fulfilment, of which I shall speak more in detail at another time. Just now I wish to call attention to a list of books prepared by him for the "ethical culture of the young." Printed copies of the list are to be scattered through the pews, for the assistance of parents in the selection of books for their children. The list is arranged under separate heads; as Poetry, Essays, Science, etc. In the remarks heading the list, Mr. Powell says, that though "intended to cover the needs of those between twelve and twenty, most persons of advanced age will not find a more grateful assortment." All the selections are, to use a society phrase, first class, but of these there is a creme de la creme, a shorter list for those who do not care to purchase the complete catalogue. Among these A No. 1. authors we find such names as Hertz, author of "King Rene's Daughter," Longfellow and Whittier in poetry; in science, Faraday, Mace, and Nordhoff; in fiction, Auerbach, Reuter, Mrs. Charles, and MacDonald; while history and biography are represented by the "Life of Audubon," Irving's "Washington," "Life of Stephenson," Sparks' biographies, etc. I have, of course, been able to select but few names and shall have to leave much to the reader's imagination.

Last Sunday morning Mr. Powell took for his topic, small sins—"Dust-sins" he called them, which settle down on us from nobody knows where. The discourse was delivered in the speaker's usual terse, and epigrammatic style, to which you listen with finger-ends that tingle to jot down some of the close-cropped sentences. One of the small sins is waste. Mr. Powell deplores the loss of time occasioned by the "tramps in rags and the tramps in silks," who haunt our doors. A slight degree of irritability is a safeguard which we are sometimes justified in using against such intruders. Alas! a slight degree may fall short of your need, for while you are considering how slight it ought to be, your food and clothing have disappeared through the back door, and your time and courtesy flown out at the front, and you are left bare and comfortable. "I must be conservative of that which makes me ablest, preservative of that which makes me noblest and purest," was one of the thoughts given. Another, in connection with the petty vice of fault-finding, was put in the form of a question: "What shall we do with the faults of people after we have found them?" We must be careful that "our dispositions do not become curdled," and not think ourselves defrauded because we do not find a real companion in every new acquaintance. Speaking of the rarity of close human companionship, he said: "To whom can you tell your best thought; to whom would you dare tell your worst?" In the evening, at vesper service, Mr. Powell dwelt on moral courage and thoroughness as two of the gifts which Paul must have had in mind when he bade us seek the best things. The dread of the average mind for scientific pursuits came from the accuracy required, and not the depth of the studies themselves. Religious culture also requires persistency and effort and completeness of purpose. "A careless soul cannot approximate the genius of a true religious life." Mr. Powell always takes hopeful views of the situation, and thinks "life is a capital affair." This reminds me of a bit of magazine poetry, with which I will close:

"Only to live. There nothing is more sweet.
Only to live. There nothing is more bitter.
Only to live, when flowers are at the feet
And overhead the happy swallows twitter.
Only to live. There nothing is more sweet.
Only to live, when flies the angry sleet,
And the head bows above a dead love's litter.
Only to live. There nothing is more bitter."

CELIA P. WOOLLEY.

NEW CHURCH IN BOSTON.

BOSTON, Feb. 12, 1877.

To The Editor of The Inquirer:

You will be glad to know that this movement seems completely successful. No effort whatever had been made to force or crowd an audience. The preliminary arrangements were wholly private. A single announcement in the papers that a new church was proposed completely filled the large and beautiful Union Hall. After the service a sufficient number of persons subscribed as members of the new society to leave no doubt of its going forward with as much spirit as it began with.

It was particularly interesting to note the character of the assembly. While it represented persons of all ages and classes, there was still a large majority of young men, and a large majority of young men is on the list of members already obtained. It was noticeable, also, that the new church took up its singing and responses with promptness and enthusiasm such as one does not always see in old societies, seventy or eighty persons remaining to practice singing, in preparation for next Sunday. Families as well as individuals are represented in the membership, and the admirable arrangements for the Sunday school and Bible classes warrant the expectation of successful work there.

The truth is that this enterprise would have succeeded, had it been anybody's special concern to start it, two or three years ago. The number of persons is very large, who, with every wish to join their brethren in worship, cannot or will not invest money in pews. Probably the line of pew-buyers is nearly marked by the line of house-buyers, and just those people who hire houses or apartments on short rents, that they may be at liberty to move within six months to Yokohama or to Omaha, are the people who wish to take their seats and privileges in church on a like tenure. Such people, however, are not easily satisfied, by the proposals of the older churches, that they shall hire pews till some one wants to buy them, with no share in the government of the congregation, and liable to be moved out at a week's notice. Women, perhaps, take such a fate more kindly than men, being a little used to it, but they do not like it, and men like it less.

That there is work for a new church to do in Boston is clear on all sides. That there is a constituency, not already united in our churches, is as certain. Every religious movement here shows that Boston is at heart liberal, under whatever name men be marshalled. A distinctive liberal church movement appeals, therefore, to the common feeling of the whole city. It flies the local colors and has no occasion to apologize for its symbols.

It is an interesting fact that the two largest churches in the city—Dr. Lorimer's and Mr. Murray's—are organized on the business principle of quarterly rents for seats. I suppose their annual receipts to be larger than those of any other churches.

Respectfully yours,

F. I.

JOTTINGS.

BROOKLYN.—We have received the tenth annual report of the Brooklyn Union for Christian Work, from which it appears that this admirably managed institution still grows in favor and efficiency. It is established upon a most catholic and unsectarian basis, and is becoming more and more an agency for the supply of both the mental and physical wants of its beneficiaries. During the month just passed it has been largely engaged in caring for the sufferers by the Brooklyn Theatre disaster, and its work in that direction has been prosecuted with great care. Busy people who have money to spare for the destitute will be likely to do much more good by making an almoner of such an organization as this, than by responding to the indiscriminate personal calls which are made upon them.

ST. JOHN'S GUILD. MARTHA WASHINGTON RECEPTION AND GARDEN PARTY.—On Washington's Birth Day the annual entertainment given by St. John's Guild, in aid of the destitute poor, promises to be a scene of unusual attraction to the lovers of the beautiful. There will be a grand floral display and garden party. Nilsson Hall will be used for this part of the entertainment, and will be fitted up in arbors, named for fourteen different nations, filled with plants and flowers and presided over by distinguished ladies. Many of these are natives of the countries represented and will be attired in costumes of their native land. The Grand Duke Alexis, of Russia, and many Russian officers are also expected. The Bernstein orchestra and Grafulla and Downing's bands will enliven the evening with their music. We hope there will be a large and increased interest in the work of this Guild by all who can aid the suffering poor.

CALVIN used to play bowls on Sunday, and once John Knox joined him in a game. There were but few Sabbatarians then.

A WEALTHY Copenhagen brewer, J. C. Jacobsen, has given the sum of a million of crowns for the promotion of mathematics, natural science, the science of language, history and philosophy.

THE Boston Journal says that the Directors of the Boston Art Museum have unanimously voted to open their beautiful rooms free to the public on Sunday afternoons, from March 1st to November 1st, from 1 to 5 o'clock P. M.

A NEW Unitarian church was started on Sunday in Union Hall, Boylston St. This movement is apparently in the interest of those who cannot afford high priced services. Rev. E. E. Hale preached the opening sermon, which was, of course, suggestive and characteristic.

IN the Horticultural Hall Course, Rev. J. W. Chadwick delivered a carefully prepared lecture upon "Emanuel Swedenborg." Mr. Chadwick has given much study and thought to the preparation of this lecture, which was originally written for delivery in his church in Brooklyn.

BOSTON.—Rev. J. F. W. Ware gave the third in the course of sermons to young people last Sunday evening to a very large and attentive audience. His subject was, "Young Man's Duty to Society and the Public." The sermon was eloquent and forcible, abounding in wise counsel to the young.

NEWPORT.—The ladies of Rev. Mr. Kimball's church are felicitating themselves upon the procurement of a new organ, for which they have labored long and faithfully. May it ever breathe forth the sweetest music, charm away sorrow, and open up new visions into the super-sensual.

ALL SOULS' CHURCH.—Dr. Bellows will preach in Washington next Sunday, his pulpit being supplied in the morning by Rev. George Merriam, formerly one of the editors of the Christian Union, and in the evening by Mr. John Fretwell, Jr., who will read his lecture on "Servetus."

THE Moody and Sankey meetings continue very successful, and continue to call for much comment from the pulpits. On Sunday Rev. M. J. Savage discoursed on "Mr. Moody's Man, or his Doctrine of Human Nature," before a very large audience, and was clear and incisive, not in denunciation of Mr. Moody or of his honesty of intention, but of the basis upon which he builds, and the whole superstructure which he raises upon it.

THE Unitarian Sunday School Association of London has just published the fifth volume of the Bible for young people, containing a Historical sketch of Jesus and the Apostolic Age; the Birth and Youth of Jesus; His Galilean ministry and the Journey to Jerusalem. This is a translation by Rev. Philip Henry Wicksteed of a Dutch work by Docters Oort and Hooykaas, and will be found more useful to Sunday school teachers and students than to the very young.

THE following are the sizes of the largest churches in Europe: St. Peter's, at Rome, will hold 54,000 people; Milan Cathedral, 37,000; St. Paul's at Rome, 32,000; St. Paul's, at London, 35,600; St. Petronio, at Bologna, 24,400; Florence Cathedral, 24,300; Antwerp Cathedral, 24,000; St. Sophia's, Constantinople, 23,000; St. John's, Lateran, 22,900; Notre Dame, at Paris, 21,000; Pisa Cathedral, 13,000; St. Stephen's, at Vienna, 12,400; St. Dominic's, at Bologna, 12,000; St. Peter's at Bologna, 11,400; Cathedral of Vienna, 11,000; St. Mark's, at Venice, 7,000; Spurgeon's Tabernacle, 7,000.

On the 18th of August, 1618, the prosperous village of Plurs, in the Grisons canton of Switzerland, was buried by a land-slide. Nine hundred persons lost their lives by the casualty, and the village with its two hundred dwellings, its churches with their art treasures, and its shops with their valuable contents of gold, copper and lava wares, for which it was famous, has remained buried to the present day. A jointstock company has been formed with a capital of ten thousand francs (two thousand dollars) to disinter the buried village, and the undertaking is expected to be a highly remunerative one. The site of the village is now occupied by vineyards.

THE recent cyclone in Bengal, which has destroyed nearly a quarter of a million of people, was caused by opposing winds of great force, which raised the whole body of water some thirty feet above its ordinary height, which swept up the River Hooghly unopposed. A writer says: "The total area of the inundated districts is about 4,000 square miles, or more than half as large as Wales; and out of a grand population of 1,062,000 people, 215,000 are estimated to have perished. When, in the fifteenth century, the sea broke in at Dort, in Holland, and drowned 72 villages, 100,000 persons lost their lives; and about a hundred years later (A.D. 1530), four times that number are said to have been drowned, owing to a general inundation by the failure of the Dutch dykes. The Bengal catastrophe is therefore, bad as it is, not the very worst that has happened.

Advertisement.

HALL'S Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer has for many years occupied an honorable place in the toilet of American women, and has also attained popularity in foreign countries. This is because it does perform what it promises. Its warmest friends are those who have used it longest, and those who sound its praise the loudest are those who, from actual experience and personal trial, have demonstrated that by its use gray hair is restored to its natural color and dry, harsh and wiry hair is made soft and lustrous, a thing of beauty and a matter of joy and pride to the wearer.—Sub-Soiler and Democrat, Corinth, Miss.

The Inquirer.

Published every Thursday, from the middle of September to the middle of July, in the Park Bank Building, 214 Broadway, New York.

To be in season for insertion the same week, communications intended for publication must be forwarded in time to reach this office not later than Tuesday. No attention is paid to anonymous communications. We require the name and address of every writer, not necessarily for publication, but as guarantees of good faith.

Communications relating to the editorial department of the paper should be addressed, "Editor of the Inquirer, P. O. Box 109, New York City;" all others to "Publisher," same address.

No person is authorized to collect money or make contracts for the Inquirer, who cannot show written authority from the Publisher.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

Three Dollars per year, in advance. Clergymen, Two Dollars per year. Postage, Twenty Cents per year, in advance. Remittances should be made by Registered Letter or by Post-Office Money Order, or Draft on New York payable to PUBLISHER OF THE INQUIRER.

ADVERTISING RATES.

Six cents per agate line per week; outside page and pages next reading matter, ten cents per line. Special Notices twenty cents per line.

Discount on Five or more insertions will be given at similar rates to all parties.

Copy for Thursday's paper received until Tuesday afternoon.

Advertisements must be acceptable in every respect.

Office, PARK BANK BUILDING, 214 Broadway.

Address,

THE INQUIRER,

Box 109, New York.

Special Notices.

Protestant Leaders.

A COURSE OF LECTURES

BY

JOHN W. CHADWICK.

AT THE

Second Unitarian Church, Brooklyn,

Corner of Clinton and Congress Streets.

1876—77.

LECTURES:

VI. Murray and Universalism.

Sunday evening, March 4, 1877.

VII. Thomas Paine: His Relation to his own and later Times in Matters of Religion.

Sunday evening, April 1, 1877.

VIII. Channing and Unitarianism.

Sunday evening, April 15, 1877.

IX. Theodore Parker.

Sunday evening, May 6, 1877.

Hour of Lecture, Half-Past Seven.

Morning Service at 10:35 precisely. Vesper Service, Third Sunday Evening of each Month, with the above exceptions.

The Address of Rev. John F.

LOCKE is to the care of W. H. Baldwin, President Young Men's Christian Union, 18 Boylston St., Boston.

"Sulphuret Oil of Roses."—An External Remedy, almost miraculous in its effect. By absorption it eradicates Rheumatic Pains, Neuralgia, Nervousness and Throat Diseases. Sufferers failing to give this remedy a trial do themselves positive injustice. Price, $\frac{1}{2}$ oz., 50 cts.; 2 oz., \$3.00. FLAVILLE, BRO. & CO., Proprietors, 30 Franklin St., Boston. $\frac{1}{2}$ N. B.—An Energetic Agent wanted in each Town.

"Admirably fitted to teach the art from the very beginning."—Chicago Tribune.

"Mr. Hope is one of the 'old masters' in this sort of work. He has prepared an excellent work, in which his subject is treated fully and clearly."—Chicago Post.

"Altogether the best book that can be placed in the hands of the amateur."—N. Y. Graphic.

"The diagrams are excellent and the instructions clear and direct."—N. Y. Evening Post.

SORRENTO AND INLAID WORK FOR

AMATEURS, BY ARTHUR HOPE.

A practical manual of Scroll-Sawing, Overlaying, Polishing, Inlaying, Silhouettes, &c. Containing 80 full-sized designs, new and beautiful. The designs are worth more than price of book. Tastefully bound in muslin. For sale by booksellers generally. Sent by mail on receipt of price, $1.50. Descriptive circular mailed to any address.

JOHN WILKINSON, Publisher, 55 Lake St., Chicago.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, 125 Fifth Ave., New York.

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY

Manufacture those celebrated Bells for CHURCHES, ACADEMIES, &c. Price List and Circulars sent free. HENRY McSHANE & CO. BALTIMORE, MD.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from active practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of consumption, bronchitis, catarrh, asthma and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for nervous debility and all nervous complaints, after having thoroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, feels it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive, and a conscientious desire to relieve human suffering, he will send, free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, with full directions for preparing and successfully using. Sent by return mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, DR. W. C. STEVENS,

125 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

BLUMYER MFG CO
BELLS
CHURCH, SCHOOL, FIRE-ALARM
Fine toned, low priced, fully warranted. Catalogues giving full particulars, prices, etc., sent free.
BLUMYER MANUFACTURING CO.,
664 to 694 West Eighth St., Cincinnati, O.

THE HOWARD INSURANCE COMPANY, OF NEW YORK.—OFFICE NO 56 WALL STREET.

Cash Capital $500,000.—Chartered in 1825.

This Company insures property against loss or Damage by Fire and the risks of Inland Navigation and Transportation, on the most favorable terms.

SAM'L T. SKIDMORE, President.

HENRY A. OAKLEY, Vice-President.

DIRECTORS:

SAMUEL T. SKIDMORE,
THOMAS W. GALE,
JOHN H. SWIFT,
JAMES R. TAYLOR,
HENRY J. SQUIDDER,
HENRY A. OAKLEY,
CHARLES MALL,
HENRY I. BARREY,
WILLIAM H. WISNER,
ALEXANDER MAITLAND.

CHARLES A. HULL, Secretary.

RICHARD W. CLARK, Asst. Sec'y.

Ayer's Cathartic Pills,

For all the purposes of a Family Physic, and for curing Costiveness, Jaundice, Indigestion, Foul Stomach, Breath, Headache, Erysipelas, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Biliousness, Dropsy, Tumors, Worms, Neuralgia, as a Dinner Pill, for Purifying the Blood,

Are the most effective and congenial purgative ever discovered. They are mild, but effectual in their operation, moving the bowels surely and without pain. Although gentle in their operation, they are still the most thorough and searching cathartic medicine that can be employed: cleansing the stomach and bowels, and even the blood. In small doses of one pill a day, they stimulate the digestive organs and promote vigorous health.

AYER'S PILLS have been known for more than a quarter of a century, and have obtained a world-wide reputation for their virtues. They correct diseased action in the several assimilative organs of the body, and are so composed that obstructions within their range can rarely withstand or evade them. Not only do they cure the every-day complaints of everybody, but also formidable and dangerous diseases that have baffled the best of human skill. While they produce powerful effects, they are, at the same time, the safest and best physic for children. By their aperient action they gripe much less than the common purgatives, and never give pain when the bowels are not inflamed. They reach the vital fountains of the blood, and strengthen the system by freeing it from the elements of weakness.

Adapted to all ages and conditions in all climates, containing neither calomel nor any deleterious drug, these Pills may be taken with safety by anybody. Their sugar-coating preserves them ever fresh, and makes them pleasant to take; while being purely vegetable, no harm can arise from their use in any quantity.

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass.,
Practical and Analytical Chemists.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

TROY BELLS.

THE JONES & CO.
Old Established Troy Bell Foundry continue to manufacture those superior Bells which have made Troy celebrated throughout the world. All Bells Warranted Satisfactory. Particular attention given to Church Bells, Chimes and Pells of Bells. Illustrated Catalogues sent free.

LAMAR INSURANCE COMPANY, OF NEW YORK. Broadway, cor. John Street.

Capital, - - $200,000.

ASSETS, JANUARY 1, 1877.

Cash on hand and in Bank. . . . $10,414 77
U. S. Bonds, market value. . . . 300,232 50
Loans on Call, Good Stocks Collateral. . . 13,200 00
Bonds and Mortgages on Brick Dwell-
ings. . . . 56,400 00
Bills Receivable for Inland Prem's . . . 2,465 94
Premiums in course of collection. . . . 8,830 43
New York Bank Stocks market value . . 19,725 00

$411,268 64

Losses unadjusted estimated at $10,100 00

ISAAC R. ST. JOHN, President.

A. R. FROTHINGHAM, Vice Pres't.

WM. R. MACDIARMID, Sec'y.

HOME Insurance Co. of New York,

Office No. 135 Broadway.

Forty-seventh Semi-Annual Statement,

Showing the condition of the Company on the first day of January, 1877.

Cash Capital $3,000,000 00
Reserve for Re-Insurance . . 1,858,464 68
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Dividends 243,402 24
Net Surplus 1,002,783 90

Total Assets - - - $6,104,650 82

SUMMARY OF ASSETS:

CASH IN BANKS. . . . $342,311 22
BONDS AND MORTGAGES, BEING FIRST
LIEN ON REAL ESTATE WORTH $4,894,000 2,011,430 00
UNITED STATES STOCKS (MARKET VALUE) 2,517,625 00
BANK STOCKS (MARKET VALUE) . . . 286,072 50
STATE AND CITY BONDS (MARKET VALUE) 185,433 00
LOANS ON STOCKS PAYABLE ON DEMAND
(MARKET VALUE OF SECURITIES, $709,373) 72,397 65
INTEREST DUE ON 1st JANUARY, 1877. . . 6,500 19
BALANCE IN HAND OF AGENTS. . . . 153,116 06
REAL ESTATE. . . . 6,500 19
PREMIUMS DUE AND UNCOLLECTED ON
POLICIES ISSUED AT THIS OFFICE. . . . 8,330 26

Total - - - $6,104,650 82

LIABILITIES.

CLAIMS FOR LOSSES OUTSTANDING ON 1st
JANUARY, 1877. . . . $242,027 24
DIVIDENDS UNPAID. . . . 1,375 00

Total, - - - $243,402 24

CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.

J. H. WASHBURN, Secretary.

THE NEW JERSEY MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.

J. H. STEDWELL, President.

C. H. BRINKERHOFF, Secretary.

J. H. CANNIFF, Cashier.

AGENTS

double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved" Receipt Book." Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free.
STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

Made of best material, in all sizes, for Adults and Children of both sexes; expands the chest, straightens up stooped shoulders; worth ten times its cost for Children and Students. Sold by the Trade and Cleveland, Ohio. Send $1.25 and chest measure. Ask for Pratt's new Patent Brace.

ATLANTIC MUTUAL INSURANCE CO

NEW YORK.

OFFICE 51 WALL ST.

ORGANIZED 1842.

INSURES AGAINST MARINE AND INLAND
NAVIGATION RISKS.

And will issue Policies making Loss payable
in England.

Its Assets for the Security of its Policies
are more than

TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured, are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated in the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearing interest until redeemed.

JOHN D. JONES, President.

CHARLES DENNIS, Vice-President.

W. H. H. MOORE, 2d Vice-President.

A. A. RAVEN, 3d Vice-President.

J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

PHENIX

INSURANCE COMPANY,

OF BROOKLYN, N. Y.

January 1st, 1877.

Capital $1,000,000 00

Gross Surplus 1,792,902 92

Gross Assets $2,792,902 92

OFFICES:

Western Union Telegraph Building, BROAD-
WAY, Cor. DEY St., New York.

Brooklyn Office, 12 & 14 Court St.
Brooklyn E. D. Office, 98 Broadway.

The benefits to be derived by the public from Insurance against loss by fire are so great and numerous, when compared with its trifling cost, as to render it an imperative duty on every one to avail themselves of the protection afforded by the PHENIX INSURANCE COMPANY against the destructive ravages of FIRE, which in a few moments may lay waste the fruits of a whole life of industry.

STEPHEN CROWELL, President.

PHILANDER SHAW, Vice President.

WILLIAM E. CROWELL, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED A. D. 1850.

THE MANHATTAN LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

OF

NEW YORK,

has paid $6,500,000 Death Claims:
has paid $4,500,000 return premiums to Policy-holders: has a surplus of more than $1,000,000 over Liabilities; and a ratio of $120 Assets for every $100 Liabilities, by New York Standard of Valuation. It gives the best Insurance on the best lives at the most favorable rates.

EXAMINE THE PLANS AND RATES OF THIS COM-PANY.

HENRY STOKES, C. Y. WEMPLE,
President. Vice-President.

J. L. HALSEY, S. N. STEBBINS,
Secretary. Actuary

H. Y. WEMPLE, Assistant Secretaries.

H. B. STOKES

$55 & $77 a Week to Agents. $10 Outfit Free.
P. O. VICKERY, Augusta, Maine.

Miscellaneous.

Music Books for Reed Organs.

CLARKE'S NEW METHOD

For Reed Organs, ($2.50) is universally known as one of rare merit, both in the instructive course, and the well-chosen airs for practice.

GETZE'S SCHOOL

For Parlor Organ, ($2.50). The sale of more than 30,000 copies is the best proof of its great popularity.

EMERSON'S NEW METHOD

For Reed Organs, ($2.50) is the work of two distinguished musicians, and is equal to the best.

ROOT'S SCHOOL

For the Cabinet Organ, ($2.50) is one of the oldest and best methods. Widely known and used.

CLARKE'S $1 INSTRUCTOR

For Reed Organs, is an abbreviated but very good method for beginners.

WINNER'S NEW SCHOOL

For Cabinet Organ, (75 cts.) is the cheapest, and an excellent, easy instruction book.

ORGAN AT HOME,

($2.50 bds.; $3 clo.; $4 gilt) has 200 well chosen Reed Organ pieces.

Either book mailed, post-free, for Retail Price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

C. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 Broadway,
New York

J. E. DITSON & CO.,
Successors to Lee & Walker,
Philadelphia.

Simplest! Surest!! Best!!!

THE LIGHT RUNNING

SEWING MACHINE

Is the most satisfactory machine ever offered to families.

It makes a double-thread lock-stitch; has the Automatic, self-regulating Tension and Take-up, conical steel bearings, compensating journal, and is noiseless.

It does not fatigue the muscles or irritate the nerves; sews every fabric, and has never failed to give perfect satisfaction.

"DOMESTIC" SEWING MACHINE CO.,

Cor. Broadway and Fourteenth St.,

New York City.

THE BUTLER HEALTH
LIFT EXERCISE.

Commended by Highest Medical Authority.

A SCIENTIFIC SYSTEM of Concentrated Cumulative Exercise, adapted to the Preservation and Restoration of Health.

Principal Office, Spacious and well ventilated,
PARK BANK BUILDING, NO. 214 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK.

BROOKLYN: NO. 158 REMSEN STREET.

PARLORS FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN.

Call, or address

LEWIS G. JANES, Proprietor.

A Home and Farm

OF YOUR OWN

On the line of a GREAT RAILROAD, with good markets both EAST and WEST.

NOW IS THE TIME TO SECURE IT.

Mild Climate, Fertile Soil, Best Country for Stock Raising in the United States.

Books, Maps, Full information, also "THE PIONEER," sent free to all parts of the world.

Address,

F. DAVIS,
Land Commissioner, U. P. R. R.,
OMAHA, NEB.

Miscellaneous.

STEARNS & BEALE,

STATIONERS,

BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS,

PRINTING and LITHOGRAPHY,

147 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

(Between Broadway and Nassau Street.)

JOEL W. STEARNS.

WM. P. BEALE.

"The best Review in America for popular reading and instruction."

INTERNATIONAL REVIEW.

MARCH-APRIL, now ready.

I.—THE ADMINISTRATION OF PRESIDENT GRANT.—A review of the important Acts of the outgoing administration, with criticisms on its policy, its opportunities, and its influence at home and abroad, by an Independent Republican.

II.—THEORY AND PRACTICE IN ARCHITECTURE, by James C. Bayles of the Iron Age, discusses the means known to architectural science for producing safety in public buildings, including the methods of preventing and extinguishing fires; also, the difficulties in the way of putting in practice architectural theories.

III.—GERMAN-COMIC PAPERS, by Julius Duboc, of Dresden, describes the comic journals published in the German language in Europe, and their effect upon German social and political affairs.

IV.—TWO NORSE SAGAS, by Professor Hjalmar H. Boyesen of Cornell University, is a review of the Norse stories recently translated by Professor Anderson, and serves to illustrate the Saga Civilization by them revived.

V.—RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT, by Van Buren Denslow, LL.D., of Union Law College, Chicago.

VI.—THE UNIVERSITY OF UP-SALA, by Dr. Carl M. Thorden of Sweden, presents an account of the location, origin and academic constitution of this great University, with observations on the government and life of the students. This University celebrates its fourth centenary during the present year, and great preparations are being made for the event.

VII.—JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL AND MODERN LITERARY CRITICISM, by Ray Palmer, is an analysis of the critical powers of Lowell, with comments on the province and duties of criticism.

The Review also contains a sonnet, "Two Past Ages," by Charles (Tennyson) Turner of England; Mr. Hamerton's letter on Art in Europe; the usual scientific notes and comments on public events.

During 1877 the Review will devote space to European matters so far as they are likely to be interesting to Americans. It will introduce the most popular foreign authors to compete for favor with the best American writers. It will aim to be able, strong and practical in the character and style of its presentations. It is safe to say that no other magazine in the world can supply its place in the libraries of Americans who love to consider the progress of events throughout the world, and to know their bearing upon the interests of the United States.

It is not known that there is any reason why copies of the Review should not be found in every household. It has already the largest circulation of any secular Review, because of its popular attractions. These attractions will be developed gradually, and increase as their need is made manifest.

For sale by Newsdealers and Booksellers.

Price, $1 a Number. $5 a Year (Six Numbers).

A. S. BARNES & CO., Publishers,
111 & 113 William St., N. Y.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine.

$12 a day at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine.

MISFIT CARPETS.

English Brussels, Three Ply and Ingrain; also, Stair Carpets, Velvet Rugs, Crumb Cloths, etc., very cheap, AT THE OLD PLACE.

112 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

Carpets carefully packed and sent to any part of the United States free of charge.

SEND FOR PRICE LIST.

Miscellaneous.

OVINGTON BROTHERS,

246, 248, 250 and 252 Fulton Street,

BROOKLYN.

Fine China, Glass, Clocks,
Bronzes, etc., etc.

Just Received Invoices of

COPENHAGEN VASES,
LIMOGES FAIENCE VASES,
AND DOULTON WARE.

Lectures and Sermons,

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

FIRST SERIES.

The Education of Conscience.

Self Respect.

The Higher Reverence.

God on our Side.

Man and the Bible.

The Best Use of Sunday.

SECOND SERIES.

The Essential Piety of Modern Science.

A Rational Church.

Economy and Waste.

Immortal Life.

Also, WAY, TRUTH AND LIFE, a Biography of N. A. Staples, with sermons, price, $1.00.

For sale by CHARLES P. SOMERBY, 139 Eighth St., New York. Copies sent by mail at the rate of five cents each and postage.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.

Established in 1837.

Superior Bells of Copper and Tin, mounted with the best Rotary Hangings, for Churches, Schools, Farms, Factories, Court-houses, Fire Alarms, Tower Clocks, etc. Fully Warranted.

Illustrated Catalogue sent Free.

VANDUSEN & TIER, 102 E. 2d St., Cincinnati.

10 PER CENT NET.

Kansas, Missouri and Iowa Improved Farm First Mortgage Coupon Bonds Guaranteed. We guarantee, as an assurance, that we loan not to exceed one third of the actual value. In over six years' business never lost a dollar; never delayed a day on interest or principal; no investor through us ever did or ever will get an acre of land under foreclosure. Send for particulars and references.

J. B. WATKINS & CO., LAWRENCE, KAN., or
HENRY DICKINSON, Manager, 30 Pine Street,
New York

BALD HEADS

Can be covered with a piece exactly fitted to the Bald spot, so perfect, and with work so ingeniously contrived as to appear each hair just issuing from the skin, the hair being exactly of the same shade and texture as the growing hair; they are so perfect they cannot be detected. Made only at BATCHELOR'S Celebrated Wig Factory, 16 Bond Street, N. Y.

HAIR DYE.

BATCHELOR'S CELEBRATED HAIR DYE is splendid. It never fails. The only true and perfect Dye. Harmless, reliable, instantaneous. No disappointment, no ridiculous tints; remedies the ill effects of bad dyes, leaves the hair soft and beautiful Black or Brown. Sold and per. applied at BATCHELOR'S Wig Factory, 16 Bond St., N. Y. Sold by all druggists.

W. A. Batchelor's Curative Ointment
Immediately cures Ring-Worm, Tetter, Itching of the Head, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Face or Body.

W. A. Batchelor's Alaska Seal Oil
for the Hair. The best Hair Oil in use.

W. A. Batchelor's Dentifrice
for beautifying and preserving the teeth and Gums and deodorizing the breath.

W. A. Batchelor's New Cosmetique,
Black or Brown, for tinting the Hair, Whiskers or Moustaches without greasing them. Sold at factory, 16 Bond Street, New York, and by all druggists. Ask for them.

J. A. BENDALL.

THE INQUIRER.

VOL. XXXII.—NO. 12.
WHOLE NO., 1582.

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 22, 1877.

{ $3.00 PER ANNUM.
8 CENTS A COPY.

CONTENTS:

EDITORIAL NOTES.....	197
LEADING ARTICLES:
Rev. Mr. Cook.....	198
Eighteenth Century English Thought. IV.....	199
Apropos of Dr. Arnold.....	200
LITERATURE:
An Introduction to Political Economy.....	202
A Princess of Thule, and Madcap Violet.....	202
Brief Notices.....	202
March Magazines.....	202
Literary Notes.....	203
New Publications Received.....	203
ART NOTES:
The Water-Color Exhibition. II.....	203
BRIEF SELECTIONS.....	204
HEARTH AND HOME:
Once.....	205
Joseph and Benjamin. Chapter V.....	205
OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE:
"Too Knowing for Faith".....	206
Eleemosynary Education.....	207
At the Theatre Francaise.....	207
From Cincinnati.....	207
SPIRIT OF THE PRESS.....	208
JOTTINGS.....	209
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT.....	210

HENRY W. BELLOW, John W. Chadwick, F. W. Clarke, Octavius B. Frothingham, William H. Savage, and Charles C. Shackford, are among the contributors to this number of THE INQUIRER.

SALEM, Massachusetts, papers, also private letters from that city, give accounts of the very remarkable experiments of Professor A. Graham Bell during a lecture upon the telephone, in the Essex Institute course. A wire of the Atlantic and Pacific Telegraph Company was used as the means of communication, and we are informed that singing, speaking, sneezing, and various sounds, musical or otherwise, emanating from the Boston office, were distinctly heard, and quite intelligible, in all parts of the Salem lecture-room. Not only were the words intelligible, but it was possible to recognize the tones of the individual voice. Much curiosity will be felt in watching the development and application of this invention.

ONE of the easiest and most effective ways of doing a service to those who need it is that opened to all who pass through our ferry houses and depots, by the device of boxes to receive papers, magazines, etc., for distribution in the hospitals. These periodicals, after having been looked over by their purchasers, are frequently nothing more than a nuisance and a burden. They have no room for them in their pockets; they dislike to make a litter by throwing them away. Just at this moment appears the convenient box, and, like the late lamented Mrs. John Spratt, is ready to accept with great thankfulness precisely that of which they want to rid themselves. The Committee of the State Charities Aid Association, through its Chairman, Ellen Shaw Barlow, reports on the great service already rendered through this channel, asks for a continuance of the assistance so given, and requests that books and magazines may be sent to 52 East 20th St., New York.

A CORRESPONDENT makes, in another column, a rather broader application of the doctrine of non-interference in education than we are prepared for. We have not space this week to do more than make one or two suggestions. In the first place, the providing of educational facilities for all by the State, in one aspect, is similar to the providing of improved highways, the bridging of streams, the building of sewers, by the same power. Certain additions are made to the gifts of Nature, and they become the common property of mankind. They are like the difference of opportunity offered to the heir of the ages and to his ancestor, a part of the accumulated results of civilization. Conceding that civilization is not a mistake, care must be taken not to restrain it within narrow limits without due consideration.

With regard to special aid, a nice discrimination should be made between the results of the aid itself and the results of an injudicious mode of application, or selection of beneficiaries. We would not hastily say post hoc, ergo propter hoc.

SILVER has again sold down to 56½d., contrary to expectation in London, and is becoming so delightfully uncertain as to fire the hearts of the most desponding bi-metallists. It is really charming, now that greenbacks are reasonably steady, to know that there is one commodity which may possibly be made a legal tender, that is sufficiently variable to prevent life from becoming wholly dull and monotonous. To think of being placed in such a position as every day to know just what you could and what you could not afford to do, instead of having a pleasing uncertainty each morning as to whether you ought to walk or ride to your business! Let us ward off this stagnation by all means in our power.

Gold, or rather greenbacks, fluctuate very little, the latest quotation of gold being about 105½. Call loans command from 2½ to 3½ per cent. Failures continue to be reported from time to time, and a slight tendency is manifesting itself to postpone the date of the "good time coming."

THE New Age says: "We think that the religious and moral inquiry should be, how to enthrone justice and humanity in society, so that the causes of poverty might be removed." To this we say amen! most heartily. When it adds: "A social state in which there would be no poor and hungry multitudes, is not an idle dream," we feel that it has gone a little beyond our depth. We have a lively hope that such a social state is not an idle dream, but we do not feel so well informed as to probabilities as to be able to speak with quite such confidence.

In relation to this great question, as to so many others, there are two substantial points upon which to lay hold. The first is, that, so far as we can judge, the ideal set before us is one the attainment of which is worth every effort. The other, that all real progress is in the nature of evolution; that the present and future cannot be divorced wholly from the past, but must be rooted in it and flower from it; that cataclysms are disastrous; and that the safest future course is that into which we are led by following in orderly sequence that which has been shown in the past to be the line of progress. Whether by taking this course we shall be enabled to reach the ideal which we had previously realized in thought we can never know in advance. The universe has great possibilities, and we look forward with the utmost faith in a glorious future; how or in what special way it will show its ripened fruit we shall only see hereafter. Of this only can we be sure, that the thing for us to do is the thing which comes first to our hand in the divine order of evolution.

A REPORT having been published in the Paris newspapers that money had been collected to defray the expenses of a monument to M. Michelet, which would soon be erected, Madame Michelet writes to the Temps denying the statement and adding: "The new part of the Pere la Chaise has no water, and, as a result, neither shrubs nor flowers thrive in it. I have petitioned for, and received, permission to erect fountains in this part of the cemetery. The city of Paris has consented to lay the pipes through the grounds, and I shall have the fountains erected, and set aside a sum sufficient to keep them for all future time in repair. A simple fountain of living water will mark the place where my husband rests, nourishing the plants and slaking the thirst of the little birds."

It is probably too much to hope that any of those who are so apt to indulge in costly marble and granite memorials to such of their deceased friends as have never earned any other, will see the beauty of Madame Michelet's thought, and act accordingly. Nevertheless we gladly make record of it here and hope that it may reach some who will profit by it. Those who are familiar with the beautiful gift-book called "The Bird," which was issued a few years ago with M. Michelet's name upon the title page, will see a peculiar appropriateness in the memorial chosen by his widow.

THE Louisiana case having been decided by the joint Commission, some of the more reckless Democrats made an effort to induce their party associates to join in a movement to repudiate the whole scheme, in which, happily for the peace of the country, they were immediately squelched by the more moderate members of the party.

The counting bill having been adopted in deference to the wishes of those of both parties who desired the most equitable settlement which could be reached, irrespective and without knowledge of which candidate it would favor, any such act as that proposed would meet with the most positive reprobation of the country at large, from whomsoever it should come, Democrat or Republican. We had ourselves thought it not unlikely that the vote of Louisiana would be thrown out. We should have accepted such a decision as quietly as that which has been given, and this simply on the ground that we had agreed to abide by the result.

Were we to consider the justice of the case, we think, in a party sense, there is little choice. The action of the Returning Board was certainly a marvel in its way, but the following comparison, from the Chicago Tribune, of the majorities in 1874 and 1876 in certain of the parishes thrown out, is equally significant:

Parish.	1874.		1876.
	Dem.	Rep.	Dem.	Rep.
	maj.	maj.	maj.	maj.
East Baton Rouge.....	990	615
East Feliciana.....	841	1,738
West Feliciana.....	859	570
Moorehouse.....	363	595
Ouachita.....	928	1,072
Total majority.....	3,981	4,588

"Here was a Republican majority of nearly 4,000 utterly wiped out, and a Confederate majority of 4,588 substituted therefor, making a change in the result of 8,569. The Tilden majority in the whole State is claimed to be 6,549."

THE "Contributors' Club," in the March Atlantic, opens with a few paragraphs directed against Prof. Seelye's bill to release foreign books from duty. We confess to a little surprise at finding such a plea in such a place. A caution against hasty and ill-considered legislation, against any great and sudden change, would have seemed in order, but this contribution as it comes to us is simply a new application of the old protective argument, which is already worn threadbare. If you remove the duty, American publishers cannot compete with English publishers; American authors cannot hope for recognition from English publishers; American booksellers will sell only foreign books or books of local interest; the cause of learning in America will be seriously damaged.

This is a most distressing outlook, to be sure; is there any reason in it? That our position is an awkward one, not only in relation to the manufacturing of books, but to the manufacturing of a very large number of other things, goes without saying. When one has for many years persistently violated all the laws of health, it is not the easiest thing in the world to begin to live a natural and healthful life. We can imagine that great discomfort and perhaps something worse may be the result of a sudden cessation of a daily fuddle, but we do not see in that a sufficient reason for the continuance of the habit.

That even under a system which provides for a gradual approach toward free trade in books, the number of American book-writers might be considerably reduced, is probable; but is this so terrible a thing? Is it not assuming a little too much to claim that the effect of opening a free market to literature, with—be it remembered—proper protection to the rights of the author, (thus putting at the disposal of all students the best of literary material at the lowest price which the market will warrant) would be a serious blow to the cause of learning?

REV. MR. COOK.

WE see with pleasure some of the reports of Rev. Mr. Cook's lectures on Mondays, at Boston, and especially enjoy and value his good-natured attacks upon the opinions of Unitarians. They seem both able and instructive, and merit the attention of the Unitarian public in that vicinity, who have, not without reason, long been accustomed to hear and receive the indirect criticism of their Orthodox neighbors with apathy or a feeling that it hardly needed reply. Composed mostly of worn-out or merely traditional weapons—thrown first by strong men in earnest, forty years ago—these blunted arrows, shot from relaxed bows, have not drawn their fire, and have hardly, indeed, been supposed to be thrown by orthodox Christians for their sake, but rather for the confirmation of those of their own way of thinking who stood by. But Mr. Cook means business. He boldly and directly assails the Unitarian front, and challenges reply. Nobody can fitly say that he is not, in his pretensions, up with the times, does not know what he is talking about, or is ignorant of the views of Unitarians, or holds his orthodoxy in a dead, traditional way. He is himself, apparently, a free man, who has his own ideas, and is not afraid to admit the changes and improvement in the statements of the so-called orthodox faith. We think he is not a critic to be pooh-poohed or treated disdainfully, or assumed to have nothing new and important to say for Unitarians. Accordingly, the orthodox public will have a right to think the Unitarians unable or unwilling to cope with him, if his reasoning and criticism are not fairly answered. If he really throws any new light upon matters or finds any important crevices in the Unitarian armor, or exhibits any new or forgotten strength in the Trinitarian hypothesis—all this should be acknowledged. If he merely vapors or blunders or misrepresents, or speaks under misapprehension or prejudice, or with imperfect scholarship, or bad philosophy, or false notions of Scriptural authority, let this be shown plainly.

We are not ready to express any opinion on this subject. The foe is not on our ground. We have had no personal opportunity of hearing Mr. Cook, and have read only enough of his lectures to feel confident that he is worth attention. Unitarians have been in the habit of complaining that their position was misapprehended or their views misrepresented or their arguments slurred over. They have often expressed the opinion that the lull of theological controversy was very unfavorable to their progress, and that nothing was more to be desired than a serious reopening of the issues between themselves and orthodoxy. They have now an opportunity of meeting a foeman worthy of their steel, and it will not redound to their credit if they fail in alacrity in taking up the gauntlet. It has been complained that orthodoxy had adopted towards them the policy of silence. That policy is now abandoned. It becomes them to recognize the fact, and show that their past assertions were in full earnest. Perhaps they will find it wise to transfer their criticisms of Mr. Moody to Mr. Cook. Mr. Moody's theology, it is generally conceded, is not worth much attention from scholars, however much he and his methods of influence may deserve careful study. But Mr. Cook's is a different sort of case. He claims to be fresh from the most learned seats of theology, philosophy and culture, and he puts his intellectual resources into a form very effective and even popular, and makes quite abstruse topics interesting and intelligible to average hearers. Let those who find an easy and unresisting victim in Mr. Moody turn their attention to a less inoffensive and more dangerous sort of game.

We have a bare suspicion that, with all Mr. Cook's knowledge and ability, he is unconsciously supporting himself and his orthodoxy mainly upon the prepossessions and prejudices of his hearers; that his arguments and criticism hold good only for persons tethered to the average orthodoxy (and that a mild and inoffensive form of orthodoxy) of the more intelligent New England "evangelicals;" that his arguments would fail, if presented to any jury sworn to no prepossessions or commitment to foregone conclusions. But then it would doubtless be the judgment of orthodox people that this or the suspicion of one speaking only from opposite prejudices, just as undeserving of attention as orthodox prejudices. Therefore we say, let the Boston Unitarians meet their critic fairly, and let us have the strongest statement which can be presented on either side, from which we may draw our inferences.

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY ENGLISH THOUGHT.

FOURTH NOTICE.—THE LATER THEOLOGY: PALEY: THE INFIDELS.

I RELUCTANTLY pass over the admirable chapters upon Butler, Hume and Warburton because, important as they are, I distrust my ability to convey within the limits of an article an adequate idea of the nice distinctions involved in them. I prefer to send the reader to the book for Mr. Stephen's own luminous expositions. Butler, as I have said before, is his great hero. As against the Deists the force of his "Analogy" is undeniable. He did not, as they, blink the obvious facts of human misery. He has been compared to Pascal. Both were sensible, "as the noblest minds are alone sensible," of the sad discords of the universe. But, unlike Pascal, Butler refused to commit intellectual suicide.

He allows the feebleness of reason, but though not confident, he never quite despairs. Whatever fails, a man must try to do his duty—this is the last result of all his cogitations. "We can but honor him as an honest and brave man; honest enough to admit the existence of doubts and brave enough not to be paralyzed by their existence." Mr. Stephen finds in Hume the most powerful assailant of the pretentious dogmatism of his time, and its timid avoidance of ultimate difficulties. His famous argument against miracles he considers unimpeachable. Not so his absolute skepticism, nor his historical method. It may be doubted whether Warburton has ever received so full a measure of justice as in these pages. He figures here as a theological braggart and bully of intolerable conceit and coarseness.

In the latter half of the eighteenth century English theology could boast of only one brilliant writer, "and Paley's theology escaped from decay, if indeed it escapes, only because it is frozen. His writing is as clear and cold as ice." One reason for this dearth of theologians was the transference of interest from the theological to the political sphere. The development of rationalism within the church blunted the edge of skeptical opposition. Hume could advise free-thinking young men to take orders! In France the status was entirely different. Unaffected by the skeptical tendencies of the age, the church to Voltaire was necessarily "The Infamous." The logical development of the deistic controversy was another reason for the dearth of the theologians. The attempt to form a "religion of nature" independent of Christianity had culminated with Tindal in 1730. After that the historical question became more prominent. But historical inquiry was exceedingly meagre and barren. It lacked all realization of the theory of evolution, upon which all sound historical inquiry must, as we now perceive, repose. In 1752 Hume deserted metaphysics for history, but his history of England is but a graceful summary of superficial knowledge. His imagination lagged behind his reason, so that he could not appreciate the character of any extinct social phase. The growth of physical science was another cause of theological inertia. The popular theological writers of the time were men of the Beattie and Soame Jenyns stamp, called "the common sense school," but their common sense consisted almost entirely in ignoring all fundamental questions and, indeed, all questions of any depth at all. Their panacea was a general winking at disagreeable facts and arguments. As always happens, such a method was a premium upon lawless fancy in the place of sound reasoning. Hence, the Hutchinsonians, a sect of which the leading spirits were a set of young Oxonians. Their leading characteristics were an extreme dislike of rationalism, a fanatical respect for the letter of the Bible and an attempt to enlist the rising powers of scientific enquiry upon the side of orthodoxy. They were much given to forming 'diligent collections of fossil bodies,' in order to prove the flood. The doctrine of the Trinity was proved by various fanciful analogies, some of them on a level with the poet Tupper's "Northern ocean and the rock and the whale which sporteth about it;" which person of the Trinity is "very like a whale," not being specified. With one of these Hutchinsonians apparently originated the witty, inimical suggestion, directed at the skeptics, to omit the "not" from the Commandments and put it in the Creed.

Cambridge divinity students of twenty years ago and less will remember that Hugh Farmer's "Dissertation on Miracles" was in considerable repute with their professors. It was his endeavor to supply some test by which real miracles could be distinguished from counterfeits. Only God, he argued, could work miracles, no intermediate beings. But if only God can work them there is no limit to their evidential value. Another dissertation on the miracles by George Campbell was also a famous book in our divinity school days. It was long considered the ablest reply to Hume, and in his case Hume for once replied to an opponent. Substantially Campbell contended that, in estimating the probable truth of any statement, the contents of the statement are not to be considered, only the character of the witnesses and the contradictory evidence, if there be any. Thus by magnifying the value of testimony he hoped to substantiate the Bible miracles. His argument was really an anticipation of Mozley's Bampton lectures which Mr. Tyndall has so thoroughly demolished. He reduced the world to a mere jumble of incoherent phenomena, in which any event is as likely to happen as any other, and abolished the laws of nature in order to prove that they may be transgressed. Shells dry from the bowels of the earth are with Campbell, as with the Hutchinsonians, a sufficient argument for the flood.

Strangely enough the doctrines of race-development and progress, destined to play such an important part in nineteenth century speculations, had for their earliest advocate, Bishop Law, a man whose childlike acceptance of the Scripture narrative permitted him to argue that Adam might have proved to his descendants that he was the first man from the absence of the usual sign of an umbilical cord. Law was a leader of that Cambridge school of which Paley was the most distinguished representative. Paley does not even mention the old ontological argument which earlier in the century was so much admired. The God of Paley was half way between the savage's and the philosopher's. The former infers God from the interruptions of order; the latter from the order itself. Paley's God is the contriver, sufficiently human to interfere, and yet sufficiently divine to interfere upon fixed principles. "God has been civilized like man; He has become scientific and ingenious; He is superior to Watt or Priestly in devising mechanical and chemical contrivances, and is, therefore, made in the image of that generation of which Watt and Priestley were conspicuous lights." "Had there been a competitive examination for the construction of the best form of reptile the almighty artisan would have had every chance of carrying off the prize." But ingenuity implies limitation. Moreover his argument is strongest when the limitations are most narrow. Thus he finds more proof of God in animal instincts than in human reason; in mechanical contrivances than in chemical operations. He made no allowance for the transmission of hereditary influences. His argument abounds in those fallacies which result from considering the individual apart from the race. His deity is a part, almost a material part, of the universe. His sincerity has been doubted. Mr. Stephen, while regarding him as essentially an advocate, is the more disposed to allow his sincerity because his theory involved so slight a strain on his imagination. To be a Christian one must admit that certain things happened a long time ago, but the origin neither of the universe nor of Christianity has anything to do with present duties and events.

One section of Mr. Stephen's chapter on "The Later Theology" of the eighteenth century is devoted to the Unitarians. Henry Taylor's "Ben Mordecai" was a crude attempt to reduce Christianity within the limits of the conceivable, if not within the limits of the credible. Richard Price, more famous in another connection, much admired by the late Dr. Convers Francis, is not so much admired by Mr. Stephen. He was a "survival" of Clarke and Wollaston. A more sympathetic, and I can but think more just, estimate of Price will be found in Rev. J. J. Tayler's "Retrospect of the Religious Life of England," an admirable book and far too little known. His (Stephen's) estimate of Priestley is condensed into the following passage, with more of truth than flattery: "A Christian and a materialist, keenly sympathizing with the French Revolution, and yet holding to the remnant of the doctrines to which it was vitally opposed; a political ally and a religious opponent of the spirit which spoke through Tom Paine; abandoning the mysterious and yet retaining the supernatural elements of Christianity; rapidly glancing at the surface of opinion, and incapable of appreciating its deeper tendencies, he flashes out at times some quick and instructive estimate of one side of the disputed argument, only to relapse at the next moment into crude dogmas and obsolete superstitions." Nevertheless, this man represented, and in a remarkable degree, the tendency to supplement scientific for metaphysical methods. The historical method of inquiry had in him one of its earliest defenders. Nevertheless the discoverer of oxygen calmly accepts as historical the legend of the Fall. He and Gilbert Wakefield illustrate that peculiar form of semi-rationalism, which was combined with English radicalism. In France Priestley would have found atheism a more natural ally than Christianity for his materialism. In England the mildness of orthodoxy disarmed its natural opponents. But ere the century closed, it was to encounter two of widely different character and very differently armed—Edward Gibbon and Thomas Paine, the first a staunch political conservative, the second a red-hot revolutionist. I shall consider these in my next notice.

J. W. C.

APROPOS OF DR. ARNOLD.*

THE re-issue, in one handsome volume, of Dean Stanley's admirable biography of Dr. Arnold, revives the memory of the feelings awakened by the book when it first appeared in 1844, thirty-three years ago. At that time the Broad Church movement was attracting notice and exciting interest among the friends of liberal opinions here as well as in England. There was promise of a fine outgrowth of intelligence within the Established church, an expression of rational ideas on matters of doctrinal belief, united with burning enthusiasm in the cause of humanity, that must, it was thought, soon transform the ecclesiastical institution into an organized power for the dissemination of truth and the maintenance of equity. The disposition to enlarge the interpretations of dogma, and bring it into conformity with the beliefs of reason, clear and strong in the best minds, encouraged the most glowing anticipations of enlightenment; and the disposition to make questions of theological opinion secondary to questions of spiritual faith and character was a still more hopeful sign for the religious future. It really looked as if the immense resources of the English church were about to be used for the benefit of mankind. Dr. Arnold was one of the recognized leaders of the Broad Church movement, and drew to himself the admiring regards of the most earnest spirits. He was, indeed, as this biography reveals him to us, a very noble man—a man noble in his generation, noble for all generations, intrinsically and essentially noble; a man of the finest quality in mind and heart—intellectual, brave, enthusiastic, humane, high-souled, captivating in his open sincerity, commanding from his force of consecration. Everything about him added interest to the position he took as a teacher of youth and a fashioner of moral opinion. An air of manliness breathed around him that was exhilarating to inhale. His scholars revered him, his friends loved him, his generation honored him. His fearless independence of opinion made him for a time distrusted, but the dread and suspicion wore away, and when he died, at the early age of forty-seven, he was mourned as a man whose place cannot be made good.

*The Life and Correspondence of Thomas Arnold, D.D. By Arthur Penrhyn Stanley, D.D. New York: Scribner, Armstrong & Co.

The Broad Church movement that he so bravely forwarded has not justified the expectations of its apostles. Arnold is dead; Robertson is dead; Maurice is dead; Kingsley is dead. Arnold's biographer, the elaborate Dean of Westminster, shows himself the dignified friend of liberal scholarship; Robertson's biographer, Stopford Brooke, preaches an amiable gospel to a small congregation of pseudo liberals in London; and Haweis, dissatisfied, apparently, with the success of his predecessors in putting significance into the articles, is trying the experiment of straining significance out of them and testing the capacity of empty bags to stand upright; Matthew Arnold, the son of the great doctor, clings to the church as the asylum of elegant culture. The soul of the movement is gone. The creeds and ritual have recovered their waning influence; the prayer-book is idolized as much as ever; Athanasius still rolls his sentences over the heads of the congregations; the Establishment, temporarily disturbed by the spasm of enthusiasm which was interested in the welfare of human beings, is about its old business of saving souls from a mythological hell.

What a difference attitude makes in the estimation of men! Judged by his attitude, Arnold was great; judged by his actual quality, he was wholesome and good, but with qualifications that, at this distance of time, are visible to the naked eye. It was his onward, eager, searching, daring look that made him in appearance so splendid. His face was set forward, as if he anticipated new and better things. This always gives the noble aspect. The backward look shadows the countenance. The dignitaries who recently, at the consecration of the new Trinity church edifice in Boston, invited the liberal clergy to partake of the sacrament, did what was for them a generous thing: they were liberal and magnanimous; they forgot for the moment their ecclesiasticism, the stringency of their dogma, the exclusiveness of their institution, the anathema of their creed. They believed for the moment that there was more truth than was contained in the letter of their articles, more sanctity than was represented by the priestly vestments. Their eye had caught the vision of a broad church, whose enclosing walls embraced believers of every name. But what shall we think of the "liberals" who accepted the invitation? Were they looking forward? Were their faces bathed in light? Were they straining the line of their traditions? Were they extending the circuit of their sheep-fold? Two men may stand upon the same square yard of ground, side by side, but if they are moving in opposite directions, their momentary propinquity tells for nothing. The Romanist who is marching out is more liberal than the Rationalist who is marching in.

Arnold's attitude toward the ecclesiasticism and dogmatism of his time was superb; but as we review his actual opinions they are seen to betray the narrowness and austerity of the churchman. To the parents of a Unitarian scholar at Rugby he wrote: "My difficulty with your son is not one which I feel as a churchman, but as a Christian, and goes only on this simple principle, that I feel bound to teach the essentials of Christianity to all those committed to my care, and with these the tenets of the Unitarians alone, among all Dissenters in the Kingdom, are, in my judgment, irreconcilable." Many of his letters are unspeakably sad, with a kind of hopelessness of human nature that was evidently born of his theological creed. Some of his reflections on young men, the stubbornness of sin in their hearts, the mass of depravity that lay at the bottom of their nature, are very melancholy. Though his labors were rewarded with unexampled success; though his services were everywhere acknowledged and his practical wisdom cordially admitted, he was tormented by misgivings lest the deep-seated disease of sin should not be reached: "This," he wrote, "is my principle, that moral studies not based on Christianity must be unchristian, and therefore are such as I can take no part in." "Have you heard," he writes to J. T. Coleridge, "anything more about ———'s Roman History? I am really anxious to know what sort of a man he is, and whether he will write like a Christian or no; if he will I have not a wish to interfere with him; if not, I would labor very hard indeed to anticipate him and prevent an additional disgrace from being heaped upon the historical part of our literature." The melancholy consequence of regarding the New Testament as a collection of inspired writings, and the imagery of the Apocalypse as prophetic, appears in this passage that occurs in a letter to W. W. Hull, Esq., written in 1831: "My sense of the evil of the times and to what prospects I am bringing up my children is overwhelmingly bitter. All in the moral and physical world appears so exactly to announce the coming of the 'great day of the Lord,' i. e., a period of fearful visitation, to terminate the existing state of things, whether to terminate the whole existence of the human race, neither man nor angel knows,—that no entireness of private happiness can possibly close my eyes against a sense of it." The year 1831 was a dark time; it was the year of the angry discussions on the Reform Bill; the air was full of forebodings of riot; the atmosphere was tainted with cholera; Edward Irving was reproducing the phenomena of the Gift Tongues, and setting all London by the ears. It was a year when stout hearts quailed and weak ones despaired, but only the superstitious anticipated the end of the world.

In re-reading this life of a great and good man, the shady side of his experience presents itself, and the blackness of the shadow is due to his religion. Naturally he was eager, joyous, full of purpose and energy. He was one to appreciate life's beauty without neglecting life's work. His religion haunted him, suggested unwholesome thoughts and prescribed constant and painful repression. He would have done his work better and enjoyed his lot more if his nature had had feer play. Thirty years ago this was not so apparent as it is now. Our views of the popular religion have undergone great changes in a generation. Then it seemed as if Thomas Arnold's religion was an inspirer and an emancipator; now it is evident that it was a restraint and a thrall. Then it looked as if he owed to it enthusiasm for humanity and his zeal for progress; now it is plain that his enthusiasm for humanity and his zeal for progress broke forth in spite of it and would have achieved more without it.

O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

THE LENGTH OF DAYS.—At London and Bremen the longest day has sixteen hours. At Stockholm, in Sweden, the longest day has eighteen and a half hours. At Hamburg, Germany, and Danzig, Prussia, the longest day has seventeen hours and the shortest seven hours. At St. Petersburg, in Russia, and Tobolsk, Siberia, the longest day has nineteen hours and the shortest five hours. At Tornea, in Finland, the longest day has twenty-one and a half hours and the shortest two and a half hours. At Wardnuys, Norway, the day lasts from May 21 to July 24 without interruption, and at Spitzbergen the longest day is three and a half months.

LITERATURE.

AN INTRODUCTION TO POLITICAL ECONOMY. By Arthur Latham Perry, LL.D. New York: Scribner, Armstrong & Co. 1877.

Professor Perry's "Elements of Political Economy," published eleven years ago, has passed through so many editions already, that he will be warranted in anticipating an immediate and generous acceptance of this smaller work, which is not in any sense an abridgment of the former, but rather an elementary treatise on certain fundamental truths of the science. There are here six chapters, entitled respectively: Value, Production, Commerce, Money, Credit, Taxation. The writer's intention has been to lay a sure foundation, and to state nothing which will have to be unlearned in the progress of study, and we think he has been largely successful. Of course his statements will not be satisfactory to all parties. There are farmers who are sure the world does not go round, else the rails would all fly out of the fences,—there are people who doubt the theory of gravitation; there are others—educated persons—who believe that a being whom they call good, has first made, and then relentlessly condemned to everlasting horrors, the great majority of the inhabitants of the earth, and that the same great being will give up doing what He intended, if they only ask Him to do so; there are men of full age and able to read and write, who think they can make money and bring in the millennium with a government printing machine. There are vagaries of all kinds. But there are also some things upon which the thinking men of the world are substantially agreed; those things at the foundation of the Science of Political Economy, Prof. Perry has attempted to state in such a way that any intelligent boy or girl of fourteen can understand them, and in his chapters on "Commerce" and "Money" with especial success. We wish every boy and girl in the land could be induced to read them.

A PRINCESS OF THULE. By William Black. Library Ed. 12mo., cloth, $1.50.

MADCAP VIOLET. By William Black. 8vo., paper, 75 cts.

Harper & Brothers have issued a neat edition in cloth of "The Princess of Thule," certainly one of the very best novels which have been offered to this generation. The story, simple enough, is yet of absorbing interest; it carries the reader among the most picturesque scenes, and the descriptions are by a master hand, which in its own field has rarely if ever been surpassed. Great skill is shown in the treatment of the subject. Through the earlier and apparently brighter part of the book, the reader is conscious of a brooding dread, and it is not until the storm actually breaks, that the clouds lift a little and give place to the sensation of hope. Then, too, the close is natural, bright and happy. As we turn over the pages, the story comes back to us in all its force and freshness, the joys and sorrows of the fictitious characters pull away at our heart strings; we are sure that they are living, and whether they are or not, we know that here is a novel the writing of which made the world of more worth.

Into "Madcap Violet" the author has woven the same freshness and grandeur of highland scenery that makes "The Princess of Thule" so attractive. The reader is taken to Mull, Morven, Ardnamurchan, and Skye through storm and calm, sunshine and moonlight, in congenial company. And Peter, the Scotch gunner, tells some stories which are "ferry good answers to make to the Englishman, whateffer." But the novel, as a whole, seems too sad. There is enough that goes wrong during its progress to warrant at least a happy ending, and the ending is singularly and unnecessarily painful. It may be said, of course, that it is not unlike life, but we have always to remember in art what art requires.

BRIEF NOTICES.

THE ART OF PROJECTING. By Prof. E. A. Dolbear, of Tufts College. Boston, Lee & Shepard.

Within the past twenty years the methods of illustrating scientific lectures have been completely revolutionized. Formerly no experiments could be shown to an audience except those which were capable of performance upon a very large scale. This involved the use of large and costly apparatus, such as few institutions were able to command. Now, through the instrumentality of improved forms of the magic lantern, aided by the electric, oxy-hydrogen and magnesium lights, even the most delicate experiments can be shown with perfect ease to thousands of spectators at once. Instead of using vessels six feet high, the chemical lecturer now produces his reaction in a small test tube, and projects its image upon a screen. In a similar way and with equal beauty, the phenomena of heat, electricity, magnetism, light and sound may be publicly demonstrated. Prof. Dolbear's little book is a perfect boon to the practical teacher of science; for, as its name indicates, it contains full instructions for the projection with the lantern of all kinds of experiments, diagrams and pictures. Such a book has long been needed and is now for the first time written. It also contains much information with regard to extemporizing apparatus, and gives directions by means of which a teacher may improvise instruments such as would otherwise be too expensive for ordinary schools to procure. To teachers in general this work will be indispensable.

F. W. C.

JOSHUA HAGGARD'S DAUGHTER. A Novel. By Miss M. E. Braddon. Harper & Brothers. 1877.

Miss Braddon, as usual, spoils the real power in the first half of this novel, by making the second part sensational and unreal. We really lost sight of Miss Braddon in the quite natural and unstrained description of Joshua Haggard and his family. Only his name and temperament warned of something tragic in store for us, until the beautiful woman, who is the cause of the fall of this man seemingly strong in intellect and conscience, makes his acquaintance in such a singular and unconventional fashion. That Cynthia, the poor circus rider, should, with all her untrained grace of mind and body, show such strength of character when tested is at least very surprising, and that Joshua Haggard, the heroic preacher, with his stoical habits and stern notions, should become degraded, through passion, into a murderer, rather upsets our ideas of the effect of education and discipline. Therefore, the book is unhealthy, because while not untrue to nature, it describes those morbid phases of it which excite the interest in an unnatural way, and blunt the moral perceptions through bewilderment and sympathy. Why should Miss Braddon make so much trouble hinge upon a weak young fellow, whose charm is his culture and superficial breeding? Still this book is an improvement upon most of Miss Braddon's novels, the elements are more simple, the murder less complicated and cold blooded, while most of the characters are strong and strive for the self-control which, as a rule, is absent in the deliberate wickedness of most of her heroes and heroines. Her power is undoubted, but we wish she would show her mastery of the bright and sunny side of life, and give us a feeling of warmth and happiness, by allowing bright skies and the radiant sun to dissipate the gloomy clouds and ever approaching storms of thunder and lightning. We are afraid she could not deal with the comic side of life, that humorous relief to all the dark tragedy and passion of human nature. We need all the comedy we can find to balance the fierce but latent tragedy in every soul and life.

THE MARCH MAGAZINES.

THE ATLANTIC contains poems by H. H., Longfellow, Charles H. Noyes and A. R. Grote. "The American" still remains in a state of suspense, but has obtained possession of a document of such importance to the Bellegarde family that a final settlement of some kind cannot long be delayed. E. S. Nadal writes of "Newspaper Literary Criticism," with knowledge and intelligently. E. P. Whipple furnishes an essay on "Dickens' Hard Times." Constance Fenimore Woolson, who can write stories, furnishes the first article in the number, entitled "Rodman the Keeper."

The Contributors' Club is chatty; and H. B. K., who published two or three interesting papers about three years ago, gives her final experiences of Canada backwoods life—a significant article.

HARPER's leading article is by S. G. W. Benjamin on "Contemporary Art in France," and gives portraits of Gérôme, Meissonier, Taine, Bonnat, Doré, Cabanel, Millet, Troyon, Rosa Bonheur, Breton and Carpeaux, and prints of a number of familiar paintings. The other principal illustrated articles are "The Prussian Wends and their Home," by Herbert Tuttle, and "A Summer Cruise among the Atlantic Isles," by Dr. A. L. Gihon. There are poems by "Ellis Gray," Anna C. Brackett, Carl Spencer, Philip Burke Marston, C. P. Cranch, Barry Cornwall and Mary N. Prescott; serials by Charles Read (probably), R. D. Blackmore, and Julian Hawthorne; short stories by Rose Terry Cooke, E. E. Hale and Elizabeth A. Smith; an illustrated synopsis of Wallace's book on the Distribution of Animals, by S. S. Conant; an illustrated description of some scientific experiments by Dr. Draper, and other articles. The Easy Chair discusses "The Tomb of Agamemnon," "Forefathers' Day," "Rascals and Detectives," "Commodore Vanderbilt," etc.

SCRIBNER's treats, in characteristic fashion, of Beds, Tables, Stools and Candlesticks." Sophie B. Herrick furnishes a nicely illustrated article on "The Pitcher Plant"—a fascinating family; "The New York Aquarium" is described, with accompanying illustrations grotesque and otherwise, by W. S. Ward; Gen. McClellan returns to Cairo; the second part of Saxe Holm's story, "Farmer Bassett's Romance," appears; "Princeton College," which has lately had a fair share of attention from the papers, is served up with cuts, including portraits of Dr. McCosh, Guyot and others; Gen. Dix calls attention to the merits of Claudian," with a brief translation; and the usual variety fills up the remainder of the number.

THE POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY gives a portrait and sketch of "Thomas Edward," a poor Scotch naturalist; a translation from Flammarion entitled "How the Earth was Regarded in Old Times," with curious illustrations; and articles by Prof. Osborne Reynolds, Prof. Huxley, Edmund Neisan, A. R. Grote and others.

ST. NICHOLAS and WIDE AWAKE, with their bright white, red and black covers, look so attractive, and really are so entertaining, that we are almost inclined to wish we were young enough to lie down on the floor and give ourselves up to them until the sun peeps out. But handsome as these are, we are sure their readers cannot get more pleasure out of them than we did from our old friend, Parley's Magazine.

LITERARY NOTES.

MR. CHAS. A. CUTTER, of the Boston Athenæum, will hereafter take entire charge of the department of library bibliography in The Library Journal, and Mr. James A. Whitney, assistant superintendent of the Boston Public Library, of the department of "Anonyms and Pseudonyms."

THREE of Harvard's Professors are lecturing in Baltimore—James Russell Lowell, Francis J. Child, and Charles E. Norton. During February, Saturdays and Sundays excepted, Professors Lowell and Child will deliver daily lectures at the Johns Hopkins University. Professor Lowell will talk about Dante and the literature of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. Professor Child's subject is Chaucer. Professor Norton's lectures on Mediæval Architecture are delivered at the Peabody Institute.

THOSE who have read Auerbach's "Village Stories" will remember the simple and quiet life depicted of the Black Forest as it was when the book was written, over a quarter of a century ago. The many changes necessarily taking place since that time have introduced new life and activity into the place, largely changing the character of the scene. To show this, Heff Auerbach has lately written the sequels to those earlier stories, and these have been published in Germany, under the title of "After Thirty Years." At the author's suggestion, however, the American publishers (Henry Holt & Co.) have decided to issue each sequel bound with its original tale, so as to contrast the two most strongly. The first of these appears under the title, "The Convicts and their Children."

NEW PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

BOOKS

From Estes & Lauriat, Boston.

SIDONIE. A Novel. Translated from the French of Alphonse Daudet, by Mary Neal Sherwood.

From Scribner, Armstrong & Co., New York.

THE CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE OF SIN. By John Tulloch, D.D. $1.50.

FRIEND FRITZ. Translated from the French of Erckmann-Chatrian. $1.25.

THE MAGAZINES FOR MARCH.

THE INTERNATIONAL REVIEW.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY.

WIDE AWAKE.

HARPER.

POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY.

PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL.

CATHOLIC WORLD.

SCRIBNER'S MONTHLY.

ST. NICHOLAS.

ART NOTES.

THE WATER-COLOR EXHIBITION.

SECOND NOTICE.

A SECOND visit confirms the impression that, while there were a few pictures in last year's exhibition better than anything now on the walls, the average of this year's work shows improvement both in aim and in result. To be sure, there is plenty of crudity in color, indecision in drawing and commonplace in subject; but this must be true of any exhibition which deals fairly with the contributions of young artists, with whom the will is better than the deed, and who must creep before they can soar. But there is a good deal that is excellent, and more that is obviously trying to be so. It should be remembered that an exhibition of water-colors and one of oil-paintings are not on equal footing in regard to lay criticism, because to the unskilled eye the defects of an indifferent oil-painting are not so obvious and obtrusive as those of a poor water-color. This is partly due to the fact that it is easy to get strength in oil, and hard to avoid weakness in water-color; and we are more tolerant of what is bad and strong than we are of what is bad and weak.

J. Hopkinson Smith challenges attention because, although one of the new men and an amateur, he has furnished more pictures than any other artist. He has been prolific during the past year; yet he has improved. His color has lost much of its former harshness and his handling is freer. His most ambitious effort is in the North room; his finest, in the corridor. The former is a wood interior, strong, effective and somewhat sketchy; the best point being the rich foreground of logs and forest debris. The latter represents a deserted mill with its surroundings; the quiet and loneliness of such a place are well expressed. He contributes several sketches, in all of which, as well as in his more finished pieces, we note a tendency to what is known as "scene-painting," a style that is almost certainly the consequence of rapid execution.

A contrast to this dashy, ad captandum work of Smith in body-color is the careful work of Smillie, in transparent medium, shown in several first-rate studies, the smaller being the best. But the range and capability of transparent color in landscape is best seen in Van Elten's pictures. These are crisp, tender and full of light; strong, but not forced; without violent color-effects, and having such quality that when one looks at them he thinks more of Nature than of the artist. All his pictures are fine; his "Chickens" is, perhaps, the best of all, while the landscape in the corridor and the small landscape in the West room are very beautiful. It is worth while to compare the staccato of this transparent work with the slur, proper to oil, of the body-color of Colman or Bellows.

Everybody looks for the pictures of Richards, Colman, Tiffany, Bellows and R. S. Gifford; and having found them, admires, and with reason—for are not these painters born, not made? These furnish their complement this year.

Richards' sketch in the North room, being a sketch, is broad and free; the drawing is good of course, but the color, particularly in the sky, is not agreeable. The "Old Fort" is of his best, and that is as good as needs be. It is hard to say which is the most beautiful, the hill-slope, the sea, or the sky.

Of Colman's pictures, Durham Cathedral and Lincoln are the largest and most striking. Both are very strong, very full of light and atmosphere and rich in color, though the color of the towers seems somewhat too cold and slaty. If fault must be found it would be because the careful drawing of the towers has not been carried down into the masses of foliage, which are a little manneresque. Perhaps "subordination" accounts for it.

Tiffany's "Palace of the Pasha" does not compare favorably with his best work in the last exhibition. The coloring belongs to decorative rather than to pictorial art. There is too little relief in the picture, the perspective planes not being well made out, while the foreground is weak and the figures are without form and void of meaning.

Bellows always pleases. His color is good, with a touch of what is known as "sweetness," especially in his water-color. But his drawing, from the water-color standpoint, cannot be called good. Sheets of color serve to suggest masses that should be expressed by relief and gradation. But he is a master in composition, and never fails to make any subject interesting; the commonest wayside bit being a sufficient inspiration. "Coaching in New England" is a good example of his skill in grouping figures. Another road-scene, by Robbins, hangs close by, and serves as a foil for Bellows' work. It is an attempt at a topographical rendering of some of Nature's facts about elm trees, so that it is imitative and nothing more.

Magrath seems to be doing too much, or rather too many things, so that we feel that in some of his pictures the execution is not as complete as the artist could have made it. Compare the drawing of the feet in the "Fisherman's Daughter" with that of the sitting figure in the "Crochet Workers"; one is fine, almost perfect; the other is very bad, yet it is the easier task. Execution that leaves out some of the limbs to which the human frame is entitled is too concise. Still, Magrath's pictures are above the average in respect to both subject and technique; while some, as for instance, the "Fisherman's Daughter," are good enough to satisfy the most fastidious.

Of course everybody will look for Killingworth Johnson's "Reverie," and everybody ought to be delighted with it. A girl with a face pure and charming, but not beautiful, stands before an open fire, looking down into its depths. The coloring is not brilliant, but delicate and very harmonious. There is perfect finish in the modelling of the face; the pose is graceful, and the whole is beautiful. His "Brush-Burners" is not so successful. The color hardly suits the subject, being too tender, and the whole treatment lacks the robust quality which belongs to an out-door subject. The listless enjoyment of doing nothing but watching is finely expressed in the figures—in the expression of feeling of any kind the artist is very strong—but the forms are not distinct enough, blending too much with the general tone of the picture; while the distant hay-ricks are more carefully worked out than the incidents of the foreground.

Winslow Homer is as usual slight, dashy and quaint; provoking us because he does not go seriously to work with intention to do as much as we feel that he can do. He is poetic, but he gives us only preludes and episodes. "The Blackboard" represents a very matter-of-fact young lady with an emphatic apron standing before a school blackboard with pointer in hand. It is but a trifle compared with "the District School Teacher" exhibited several years ago. The "Backgammon Board" is an admirably executed piece of Japanese work.

There is more that is good by Perry, Bricher, Shurtleff, Miss Bridges, Nicoll and Wyant, and the visitor will find a few good foreign pictures of which the most noteworthy are by Vibert, Meissonnier and Villegas.

SELECTIONS.

SEEK NOT AFAR.

SEEK not afar for beauty. Lo! it glows
In dew-wet grasses all about thy feet;
In birds, in sunshine, children's faces sweet,
In stars and mountain summits topped with snows.

Go not abroad for happiness. For see,
It is a flower that blooms beside thy door.
Bring love and justice home, and then no more
Thou'lt need to wonder where joy's home may be.

Dream not of noble service elsewhere wrought.
The simple duty that first waits thy hand
Is God's voice speaking a divine command.
Life's common deeds build all that saints have thought.

In wonder-workings or some bush aflame
Men look for God and fancy Him concealed;
But in earth's common things He stands revealed;
And stars and grass and flowers spell out His name.

The paradise men seek, the city bright
That gleams above the clouds for dying eyes,
Is only human goodness in the skies.
Earth's deeds well done glow into heavenly light.

—REV. M. J. SAVAGE.

NOVALIS calls character the educated will. It makes the multitude of propensities, so apt to become a mob, rather like the members of an orchestra.—C. A. BARTOL.

BETTER to be a liar's dog, and hold
My master honest, than believe that lying
And ruling men are fatal twins that cannot Move one without the other. —Tennyson's Harold.

It is with books as with men, the good they do cannot be adduced as proofs that they are faultless.—MADAME SWETCHINE.

THIS thought I give you all to keep:
Who soweth good seed shall surely reap.
The year grows rich as it groweth old,
And life's latest sands are its sands of gold.
—MRS. JULIA R. C. DORR.

WHAT we wish for in our highest moment is true all the time. What we see in flashes is true all the time—life through, eternity, through. If there is any certitude, that is certitude for all time and place. It is a certitude that when I lie dying I want that for a pillow, and want to know that I have similarity with God, so as to love what He loves and hate what He hates.—JOSEPH COOK.

THE word of God is not bound to any church or to any creed; it goes outside of all churches and all creeds. It does not run on any railroad track of our making, but is like the wind, which blows where it will, circling the round world evermore. The same cool breeze which fans the hot cheeks of the girls on the plains of Hindostan, sweeps on across the Indian ocean, gathering moisture as it goes, and pours it down in rain on the parched regions of Central Africa. So God sends His prophets and teachers of truth to every race, to help them according to their separate needs; sends some knowledge of Himself, some intuitions of duty, some hopes of immortality to all the children of men.—JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE.

WE have surely fallen on a time of feebleness and unrest. We have the critic everywhere; the lover nowhere. Nothing so cheap as the intelligence which suffices to contradict and the consciousness which prompts to object; but the heart-wisdom that can light us on our way, by the lustre of sweet and earnest affection, the holy zeal that can melt our doubts away, and make our duty a march of common joy instead of a skirmish of individual scruples, are little less than obsolete.—JAMES MARTINEAU.

WE do not believe in immortality because we have proved it, but we forever try to prove it because we believe it.—MARTINEAU.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Springfield Republican says Mr. Haberton, author of "Helen's Babies," has become one of the night editors of the Herald, and adds: "It may interest our readers to know that he offered that work in MS. to three book publishers, who refused it, one of them pronouncing it immoral. All he asked for it was $100. He was discouraged, when Loring, the Boston publisher, took it on shares, and at the last accounts over 100,000 copies had been sold, with the steady cry of 'more.' He is a genial man, of thirty-five, with black hair and moustache, bright blue eyes, a nervous sanguine temperament, studious in habit, a large reader, with keen observation and unmistakable though unobtrusive humor. He has the making of a great novelist in him if he does not get spoiled before he is finished, as too many of our promises are. 'Helen's Babies' is a real book. 'Budge' and 'Toddie' and 'Frank' are his own boys, and perfect harum-scarums. He has written 'Barton's Experiment,' which is spoken well of, and another story of real power, though crude in some of its details, which he doesn't publicly recognize, but takes a quiet satisfaction in reading the newspaper notices of.

HEARTH AND HOME.

ONCE.

Cool, salt air and the white waves breaking
Restless, eager, along the strand;
An evening sky and a sunset glory
Fading over the sea and land;

We two sitting alone together
Side by side in the waning light;
Before us the throbbing waste of waters,
Behind us the sand-heaps drifted white.

Ships were sailing into the distance,
Down to the lands where the sun had gone;
The rough fresh wind blew o'er our faces,
And the shadows of night crept slowly on.

Is it a dream that I remember—
Some ghost of a love that will come no more;
We two sitting alone together,
Hand in hand, on the ocean shore?
—Mary Anige De Vere, in Evening Post.

JOSEPH AND BENJAMIN; OR, THE EMPEROR AND THE REPUBLICAN.

[Retold from Berthold Auerbach for THE INQUIRER.]

BY G. C. SHACKFORD.

CHAPTER V.

A HEARTY RECOGNITION.

GEN. STEUBEN and Franklin conversed together in the latter's study. The two men seemed now for the first time to have become really acquainted with each other, to have reached a mutual good understanding. Franklin expressed openly his satisfaction that a man like Steuben should so magnanimously devote himself to the cause of American freedom. They were in lively conversation together, when an adjutant of the Emperor Joseph was announced. Steuben rose, Franklin handed him the letter to Washington and bade him affectionately farewell. Steuben met the adjutant at the door, and as he looked into the mild blue eyes of the visitor a thrill of joy made his heart beat more quickly. He bowed respectfully.

"I thought you were alone, Doctor. Who was that man who has just gone out?" inquired the adjutant in rather a decided tone as he closed the door.

Franklin looked at him in surprise and then smiled to himself.

"A man of your own calling," replied he, "a soldier, who has won his laurels in fighting against your army, a Baron Steuben from Germany."

"I have heard the name before. And does he want now to go to America?"

"A direct question like that calls for a direct answer. He does; and he has been recommended to me as a man of great organizing ability; and that is just what we need most. We have found out that a quick blow may be struck by volunteer soldiers, but that something else is needed to carry on a war. There must be inflexible discipline in an army, unconditional obedience, when an army is to be fought, under the leadership of one head."

"I am rejoiced to hear you say so. Then you acknowledge the necessity of a monarchical power in war at least?"

"Certainly; but war is with us only a temporary matter."

"But you grant that a monarchical constitution may protect and greatly advance the eternal rights of man?"

"Certainly, if virtue and respect for law are inherited with the crown." There was a pause; the young officer and the grey-haired philosopher looked at each other inquisitively, but yet with a confidential greeting; they had so suddenly plunged into the midst of the deepest questions of political life that they were obliged to collect themselves and to determine their bearings.

Franklin bore in silence the inquiring look of the young man, and composedly waited for him to resume the conversation.

"It is Joseph's wish," began the young man, "to become acquainted with the noblest leaders of the new time and to be taught by them. And so he desires to express his regret at not having been able to be present at the Abbe Niccoli's. Joseph hoped to be the gainer from your wisdom, but too many unexpected obstacles intervened."

"I know, or rather I have reason to believe, that Joseph is not like many of his station."

"What do you mean by that?"

"I have never yet spoken to a royal personage, but they tell me that princes are actuated merely by curiosity, allow themselves to be advised by every one, and yet are not willing to take any one's advice; that they like to hear every one, but are always thinking to themselves: 'Who knows what selfish views you have under these enthusiastic words?' The main point in the education of princes, as I hear, is to teach them to mistrust everybody."

"Do you look upon men as good," asked the adjutant.

"Do you look upon yourself as good?" was Franklin's question in reply.

"Why do you ask me that?" was returned.

"Because a man looks upon others as he does upon himself."

"I do not look upon myself as good, but I should like to be."

"That is best. To keep one's heart pure, to have one's understanding clear, this is man's duty, and creates the good."

"You have had the good fortune to become acquainted with men individually; you can shape your own destiny in the world, and approach all men as a friend; you are to be envied!"

"And I would say, on the other hand, that it is a great good fortune to be endowed from birth with the power of doing good to thousands of people."

"It would be splendid," cried the young man, "if the jewels in the crown reflected the thankful looks of those to whom one has been able to be a friend, a helper, a saviour!"

Franklin arose at these words enthusiastically uttered, but immediately sat down again.

"May I request one favor of you," continued the young man, suddenly adopting a different tone. "I should like to learn from your own self what course of life has made you the wise man universally honored. Will you relate to me briefly the history of your life?"

"I am an old man and somewhat loquacious, especially when I begin to speak of myself; then, too, things which seem important to one man are insignificant to another. I have, however, written out my biography for my son, which you may read. You might have been my son, as far as age is concerned."

The young man grasped the aged man's hand and pressed it.

Franklin rose, took down a small book and handed it to the young man with the words: "I am glad to place these pages in your hands. It is all put down here so quietly, and yet it has cost much labor and suffering. I should be glad if I have made the way shorter and easier to others. One thing I have discovered, and have found confirmed by all my experience, that there is no one art of virtue. Virtue is neither a natural gift nor to be attained by praying for it alone, although both may help in acquiring it. It must be unceasingly sought for by being upright with one's own conscience, and dealing honestly with one's self; and if one does not attain everything, does not overcome all faults, yet he learns to be content with what he can accomplish."

A fresh visitor was announced; the young man rose, seized Franklin's hand with both his and said: "I must not be insincere with you. I tell you then—pardon the awkward mask—that I am myself the Emperor Joseph."

"I knew so," replied Franklin quietly; "but it does my heart good to have you acknowledge it openly. I bid the Emperor welcome to my modest cottage."

"And you speak to me no differently from what you did before?"

"I have said to the Emperor what I would say to every one of my brethren, and—"

"Yes, we are brethren," cried Joseph, "although different churches and different lands call us their sons."

"We are brethren of the Old Testament," replied Franklin smiling. "My brother Joseph has become a king, and Benjamin, although not indeed the younger brother, has remained a plain citizen."

"We are godfathers also of the same child," responded Joseph, relating what had happened at the post-house.

Franklin smiled in a friendly way, and the Emperor went on: "It is horrible that there are churches which separate brother from brother; we both stand as one before God. Do you know who are the greatest doers of evil to humanity?"

"Whom do you consider such?"

"Those who would separate men through religion, which should be the means of uniting them in one. The priests ought to make men happy, to call forth joy and love, and they are filled with the spirit of persecution, are hostile to those of a different faith and darken the mind."

"Well," replied the grey-haired man, "just because the calling of the priest is the highest and the holiest, it becomes so fatal when it is perverted. There is no means of destroying the ecclesiastical power, but there is a way to overcome and turn it to our advantage."

"And what is that?"

"To base religion upon reason, the laws of the State upon moral forces and not upon might alone. Freedom, honor, human love, every virtue must find its home in the State, in social life. Then will the whole of existence be full of light; then will every day be holy; truth, faith and righteousness will prevail in the walk and conversation and every act. No man will rule over another; the law will rule, and in the law moral power—that pure divine spark within, which warms our heart and illumines our understanding, becoming a burning flame."

"O truly! That is the kingdom of heaven which we are to establish on the earth," cried Joseph laying both hands on the shoulders of the old man, and gazing into his radiant countenance. "We will labor and not be weary in laboring to realize it; each one at his post. Farewell, brother Benjamin."

"Farewell, brother Joseph," responded the grey-haired man, and they embraced and kissed each other.

Franklin died full of years, and the freedom of his country was established. Joseph sank into an early grave, and his noblest deeds seemed fruitless; but to-day Austria is seeking more and more to base the state upon the freedom of the citizen.

OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE.

"TOO KNOWING FOR FAITH."

To the Editor of The Inquirer :

I clip the following from the Providence Journal:—

"We are in that deplorable condition of mind where we have just knowledge enough to doubt the first chapter of Genesis, and not faith sufficient to believe in the Sermon on the Mount. Before long we shall become so scientific and well-informed, that when a person dies there will be no funeral services. Some one will read comforting passages from the transactions of the American Scientific Association, and the mourners will go about with small hammers in their hands, chipping the rocks and assuaging their anguish by proving the antiquity of creation. Front seats at the scientific lectures will be reserved for the widow and the fatherless, and instead of looking up to heaven for our consolation, we shall bore down a few feet deeper in the earth for our interesting facts. We have traded off all simple religious faiths for a few meagre scientific facts, but there may come that day—when we think of bestowing our patronage on some undertaker—that we shall wish to trade back again, and in something of a hurry.

"We recently saw a man who believed that the whale swallowed Jonah, and we were glad to see him, and to cling to this rare specimen of all faith and no intelligence. He was a much happier-looking man than any of the advanced thinkers of the age, that we have had the pleasure of seeing. Macaulay says that George Fox, although he possessed an intellect too much disordered for liberty, and not sufficiently disordered for Bedlam, was still able to convert men of ability, like Barclay and Penn, simply because Fox believed what he did believe. In close quarters, the man who really believes anything is more than a match for a man who entertains an intelligent doubt on all subjects. Shut Moody and Sankey into a room with Francis Abbott and John Weiss for a week, and at the end of that time you will find Abbott and Weiss on their knees reading that excellent little tract called 'What shall I do to be saved?' with tears streaming down their cheeks, and all because Moody and Sankey are just ignorant enough to believe something, while Abbott and Weiss are so precious knowing that they are not sure that they know anything. In spiritual matters we want a man at the helm who has entire confidence in himself, if he really does not know as much as we do. What the world has gained in one direction in the last fifty years, it has lost in another. If we could retain the faith of our forefathers, with our present worldly comforts, how happy we should be. We live in better houses, we walk on better sidewalks, and we drink better water than did our ancestors; but we have not their reverence for sacred things, nor their belief in things eternal. They never saw the railroad, nor the telegraph, nor the last work of Professor Tyndal; but they all believed in the day of judgment, and they all loved the sound of the church-going bell. They lived in contentment and died in peace, and they were more solicitous to know the final destiny of their own souls than the 'Origin of their Species.' We, their unhappy children, have relinquished the faith that cheers, without attaining to that knowledge that illumines, losing all our piety in our vain efforts to become profound."

It used to be said that "Ignorance is the mother of Devotion;" but piety has of late years been disinclined to confess to such a lineage. The Providence Journal, however, insists upon the reality of this discarded relationship. "We recently," it says, "saw a man who believed that the whale swallowed Jonah, and we were glad to see him, and to cling to this rare specimen of all faith and no intelligence. He was a much happier man than any of the advanced thinkers of the age, that we have had the pleasure of seeing." It then proceeds to enlarge upon the advantages resulting from being sufficiently ignorant to keep an undoubting confidence in things incredible to a man of thought and study. Moody and Sankey are cited, as the illustrations of the good results of abstaining from inquiry into the realities of things. These are the leaders the world needs, not because they know what is before or behind, but because they are sufficiently ignorant of the responsibilities of leadership, to be perfectly ready to assume them. "In spiritual matters," says this new prophet, "we want a man at the helm who has entire confidence in himself, if he really does not know as much as we do."

Now one or two remarks seem to be in order on this subject. It is evident that our common school system is gradually making piety, of a high grade, impossible among the people. A reform is imperatively demanded. Action should be taken before it is too late. The evil might, perhaps, be averted in this way. Let there be a stated visitation of the schools, by a judicious committee of citizens, selected for gravity of behavior and constitutional respect for the world "as it was;" and let it be the care of this body to make diligent inquiry into the mental condition of the rising generation. So often as they discover, in any case, a depraved tendency to question any statement in the book of Jonah, let them instantly remove the incipient "advanced thinker" from the baleful influence of the spelling-book and multiplication table, and put him on a diet of Providence Journal and Mr. Moody's sermons, until any unsafe developments of intelligence shall be extinguished. He may then be used, during his minority, as a warning to the school whose good name he has compromised, by his pernicious skepticism, and finally sent to Washington to a place in the patent office, where he may be soundly cured of any lingering hankering for novelties.

If this course of frequent examination of schools and severe treatment for nascent unbelief shall prove inadequate, then, by all means, let the schools be closed at once; otherwise, we shall soon see the last of human happiness on earth. Mankind will gradually cast aside its faith in Jonah and the whale, and "the human face divine" will lose its moon like and guileless peace. Children will grow up "advanced thinkers," they will "peak and pine," until six or seven of them will have to combine their corporeal resources, in order to become the owners of one poor shadow. The boys will be as thin as the wise and sinful John Weiss, and the girls will fade into the ghostly proportions of Mrs. Livermore.

But even this is by no means the worst of it. We could abide the prospect of a posterity whose bodies should attenuate as their minds should enlarge; we can even conceive some advantages resulting from such leanness, when by-and-by the world shall have become somewhat crowded; but who will take charge of that future hive, crammed with mischievous knowledge, and swarming with philosophers? Who will guide it safely into the unknown, when it has lost from its helm the confident ignorance that has always been so ready to direct when wise men have doubted? The present leaders of church and state cannot abide forever. What will happen when our schools have left us none but "advanced thinkers," who, without a particle of faith in the book of Jonah, shall resort for guidance to the ascertained facts?

LEOMINSTER, MASS.

W. H. SAVAGE.

SIR W. LAWSON says it is reported "that Mr. Bass loses £10,000 in one brewing when there is a thunderstorm coming on,"

ELEEMOSYNARY EDUCATION.

To The Editor of the Inquirer :

PRESIDENT ELIOT, of Cambridge, objects to the education of theological students as a matter of charity or benevolence, on what seem good grounds. These he states better than we could; and, indeed, it is a serious question whether this sort of dependence does not weaken or take away a man's self-respect. And also whether not too many, but rather the wrong men, are educated for the ministry. Some of our best and most useful men are those who have made their way, not with the help of friends or societies, but who have fought their way through, and have gained courage and hardihood in the process.

However, the experiment is being wrought out, and opinion or remonstrance will probably have little weight. There is another question which seems to have a relation to this. Do we not begin this process much earlier, and is not all our education too much "eleemosynary?" Our primary schools not only, but all common schools, our high schools, and normal schools and even colleges, are made, one after another, free, and the community is taxed to educate children, many of whose parents are perfectly able to pay for their instruction as they do for the other necessities—food, clothing and shelter, and the State is no more bound to furnish it. Others who cannot afford the same, are educated above their condition, or made dependent and useless by the "little learning" which is "a dangerous thing."

It is not wise training which makes men or women feel that the State owes them anything except protection. It is not wise training which makes men or women dependent or which takes away their self-reliance.

Common schools may furnish the mere elements of education—reading, writing and perhaps arithmetic; but when we go beyond this, we trench upon private rights.

There are too the same objections to "School and State" that there are to "Church and State," and this we know would not be tolerated. They manage these things in Germany, but that is a paternal government. So they do in Japan; but there they make distinctions of rank. Imagine us doing that in this country!

No; the President is right about eleemosynary education, but he will come nearer to the truth if he will lay his foundations broader and deeper and begin at the beginning of this spirit of dependence which begets helplessness. You can't make a paternal government of a democracy.

X.

AT THE THEATRE FRANCAISE.

To The Editor of The Inquirer :

WE have at last had a Moliere evening at the theatre, and not a Sunday evening either. Last Monday was the birthday of the favorite French play-writer and actor, and we had the satisfaction of seeing two of his best pieces acted in the wonderfully perfect manner known only to French actors. Their acting delights me, and the minor parts astonish me by being as perfect as the chief.

After the plays a ceremony in honor of Moliere was performed, and all the actors and actresses of the Française, forty-four in number, marched on the stage and were received with immense applause. They all bowed gracefully to us, and then turned and placed laurel wreaths upon the pedestal of Moliere's statue. It was a wonderful company of superior looking men and handsome and fascinating looking women. My Yankee head was quite turned by the sight. American theatres will be nowhere in my opinion when I return to the home of the free.

Z.

PARIS, January 29.

FROM CINCINNATI.

I FEEL moved to write you of our great enjoyment and hoped-for success in Mr. Wendte's ministry among us. He is doing us all good, inspiring us with his spirit of cheer, and hope, and enthusiasm for the good, the true, and "whatsoever things are lovely." He has accomplished the miraculous work of uniting the two societies,—Radical and Conservative,—and is remarkably adapted to this peculiar community, so largely composed of the Radical German element. He also satisfies the Conservatives by his beautiful devotional spirit and faith in man's spiritual nature. Mr. Wendte seems to be the "man sent of God" to bring us out of our difficulties. I believe it only rests with ourselves to build up a great and powerful liberal Unitarian church in this great city. The opportunity is a grand one to do a great work for God.

We have a new Board of Trustees, having taken Robert Collyer's advice, and placed some young men upon it, to infuse fresh enthusiasm and fresh ways of doing the needed work. We hope to sell both of the dingy old church buildings we now possess and get a new church started toward completion by the end of the year, which is a consummation devoutly to be wished for.

We have a Benevolent Society which is well attended every week, and our Sunday school numbers more scholars than for several years. We have found great benefit in adopting the new singing book, arranged by Mr. Wendte and H. S. Perkins,—"The Sunny Side." The music is very bright and joyous, and well adapted to children's voices. Liberals owe Messrs. Wendte and Perkins a vote of thanks for this valuable book. It brings sunshine into the school. We have arrived at that millennial stage when we have a surplus of teachers in the Sunday school. We have several teachers of experience, culture and maturity of thought, and we find the children get valuable instruction thereby.

We have had some nice festivals during the winter; a beautiful religious service for the children at Christmas, with songs and hymns and readings from the Bible. We had also a Christmas Tree and a Mother Goose Party,—Mr. Wm. Bellows appearing as that famous matron, to the delight of all the grown people, and entrancing bewilderment of the children.

We have a young people's social organization called the "Unity Club," which bids fair to rank among the institutions of the city. It has already a membership of three hundred people. Professor Clark, of the Cincinnati University, is the able president of it. There are several departments comprised in its work; Culture, Amusement and Helpfulness, with committees to organize plans of usefulness and entertainment. Once a month there are refreshments, coffee, cake and sandwiches provided by the ladies of the church. I need not say that these meetings are crowded.

The "Club" invited Prof. Edward S. Morse to give a course of lectures on Zoology, Mr. Whelpley, of the firm of Robert Clark & Co., booksellers, uniting with us in making them a success. Prof. Morse delivered four lectures, to large and cultivated audiences, in one of the prominent halls of the city.

Then we had a very interesting lecture-talk, by Prof. Stone, of the Cincinnati Observatory, on Astronomy. There have been other entertainments during the winter; Prof. Smith, of the Hughes High School, read a paper on "Daniel Deronda"; we have had music, tableaux, and readings by Mr. Wendte and others.

But the masterpiece of the "Committee on Amusement" was the Dickens party. It was given in the vestry of the church, where we have a stage with scenery, footlights and accessories. There were some forty of Dickens' noted characters, in appropriate costumes, who passed across the stage in turn, Pickwick being the central figure, seated in an arm chair. Finally all the characters were grouped together in one farewell tableau and the evening's entertainment was ended. The performance was conducted by the efficient Chairman of the Amusement Committee, Mr. W. H. Bellows.

Last Sunday Mr. Wendte gave us an excellent sermon on "The Royal Road to Happiness." He said happiness required three things; labor or work for the hands, something to love to keep the heart fresh and young, and something to hope for,—a belief in the immortal life.

In the evening we had a beautiful Vesper Service, with selections from the "Minor Poetic Voices of the Time," and music by the fine quartette choir. Mr. Wendte read several exquisite poems by W. C. Gannett, F. E. Abbot, Samuel Longfellow, J. W. Chadwick, and Charles G. Ames. They were all remarkable for religious aspiration and trust in God's Providence and a fine devotional spirit. These poems were prefaced with a little account of each author's life.

H. H.

DR. GEORGE M. BEARD writes in the Independent that probably the majority of the authorities whom the Rev. Joseph Cook quotes would, if they attended the lectures, be astonished at the use made of their researches. "Scientific experts, accustomed to sail slowly and cautiously along the shore, constantly throwing the lead and taking the bearings, and rarely or never venturing to go off soundings, tremble at the temerity of one who, despite the perils of fog and storm, puts boldly out to sea, steers by dead reckoning, and is rarely or never on soundings."

SPIRIT OF THE PRESS.

[From the Morning Star.]

BECOMING ALARMED. Who would believe it! Some of our orthodox religious papers are beginning to be afraid that the evangelistic movement, as represented by Moody and Sankey, is going to be like opening "the caves of the winds," will let in "almost any enthusiasm and all the women in creation." So we may infer that the Messenger, from which we quote, believes that "enthusiasts" and "all the women in creation" dwell in the cave of the winds.

[From the Boston Journal.]

Gov. HAYES stands pledged to reform; he was nominated on that express understanding at Cincinnati; he confirmed the obligation in his acceptance letter, in which, for the purpose of giving the people the best assurance of his aims and of qualifying himself for the work, he declared he would not be a candidate for re-election; and now the whole country expects him to be true to his word, and, what is quite as important, expects the Republican party to enable him to carry out a reform policy.

[From the Springfield Republican.]

THE three most conspicuous representative reform Republicans are Carl Schurz, Secretary Bristow and George W. Curtis. The hope has been felt and expressed by many of the best supporters of Gov. Hayes that at least one, if not two of these gentlemen, will be found in his cabinet. Thousands of hesitating voters may be said to have supported Hayes with the distinct belief that he would do this. But it is significant that all the more intelligent speculations on the subject now leave them out altogether. There seems to be a common acceptance of Senator Morton's positive assurance, early in the winter, that he had fixed the Hayes administration against these men. We are not willing to believe that these indications are to be realized in their entirety.

[From the Nation.]

WE must again remind our readers that the Commission was not formed to do absolute justice, but to find the simplest and wisest way out of a position of great difficulty and danger.

[From the New York Tribune.]

It is still the opinion of some hapless friends or conscienceless managers of New Jersey Central that they suffer because "newspapers made a violent attack" upon the stock. These people, notwithstanding some instructive experience, fail to comprehend the duties and functions of a newspaper, and the limitations of its power, even as they failed to comprehend the duties, functions and limitations of the railway director. It is the business of a newspaper to print news. It is the business of a railway director to render a truthful and clear account to stockholders of the manner in which their property has been managed. If he fails to render such an account, it becomes news of the highest interest, incomparably the more important to stock and bondholders because the management has tried to conceal it. Hence it is the business of a newspaper, whenever it can, to place before stockholders the very facts which the management tries to conceal.

[From the Boston Herald, Feb. 15.]

WHILE the newspaper scribes were busy at work yesterday noon, and just after Mr. Moody had declared that there was no business in the world so important as that of saving souls, an elderly man, with tears in his eyes, leaned over the enclosure and laid the following note on the Herald table:

"Reporter—I came from Philadelphia, and was the bearer of a message to Mr. Moody, which contained the following request for prayer, which I handed in, but which has been ignored by the evangelists:

"The earnest prayers of Mr. Moody and his 'praying-band' are requested for a woman in Philadelphia, made insane by her participation in his meetings there."

"The husband of this woman is an honest, hard-working, industrious and frugal man, and the father of two children. Since this affliction has come upon him he feels almost like cursing God and Moody for thus devastating his once happy home and rendering his children motherless. Cannot something be done through prayer to help this unhappy husband? By what right do they refuse to pray for this unfortunate mother?"

E. S. S."

The note was endorsed by others in the audience probably acquainted with the case.

[From the Boston Saturday Evening Gazette.]

THE system of "strikes" in labor is not a growth indigenous to American soil. It belongs to monarchical or despotic countries, rather than to a country where the dignity of labor and the manliness of the laborer are respected. In a society which interferes with everything, and in effect fixes the price of labor, converting men who work into machines, it is possible that there may be cases of oppression for which there is no relief except in the stoppage of the human machinery. But here, where industry is diversified, and where skilled labor obtains a better reward than elsewhere upon earth, there is no call for combinations in the interest of labor. Each man who has the qualities of skill and of faithfulness for what he undertakes may feel safe that there is for him a fair opening for employment, and a fair return awaiting his efforts. He need ask no combination to interfere between him and his employer. Such a combination may be of advantage to the incompetent workman; it is of no benefit to anybody else. It undertakes to establish a dead level of compensation, in which talent and industry are at a disadvantage. There are no premiums in it for merit; there is no incitement to extra endeavor; it recognizes the two classes of employer and employed, but it ignores the fact that there are many in the one class that may, and will, if events are left to their natural ordering, pass into the other. It is unjust to ambition, while it fosters mediocrity or incapacity.

[From the Springfield Republican.]

MR. JENNINGS, writing from London to the New York World, is quite sure that the supremacy in cotton manufacture is passing permanently from England to America. The opinion is a trifle premature, to say the least, in view of the fact that the exportation of cotton goods from England was the largest ever reached, in 1876, being 3,668 million yards against an export of 96 million yards from the United States, or forty-fold. In fact, the whole American exportation was not equal to the increase of the English exportation of 1876 over that of 1875. It is true that the exportation of England to the United States is not more than one-fourth what it was a few years ago, and that quite a trade in American goods is done at Manchester, but the principal effort of American competition, so far, is to compel the English manufacturers to make more honest goods, by substituting cotton for clay filling. The English consumption of raw cotton is double the American, and rising, annually, and the English are distributing their goods with great persistence, especially in South America, where they hope to make good their losses in the United States.

JOTTINGS.

SUBSCRIBERS who are in arrears will greatly oblige us by making prompt remittance.

In 1876 there were 47,393,000 acres of land under cultivation in the United Kingdom.

REV. GEO. S. MERRIAM delivered an interesting discourse at All Souls' Church on "All Things are Yours."

REV. W. R. ALGER spoke at the Church of the Messiah upon a pleasant topic: "The Attributes and Fruits of Human Kindness."

THE disused burial-grounds of Old St. Pancras and St. George's-in-the-East have been laid out as gardens for the use and recreation of the public forever.

PROF. FELIX ADLER, before the "Society of Ethical Culture," delivered another lecture on the "Origin of Religion." His special theme was the Hebrew religion, and he had a large audience.

IT is rumored that a grand tournament will take place during the coming season, under the patronage of the Prince of Wales. The Princess is expected to take the part of Queen of Beauty.

THERE have been graduated from Williams College 31 representatives to Congress, 5 United States senators, 8 governors, 16 judges of the supreme Court, 32 presidents of colleges and 760 clergymen.

BARONESS BURDETT-COUTTS has purchased Cooper's Garden Chapel, Shoreditch, recently in the occupation of the Primitive Methodists, for £2,000, in order to establish a science institute for the district.

NEW ORLEANS.—REV. J. HAZARD HARTZELL seems to be commending himself in his new field. He has just completed a course of lectures upon prominent historical characters, ending with one upon Socrates.

THE death of an orange tree at Versailles, which was in its 455th year, is announced. It was known by the name of Grand Bourbon. In the year 1421 the Queen of Navarre gave her gardener the seed at Pampe-luna.

AN iron mountain, rivaling its Missouri namesake, has been discovered sixty miles north of Duluth, Minn. It is eight miles long, one and half miles wide, and one thousand two hundred feet above the level of Lake Superior.

THE Queen's oldest grandson, Prince Frederick William Albert Victor, son of the Prince Imperial of Germany and the Princess Royal of England, has just completed his eighteenth year, and, according to the laws of Prussia, attains his majority.

PORTLAND, OREGON.—THE Rev. E. I. Galvin is filling the pulpit of T. I. Eliot, in Portland, during absence of the latter in Europe. He has also been making a tour of the Sound, preaching at the various ports on the way, thus doing good missionary work.

REV. J. W. CHADWICK preached in his church in the morning on "The Province of Religion," and in the evening the subject of his Vesper Talk was "The Poetry of Emerson." Mr. Chadwick's papers upon the poets have been very interesting, which in fact goes without saying.

LECTURING on ants, Sir John Lubbock observed that these interesting insects might be fairly considered as forming a race of beings second only in intelligence to ourselves. Indeed, the analogy between our own social and economical relations and those of ants was in many cases surprisingly close.

OWING to the action of the waves, the great pyramidal rock overhanging the shore of Lake Superior, a few miles east of Silver Lake, and known as McDonald's Peak, has fallen. The peak was a column of granite, measuring at its base 100 feet in circumference, and rising to the height of 280 feet.

BOSTON YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN UNION.—GOV. Rice and Hon. John D. Long gave fine addresses last Sunday evening to a crowded audience, the occasion being a special service commemorative of the birthday of George Washington. Singing and other exercises were conducted by the President, W. H. Baldwin.

DAVENPORT, IOWA.—THE Spectroscope—the name at least, has met with a revival, and No. 1 has just appeared here under the auspices of the Davenport Eclectic Club. It is largely occupied by a New Year's sermon by Rev. S. S. Hunting. Of the first number 3,000 copies have been printed; of the next it is proposed to issue 8,000.

ITALY has declared its seventeen Universities open to women. A like action has been taken by Switzerland, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark. A ministerial order has been issued in Holland opening every University and gymnasium to women. France has opened the Sorbonne to women, and Russia its highest schools of medicine and surgery.

REV. O. B. FROTHINGHAM's discourse at Masonic Temple on Sunday morning was upon the "Responsible Authors of Unbelief," not unbelief in certain doctrines of the church, but that unbelief which enervates all moral earnestness and undermines the foundations of character. He found the responsibility in the system which primarily assumes that the whole aim and purpose of life is to save the soul hereafter.

REV. JOHN WEISS, in a discourse before a large congregation at the Parker Memorial, took for his subject "The Theory of Revivals." He considered the present age one of sensations and frauds, and classed the present revival at the Tabernacle in the latter category. Moody and Sankey were welcomed by the sentimental and ignorant, who were ever-ready for sensations, and not by the people of culture, whom they never would reach.

IT is said that a powerful yet cheap disinfectant may be made by dissolving a drachm of nitrate of lead in a pint of boiling water, and two drachms of common salt in a bucket of water. When both are dissolved pour the two mixtures together, and when the sediment has settled there will be a pail full of clear fluid, which is a saturated solution of the chloride of lead. A cloth saturated with the liquid and hung up in a room will at once sweeten a fetid atmosphere.

SALEM, MASS.—REV. FIELDER ISRAEL has accepted the unanimous call to become pastor at the First (Unitarian) church and will be installed at an early day. Mr. Israel studied at Dickinson College at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, and has been settled in Baltimore, Md.; Wilmington, Del.; Taunton, Mass.; and again at Wilmington, Del., having accepted a call to return. He has made a most favorable impression, both in and out of the pulpit, during the few weeks he has been in Salem.

THE ladies of the Barton Square Society, Salem, Mass., arranged for a sale of useful articles in the Vestry on Wednesday and Thursday, Feb. 21 and 22, including the usual attractions of fish pond, pound table, ice cream, etc.

BOSTON.—REV. A. J. PATTERSON, in the Roxbury Universalist church, reviewed a recent lecture by Rev. Mr. Cook on "Eternal Sin and Suffering." Boston seems to have a fair prospect of lively times in polemics.

AT Horticultural Hall, before the Free Religious Association, Rev. Francis Tiffany delivered the first of a series of four lectures upon "The Development of Religious Thought in our country during the past century." Mr. Tiffany's theme was "Jonathan Edwards," of whom, and of whose theological system, he gave a careful sketch.

THE friends of the Old South Church are taking active measures toward giving entertainments in the various cities and towns of the State in aid of the fund required for its purchase and preservation.

THERE is on the Dorsetshire coast of England a shale deposit which is of undoubted animal origin, and is supposed to consist of blubber, fish and other forms of marine animal life. It is found to yield an excellent carbon, which has precisely the same properties and action for all sanitary purposes as animal charcoal that costs from $70 to $90 per ton, while it can be produced for one-fourth the price. As a test of its clarfyng powers, a mixture was made of sewage water with a compound of ink dye-stuffs in solution, forming a liquid more intractable than would ever be met with in actual drainage operations. This was run through a layer of the "sanitary carbon," and the water came from it perfectly clear, with no perceptible odor. As the deposit is of immense extent, the discovery is likely to prove of great sanitary value.

RHEIMS CATHEDRAL.—The Paris correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette says, that the French Minister of Public Works has authorized an expenditure of $400,000 upon the restoration of Rheims cathedral. The present building was begun in 1212, upon the site of the old cathedral, built in the ninth century, which had been destroyed by fire the year before, the architect being Robert de Coucy. The roof of the new cathedral was burned in 1421, and though it was replaced by another roof shortly afterward, the building has since been mutilated in several parts, and it will be no easy matter to restore it to its primitive splendor. The restoration of the wood-work and carving of the interior will cost a large sum. The organ placed in the cathedral in 1481 is still in excellent state of preservation. The cathedral possesses, next to Paris, the richest collection of gold and silver ornaments in France.

An adventurer in France has been sentenced to three months' imprisonment. He had got some 15,000 francs from a priest to bring out a novel invention, which, he said, would make the abbé famous throughout the country. The invention consisted in the creation of what he styled Sinai-altars. A small casket of incense was to be hidden under the altar, and at the most solemn moment of the service the priest was to touch a spring, and the next second a mystic cloud of odorific fumes would rise around him and veil him, for a few minutes, from the sight of the congregation. The brilliant idea flattered the religious fervor of the priest, who advanced the money, and was to have a share in the success of the patent. But the scamp had spent all the money on other smoke than that intended for the altar. The priest felt himself befooled and robbed while on the way to befooling others. So, in this vexed mood, he has had the fellow punished.

The Inquirer.

Published every Thursday, from the middle of September to the middle of July, in the Park Bank Building, 214 Broadway, New York.

To be in season for insertion the same week, communications intended for publication must be forwarded in time to reach this office not later than Tuesday. No attention is paid to anonymous communications. We require the name and address of every writer, not necessarily for publication, but as guarantee of good faith.

Communications relating to the editorial department of the paper should be addressed, "Editor of the Inquirer, P. O. Box 109, New York City," all others to "Publisher," same address.

No person is authorized to collect money or make contracts for the Inquirer, who cannot show written authority from the Publisher.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

Three Dollars per year, in advance. Clergymen, Two Dollars per year. Postage, Twenty Cents per year, in advance. Remittances should be made by Registered Letter or by Post-Office Money Order, or Draft on New York payable to Publisher of THE INQUIRER.

ADVERTISING RATES.

51x cents per agate line per week; outside page and pages next reading matter, ten cents per line. Special Notices twenty cents per line.

Discount on five or more insertions will be given at similar rates to all parties.

Copy for Thursday's paper received until Tuesday afternoon.

Advertisements must be acceptable in every respect.

Office, PARK BANK BUILDING, 214 Broadway.

Address,

THE INQUIRER,

Box 109, New York.

Special Notices.

Protestant Leaders.

A COURSE OF LECTURES

JOHN W. CHADWICK,

AT THE

Second Unitarian Church, Brooklyn,
Corner of Clinton and Congress Streets.

1876—77.

LECTURES:

VI. Murray and Universalism.

Sunday evening, March 4, 1877.

VII. Thomas Paine: His Relation to his own and later Times in Matters of Religion.

Sunday evening, April 1, 1877.

VIII. Channing and Unitarianism.

Sunday evening, April 15, 1877.

IX. Theodore Parker.

Sunday evening, May 6, 1877.

Hour of Lecture, HALF-PAST SEVEN.

Morning Service at 10:35 precisely. Vesper Service, Third Sunday Evening of each Month, with the above exceptions.

a beautiful Quarterly Journal, finely illustrated, and containing an elegant colored Flower Plate with the first number. Price only 25 cents for the year. The first No. for 1877 just issued in German and English.

Vick's Flower and Vegetable Garden, in paper, 50 cts.; with elegant cloth covers, $1.
Vick's Catalogue—300 illustrations, only 2 cents.
Address, JAMES VICK, Rochester, N. Y.

"Admirably fitted to teach the art from the very beginning."—Chicago Tribune.

"Mr. Hope is one of the 'old masters' in this sort of work. He has prepared an excellent work, in which his subject is treated fully and clearly."—Chicago Post.

"Altogether the best book that can be placed in the hands of the amateur."—N. Y. Graphic.

"The diagrams are excellent and the instructions clear and direct."—N. Y. Evening Post.

SORRENTO AND INLAID WORK FOR

AMATEURS, BY ARTHUR HOFF.

A practical manual of Scroll Sawing, Overlaying, Polishing, Inlaying, Shellwork, etc. Containing 50 full sized designs, new and beautiful. The designs are worth more than price of book. Tastefully bound in muslin. For sale by booksellers generally. Sent by mail on receipt of price, $1.50. Descriptive circular mailed to any address.

JOHN WILKINSON, Publisher, 55 Lake St., Chicago.
G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, 132 Fifth Ave., New York.

COMMON SENSE
ROCKING CHAIRS.
Everybody's Favorite
Rocker.

A GOOD EASY CHAIR

Is considered by many to be one of the desirable things of earth. Where one is rid of fatigue and weariness, and can bear with tedious visits and conversations, and can place remarks, and when left to his own reflections he finds himself amid a Society of Phantoms and Visions suited to his mind.

Those in need of such a Chair will please send stamp for Illustrated Circulars and Price List to

F. A. SINCLAIR, Mottville,
Onondaga Co., N. Y.

Be careful that the chairs are stamped with my name in full; others are imitations.

For sale by Furniture Dealers in New York and at 218 Fulton street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Consumption Cured.

An old physician, retired from active practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of consumption, bronchitis, catarrh, asthma and all throat and lung affections, also a positive and radical cure for nervous debility and all nervous complaints, after having thoroughly tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, feels it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive, and a conscientious desire to relieve human suffering, he will send, free of charge, to all who desire it, this recipe, with full directions for preparing and successfully using. Sent by return mail by addressing with stamp, naming this paper, DR. W. C. STEVENS,
126 Powers' Block, Rochester, N. Y.

READY AT LAST!

SIDONIE

"The characters are all depicted with the touch of an artist. In a word, it is a romance full of interest, and told with dramatic skill in pure and elegant English."—N. Y. Herald.

"It is a splendid book."—S. R. CROCKER, Editor of the Literary World.

"It is one of those rare romances which do not perish with the flowers of Spring, or go out of fashion with the Fall bonnets. The author is gifted with rare and remarkable qualifications, imagination, intelligence, the power of creating character, and above all with a purity, sweetness and sincerity of Nature, that lend to his writings a charm exquisite, yet indefinable, like the perfume of a flower."—Lucy H. Hooper.

Sixty-three thousand sold in Europe. Four thousand ordered in advance of publication in America.

All booksellers have it. Price, $1.50. Cloth, extra.

Also, recently published, Meeting the Sun—a Journey all Round the World. 50 Plates. $4.50. Roman Legends, Fables and Folk Lore. R. H. Busk, $2.50. Half Hours with Insects, by A. S. Packard, Jr., with 200 Illustrations. $2.50. Any of above sent, postpaid, on receipt of price.

ESTES & LAURIAT, Boston.

WINTER THE SEASON FOR SELF-IMPROVEMENT.

An Indispensable Requisite

FOR EVERY

Teacher, Advanced Student, Intelligent Family.
THE BEST ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

Webster's Unabridged.

"The best practical English Dictionary extant."—London Quarterly Review, Oct. 1873.

FROM THE CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE UNITED STATES:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 25, 1875.—The book has become indispensable to every student of the English language. A Law Library is not complete without it, and the Courts look to it as of the highest authority in all questions of definition.—MORRISON R. WAITE.

FOUR PAGES COLORED PLATES.

Published by G. & C. MERRIAM, Springfield, Mass.
Sold by all Booksellers.

The Spanish Arched Instep Boot

Was first introduced and exclusively sold in our Shoe Department.

It gives the foot the appearance of being much smaller than it really is, yet no inconvenience is experienced by cramping the foot.

Ladies with enlarged joints and tender feet can be so fitted that they may at once enjoy both ease and elegance. A variety of ready-made Boots for ladies, misses and children, including a novelty which we are just now introducing, (a shoe made from the skin of the kangaroo) are kept in widths to suit all kinds of feet, and at prices to suit all kinds of people.

All orders by mail will be promptly attended to and should be addressed

MANAGER KINZEY'S SHOE DEPARTMENT,
Broadway and Ninth Sts., N. Y.

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY

Manufacture those celebrated Bells for CHURCHES, ACADEMIES, &c. Price List and Circulars sent free.
HENRY McSHANE & CO.
BALTIMORE, MD.

HOWARD INSURANCE COMPANY,

OF NEW YORK.—OFFICE NO 66 WALL STREET.
Cash Capital $500,000.—Chartered 1825.
This Company insures property against loss or Damage by Fire and the risks of Inland Navigation and Transportation, on the most favorable terms.

SAM'L T. SKIDMORE, President.
HENRY A. OAKLEY, Vice-President.
DIRECTORS:
SAMUEL T. SKIDMORE, HEWLETT SCUDDER,
THOMAS W. GALE, CHARLES H. CLAYTON,
JOHN H. SWIFT, JOHN L. RIKER,
JAMES R. TAYLOR, GEORGE W. TALBOT,
HENRY J. SCUDDER, FREDERICK STURGES,
HENRY A. OAKLEY, JOHN J. WHITE,
CHARLES MALL, R. LENOX BELKNAP,
HENRY I. BARREY, JAMES C. CARTER,
WILLIAM H. WISNER, EDMUND PENFOLD,
ALEXANDER MAITLAND.
CHARLES A. HULL, Secretary.
RICHARD W. CLARK, Asst. Sec'y.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

For restoring Gray Hair to its natural Vitality and Color.

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color, with the gloss and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty sediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous, and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich, glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co.,
Practical and Analytical Chemists,
LOWELL, MASS.

Madame Foy's
CORSET SKIRT SUPPORTER
INCREASES IN POPULARITY EVERY YEAR.
And for HEALTH, COMFORT and STYLE, is acknowledged the BEST ARTICLE of the kind ever made. For sale by all leading jobbers and retailers. Beware of imitations and imitations.
MANUFACTURED SOLELY BY
FOY & HARMON,
New Haven, Conn.

LAMAR INSURANCE COMPANY,

OF NEW YORK.:
Broadway, cor. John Street.
Capital, - - $200,000.

ASSETS, JANUARY 1, 1877.
Cash on hand and in Bank . . . $10,414 77
U. S. Bonds, market value . . . 300,232 50
Loans on Coll. Good Stocks Collateral, 13,200 00
Bonds and Mortgages on Brick Dwellings . . . 56,400 00
Bills Receivable for Inland Prem's . . . 2,465 94
Premiums in course of collection . . . 8,830 43
New York Bank Stocks market value . . 19,725 00
$411,268 64

Losses unadjusted estimated at $10,100 00
ISAAC R. ST. JOHN, President.
A. R. FROTHINGHAM, Vice Pres't.
WM. B. MACDIARMID, Sec'y.

HOME Insurance Co. of New York,

Office No. 135 Broadway.
Forty-seventh Semi-Annual Statement,
Showing the condition of the Company on the first day of January, 1877.

Cash Capital . . . $3,000,000 00
Reserve for Re-Insurance . . . 1,858,464 68
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Dividends . . . 243,402 24
Net Surplus . . . 1,002,783 90

Total Assets - - - $6,104,650 82

SUMMARY OF ASSETS:
CASH IN BANKS . . . $312,311 22
BONDS AND MORTGAGES BEING FIRST LIEN ON REAL ESTATE WORTH $4,894,000 2,011,453 00
UNITED STATES STOCKS (MARKET VALUE) 2,517,625 00
BANK STOCKS (MARKET VALUE) . . . 286,602 80
STATE AND CITY BONDS (MARKET VALUE) 155,433 00
LOANS ON STOCKS, PAYABLE ON DEMAND (MARKET VALUE OF SECURITIES, $700,379) 519,631 35
INTEREST DUE ON 1st JANUARY, 1877 . . . 72,397 63
BALANCE IN HAND OF AGENTS, . . . 153,416 05
REAL ESTATE . . . 6,830 19
PREMIUMS DUE AND UNCOLLECTED ON POLICIES ISSUED AT THIS OFFICE . . . 8,330 26

Total - - - $6,104,650 82

LIABILITIES.
CLAIMS FOR LOSSES OUTSTANDING ON 1st JANUARY, 1877 . . . $212,027 24
DIVIDENDS UNPAID, . . . 1,375 00

Total, - - - $243,402 24

CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.
J. H. WASHBURN, Secretary.

THE NEW JERSEY MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.

J. H. STEDWELL, President.
C. H. BRINKERHOFF, Secretary.
J. H. CANNIFF, Cashier.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved ($2.00) Receipt Book." Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

Made of best material, in all sizes, for Adults and Children of both sexes; expands the chest, straightens up scooped shoulders; worth ten times its cost for Children and Students, sold by the Trade and Cleveland Shoulder Brace Co., Cleveland, Ohio. Send $1.00 and chest measure. Ask for Pratt's new Patent Brace.

ATLANTIC MUTUAL INSURANCE CO

NEW YORK,
OFFICE 51 WALL ST.

ORGANIZED 1842.

INSURES AGAINST MARINE AND INLAND NAVIGATION RISKS.

And will issue Policies making Loss payable in England.

Its Assets for the Security of its Policies are more than
TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured, are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated during the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearing interest until redeemed.

JOHN D. JONES, President.
CHARLES DENNIS, Vice-President.
W. H. H. MOORE, 2d Vice-President.
A. A. RAVEN, 3d Vice-President.
J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

P H E N I X INSURANCE COMPANY,

OF BROOKLYN, N. Y.

January 1st, 1877.

Capital . . . $1,000,000 00
Gross Surplus . . . 1,792,902 92
Gross Assets . . . $2,792,902 92

OFFICES:
Western Union Telegraph Building, BROADWAY, Cor. DEY St., New York.
Brooklyn Office, . . . 12 & 14 Court St
Brooklyn E. D. Office, . . . 53 Broadway.

The benefits to be derived by the public from Insurance against loss by fire are so great and numerous, when compared with its trifling cost, as to render it an imperative duty on every one to avail themselves of the protection afforded by the PHENIX INSURANCE COMPANY against the destructive ravages of fire, which in a few moments may lay waste the fruits of a whole life of industry.

STEPHEN CROWELL, President.
PHILANDER SHAW, Vice President.
WILLIAM B. CROWELL, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED A. D. 1850.

THE MANHATTAN LIFE INSURANCE CO., OF NEW YORK,

has paid $6,500,000 Death Claims; has paid $4,500,000 return premiums to Policy-holders; has a surplus of more than $1,000,000 over Liabilities; and a ratio of $120 Assets for every $100 Liabilities, by New York Standard of Valuation. It gives the best Insurance on the best lives at the most favorable rates.

EXAMINE THE PLANS AND RATES OF THIS COMPANY.

HENRY STOKES, C. Y. WEMPLE, Vice-President.
J. L. HALSEY, S. N. STEBBINS, Secretary, Actuary.
H. Y. WEMPLE, Assistant Secretaries.
H. B. STOKES

$55 to $77 a Week to Agents, $10 Outfit Free. P. O. VICKERY Augusta, Maine.

Miscellaneous.

Music Books for Sabbath

SCHOOLS.
CHORAL PRAISE.

Fitted for the occasions of the "Episcopal" year, but is a book of great concrete beauty for any denomination. 100 good Songs, Tunes and (easy short) Anthems. By Rev. J. H. Waterbury. Price 25 cents.

GOOD NEWS.

A happy title for a beautiful Sabbath School Song Book, which disappoints nobody, and contains a large number of songs which will be universal favorites. By R. M. McIntosh. Price 35 cents.

SHINING RIVER.

The glittering title aptly indicates the character of the provision of bright, pure songs of elevated sentiment, which fill the book with beauty. By H. S. & W. O. Perkins. Price 35 cents.

RIVER OF LIFE.

Containing songs contributed by a large number of well-known composers; it has an unusual variety, and everything is of the best quality. By H. S. Perkins and W. W. Bently. Price 35 cents.

LIVING WATERS.

Prepared for Camp Meetings, Revival Meetings, etc., this is also most appropriate for Sabbath School Work. No better collection is published. By D. F. Hodges. Price 30c. Remember the ENCORE (75 cts.) is the book for Singing Schools.

Either book mailed, post-free, for Retail Price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

C. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 Broadway,
New York

J. E. DITSON & CO.,
Successors to Lee & Walker, Philadelphia.

Simplest! Surest!! Best!!!

THE LIGHT RUNNING

"DOMESTIC"

SEWING MACHINE

Is the most satisfactory machine ever offered to families.

It makes a double-thread lock-stitch; has the Automatic, self-regulating Tension and Take-up, conical steel bearings, compensating journal, and is noiseless.

It does not fatigue the muscles or irritate the nerves; sews every fabric, and has never failed to give perfect satisfaction.

"DOMESTIC" SEWING MACHINE CO.,
Cor. Broadway and Fourteenth St.,
New York City.

THE BUTLER HEALTH

LIFT EXERCISE.

Commended by Highest Medical Authority.

A SCIENTIFIC SYSTEM of Concentrated Cumulative Exercise, adapted to the Preservation and Restoration of Health.

Principal Office, Spacious and well ventilated,
PARK BANK BUILDING, NO. 214 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK.

BROOKLYN: NO. 158 REMSEN STREET.

PARLORS FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN.

Call, or address

LEWIS G. JANES, Proprietor.

A Home and Farm

OF YOUR OWN

On the line of a GREAT RAILROAD, with good markets both EAST and WEST.

NOW IS THE TIME TO SECURE IT. Mild Climate, Fertile Soil, Best Country for Stock Raising in the United States.

Books, Maps, Full information, also "THE PIONEER," sent free to all parts of the world.

Address,

O. F. DAVIS,
Land Commissioner, U. P. R. R.,
OMAHA, NEB.

Miscellaneous.

STEARNS & BEALE,

STATIONERS,

BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS,
PRINTING and LITHOGRAPHY,

147 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

(Between Broadway and Nassau Street)

JOEL W. STEARNS.

WM. P. BEALE.

"The best Review in America for popular reading and instruction."

INTERNATIONAL REVIEW.

MARCH-APRIL, now ready.

I.—THE ADMINISTRATION OF PRESIDENT GRANT.—A review of the important Acts of the outgoing administration, with criticisms on its policy, its opportunities, and its influence at home and abroad, by an Independent Republican.

II.—THEORY AND PRACTICE IN ARCHITECTURE, by James C. Bayles of the Iron Age, discusses the means known to architectural science for producing safety in public buildings, including the methods of preventing and extinguishing fires; also, the difficulties in the way of putting in practice architectural theories.

III.—GERMAN COMIC PAPERS, by Julius Duboc, of Dresden, describes the comic journals published in the German language in Europe, and their effect upon German social and political affairs.

IV.—TWO NORSE SAGAS, by Professor Hjalmar H. Boyesen of Cornell University, is a review of the Norse stories recently translated by Professor Anderson, and serves to illustrate the Saga Civilization by them revived.

V.—RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT, by Van Buren Denslow, LL.D., of Union Law College, Chicago.

VI.—THE UNIVERSITY OF UPSALA, by Carl M. Thorden of Sweden, presents an account of the location, origin and academic constitution of this great University, with observations on the government and life of the students. This University celebrates its fourth centenary during the present year, and great preparations are being made for the event.

VII.—JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL AND MODERN LITERARY CRITICISM, by Ray Palmer, is an analysis of the critical powers of Lowell, with comments on the province and duties of criticism.

The Review also contains a sonnet, "Two Past Ages," by Charles (Tennyson) Turner of England; Mr. Hamerton's letter on Art in Europe; the usual scientific notes and comments on public events.

During 1877 the Review will devote space to European matters so far as they are likely to be interesting to Americans. It will introduce the most popular foreign authors to compete for favor with the best American writers. It will aim to be able, strong and practical in the character and style of its presentations. It is safe to say that no other magazine in the world can supply its place in the libraries of Americans who love to consider the progress of events throughout the world, and to know their bearing upon the interests of the United States.

It is not known that there is any reason why copies of the Review should not be found in every household. It has already the largest circulation of any secular Review, because of its popular attractions. These attractions will be developed gradually, and increase as their need is made manifest.

For sale by Newsdealers and Bookellers.

Price, $1 a Number. $5 a Year (Six Numbers).

A. S. BARNES & CO., Publishers,
111 & 113 William St., N. Y.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine.

$12 a day at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine.

MISFIT CARPETS.

English Brussels, Three Ply and Ingrain; also, Stair Carpets, Velvet Rugs, Crumb Cloths, etc., very cheap, AT THE OLD PLACE,

112 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

Carpets carefully packed and sent to any part of the United States free of charge.

SEND FOR PRICE LIST.

Miscellaneous.

OVINGTON BROTHERS,

246, 248, 250 and 252 Fulton Street,
BROOKLYN.

Fine China, Glass, Clocks,
Bronzes, etc., etc.

Just Received Invoices of

COPENHAGEN VASES,
LIMOGES FAIENCE VASES,
AND DOULTON WARE.

Lectures and Sermons,

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

FIRST SERIES.

The Education of Conscience.

Self Respect.

The Higher Reverence.

God on our Side.

Man and the Bible.

The Best Use of Sunday.

SECOND SERIES.

The Essential Piety of Modern Science.

A Rational Church.

Economy and Waste.

Immortal Life.

Also, WAY, TRUTH AND LIFE, a Biography of N. A. Staples, with sermons, price, $1.00.

For sale by CHARLES P. SOMERBY, 139 Eighth St., New York. Copies sent by mail at the rate of five cents each and postage.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.

Established in 1837.

Superior Bells of Copper and Tin, mounted with the best Rotary Hangings, for Churches, Schools, Farms, Factories, Court-houses, Fire Alarms, Tower Clocks, etc. Fully Warranted. Illustrated Catalogue sent Free.

VANDUSEN & TIPP, 102 E. 2d St., Cincinnati.

10 PER CENT NET.

Kansas, Missouri and Iowa Improved Farm First Mortgage Coupon Bonds Guaranteed. We guarantee, as an assurance, that we loan not to exceed one third of the actual value. In over six years' business never lost a dollar; never delayed a day on interest or principal; no investor through us ever did or ever will get an acre of land under foreclosure. Send for particulars and references.

J. B. WATKINS & CO., LAWRENCE, KAN., OR
HENRY DICKINSON, Manager, 30 Pine Street,
New York

BALD HEADS

Can be covered with a piece exactly fitted to the Bald spot, so perfect, and with work so ingeniously contrived as to appear each hair just issuing from the skin, the hair being exactly of the same shade and texture as the growing hair; they are so perfect they cannot be detected. Made only at BATCHELOR'S Celebrated Wig Factory, 16 Bond Street, N. Y.

HAIR DYE.

BATCHELOR'S CELEBRATED HAIR DYE is splendid. It never fails. The only true and perfect Dye. Harmless, reliable, instantaneous. No disappointment, no ridiculous tints; remedies the ill effects of bad dyes, leaves the hair soft and beautiful Black or Brown. Sold and properly applied at BATCHELOR'S Wig Factory, 16 Bond St., N. Y. Sold by all druggists.

W. A. Batchelor's Curative Ointment
Immediately cures Ring-Worm, Tetter, Itching of the Head, and all Eruptions of the Skin. Face or Body.

W. A. Batchelor's Alaska Seal Oil
for the Hair. The best Hair Oil in use.

W. A. Batchelor's Dentifrice
for beautifying and preserving the teeth and Gums and deodorizing the breath.

W. A. Batchelor's New Cosmétique,
Black or Brown, for tinting the Hair, Whiskers or Moustaches without greasing them. Sold at factory, 16 Bond Street, New York, and by all Druggists. Ask for them.

J. A. BENDALL.

THE INQUIRER.

VOL. XXXII.—NO. 13. }
WHOLE NO., 1583. }

THURSDAY, MARCH 1, 1877.

{ $3.00 PER ANNUM.
{ 10 CENTS A COPY.

STATEMENT OF THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

FREDERICK S. WINSTON, President.

For the Year ending December 31, 1876.

ANNUITY ACCOUNT.

No.	ANN. PAY'TS.	No.	ANN. PAY'TS.
In force, Jan. 1st, 1876.....	55 $27,965 72	In force, Jan. 1st, 1877.....	53 $26,098 88
Add Premium Annuities.....	6,480 79	Add Premium Annuities.....	6,393 46
Issued.....	5 1,581 36	Terminated.....	8 3,333 53
	60 $35,827 87		60 $35,827 57

INSURANCE ACCOUNT.

No.	AMOUNT.	No.	AMOUNT.
In force, Jan 1st, 1876.....	92,393 $305,067 221	In force, Jan. 1st, 1877.....	92,125 $301,278 037
New Risks.....	9,344 32,127 693	Terminated.....	9,612 35,968 7
	101,737 $337,184 914		101,737 $337,184 914

NOTE.—The amount of terminated Policies is larger than usual. The increase was, in a great measure, caused by the purchase of unmatured Endowments, either paid up or due in less than five years, which were discounted at seven per cent.

Dr.

REVENUE ACCOUNT.

Cr.

To Balance from last account.....	$75,414,923 42	By paid Death and Endowment Claims.....	$4,480,488 52
" Premiums received.....	15,136,703 36	" " Annuities.....	24,611 49
" Interests and Rents.....	4,878,260 34	" " Dividends.....	3,701,700 34
		" " Surrendered Policies and Additions.....	6,319,793 21
		" " Commissions (payment of current and extinguishment of future).....	676,967 49
		" " Contingent Guarantees account.....	56,160 85
		" " Expenses and Taxes.....	64,302 35
		" " Balance to New Account.....	79,526,800 87
	$95,429,887 12		$95,429,887 12

Dr.

BALANCE SHEET.

Cr.

To Reserve at four per cent.....	$77,502,062 00	By Mortgage on Real Estate.....	$60,856,200 13
" Claims by Death, not yet due.....	610,750 00	" " United States and State Bonds, &c.....	12,675,569 33
" Premiums paid in advance.....	24,372 43	" " Real Estate.....	4,246,245 40
" Contingent Guarantee Fund.....	654,812 59	" " Cash in banks and trust companies at interest.....	2,183,001 73
" Surplus for Division.....	3,568,161 57	" " Interest accrued.....	1,322,294 15
		" " Premiums deferred quarterly and semi-annual.....	925,332 99
		" " Premiums in transit, principally for December.....	157,195 10
		" " Balances due by agents.....	18,349 70
	$82,360,188 59		$82,360,188 59

Premiums deferred and in transit in the foregoing Balance Sheet, have been subjected to a deduction of twenty five per cent. by the Insurance Department, for the estimated cost of collecting the same. See Official report below.

NOTE.—If the New York Standard of four and a half per cent. Interest be used, the Surplus is $10,262,870.44.

From the Surplus for Division, as appears in the Balance Sheet, a Dividend will be apportioned to each Policy which shall be in force at its anniversary in 1877.

I have carefully examined the foregoing Statement, and find the same correct.
January 17, 1877.

WM. J. EASTON, Auditor.

NOTE.—By act of the Trustees, the membership of this Company is limited to one hundred thousand insured lives.

TRUSTEES.

Frederick S. Winston,
John V. L. Pruyn,
R. H. McCurdy,
William Betts,
Samuel E. Spruells,
Samuel M. Cornell,
Lucius Robinson,
W. Smith Brown,
William H. Fopham,

Samuel D. Babcock,
Henry A. Smythe,
Wm. E. Dodge,
George S. Coe,
Wm. M. Vermilye,
John E. Develin,
Martin Bates,
Wm. A. Haines,
Seymour L. Husted,

Oliver H. Palmer,
Henry E. Davies,
Richd. A. McCurdy,
Francis Skiddy,
James C. Holden,
Herman C. Von Post,
Geo. C. Richardson,
Alex. H. Rice,
W. F. Babcock,

R. Hatchford Starr,
Frederick H. Cossitt,
Lewis May,
Oliver Harriman,
Thomas Dickson,
Henry W. Smith,
John H. Sherwood,
Egisto P. Fabbri,
George H. Andrews.

RICHARD A. MCCURDY, Vice-President.

ROBERT A. GRANNISS, 2d Vice-President.

ISAAC F. LLOYD, Secretary.

W. H. C. BARTLETT, LL.D., Actuary

O. H. PALMER, Solicitor.

G. S. WINSTON, M. D., W. R. GILLETTE, M. D., Medical Examiners.

[Continued on next Page.]

To the Trustees of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York :

The undersigned, the Annual Committee appointed pursuant to the By-Laws of the Company, on the 20th day of December, 1876, to examine at the close of each fiscal year the accounts and assets of the Company.

Respectfully Report, That they have carefully examined all the assets, investments, and securities of the Company, and find—

That it had on the 1st day of January, 1877, stocks in the form of Bonds of the United States, and of New York and other cities, amounting in par value to $12,063,530, and in market value to $12,573,569.33, and that this latter sum is immediately convertible and available in cash. That of these securities $7,473,550 are in United States registered bonds, and $4,590,000 chiefly in city bonds. They are all specified in the accompanying schedule, are all genuine, and, in the opinion of the Committee, are all judicious and perfectly secure investments.

The Committee further report,

That on January 1, 1877, the company had invested in Bond and Mortgage upon real estate in fee, which was appraised at the time of each investment to be worth, at least twice the amount loaned, the sum of $60,856,200.18.

The Committee have examined each Bond and Mortgage, and find the same correct, as stated on the books of the Company. The Committee find that the interest on these bonds has been paid with great punctuality, and that the arrears of interest for the last six months are only a very small percentage on the amount due.

In addition to the security of the land covered by the Mortgages, the Company holds insurance on the buildings thereon, as collateral, in solvent and responsible Fire Insurance Companies, amounting to the sum of $31,000,000.

The Committee further report,

That the Company now owns property formerly pledged to it in Bonds and Mortgages to the extent of $335,893.97, that this is the total amount of all property purchased by it since its organization on Foreclosures, and held by it at the close of the last fiscal year ; and the Committee believe that this property will be sold without incurring any considerable deficit. This sum bears a small ratio to the total amount of the Company's assets, being about one (.01015) per cent. thereof.

In addition to this Real Estate, the Company owns, for the transaction of its business in the cities of New York, Boston, and Philadelphia, valuable real estate costing the sum of $3,440,451.43. The building in New York pays 8 per cent. on its cost, charging a fair rent for the part occupied by the Company. That in Boston is incomplete, and in Philadelphia has recently been finished.

The Committee have ascertained that the cash on hand on the 1st day of January, 1877, was $2,183,001.73. This sum, added to the securities immediately convertible into cash, makes a total of cash assets equal to $14,558,571.06 immediately available.

We have ascertained that the expenses of the Company for acquiring its business are nearly a quarter of one (.2333) per cent. upon the sum insured ; and the expense of conducting the business, which includes expenses of every kind, except claims by death, which includes expenses of every kind, except claims by death, is less than one-quarter of one per cent. on the same (.2191), which, in all, is less than one-half of one per cent. upon the sum insured (.4524), and is six and seven-tenths (.6701) per cent. upon the income of the year.

While the Committee were making investigation, the Superintendent of the Insurance Department, with his Deputy, Assistants, and Experts, was also engaged in examining the affairs of the Company, as required by law. He is still at work, examining not only into the liabilities of the Company, but likewise into the mathematical principles upon which its business is conducted and its liabilities are determined. This examination will be thorough and exhaustive, and its results presented in a report which will be published in due time, and to which the Committee refer,

AP of which is respectfully submitted.

Dated, January 17, 1877.

(Signed)

HENRY E. DAVIES,
GEO. S. COE,
SAMUEL M. CORNELL,
WM. H. POPHAM,
H. C. YON POST,
GEO. H. ANDREWS.

THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.

The Report of the Examination by the Insurance Department.

ALBANY, February 2d. 1877.

To the Editors of the Evening Journal.

GENTLEMEN—Having caused a thorough personal examination to be made of the condition and affairs of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York during the month of January, by Hon. John A. McCall, Jr., Deputy Superintendent, in which examination the acting Superintendent has also personally participated, I deem it for the public interests that the result of said investigation should be published.

I therefore enclose the same for publication,

Yours very respectfully,

WILLIAM SMYTH, Acting Superintendent.

ALBANY, February 1st, 1877.

Hon. WILLIAM SMYTH, Acting Superintendent New York Insurance Department:

In accordance with instructions received from you under appointment No. 563. I report the completion of the examination into the affairs of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York.

Made at a time when the annual investigation by the Trustees—as called for by the Company's charter—was in progress, the work was considerably facilitated by each department representative acting with one of the said Trustees, thus giving a double force with a check that was invaluable as to the correctness of the labor performed.

The valuations of the Policies in force have been made in the department under the supervision of Mr. D. H. Keefe, our Actuary, and have occupied his attention, with that of the rest of our actuarial force not engaged in New York.

The investments of the Company, with other admissible assets, make a total of $82,076,706.87.

That the Company has been successfully managed is everywhere conceded; and it is very necessary that the custodians of this sacred trust fund should be men eminently competent to guard zealously the moneys that in the future afford the protection guaranteed by contracts with the holders of ninety-two thousand one hundred and twenty-five policies.

The Company does not need any other endorsement by the Department than is shown in the assets and liabilities enumerated below, exhibiting a surplus, as regards policy-holders, of $10,262,879.44.

A schedule giving in detail the information necessary for valuations of property, verification of title, &c., of each of the seven thousand one hundred and fifty-six (7,156) mortgages, has been compiled, and with a list of uncollected and deferred premiums is now on file in the Department.

The following was the condition of the Company on December 31st, 1876:

ASSETS.

Real Estate.....			$4,246,245.41
Bonds and Mortgages.....			60,856,200.18
Stocks and Bonds.....	Par Value.	Market Value.
U. S. Bonds, registered.....	$7,473,550	$7,907,340.62
New York City Bonds, registered.....	2,405,000	2,412,587.50
Boston Water Bonds, registered.....	500,000	556,250.00
Providence, R. I., Bonds, registered.....	500,000	537,500.00
Cherry Valley Town Bonds.....	50.00	50.000.00
City of Yonkers Bonds.....	118,000	128,250.00
Buffalo City Bonds.....	140,500	145,417.50
Elmira City Bonds.....	56,000	87,435.00
Missouri State Bonds.....	215,000	225,025.00
San Francisco Bonds.....	590,000	637,628.71
Union Co., N. J., Bonds.....	14,000	14,735.00
Plainfield, N. J., Bonds.....	1,500	1,500.00
	$12,063,550	$12,673,569.33
Cash in banks and trust companies.....			$12,673,569.33
Interest due and accrued.....			2,183,001.73
Net uncollected and deferred premiums.....			1,322,284.16
			786,396.07
Total admitted assets.....			$82,076,706.87

LIABILITIES.

Net value of outstanding policies and additions.....	$71,031,205.00
Unpaid losses not yet due (including resisted claims).....	758,250.00
Premiums paid in advance.....	24,372.43
Total Liabilities.....	$71,813,827.43
Surplus as regards policy holders.....	10,262,879.44
Aggregate.....	$82,076,706.87

All of which is respectfully submitted

JOHN A. McCALL, JR., Deputy Superintendent.

The Superintendent in person was present during the examination of the United States securities, bonds and mortgages and other stocks and bonds, owned by the Company, and took part in said examination. He desires to join with his Deputy in assuring the public that the system of management and accuracy of detail, as well as the checks and individual responsibilities imposed on each person, who has anything to do with the loaning or investing the funds of the Company, command his most hearty approval. The President and all other officers of the Company were most prompt and courteous in affording every information: while so perfect is the organization of each department that any special item required was at once furnished, with all its necessary and satisfactory vouchers. This will account for the fact that a corporation of such vast magnitude and importance could be fully and satisfactorily examined in a few weeks, which, under ordinary circumstances, would have required as many months,

WILLIAM SMYTH, Acting Superintendent.

The Inquirer.

NEW YORK, THURSDAY, MARCH 1, 1877.

CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL:

All Quiet in the Money Market.....	215
Economy in the Wrong Place.....	215
The Crispins Re-organizing.....	215
The Ladies' Art Association.....	215
That Moody and Sankey "Miracle".....	215
The Count.....	215
The Rev. Joseph Cook, Again.....	217

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE:

From England.....	218
From Chicago.....	218

LITERATURE:

Hannah Stevenson's Sketch of Theodore Parker.....	219
---	-----

ART NOTES:

.....	220
-------	-----

HEARTH AND HOME:

Three Centuries of Unitarianism in Transylvania and Hungary.....	220
--	-----

SPIRIT OF THE PRESS:

.....	223
-------	-----

BRIEF SELECTIONS:

.....	224
-------	-----

OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE:

An Open Letter from James Freeman Clarke.....	224
Mr. Savage's Criticism of Mr. Moody.....	224

JOTTINGS:

.....	225
-------	-----

PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT:

.....	226
-------	-----

HENRY W. BELLOWS, James Freeman Clarke, William H. Fish, John Fretwell, Jr., William C. Gannett, John C. Kimball, William Potts, Edward P. Powell and S. Alfred Steinthal are among the contributors to this number of THE INQUIRER.

NOTWITHSTANDING the fatuous plotting of the hotheads of the House of Representatives, the mercantile and financial public refuses to become excited or particularly anxious as to the political future. Gold has again fallen below 105, having sold as low as 104 $\frac{3}{4}$. Notwithstanding that hitherto Congress has been too busy to give any proper attention to the various funding projects which have been brought before it, it is greatly to be hoped that some measure looking in that direction will be passed before adjournment, but there seems really no prospect of it, and we shall probably have to depend for this Summer upon such general power as may have been reposed in the Secretary of the Treasury under laws already in existence. The circumstances of the time are so exceptionally favorable to the marketing of a long bond bearing a low rate of interest, that any failure to act would seem simply in keeping with that form of insanity under which the filibusters have been acting. Silver is quoted at 56 to 56 $\frac{1}{2}$ d., and is therefore becoming too staid and monotonous. A movement of less than a ha'penny or a penny an ounce per day rather palls on the appetite. Money on call is quoted at 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ to 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, and prime mercantile paper at 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ to 5 per cent,—rates which do not indicate any great commercial activity.

RETRENCHMENT being the word of the hour, the "city fathers" at last resort to an ingenious and efficient system of cutting down the salaries of the hard-working, much-enduring school-teachers. It has not been hitherto supposed that public educators were as a rule greatly overpaid. On the contrary, they usually worked hard on small salaries. But the old idea that people who only toil with their brains do not deserve so much recompense as those who labor with their hands is continually witnessing a survival, and so long as false ideas on this subject obtain, there is little hope that school-teachers will receive absolute justice. The unfortunate result of improper retrenchment in this direction is inevitable. Men and women of the best minds and the finest culture will no longer take up teaching as a profession.

They must do something which will "make a living," and if salaries are still further cut down there will certainly be an exodus from the profession, greatly to the injury of the cause of sound learning in our country. For surely, as a people, we are not blind to the fact that the key to our individual and national success is education. And if, instead of raising the standard of our popular culture, it is to be essentially lowered by a "penny wise, pound foolish" policy, what unfortunate results may not be speedily anticipated in the working and effects of our whole educational system?

THOSE interested in the "Labor Question"—and who is not?—will be glad to know that the Crispins, whose actions in the past have been so deleterious to themselves and to the community at large, are reorganizing on a much improved basis. The order is confined almost exclusively to the shoe bottomers, the cutters generally working by the day, and the stitchers being generally women. The principal point of superiority in the present, as compared with the old organization, consists in a Board of Arbitration composed of delegates from the various branches, whose duty it is to inform themselves of the causes of any difficulties which may arise, and to settle them if possible without resorting to a strike. "The present order deprecates strikes, except as a very last resort, and, in order that strikes may be discouraged as effectually as possible, it makes no provision for rendering assistance to strikers." In Lynn the order is rapidly becoming popular and now has nearly three thousand members. During the last year its Board of Arbitration has settled about ninety labor troubles in that city, and all, apparently, to the satisfaction of all concerned.

We hail this movement, not as something valuable as a finality, but as a vast improvement upon the one which preceded it, and as showing good ground for hope of still further progress in the knowledge of the laws of progress and what they require.

SOME weeks ago our Chicago correspondent made some allusions to a Moody and Sankey miracle which had recently been performed in that city, allusions which appeared to grate upon the sensibilities of some of our worthy contemporaries. It now appears that the Rev. Arthur Mitchell, who stood sponsor to the story, has found it necessary to say that at the least "the case has become involved in uncertainty, and my reference to it as illustrating any aspect of prayer whatever must be withdrawn."

We can readily understand how anxious the Rev. Arthur Mitchell and his ilk must be to prove either that we have learned nothing about the laws of nature, or that the laws of nature are a variable quantity and easily overthrown, but it would certainly seem that their hold upon the credulosity of the community at large is hardly strong enough for them to afford the risk of failures of this character. We do not know how amenable they may be to the influences which affect the minds of the unregenerate, who think it a strong point in the character of a god that he is without variableness or shadow of turning, but if they are susceptible in any great degree, we shall not be likely to hear of another miracle until it has been pretty conclusively shown that no witnesses are likely to turn up immediately with troublesome evidence.

THERE is some natural curiosity to see what the Ladies' Art Association, in this city, may have accomplished in certain new directions. The exhibition at Leavitt's Gallery is accordingly interesting, but also somewhat disappointing.

It has too much the manner of a challenge to masculine humanity. "See; this is what we women have wrought!" and it must be confessed that the result is not wholly satisfactory. The pictures do not really give a fair representation of what women artists have accomplished. Every year, at the Academy of Design, works in water colors and in oils are displayed from feminine hands that are more admirable in design and execution than any here exhibited. Among the best are the pictures of Miss Oakey and Mrs. Comans, but the former is by no means represented by her best work. The really interesting features of the exhibition are the paintings on china and the pottery. Very small are the collections, but they show that some genuine progress has been made in these directions. Some of the tiles are very pretty in their delicacy of tone and coloring, and "the household decoration by women artists and artisans," though not specially elaborate, shows that a new department of work is being opened. In fact, why should not our homes be made beautiful as well as comfortable? That is a question which is beginning to assert itself with an agreeable prominence. Why should not we have remembrances of the antique forms upon mantel and table, tastefully decorated by woman's hands? "Household Art" has hitherto been rather a vague term, but it is to receive a new meaning and significance, when women learn that their hours of elegant idleness can be profitably filled by some such useful and agreeable occupation as that suggested by this Ladies' Art Association. It can hardly be doubted that this present exhibition will be succeeded by others still more successful. Enough has been done to suggest better work in the future.

THE COUNT.

THE dilatory and filibustering spirit and method of the extremists in the House may, under the circumstances of the case, be charitably pardoned if it cannot be approved. It must be conceded that the Democrats have a great deal to irritate them. They are about to lose the election, which they and many others thought they had won, and they are losing it by a process of law, which they know they cannot annul, and in the application of a scheme which they themselves, evidently with other hopes, carefully devised. Their disappointment is keen and almost maddening. It is to be conceded, too, that some of them honestly believe that the principles upon which the two Houses have agreed to rest the decision of the case are in themselves threatening to the future of the country. Certainly to be compelled by the policy of present safety to the country and the urgent necessity of a legal election to assume that known frauds are not to be investigated and that spurious and illegal votes in many of the States are to be accepted under the doctrine of State rights and inability to go behind legalized though illegal returns, is a very mortifying, lame and impotent conclusion, concerning which any amount of indignation and eloquent protest is in order. We should be sorry to see the wrath and remonstrance less active than it is.

But it must not be forgotten that this painful necessity has been forced upon the country by circumstances equally discreditable to both parties, and that, in choosing between anarchy and a policy of smothering evidence and limiting inquiry, the Houses of Congress and the Electoral Commission have chosen conscientiously the lesser evil. It must be plain to the blindest that no limits could have been put to inquiry more extended than those adopted by the commission without an entire defeat of the express object of its creation. It is not to be assumed that any of the commission think lightly of the frauds in Louisiana, Florida or South Carolina, or that the Republican party in its better portion enjoys the notion of having a President of its own elected by the votes of States so unrepresentative in their present political disorder. But no plan better than this could be devised under the circumstances. To avoid the danger of a disputed succession or break-down in the electoral system, or another virulent canvass in the disheartened business condition of the country, was deemed by the wisest men of both parties an absolute necessity of patriotism. It was agreed that the forms of law should be invoked to extricate us from a difficulty which did not admit of settlement by the equities of the case. On which side, the Republican or the Democratic, most fraud, intimidation and rotten machinery had been used, could not be determined. Candid men probably think that intimidation did as much to corrupt the election as fraud and cooked-up returns. An investigation into the precise merits of the case would, it is conceded, have taken a year's time. It was not for this the electoral commission was created, but for the very purpose of avoiding this delay, and it seems now the height of injustice to charge the commission, composed of as pure men as the country possesses, with partisanship and treachery and folly in having adopted the only course open to them, if a president was to be elected before the fourth of March. Not a day could be spared, even upon the plan they adopted, and a single extension of the limits of inquiry would have hopelessly defeated the result aimed at.

As we go to press it is not yet certain that the count will be completed, for the factious portion of the House, though diminishing, grows more desperate all the time. But it is encouraging to see that a respectable number of Democrats are still true to the spirit of the agreement they made with the Republicans and are ready to abide the result. We are inclined to believe that the excitement is very much confined to Congress, and that the people of the United States are not only very anxious for a settlement of the election, but very calm in their acquiescence in Mr. Hayes' election. There is no question that his self-control, propriety and wisdom during the campaign and since have won a general respect and produced a feeling of confidence that the administration will be safe in his hands. We have never hesitated to express our disappointment—Republican, as we are—that the Democrats did not carry the election, because we thought the Republicans had been too long in power to be faithful to their original principles and would be purified by going out. But the leaders of the Democrats in the House have not shown wisdom and self-control enough to make us very confident that they could carry on the Government prudently. Gov. Tilden's special pleading about his non-acquaintance with doubtful or fraudulent courses, carried on by his nephew and secretary in his own house; Mr. David Dudley Field's Tombs-lawyer-like proceedings as fugleman of the party; and Mr. Hewitt's virulent attack on the honor of the man perhaps best known in Congress for the purity and high-mindedness of his character and public record—Mr. Hoar—are too poor samples of party policy to base any substantial hopes of reform upon. We shall accept the Republican President, if we are to have him, with a feeling that it is, perhaps better to bear the ills we have than fly to others that we know not of. We can only earnestly and devoutly pray that if Gov. Hayes is to be President he will be the President of the whole country, and have no favors for corrupt Republicans, and no truckling to party organization, where it is notoriously evil and base. He is in a position to make great reforms possible in his own party and in the country.

REV. JOSEPH COOK.

In the absence of a higher motive, it would have been a stroke of shrewd policy in this gentleman to take Theodore Parker and his Absolute Religion as the text for several of his Boston lectures; for that name alone, when up for review and criticism, would insure a large audience to any able and competent orthodox lecturer. Many of Mr. Parker's enemies would flock together to see him annihilated, especially by the "elephantine tread" of the above-named and just now distinguished talker, and many of his friends, from the curiosity of seeing whether there would be fair dealing or not—a justice and liberality hardly to be anticipated from a representative of the old though waning theology.

And whoever has heard and read Mr. Cook, with a familiar acquaintance with Mr. Parker, must now be entirely satisfied that it was not uncharitable to anticipate unfair dealing with him and his writings—sectarian flings rather than manly criticism. As for reviewing Mr. Parker in any "scholarly" sense—and Mr. Cook evidently prides himself on being a great scholar—he has hardly attempted it, having generally merely named him, near the beginning of his lecture, and now and then garbled a sentence from his writings—the loosest he could find, perhaps—with an apparent view of deepening the old sectarian prejudices against him and creating new ones in the minds of the generation that knew not the Music Hall "heresiarch." See, for instance, his caricature of Mr. Parker's view of "sin."

In a letter to James Freeman Clarke—one of his last—Mr. P. said of sin: "It is a theological word, and is commonly pronounced ngsin-n-n-n! But I think the thing which ministers mean by ngsin-n-n-n has no existence." And he illustrates his meaning by the well-known fact that a great many pseudo pietists condemn themselves, especially in religious meetings, as the greatest of sinners, who deserve only eternal damnation, but who will nevertheless often most angrily deny that they are sinners in any practical sense, when their admission of sinfulness is accepted, and they are even truly charged with being unjust, selfish or mean in life and action—even as I myself have known one of this class of whining, canting pietists to whitewash stale eggs and sell them to the buyer for new-laid ones!—a woman who said she did not dare to enter a certain "heretical" church lest the Lord should destroy it and her in His wrathful judgment! It was that kind of "ngsin-n-n-n" that Mr. Parker was particularly speaking of—the abstract, theological kind confessed in the church, and magnified to "infinity," because "committed against Infinite Majesty," whilst such concrete sins as hypocrisy, lying, theft and other vices were often practiced as being very venial at least.

But on so slight a ground Mr. Cook raises no little dust about Mr. Parker's position, and represents him as hardly believing in sin, even truly defined, at all; though in the same letter he had said: "I have some sermons of sin and of sins which I may live long enough to prepare for printing, but also may not;" and any one who ever listened to Mr. Parker's earnest, eloquent enforcement of the "Higher Law," and his fearful rebukes of the transgressors of it, especially in high life and official stations, must think Mr. Cook an exceedingly hypercritical and shallow critic, of Mr. Parker's view of sin at least. James Freeman Clarke might have been correct in his criticism, from his point of view, but Mr. Cook was manifestly narrow and unjust. When Mr. Parker wrote his letter there were a great many whining "sinners" in Boston, both church members and ministers, but who, nevertheless, called their support of slavery and the infamous Fugitive Slave Law righteousness—men and women who thought it an awful sin to dance or take a walk for pleasure on Sunday, but no sin at all to buy and sell babies or to return fugitive slaves—even evangelical ministers, like Anthony Burns—to their bondage. It is the "ngsin-n-n-n" of such superstitious persons that Mr. Parker spoke lightly of, some of whom were praying in Park Street church, that "the Lord would empty his pews and fill theirs," or "put a hook in his jaws and take him home"—wherever that might be; and some of them boasted and rejoiced that, when he died, their prayers were answered! What was their daily confession of sin, if not shallow superstition?—afraid to dance, and thus to violate some merely ecclesiastical law, but not afraid at all to trample God's image in the dust, if only "set in ebony," in defiance of His eternal law, which Parker preached with an eloquence that few men ever equalled, and in a profoundly reverential and awakening spirit that Mr. Cook certainly does not approach in his lectures.

But though we thus criticise Mr. Cook, for professing to review Mr. Parker from a "scholarly" point of view, and yet doing no such thing, but simply selecting some of his side views and incidental expressions—his weakest points, perhaps, rather than his more distinguishing views of God, Man, Duty and Destiny—and expending his logical and theological strength in refutation of them, we nevertheless respect him as a man of much ability, learning, earnestness and power of statement, and are very glad that he has given himself so devotedly to the work of stirring up the Bostonians, and the whole country, perhaps, to thought and the study of the greatest of all subjects, the subject of religion, and of science and philosophy as related to religion. He is doing a good work, though a superficial one—superficial because he is yet only a man, and probably not nearly so great a man as his thousands of admirers think him; not so great, possibly, as he thinks himself. We doubt if he is giving full satisfaction to any thoughtful, calm, earnest seekers after truth, who are prone to "prove all things, and to hold fast [only] that which is good;" but he must be, on the whole, an intellectually and religiously healthful, as he certainly is a quickening power, in the community; and we hope his "lectureship" will be a permanent one, especially if he can broaden out into true catholicity, and do full and exact justice to the representative men of the systems he passes in review; and though his criticisms of some of Parker's views are one-sided and not such as he would be likely to make if Mr. Parker were living, we are glad to be able to do him the justice to say that his occasional eulogy of the man, especially as a brave and heroic philanthropist and reformer, were most honorable to him. Should he come to New York it would be well if Dr. Bellows would follow him in review, as I also wish that James Freeman Clarke, or some other competent man, would in Boston. He is a live man, and prepares the people to hear the truth, and this is certainly a great merit, for which we give him our hearty God-speed—especially as we have so many comparatively dead men all about us, both in pulpits and pews. Would that we had another Parker, with a matured wisdom, now that slavery and its supporters are gone, to grapple with other giant evils and crimes, and to lead all liberals in the way of a positive, earnest, practical, yet broad, truly catholic religion!

W. H. F.

REV. ROBERT COLLYER, of Chicago, lectured last Monday evening in this city, at Steinway Hall. His subject was, "Clear Grit." Mr. Collyer has not been heard before in this vicinity for some time.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM ENGLAND.

In my last I believe I wrote to you about our church dissensions, and of the bitter tone which the ritualistic tendencies of some of the clergy was introducing into the fold of the Established Church. I doubted very much, however, whether any self-sacrificing spirit would be displayed by either High or Low churchmen strong enough to induce any of either party to resign the social prestige given by membership in the Establishment, in order to have the privilege of conducting worship in full accordance with conscience. Mr. Tooth, of Hatcham, has gone to prison, but I have not heard as yet of any secession of ritualists. Mr. Knox Little, of St. Albans, in this city, has been what is called "The Missioner" in the Manchester Cathedral; and though in the newspapers the Evangelicals threatened all manner of unspeakable things, if he should really be allowed to preach, yet I cannot hear of any resignations among the Low churchmen of our city. Indeed, the Mission has been a great success, and I believe has been of real spiritual value to many. The church has indeed been active during the last ten days. Two or three services have been held daily in every parish. Special services have been arranged for men and women separately. Clergymen from all parts of England known to have peculiarly popular gifts, have been brought down among us; one indefatigable bishop has been speaking to special meetings of cabmen, of men employed in some of our large works, to the folks engaged in the various theatres, to the medical students—in fact, to any congregation that could be collected to hear him, and he is so popular that everybody is happy to be addressed by him. Zealous ladies have visited every single house in the city, leaving tracts, and urging people to come and hear "the Missioners." The stately, cold respectability of the Episcopallians seems to have melted with unwonted fervor. The Cathedral itself has re-echoed to "Hold the Fort" and "Safe in the Arms of Jesus." Rubrics have given way for a time to revivalist enthusiasm, although the tradition of the respectability of the church has prevented our witnessing the extremes of a Moody and Sankey excitement. A great amount of sound teaching has been given, combined with some foolish suggestions. But it is a good thing to see almost the least impassioned of our religious bodies alive to the importance of awakening men and women to the fact that the spiritual world is just as real as the material, and that the soul's life is as important as that of the body. As it is, I am sure there are more people thinking and speaking of religious matters in Manchester to-day than at any previous time, and no one will deny that this is so far to be rejoiced in. We have now to see what the result will be. I hope it may equal the hopes of the earnest people who have been working with praiseworthy zeal and devotion. I shall look at the results of our next Sunday's work in Manchester as something of a test. It will be what we call Hospital Sunday, when in nearly every church and chapel collections are made for our Medical Charities. Surely the first fruits of a revival of religion ought to be an increase of charity, and no charity has higher claims upon human sympathy than that which brings relief to our suffering brethren in the hours of sickness. Last year our Sunday collections for this purpose amounted to £5,495 11s. 10d., and our Saturday contribution raised in the workshops, warehouses, etc., to £2,250 19s. 11d. I shall be curious to see whether we shall exceed these amounts this year. I hope we may, for the hospitals all need increased funds.

We are all looking forward to very animated debates in Parliament on the Eastern Question, especially in the House of Commons. The overwhelming Conservative majority almost crushed the courage out of the Liberal members, and enabled the government to pass their measures without meeting any very determined antagonism from the gentlemen who sit upon the front opposition bench, and who irritated their Radical supporters below the gangway by their calm readiness to give way to the reactionary policy of Lord Beaconsfield. But the Eastern Question has roused the nation, and the Liberals are no longer afraid of the sound of their own voices, so that we may hope for some stirring debates, though the division lists will still give the Minksters strong majorities. There are, however, signs that the tide is setting again in a liberal direction. The elections are going against the government, and there is a more hopeful tone among those who guide the political movements of the opposition. Times, too, have been bad for a considerable period. The Chancellor of the Exchequer will have no surplus to show, if he does not have to speak of a deficit.

If he has to increase taxation while wages are going down and commercial men are losing money he will aid the return of the Liberals to power. The mismanagement of the navy is a source of constant complaint, and our people are more touchy about their naval supremacy than about any other branch of the public service. While one of the great complaints against the Liberals—that they did not uphold our prestige in foreign courts—will be turned disastrously on the Tories, now that the complete failure of the Constantinople Conference is recognized, and the advocates of a "spirited foreign policy" are unable to do more than look for apologies for their miserable fiasco. It is not possible that things will go on much longer as they are. Most likely there will be changes in the Cabinet, and discontent in consequence among those who lose office and among those who are ambitious and are not called in, and perhaps in another twelvemonth the overpowering majority of eighty will have become so disorganized that we shall have another general election and a transformation scene. Unless the Conservatives change their tactics, they will not leave a very proud record of the achievements of the Beaconsfield government. The purchase of the Suez Canal shares, which give no control over the Canal and pay no dividend; the assumption of the imperial title by the Queen, which has given the security of the throne a shake such as it had not known for generations at home, and has irritated the Princess of India; an education act which has embittered the feeling of the Nonconformist against the church, and has annoyed such eminently conservative bodies as the Poor-law guardians all the country over—these are the chief achievements as yet of the present administration. I hardly think that they have secured for themselves a very high place in the nation's gratitude. But I forget that they have given us half an hour's grace in the closing our public houses, and thirsty souls and publicans are proportionately grateful. I wonder whether at the next general election we shall hear the same grand cry as we did in 1874—The national Church and the national Beverage! The young Queen and the old Constitution was nothing in comparison! S. A. S.

MANCHESTER, Feb. 7, 1877.

FROM CHICAGO.

ABSOLUTELY the only thing stirring in Chicago is the baby show. Our miracle collapsed. Half a dozen more will cure the people of credulity more effectually than a thousand sermons. Dr. Ryder, heretofore counted Orthodox, has come out for common sense. There is quite a meteoric trail of "Revival Efforts" left by Moody; but it gets to be wearisome listening to the petitions for "sixteen wives and nine husbands," "twelve sons and twenty-eight daughters." There is a yearning to have the meetings opened with a list of answered prayers. If there is special virtue in this compound petition, it ought to be easily known and reported. Unfortunately, the only answers so far have been so troublesome to confirm, that it is generally agreed to suppress them in future.

Kohler, of Sinai Synagogue, will hardly get careful students to agree with a late sermon, in which he asserts that the Sermon on the Mount is a compilation from the Talmudic traditions made some two hundred years A. D. Rabbi Sonneschein, of St. Louis, more fully meets the Christian sunshine of the day, in speaking warmly of the fraternity between "Reformed Jews and Reformed Christians;" the harmony between Moses and Jesus.

The Advance makes a wry face because Hale and Savage do not endorse the Moody movement. Of course this was to be expected of Savage, "whose late tendencies have been noted with great grief by his old friends." But, Hale! why should he not see here the realized Harry Wadsworth, and the beginning of the end? But what if Harry should begin by consigning his author to perdition?

Talmage's last gem is in his sermon to physicians: "On the other side of the river of death some of his old patients will come out to welcome him; and the Old Physician of Heaven, with locks as white as snow, will come out and say, 'Come in, come in. I was sick and ye visited me.'"

Our Monday's meeting has at last settled quietly into an institution. Yesterday we were with Forbush. Herford was with us, looking a little worn, but amiably determined to defend anthropomorphic ideas of Deity.

Judge Booth dropped in last evening. He proposes soon to discuss "The Death of Jesus." The article will be as thorough and radical as his recent lecture on "The Resurrection." Chicago is indebted to him for pioneer work in radical thought, more than to any other citizen. He is President of the Philosophical Society, and an active member of the Third Church.

A note comes in from Hosmer, our Western St. John, as good and true a man as we have in the State. The next Illinois Fraternity gathering will be at Shelbyville with Douthitt, on the 3d, 4th and 5th of April. Jones was in the other day, shaking himself, and everybody about him, with an attack of Cymri. I found him in the corner of my study, where he had the breath nearly out of my body, before I could shout lumbago. He is preparing the schedule for the May meeting of the Western Association at Toledo. Cooke has received a unanimous call at Grand Haven.

Snyder's parish paper comes in sparkling as usual. It has a capital article from Learned, in reference to Sunday-school work; and one from Dr. Eliot, fresh and earnest, as he always is and was. The difficulties in our way as liberals are no greater than those before the other churches, only we must come down to the wall building. And it is a grand sign that everywhere there are special efforts of our best men to systematize and render thorough the training and educating work of the churches. The young are cared for as the peculiar object of organization. Learned, Ames, Jones, Hosmer, and at least half a dozen more, are contributing their best efforts toward Sunday-school lessons and helps. We of the Third Church publish our own lessons each month. We shall put them into a volume at the end of the year. Here is the problem: Can churches live and grow that do not compromise with that which is either ethically or historically false?

POWELL.

LITERATURE.

HANNAH STEVENSON'S SKETCH OF THEODORE PARKER.

"THAT gem of his, 'Government of the people, by the people, for the people, (the idea condensed gradually into that form), sparkled in his earlier and later speeches, and sank into the comprehension of his hearers through much reiteration." There was a woman friend who lived in Theodore Parker's home, and with whom he used to talk over the idea and shape it and re-shape it, until, between them, it crystallized into that form. And in many other ideas besides the one that grew so famous when lifted into Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg address, this woman had a shaping part. It is she who has written the little sketch of Mr. Parker's life that is prefixed to the new edition of his "Discourse of Religion." Her point is not to show the preacher, the reformer, the interpreter of Transcendentalism, the philanthropist before the public, but the man back of the preacher and the platform-worker—the man living out his religion in his study and his parlor, at the dinner-table, with his callers and his correspondents and his friends. The church thought him iconoclast; "good society" thought him a disturber of the public peace; Unitarians thought him a robber in their sheep-fold, "climbing up some other way." What was he in his home?

Miss Stevenson tells us. In some fifty pages only—just a quick outline drawn from a most loving memory. And to one who has read the last of the two "Lives" of Parker already published, there is little new in what she tells. The reason is that the writer of that Life was more than welcome to fill his buckets at her well. For instance, the vivid picture of the callers who used to invade the study and devour the student's time, seems familiar. She has simply used parts of her own manuscript then placed so gladly at Mr. Frothingham's disposal. But throughout her little story the face and voice of Theodore Parker seem strangely near from the feeling the reader gets that the writer was a part of almost every incident alluded to. She has met those very visitors on the stair-case and tried to head them off; those letters from the German scholars, from that colonel just going into battle, that misspelt scrawl from the unlettered seeker after God, were handed across the table for her to read; she used to see his hand fondle that old Latin dictionary bought with the huckle-berry money, first-born and best-beloved of all the mighty library; used to watch the blue eyes fill with tears at "almost any mention of a mother's love," and greet the early violets he brought back from each spring-time pilgrimage to his own mother's grave; she sat down one of the listeners in the library to hear him read Daniel Webster's Seventh of March speech in the morning paper, and saw him lift the great bust from its place of honor, and, with groans and tears, put it outside the library door as something dead, to be mournfully hid away forever. We wish the sketch were twice as long. As it is, before all other sketches that we remember, it is the one to place in the hands of the person who asks you "What sort of a man, any way, was this infidel they talk about?" and will not stay for a long answer to the question. Were it of twice the length, it would be long enough to hold an outline of his thought as a reformer in religion, and of his anti-slavery work; and that would make it nearly the picture that is wanted for general circulation. If this same sketch were to be republished in connection with the long letter written by the sick man himself to his friends from Santa Cruz, and called "Theodore Parker's Experience as a Minister," the two so joined would serve the purpose well.

What could better word Parker's spirit, Parker's aim as a preacher, and Parker's trust in God than these three extracts from his letters? This is the spirit of his consecration before going forth to preach: "I deem it writ down in my duty to preach the gospel, come of it what will. * * * I know that one who keeps God's 'law of the Spirit of Life,' and puts forth his might manfully in obedience thereto, be his might never so little, has for his friend and ally and co-worker the entire almightiness and perfect virtue of God, as much as he who obeys the laws of matter brings the whole weight of the earth to bear upon his wheel or lever. Therefore I shall go on. Consequences I have nothing to do with, they belong to God. He will take care of all consequences. To me belongs only duty. Come what will come, I shall do it."

Thus, later, he described his aim: "To separate theology from religion, then to apply good sense to theology, to separate mythology from that, and so get a theology resting on facts of necessity, facts of consciousness, facts of observation, facts of demonstration."

And with these words at the end the workman drops his tools: "True, it is not pleasant to leave the plough broken in the furrow just begun, while the seed corn smiles in the open sack, and the whole field promises such liberal return." "If I do not recover, I shall pass off joyfully, with an entire trust in that Infinite Love which cares more for me than I care for myself."

As printed now, Miss Stevenson's sketch serves as preface to the book wherein the young preacher first tried to plot out his system of divinity. He had been preaching less than six years, when the book appeared, was not quite thirty-two years old. Not many country parsons at thirty-two could put such method into their fire, or such fire into their method. As New England had only begun to study its German then, to New England ears the doctrine sounded new. The learned foot-notes themselves tried to indicate the opposite. But heretical—that was sure! It was a commentary at large upon Emerson's famous Divinity School Address. It was Acts and Epistles to that Gospel—the same emphases both negative and positive, but enlarged, explained, developed into a philosophy of religion and a criticism of prevailing philosophies. Hardly more than main points and leading lines are touched, however. For here are five or six books in one, a treatise on the religious element in human nature; another on the historical development of that element through Fetichism, Polytheism, Pantheism, Monotheism; one on Theology proper and Inspiration; another on Christ; another on the Bible; another on the Christian Church in its several great parties; and in each the contrast between the two schemes, religion supernatural, based on "revelation," and religion natural or absolute, based on "intuition," is drawn firmly along what are still the main points and leading lines. What more could be expected in such space? It is a manual, a compendium, not thorough work; a strong book written with a fore-feeling of evolution and the comparative method, but before that idea and that method had taken full possession of the field. Of course, in many respects it is not the last word uttered. But it has in it helping-power for many persons yet,—the help which the bold image-breaker gives and the far greater help which constructive hands and a face aglow with faith and a voice ringing with its inspiration can give to those who timidly are groping out of smaller into larger thought.

In a certain special sense also, it is still a book of note. In both England and America it has been made a kind of Rubicon by Unitarians. To publish Parker's "Discourse," or to sell it, has marked the line where Unitarianism ended and another kingdom began, a kingdom of Theism, or something worse, on which Unitarians as an official body did not care to enter. In England they have lately gotten enough faith in themselves to cross the stream. In New England the Rubicon still ripples at their feet. No wonder, perhaps, with hearts still here on which the old strife that took place on its banks a generation since has left its scars. It was too much to expect that the Boston Unitarian Association would care to publish the book. But now that it is republished by others, the Association owes it to itself to openly take back its long denial, let the personal animosity a generation old go by, and consent that Mr. Parker's book should lie upon its counters amid the little group which friends have learnt to look there for. Is it not yet time for an act of peace and recognition? That the book has blemishes and violences few friends will deny. That it would be as truly representative of what has moulded Unitarian thought and feeling to the form they have to-day, as any book that lies or can lie on those counters—save only Dr. Channing's works—can as little be denied.

It may not be generally known that besides this "Discourse of Religion," now republished by the Putnams of New York (182 Fifth avenue), eight or nine other volumes of Parker's writings are still for sale. James Campbell, (18 Tremont street, Boston), can furnish the "Prayers" and the volume of selections from unpublished sermons, called "Lessons from the World of Matter and the World of Mind," perhaps the most interesting of all his works. And Horace B. Fuller, 340 Washington street, Boston, has the volume "Theism, Atheism and the Popular Theology," five volumes of "Speeches," one of "Critical and Miscellaneous Writings," and the one called "Historic Americans." The "Ten Sermons" was never stereotyped and is out of print. W. C. G.

ART NOTES.

ART is not entirely subject to natural necessities, but has laws of its own.—GOETHE.

THERE is a beautiful painting at Knoedler's by Palmaroli, representing a girl looking over a portfolio of pictures. It belongs to the school of color, and, at the same time, to that of common sense, which is not true of a Boldini, in the same room. Visitors will also note a beautiful female figure by Piot and a fine moonlight scene by O. Achenbach.

ONE of F. A. Bridgman's best works—perhaps his best—has been on exhibition for a few days at Shak's gallery in Brooklyn. The subject is, "Prayer in the Mosque." Grouping, drawing and the color are all excellent.

MANY amateurs, moved by the published studies of Allonge, are trying charcoal drawing, and—are failing. Charcoal is a medium only for broad effects and sketches, and sketching is at the end, not at the beginning, of lessons in drawing.

IN the Black and White room at the Academy there is a drawing by F. A. Kaulbach in India ink, which shows how much a trained artist can tell with a few strokes. The "Consuelo," by Eastman Johnson, on the other hand, proves that finish in detail and gradation does not prevent harmony and breadth.

A COROT by any other name would not sell for so much, unless it were better than the one sold at Kurtz's the other evening.

THE exhibition of the Ladies' Art Association is now open at Leavitt's Art Gallery, 817 Broadway.

HEARTH AND HOME.

THREE CENTURIES OF UNITARIANISM IN TRANSYLVANIA AND HUNGARY.

A Lecture delivered at Philadelphia, June 6, 1876, by John Fretwell, Jr.

IN studying that magnificent show of the results of the Industry of all Nations, now collected amid the sylvan beauties of your magnificent Fairmount Park, too soon, alas! to be dispersed, and comparing this with my recollections of four months spent in 1873, at a similar international gathering on the banks of the Danube, one characteristic difference is always present to my mind. That was the festival of memory, this of hope. There I went down the old historic Danube, whose every height was crowned with castle or church, or monastery, petrified records of the distant past; every islet in the stream was brightened by the halo of some sweet story of human love, or saddened by the records of human crime and error. How different here! The records of the past that we see here are not the monuments of our forefathers; but like the block of white pine in your Canadian Exhibit, reminders of what God has done for you, His favored people, in the slow, silent and persistent working of His natural laws; everything speaks to me of hope and encouragement.

And as in the material world, so it is in the spiritual. Long before I came to America I read the address of your Council to the Churches, full of the hope that our Unitarianism would really be the Restitutio Christianismi of America, the purest inspiration of your western march of empire. But this very hope has its reverse side. It tempts us too readily to discount the future, and forget the lessons of the past, and, wherever I go among preachers or people, I find as a chief weakness, the neglect of that history which records for us past institutions and past experiences. So this evening, while your western men talk to you of future hopes, I would lead your thoughts back to the lands of memory, to Hungary and Transylvania, which, long shut out from intercourse with the western world, are now, partly inspired by your call starting forward on a new career. For these older countries are indeed taking a new departure, roused by the trumpet call of freedom from Philadelphia, in 1776, and, as you have made a western road to Asia, they are advancing eastward to meet you. The iron road is being laid along the track of the old Crusaders, through the passes of the Carpathians, and across Turkey and the Dardanelles, to the Holy Land. The palace of Zenobia, at Palmyra, the ruined cities of Bashan, and the Temple of the Sun, at Baalbec, will furnish lordly stations for the railroad. And the track once travelled by Xenophon and his ten thousand Greeks, is now being explored by English engineers to discover the best eastern route to India. So, to-night, let me take back your thoughts to the distant past, and sketch the history of one of the first countries on this eastern route.

On the extreme verge of western civilization, a bulwark against northern barbarism and Turkish hate, stands Transylvania, a natural fortress in the Carpathian Mountains, a country which has played no small part in ancient history. In olden times it was inhabited by the Dacians, who in their forays penetrated plundering into Greece, and even now the peasant at times turns up with his ploughshare coins bearing the impress of Alexander the Great. Then the eagles of Rome, the mistress of the world, crossed the Ister, and the legions of Trajan, led by Octavianus, marched up the Valley of the Hatzeg, winning foot by foot the land from its Dacian inhabitants, until, at last, their king, Decebalus, was finally conquered at Patavissa, the modern Klausenburg. During the one hundred and fifty years of Roman sway, the language too received a Roman stamp; mines were explored, roads made, towns and temples erected, and everywhere monuments, inscriptions, weapons, gems and household implements, bear record to the permanent results of the Roman occupation. The Quartz hills of Abrudbanya were the El Dorado of the Romans. Men went there in those early days as they now go to California and Colorado, and there is no more striking monument in the world to the power of the Romans, to what may be achieved by the uninterrupted, persevering toil of thousands of men working on and on unrelentingly for a century than the rocks of the Csetatye Mare. Millions of tons of stone have been taken to obtain the gold which is sometimes found pure in leaves, sometimes like a tuft of yellow hair, fine as the down of a thistle. In the passages and caverns the traces of fire are still evident. As the stone is hard as iron, the labor of those days was immense. Powder not having been invented, large fires were made against the rock till it became brittle and could be more easily worked with the pick. As I stood last year in one of these long deserted workings, I heard the sound of hammers above, and presently two men emerged from a gallery; they were seeking for gold where, 1,700 years before, the Roman soldier had been engaged in the same occupation.

But at last, threatened by neighboring barbarians, the conquerors of the world withdrew, and then came that great migration of nations which was cotemporary with the breaking up of the Roman Empire. In the year 270 the Goths made themselves masters of Dacia; a hundred years later they were driven westward by the Huns, who, once dwelling (600 B. C.) on the confines of China, had gradually crossed the steppes of Asia, the lowlands of Bessarabia, till at last like a swarm of locusts they ravaged all Europe. In 434, under Attila, the King Etzel of the Niebelungenlied, the "Scourge of God" of the Romans, their power reached its zenith, and on the Campus Catalaunicus, the battle-field of Chalons, they met the combined forces of the Romans and Ostragoths under Ætius and Theodoric, and then came that terrible combat, the Hunnenschlacht, which Kaulbach has painted. Six hundred thousand warriors are said to have been slain in this combat, which decided the fate of Europe. The Huns rushed back in mad flight to their Asiatic cradle-lands; but two small parties got separated from the main army, and lost their way. One of these strayed northward, and settled along the shores of the Baltic, and from them the Fins of to-day are descended. The other, going from the Hungarian plains up the valley of the Maros, settled in that part of Transylvania which is now called Szekelyfold (the Szekler land), and from them are descended those Szeklers, among whom are to be found the sixty thousand Unitarian churches of to-day.

After the Huns came the Lombards, and then the Avars, who also extended their forays into France, but (A. D. 803) were driven back by Charlemagne. About this time some weak attempts were made by monks from Britain and from Italy, to introduce Christianity, but ignorant of the language, relying more upon ceremonies than upon schools and regular teaching, they did not make much progress. And these few traces were quickly wiped out by a new irruption of Turanians. These were the Magyars, who originally settled on both sides of the Ural Mountains, between the Volga and the Irtisch, and had no home but the ever changing bivouac fires of their tribe, no order but that of their clan, no protection but their sword and the fleetness of their horses. Urged by the Greek emperor, they conquered the Bulgarians in Macedonia, and then marched into Hungary. There they found out the Szeklers and other records of their ancestors, the Huns, and increased in power, until under Arpad, they made themselves the terror of the surrounding nations. The "God of the Magyars" in those times was Mars, the god of battles, and under their Duke Zoltan, between the years 907-947, we find them plundering in Bavaria and Saxony, Switzerland and Alsace. But Henry the Fowler drove them back, at Merseberg, leaving 34,000 of their warriors dead on the battle-field. Then the Emperor Otto vanquished them on the Lechfeld, hung their leaders, and after the baptism of blood persuaded them to turn from the worship of Mars and Rasdi to that of the living God. In the year 972, Bishop Bruno came to Hungary, and soon after Duke Geyza was baptized. With the introduction of Christianity ceased the migration of nations. Geyza married a Christian princess, and when their son Stephen married the daughter of the German Emperor, he set to work to convert his people in all earnest.

When this princess came into the country, she brought in her train a large number of her countrymen. Some were knights from Bohemia and Bavaria, from Suabia, Franconia and Saxony. Others were tradesmen and mechanics, who settled down quietly in the whole country, managed the forests, and worked the mines. I suppose some of my hearers have read Robert Browning's legend of the Pied Piper of Hamelin, telling how the city of Hamelin in Brunswick was so infested with rats that the people were eaten out of house and granary. There came one day a piper to their town, and offered to deliver them from the rats, if the Burgo-master would give him a thousand florins. The bargain was made; the piper played upon his pipe, and enticed the rats out of every hole and corner, out of granary, garret and sewer, till in long rows they followed him to the river and were drowned. And when the last rat was exterminated the piper demanded his reward. But the mayor, now that he was free from the rats, refused to fulfil his part of the agreement. So the piper, said by the legend to have been the Prince of Darkness, who, like many other princes, occasionally travelled incognito, again took up his pipe and played upon it, and there followed him this time, not the vermin, but the little children. Playing in the streets, they stopped and listened ; the very babies toddled out of their cradles, and the young men and maidens were so fascinated by the music of his pipe, that one and all turned aside from their play, and their cradle and their love-making, and followed the piper, who led them, not to the river, but to a cave in Mount Koppenberg, whose portals opened wide to receive them, but when the last child had entered, closed forever upon these people, who had so foolishly tried to cheat the devil of his due. The legend goes on to say :

"That in Transylvania there's a tribe,
Of alien people, who ascribe
The outlandish ways and dress,
On which their neighbors lay such stress,
To their fathers and mothers having risen
Out of some subterranean prison,
Into which they were trepanned,
Long time ago in a mighty band,
Out of Hamelin town, in Brunswick land,
But how, or why, they don't understand."

When I visited Transylvania last year, thinking of Robert Browning's lines, I sought for their origin, and after long search found it in an old Latin chronicle in the library of the Calvinist College at Szekely Udvahely.

Probably the fact that among the first German settlers were the miners of Thoroczko, whose underground labor associated them with subterraneous passages in the mountains, may have suggested this feature of the legend. These miners, almost exclusively Unitarians, and speaking the Magyar tongue, are descended from German miners of the Hartz ; and if you want to see in real life how the Germans of Lower Saxony lived seven hundred years ago, you may see it this day in the German towns of Transylvania. In the 11th and 12th centuries the freeholders of Germany were gradually becoming serfs, under the heavy yoke of the church and the nobles, but they could not forget their old freedom and strove to rid themselves of their fetters. In 1135, the sea flooded a great part of Flanders, Brabant and Zealand ; and the population, thus deprived of all shelter and property, being renowned for their courage and industry, received invitations on all sides to settle in other countries. Some settled in the flat country formerly possessed by the Obotrites in Lower Saxony and in Thuringia ; others came to England to defend our frontiers against Scotch and Welsh ; others again went to Hungary to defend its borders against the Cumanes and the Petschenegi. Then, in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, came the Crusaders. While some went by sea, others travelled through Transylvania and the passes of the Carpathians, on their way to the Holy Land. Many loitered on their way, or returning, spread a report that Hungary was a land of wonders, where German settlers were freemen and no longer bound beneath the iron rule of their knights and bishops. It was a land of promise for thousands, and the name of Hungary had for these impoverished and oppressed dwellers in Western Europe, the magic which that of America now possesses. Down to the present hour the song of these emigrants of the twelfth century, may be heard in the hay fields of Brabant as the peasants sing :

"Haer bostland willen wy reiden,
Haer bostland willen wy mee :
Al over die groene heiden,
Frisch over die heiden,
Daer ist een beetere stee."

"To the Eastland we will ride,
To the Eastland will we go :
All over the green heaths,
Fresh over the heaths,
There is a better home."

Even in these days, when the Englishman listens to the harvester songs in the Zype, at the southern foot of the Carpathian Hills, or in the land under the Forest, one of the Saxon Districts of Transylvania, he seems to hear the language of old Anglo-Saxon documents, and the student from the Moselle (Germany) and the Aluta (Transylvania) when they meet at the German Universities, find that the popular dialects of their distant countries have a wonderful similarity.

The settlers found a complete wilderness ; as far as the eye could reach the land was covered by an impenetrable forest, and nowhere a trace of human work, except here and there a mound raised over some hero of old, or the ruins of old fortresses on some steep mountain side. But the sinewy arms of the pioneers soon changed the desert into a fruitful land ; swamps were drained, woods cleared, the rapid devastating torrents made to irrigate the fields which they had formerly inundated, and to turn the mills. On the sun-kissed Southern slopes of the Carpathian, the vine-stocks brought from German homes on the Rhine were planted, and from the bowels of the mountains were extracted rich stores of ore and salt. Soon villages and fortified towns arose and the flood of German immigration set more and more toward the East. They called the land Siebenburgen, from the seven fortified cities which they founded. The wonderful prosperity of these colonies has the same foundations as that of the Anglo-Saxon colonies in America, not only the courage and industry of the immigrants, but also their love of order, and even in the twelfth century, three hundred years before Luther's time, they were half Protestants. Just as the English when they came to Massachusetts introduced Constitutional freedom and common law, so the Flandrenses, Saxones and Teutonici took with them to the East their municipal statutes, especially those of Nuremberg and Magdeburg, and paid tithes only to their own elected ministers. They gave none either to Bishop or Pope ; thus in the midst of Catholicism, reviving the primitive Christian principle of Congregational government. Their ministers were wealthy enough to send their children to the German universities, and education among the colonists was soon in advance of that in the mother-country.

In 1211 King Andrew II. invited the Teutonic knights into the Burzenland, a fertile plain north of Kronstadt. This order drew colonists from Thuringia, where its grand master, Herrman von Salzer, was born, and extended their possessions to the Danube and the Dniester, trying at the same time to make themselves independent of the Hungarian crown and to turn all the peasants into serfs, as their companions had succeeded in doing in Germany. But neither king nor subject would suffer such oppression in Transylvania, and so in 1226 the knights were obliged to leave the country, leaving traces of their occupation in the names of some of the cities. So, for instance, Szekely Kerest Ur, where the Unitarian college is now situated, is the place of the Knights of Christ in the Szeklerland. In 1222, only seven years after King John of England had been forced by the barons at Runnymede to grant the Magna Charta to the people of England, King Andrew gave the Transylvanians their "Aurea Bulla," or Golden Bull, the charter of their rights, almost as liberal as that of Great Britain.

Not only did the Germans clothe the hillslopes with wine and the valleys with corn, but they also introduced many branches of manufacturing industry, and their wares were in demand in Constantinople, on the one side, in Buda and Pesth, on the other. The rich productions of India and the Levant were brought to them in exchange and so caravans passed up from the Danube lands through the passes of the Carpathians and through the valleys of the westward flowing Maros and Koros, bearing Oriental products to northern markets, and bringing so much wealth into the country that their chief city, Klausenburg was known in Magyar song and story as Kincses Koloszar—the wealthy Klausenburg. Yet King Andrew's reign was one unbroken chain of misery, distress and difficulty for him and his people, and soon after his death, on the 12th of March, 1241, the wild hordes of the Mongols to the number of half a million broke into Hungary. When they forsook it they left it like one great graveyard. To the end of the century, when the last king of the line of Arpad, Robert III., was poisoned by his Italian servant, the land was subject to frequent incursions from these terrible marauders. The Germans did what they could to protect themselves. The whole Saxonland is full of strongholds erected by these industrious peasants and mechanics, not as elsewhere, for the haunt of robber-knights, but to protect the fruits of their own industry. Where they could not fortify their whole towns, the church at least was protected by a strong wall. These fortress-churches and peasants' castles form the characteristic feature of the country. Hither, when the Mongolian hordes brought fire and sword into the country, the inhabitants brought their treasures, their wives and their children for protection and defence against the enemy.

(To be Concluded.)

SPIRIT OF THE PRESS.

MOTTOES OF THE LONDON GUILDS.

[M. D. Conway, in Cincinnati Commercial.]

OF the livery companies in the city of London, twenty-one have no motto at all, and nineteen either "Trust in God" or "Hope in God." Some of the mottoes of the rest are as follows: The armorers have "Make all sure;" advice not always followed at Woolwich, for the glorious 80-ton gun has a serious crack in it. The butchers' motto is "Omnia subjecti sub pedibus—oves et boves." This is meant for "Thou hast put all things under his feet—all sheep and oxen," but may also remind us that some of the meat recently foisted on the London market had better be under our feet than in our stomachs. The clock-makers have "Tempus rerum imperator," "Time, the governor of all things." The distillers, "Drop as rain, distil as dew," mountain dew being the variety meant. The founders, "God, the only Founder." The fruiterers, "Arbor vitæ Christus; fructus per fidem gustamus," "Christ is the Tree of Life; we eat the fruit by faith." The glaziers, "Da nobis lucem, Domine,"—a prayer which has been very natural any time since the beginning of November, "Give us light, O Lord." The haberdashers, "Serve and obey." The smiths, "By hammer and hand, all arts do stand." The saddlers, "Hold fast, sit sure." The salters, "Sal sapit omnia," "Salt seasons all things." The tallow chandlers, "Quæ arguantur a lumine manifestantur;" "All things which are discovered are made manifest by the light." The weavers, "Weave truth with trust." The wire-drawers, "Amicitiam trahit amor;" "Love draws friendship." The heraldic devices of the livery companies are somewhat less of the platitude class, for they are inherited from barbaric ages, when symbolism was real; but they are interminably repeated in various combinations:—boars and dragons, dragons and boars; lions and unicorns, unicorns and lions.

THE SECRET OF POWER.

[Anna C. Brackett.]

To learn how to utilize opposition is the key to success; nay, it is success. We do it in mechanics over and over again. We drop the keystone into our arch, and thereby force even the power of gravitation, which threatened to pull it down, to sustain it. By ingenious contrivances we force the same power of gravitation, in the current of a river, to drag, vertically, upward tons of heavy merchandise. But we are not so ready to make use of opposing forces in mental processes, or in our daily life and work. When some one opposes us, we set ourselves against him, forgetting that we are thereby only shutting ourselves in by an additional barrier. For every opponent is a limitation, and the man who continually makes enemies finds himself in isolation through his process of exclusion.

He puts the world outside of him, and then complains that he is alone.

UNCLE REMUS'S REVIVAL HYMN.

[The Atlanta Constitution.]

Oh! Whar shall we go w'en de great day comes,
Wid de blowin' uv de trumpits an' de bangin' uv de drums?
How many po' sinners 'll be cotched out late,
An' fine no latch to de goldin' gate?
No use fer ter wait 'twell to-morrer!
The sun mustn't set on yo' sorrer,
Sin's ez sharp ez a bamboo brier—
Oh, Lord! fetch de mo'ners up higher!

W'en de nashuns uv de earf is a stannin' all aroun',
Who's a-gwine ter be choosen fer ter war de glory crown?
Who's a-gwine fer ter stan' stiff-kneed an' bol'
An' answer to dere name at the callin' uv de roll?
You better come now ef you comin'—
Ole Satan is loose an' a bummin'—
De wheels uv distrustshun is a-hummin'—
Oh, come along, sinner, ef you comin'.

De song uv salvation is a mighty sweet song,
An' de Paradise win' blow fur an' blow strong;
An' Aberham's buzzum is saf an' it's wide,
An' dat's de place whar de sinners oughter hide!
No use to be stoppin' an' a-lookin',
Ef you fool wid Satan you'll git took in;
You'll hang on de edge an' git shook in,
Ef you keep on a-stoppin' an' a-lookin'.

De time is right now an' dis here's de place—
Let de salvashun sun shine squar' in yo' face.
Fight de battles uv de Lord, fight soon and fight late,
An' you'll allers fine a latch on de goldin' gate,
No use fer ter wait 'twell to-morrer—
De sun mustn't set on yo' sorrer,
Sin's ez sharp ez a bamboo brier—
Ax de Lord fer ter fetch you up higher.

A SCENE IN TREMONT TEMPLE.

[Rev. M. J. Savage, in the Boston Commonwealth.]

THERE was one other thing at Tremont Temple the other day that I cannot pass by; a thing astounding; a thing that I would not have dared to believe could have occurred in the city of Boston in this nineteenth century. If I must believe in the everlasting torture and suffering of millions of human beings, then I will believe it with my head bowed down, and with eyes streaming with tears. I will take it under the pressure of such an argument as does not admit of a question; I will take it because I cannot see any escape; but I will not exult in it. What was it that occurred in the Temple, in the course of this lecture of which I have been speaking? When Mr. Cook reached the peroration and climax of his linked logic, that, if it was true, bound, without any possibility of escape, millions and millions of souls in the slavery of Satan, in chains and torture for unending ages—when he had reached that climax, what was the effect upon the audience? Here were the assembled ministers of Boston, tender-hearted as we know them to be, so that they would weep over an accident to a little boy; the assembled ministers of the suburbs; the assembled learning of the churches of Boston. What did they do? When, I say, Mr. Cook, by his logic, from his standpoint, had cut off all possibility of escape from endless perdition, then the whole audience broke out in applause! I know only one thing in history or literature that approaches it. I took up my copy of "Paradise Lost," yesterday, and turned to the tenth book, and there I read how Satan returned from his successful expedition to Eden, where he had secured the fall of man, and built a highway for Sin and Death to come and devastate the earth—the fair, last work of the eternal God. He came back from this successful adventure, and gathered his followers in the great hall of Pandemonium, and there recounted his strategy and its success.

At the close he stood waiting the "high applause" of his assembled followers, and they began to applaud; but the judgment that sits on high, according to the imagination of the poet, could not brook such blasphemy, and the plaudits springing from their throats, by the judgment of the just Almighty, were turned into "A dismal, universal hiss, the sound Of public scorn!"

But the orthodoxy of Boston succeeds where Pandemonium failed!

REV. F. W. HOLLAND, recently of Newburgh, N. Y., should be addressed at Cambridge, Mass., he having declined the unanimous call to the pulpit of Unity Chapel, Harlem.

BRIEF SELECTIONS.

Oh, God, I cannot help it, but at times
They seem to me too narrow, all the faiths
Of this grown world of ours, whose baby eye
Saw them sufficient. —Tennyson's Harold.

WHAT is the world but an abstract impossibility? Yet, said Galileo, it moves, though nobody can explain the first push; and the creatures theology calls worms soar and sing as imps and embryos of seraphs.—DR. BARTOL.

MAN is himself only when the conscious will and purpose of his life is in harmony with what his reason demands. The unity of will and reason makes the perfect man.—JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE.

THE truest help we can render to an afflicted man is not to take his burden from him; but to call out his best strength, that he may be able to bear the burden.—PHILLIPS BROOKS.

OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE LIBERALS WHO STAYED TO "COMMUNION"
AT TRINITY CHURCH.

To O. B. Frothingham:

MY DEAR FRIEND:—I find in the last number of THE INQUIRER an article of yours containing the following paragraph:

"The dignitaries who recently, at the consecration of the new Trinity church edifice in Boston, invited the liberal clergy to partake of the sacrament, did what was for them a generous thing: they were liberal and magnanimous; they forgot for the moment their ecclesiasticism, the stringency of their dogma, the exclusiveness of their institution, the anathema of their creed. They believed for the moment that there was more truth than was contained in the letter of their articles, more sanctity than was represented by the priestly vestments. Their eye had caught the vision of a broad church, whose enclosing walls embraced believers of every name. But what shall we think of the 'liberals' who accepted the invitation? Were they looking forward? Were their faces bathed in light? Were they straining the line of their traditions? Were they extending the circuit of their sheep-fold? Two men may stand upon the same square yard of ground, side by side, but if they are moving in opposite directions, their momentary propinquity tells for nothing. The Romanist who is marching out is more liberal than the Rationalist who is marching in."

As I was one of the "liberals" who accepted the personal invitation of Phillips Brooks to stay to the Communion, I will venture to ask the following question: Would it, in your opinion, have been more in accordance with Liberal Christianity when invited to an act of Christian communion to have refused?

You may believe this symbol of bread and wine a superstition. If so, you would have done right to refuse; but to me one advantage of this symbol is that it embodies its meaning, not in words, but in the natural language of mankind, and so takes us away from the region of creeds. Bread and wine belong to the creed of nature, not to the formulas of man. They stand among all races as the natural signs of strength and joy. Every one can put into this act of communion his own interpretation, and make it stand for Christ's life and death in any way that he believes most true.

I do not then consider that the brethren who, with myself, gladly stood for a moment in communion with Phillips Brooks and his friends on this occasion sacrificed any principle in so doing. My face was toward the light, for it saw in this act of my friend a faint gleam of the rosy dawn of universal brotherhood which is to come. I was looking forward to a better day, of which this was one prophecy. The circuit of my own fold was enlarged in that moment, for I felt inwardly at one with all Liberal Christians outside of so-called Liberal Christianity. Phillips Brooks and I were moving in the same direction, for we were both moving toward a ground of higher union—the union of spirit, in which all differences of the letter disappear.

JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE.

Boston, Feb. 24, 1877.

REV. M. J. SAVAGE'S CRITICISM OF MR. MOODY'S THEOLOGY.

It was my good fortune to spend last Sunday in Boston as a "hearer of the word," and not, for that day, a preacher of it. Never having heard Bro. Savage, readily decided to attend the morning services at Unity Church, more especially as he was advertised to speak on "Mr. Moody's Man; or, his Doctrine of Human Nature," his subject the previous Sunday being "Mr. Moody's God."

When I arrived at the church I found the large auditorium completely filled with a very intelligent-looking congregation, while many were obliged to stand during the services, unable to find seats. I should judge that at least 1,000 people must have been present on this occasion. After the usual preliminary services, which were simple, devout and impressive, the desk was moved back a few feet and Mr. Savage came to the front of the platform and delivered an able and logical discourse on the topic he had chosen, and without the aid of either manuscript or "notes." I was told by one of his parishioners that he preaches extemporaneously about one half the time.

He impressed me last Sunday as being a "man in earnest," who thoroughly believes in the doctrine he preaches, and is not afraid to attack popular errors, and to give a reason for the faith that is in him. He disclaimed, at the outset of his discourse, any desire to belittle Mr. Moody's work—it was his pernicious theology that he combated, as he had a perfect right to do, and not Mr. Moody himself that he opposed. He believed the evangelists to be earnest, sincere men, but he did not believe that a revival of the old theology was either necessary or to be encouraged. He therefore proceeded to deal some very telling blows at the whole Orthodox doctrine as preached by Mr. Moody, including the "fall," the "atonement," "substituted righteousness," "election," "endless hell," etc.

He said if he believed as some Unitarian ministers seem to concerning Moody he would not occupy his pulpit another Sunday; for if Mr. Moody is right in his doctrines, the Unitarian church has no right to exist—they were a crime and stood in the way of the world's salvation. He took the strong ground that man, instead of being born totally depraved, was by nature and instinct a religious being, always groping after and seeking to find God; that man has never been lost, and that what we call evil is no distinct entity, but the misuse of some passion or appetite in itself good. He said that if the doctrine of endless punishment be true, then instead of our asking pardon and seeking salvation, God ought to ask pardon of us.

I do not attempt to give any extended report of his manly and logical discourse, but only reproduce a few sentences to show the drift and character of his arguments.

The entire sermon was taken down phonographically by Mr. Yerrington for the Commonwealth and appeared in Saturday's issue of week before last. I could not help thinking, as I sat listening to Mr. Savage last Sunday morning, what a grand opportunity was presented to the Unitarian ministers of Boston, and in fact of all New England, during the present popular awakening to religious subjects, caused by the Moody and Sankey meetings, of calling the attention of thinking men and women to those practical and common sense views of religion which they as a body entertain. Timidity at this time on their part, a hesitancy to meet the questions of the hour manfully and squarely, a half-and-half endorsement of Mr. Moody's plan of "converting sinners," will prove disastrous to their prosperity as a church, and to the cause of pure and undefiled religion. Of course Unitarians are glad to recognize all the good he may do incidentally (or any one else), but they cannot honorably and consistently endorse a movement, the chief object of which is to frighten men and women into the belief that God is naturally their enemy, and will torture them through eternal ages unless they profess to pass through a hocus pocus of religious excitement and declare themselves converted.

It is perhaps fortunate that the Unitarian and Universalist ministers of Boston have not been specially invited by Mr. Moody to take active part in his Tabernacle meetings, for there are indications that some would have unwisely accepted such an invitation, and so compromised themselves and the cause they represent.

Mr. Savage has taken a manly stand and occupies no equivocal position. He in getting the ear of the public, for the people like to see the pulpit brave, and especially at a time when it requires courage to stem the popular current and oppose the popular prejudice. I heard Bro. S. called our "Elijah" last Monday at our Ministerial Union. Whether that title fitly designates him or not I do not know. I am sure he deserves appreciation, and his own people enthusiastically accord it to him. May all ministers be as true to their opportunities and principles and the world will be the better for it!

FEBRUARY 15, 1877.

K.

THE POPULAR RELIGIOUS TEACHING AND METHODS.

A BRIEF CHAPTER OF PERSONAL EXPERIENCE, BY A FRIENDLY OBSERVER.

It is said that devotional meetings are the foundation of the church, the stepping-stones to the spiritual life. Let us take a peep into some of them.

A Methodist gentleman once said to me, "Class-meetings are the true secret of our power; but since the attendance upon these meetings is no longer considered a test of membership, there is a very material change in them."

I am inclined to think there is, at least, more honesty.

Said a lady, "I think I love God and 'His people,' but I am in perfect agony in a prayer at class-meeting, till my testimony is given and done with."

Such suffering may be pleasing to men, but is it to God?

There are men and women to whom is given the gift to edify, and there are women and men, also, too sensitive to discuss many themes even in the immediate circle of friends, particularly religion, which has, alas! been an exclusive subject, kept wrapped up like a fruit cake, and dealt out sparingly on certain occasions.

A company of young ladies, in one of our seminaries, remarked that they would like to attend prayer-meetings if they were not expected to say anything, or better, if they knew what to say. A friend in the senior class, desirous that they should do so, wrote their bits of testimony (tell it not in Gath), varied to suit the different natures, (it is to be hoped that her powers of discernment were very great), and they committed them to memory!

I asked a friend once who appealed to me, why she did not dare to be singular, and be silent. She replied that they would have no faith in her piety, and even then she must needs confess herself to be "the chiefest of sinners," which she could not believe.

When Mr. Earle, the revivalist, was here he repeatedly told us that, although his daily life was given for the saving of souls, although he knew no will but God's, yet he knew he only merited perdition.

Did that man believe it? Would he have stood there with serene face, if some one else had stepped up and told him the same thing?

A little miss, returning from a prayer-meeting one day, going to her mother she exclaimed: "When I go to meeting I always tell how bad I have been." "Do you always think you've been bad?" asked the mother. "No; but then I always say so, and there's Mamie Jones, who says she 'has perfect peace with God,' and I know she has told two lies this very week." Can any one blame the children?

In one of our prominent Methodist churches the prayer-meeting convened with the new pastor. After each had spoken his word, told how bad he had been, how many crooked paths he had made, how sad he was because when he fain would do good evil was present with him, etc., the minister arose and said: "Well, if you are all as bad and low-spirited as you say you are, I have indeed come to a hard place."

Is the church, then, so formidable? Is she only a huge maelstrom into which so many are drawn, and cannot or dare not try to get out?

Not long ago I asked a neighbor if she would like to attend a Unitarian prayer-meeting in the evening. "Why, I didn't know that Unitarians had such meetings," she replied. "Did you suppose they could not praise God, if they did not believe in eternal punishment?" I asked. She laughed, and frankly said she didn't know what they had prayer-meetings for, and said she would go if I would allow her to go purely out of curiosity. This was all I expected, and we went together.

Mr. Collyer came right down to the heart of things, as he always does when we sit face to face in these meetings; gave us the history of the sweet, cultured Sarah Flower Adams, till we all felt that we had taken her to our arms. My friend made no sign, but when we came away she said, "I didn't know I had any feeling before. I attend devotional meetings habitually, but this is the first service that has touched my heart for years. How can I ever go back to those gloomy meetings, where I thought I was happy? I shall surely come again, and bring my children."

I believe a sweeter spirit is pervading some of these meetings in the churches, but is it proselyting, if, when we know of the greener pastures, we lead a child therein?

N. H. B.

CHICAGO, February 23d.

JOTTINGS.

REV. JOHN R. EFFINGER leaves St. Paul, Minn., this week. Parishes desiring his services should address him at Mt. Pleasant, Iowa.

SALEM.—The Rev. Fielder Israel will be installed as pastor of the First Unitarian Church on Thursday of next week, at 3:15 P. M. About fifty churches will be represented, dating from 1629 to 1413, a majority of them founded in the seventeenth century.

THE Essex Conference of Liberal Christian churches will hold a meeting in this city, at the Barton Square Church, on Wednesday, March 14. Dr. Bellows, of New York, will preach the sermon.

THE seventieth birthday of the poet Longfellow passed without any special public observance, but not the less will all those who love him rejoice that he is still in the land of the living and that he can yet receive the thankful tributes of the countless numbers who have been so helped and cheered by his song. Old wine is usually considered the best, and some of Mr. Longfellow's latest poems have been the richest and deepest.

WHAT shall he do with it,—his time and lost occupation?—is a question which seems to be agitating the minds of some of President Grant's friends. One idea, ventilated in a Washington special to the Tribune, is to make him the President of some New York bank. This, it is urged, "would give him an assured income with an occupation sufficiently dignified and agreeable, while it would gratify his family feelings by fixing his future residence near that of his sons."

It is not often that we are treated to a full legal exhibition of the domestic grievances of a wealthy family. It is accordingly to be supposed that many people will follow with interest the development of the contest among the heirs of the late Commodore Vanderbilt. Everything now looks as if the will would be hotly fought over, though there are not wanting strange surmises as to the matter and mysterious rumors as to the way in which the whole difficulty might be hushed up. At all events, it may become clear to some average, every-day people that great wealth has its drawbacks—as well as trifling advantages.

THE New York Methodists found themselves recently in some very hot water, having invited a certain Miss Oliver to preach for them. At last a vision of St. Paul rose before their horrified eyes, and one, Dr. Buckley, declared that it was "most tolerable and not to be endured" that a woman should speak in public, and that though the mother of our Lord herself were on earth he should be opposed to her preaching in that place. This may be called giving a pretty strong Roland for the Methodist minister's Oliver, but even Dr. Buckley will probably find that he will have a hard time to prevent the women from "speaking their minds" when they happen to have a good strong word to say.

THE former editor of the New York Times, Mr. Jennings, an Englishman, who is now the London correspondent of the World, writing to that paper, recently, says: I never saw so much drunkenness in any other country during all my wanderings, and they have been many. I know very well that strong drink is consumed pretty freely in the United States, but in ten years there I did not see so many drunken men and women about the streets, as I have seen in three months here. In some towns every other shop seems to be a public house. In London, the gin palaces would afford a brilliant light at night without the street lamps. The poorer the neighborhood, the more numerous they are.

THE Winter is over—at least the calendar says so, and almanacs never lie. It has not been so cold a Winter, on the whole, as had been anticipated and dreaded, though early December gave us some bitter days. February beguiled us into dreams of "Spring, beautiful Spring"—but, with the tempestuous month of March before us, we are quite prepared even yet to expect a bad "spell of weather." One pleasant feature of the Winter has been the comparative healthfulness. To be sure diphtheria and pneumonia have had numberless victims, but there has been no real epidemic of any contagious disease—no small-pox scare. The doctors have been heard to complain of the situation, but no other profession has specially suffered on this account.

Boston had a very fair edition of liberal theology presented for its edification last Sunday. It would certainly seem as if even Mr. Moody himself could not make very good headway against such a strong blast of rational thought. Mr. John Weiss spoke at Parker Memorial Hall; Rev. Minot J. Savage discussed "The True Salvation;" Dr. Bartol touched a suggestive theme in "The Rational and Revival Style of Personal Religion;" Mr. Chaney took up the work of Whitfield; Mr. Tilden asked and answered the question, "Is Nature a Revivalist?" Rev. James Freeman Clarke chose for his subject, "Saved by Grace." Rev. William Everett preached before the new Unitarian society in Christian Union Hall. It is not difficult to see, in the themes thus discussed by the Boston clergymen, a strong reflection of the great interest felt in the work of the evangelists now with them.

MARRIED.

MORISON—ABBOT.—In Portland, Me., February 21, by Rev. Thomas Hill, D. D., assisted by Rev. J. H. Morison, D. D., Rev. Robert S. Morison and Miss Anne J. Abbot, both of Meadville, Pa.

The Inquirer.

Published every Thursday, from the middle of September to the middle of July, in the Park Bank Building, 214 Broadway, New York.

To be in season for insertion the same week, communications intended for publication must be forwarded in time to reach this office not later than Tuesday. No attention is paid to anonymous communications. We require the name and address of every writer, not necessarily for publication, but as guarantees of good faith.

Communications relating to the editorial department of the paper should be addressed, "Editor of the Inquirer, P. O. Box 109, New York City," all others to "Publisher," same address.

No person is authorized to collect money or make contracts for the Inquirer, who cannot show written authority from the Publisher.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

Three Dollars per year, in advance. Clergymen, Two Dollars per year. Postage, Twenty cents per year, in advance. Remittances should be made by Registered Letter or by Post-Office Money Order, or Draft on New York payable to PUBLISHER OF THE INQUIRER.

ADVERTISING RATES.

Six cents per agate line per week; outside page and pages next reading matter, ten cents per time. Special Notices twenty cents per line.

Discount on Five or more insertions will be given at similar rates to all parties.

Copy for Thursday's paper received until Tuesday afternoon.

Advertisements must be acceptable in every respect.

Office, PARK BANK BUILDING, 214 Broadway.

Address,

THE INQUIRER,

Box 109, New York.

Special Notices.

Protestant Leaders.

A COURSE OF LECTURES

BY
JOHN W. CHADWICK.

Second Unitarian Church, Brooklyn,
Corner of Clinton and Congress Streets.
1876-77.

LECTURES:

VI. Murray and Universalism.

Sunday evening, March 4, 1877.

VII. Thomas Paine; His Relation to his own and later Times in Matters of Religion.

Sunday evening, April 1, 1877.

VIII. Channing and Unitarianism.

Sunday evening, April 15, 1877.

IX. Theodore Parker.

Sunday evening, May 6, 1877.

Hour of Lecture, Half-Past Seven.

Morning Service at 10:35 precisely. Vesper Service, Third Sunday Evening of each Month, with the above exceptions.

"Admirably fitted to teach the art from the very beginning."—Chicago Tribune.

"Mr. Hope is one of the 'old masters' in this sort of work. He has prepared an excellent work, in which his subject is treated fully and clearly."—Chicago Post.

"Altogether the best book that can be placed in the hands of the amateur."—N. Y. Graphic.

"The diagrams are excellent and the instructions clear and direct."—N. Y. Evening Post.

SORRENTO AND INLAID WORK FOR

AMATEURS, BY ARTHUR HOPE.

A practical manual of Scroll-Sawing, Overlaying, Polishing, Inlaying, Silhouettes, &c. Containing 50 full-sized designs, new and beautiful. The designs are worth more than price of book. Tastefully bound in muslin. For sale by bookellers generally. Sent by mail on receipt of price, $1.50. Descriptive circular mailed to any address.

JOHN WILKINSON, Publisher, 55 Lake St., Chicago.

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS, 182 Fifth Ave., New York.

STAINED GLASS IN THE WORLD'S COMPETITION AT PHILADELPHIA.

The MEDAL and DIPLOMA were awarded to

FITZPATRICK & CO.,

For the MOST ARTISTIC and Best Figure and Ornamental Church Windows, in all the various styles of this beautiful art.

Orders promptly executed. Designs, Prices, and all information on application to

FITZPATRICK & CO.,

STAPLETON, STATEN ISLAND, N. Y.

P. O. Box 62.

N.B.—THE PRIZE WINDOWS NOW FOR SALE.

STEARNS & BEALE,

STATIONERS,

BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS,

PRINTING and LITHOGRAPHY,

147 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

(Between Broadway and Nassau Street.)

JOEL W. STEARNS.

WM. P. BEALE.

HOWARD INSURANCE COMPANY,

OF NEW YORK.—OFFICE NO 66 WALL STREET.

Cash Capital $500,000.—Chartered 1825.

This Company insures property against loss or Damage by Fire and the risks of Inland Navigation and Transportation, on the most favorable terms.

SAM'L T. SKIDMORE, President.

HENRY A. OAKLEY, Vice-President.

DIRECTORS:

SAMUEL T. SKIDMORE, HENRY A. OAKLEY, WILLIAM H. WISNER, ALEXANDER MATLAND, THOMAS W. GALE, JOHN H. SWIFT, JAMES R. TAYLOR, HENRY J. SCUDDER, HENRY A. OAKLEY, CHARLES MALL, HENRY I. BARREY, WILLIAM H. WISNER, HEWLETT SCUDDER, CHARLES H. CLAYTON, JOHN L. RIKER, GEORGE W. TALBOT, FREDERICK STURGES, JOHN J. WHITE, R. LENOX BELKNAP, JAMES C. CARTER, EDMUND PENFOLD.

CHARLES A. HULL, Secretary.

RICHARD W. CLARK, Asst. Sec'y.

COMMON SENSE ROCKING CHAIRS.

Everybody's Favorite Rocker.

A GOOD EASY CHAIR

Those in need of such a Chair will please send stamp for Illustrated Circulars and Price List to

F. A. SINCLAIR, Mottville,

Onondaga Co., N. Y.

Be careful that the chairs are stamped with my name in full; others are imitations.

For sale by Furniture Dealers in New York and at 218 Fulton street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Sulphuret Oil of Roses."—An External Remedy, almost miraculous in its effect. By absorption it eradicates Rheumatic Pains, Neuralgia, Nervousness and Throat Diseases. Sufferers failing to give this remedy a trial do themselves positive injustice. Price, ¼ oz. 50 cts.; 2 oz. $3.00. FLAVILLE, BRO. & CO., Proprietors, 30 Franklin St., Boston. N. B.—An Energetic Agent wanted in each Town.

TO CONSUMPTIVES

Consumption, that scourge of humanity, is the great dread of the human family, in all civilized countries.

I feel confident that I am in possession of the only sure, infallible Remedy—now known to the profession—for the positive and speedy cure of that dread disease, and its unwelcome concomitants, viz., Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, Nervous Debility, &c., &c. Twenty-eight years' experience, as a busy practitioner, in the best Consumption Hospitals of the Old and New World, has taught me the value of this Medicine in the cure of all Throat and Lung Complaints.

Those suffering with consumption or any of the above maladies, by addressing me, giving symptoms, they shall be put in possession of this great boon, without charge, and shall have the benefit of my experience in thousands of cases successfully treated. Full directions for preparation and use, and all necessary advice and instructions for successful treatment at your own home, will be received by you by return mail, free of charge, by addressing

DR. JOHN S. BURNETT,

167 Jefferson Street,

LOUISVILLE, KY.

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY

Manufacture those celebrated Bells for CHURCHES, ACADEMIES, &c. Price List and Circulars sent free. HENRY McSHANE & CO. BALTIMORE, MD.

This standard article is compounded with the greatest care.

Its effects are as wonderful and as satisfactory as ever.

It restores gray or faded hair to its youthful color.

It removes all eruptions, itching and dandruff. It gives the head a cooling, soothing sensation of great comfort, and the scalp by its use becomes white and clean.

By its tonic properties it restores the capillary glands to their normal vigor, preventing baldness, and making the hair grow thick and strong.

As a dressing, nothing has been found so effectual or desirable.

A. A. Hayes, M.D., State Assayer of Massachusetts, says, "The constituents are pure, and carefully selected for excellent quality; and I consider it the BEST PREPARATION for its intended purposes."

Price, One Dollar.

Buckingham's Dye

FOR THE WHISKERS.

This elegant preparation may be relied on to change the color of the beard from gray or any other undesirable shade, to brown or black, at discretion. It is easily applied, being in one preparation, and quickly and effectually produces a permanent color, which will neither rub nor wash off.

Manufactured by R. P. HALL & CO.

NASHUA, N.H.

Sold by all Druggists, and Dealers in Medicines.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and $5 outfit free. H. H. ALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine.

INCORPORATED IN 1851.

25th Annual Report

OF THE

MASSACHUSETTS MUTUAL LIFE INS. CO.

-OF-

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

FOR THE YEAR ENDING DECEMBER 31st, 1876.

Net Assets, Dec. 31st, 1875.....$5,681,120 42

RECEIPTS IN 1876.

Premiums.....$1,056,468 71
Interest and Rents.....360,303 35—1,418,762 06
Total.....$7,099,832 48

DISBURSEMENTS.

Death Claims.....$338,507 43
Matured Endowments.....38,297 00
Surplus returned to Policy-holders in Dividends.....245,639 78
Surrendered and cancelled policies.....226,251 43
Total Payments to Policy-
Holders.....$848,685 64
Commissions and Salaries.....151,452 37
Other Expenses.....38,872 85
Taxes, Licenses and other State
Fees.....10,246 83
Reinsurance.....5,244 78
Profit and Loss.....2,000 00
$17,491 61
Total disbursements.....$1,056,612 47
Net Assets Dec. 31st, 1876.....$6,043,370 01

NET ASSETS.

First Mortgage Loans on Real Estate.....$3,895,632 24
Loans secured by collateral.....219,498 51
United States Securities.....207,204 45
Railroad Stocks and Bonds.....294,585 61
National Bank Stocks.....63,355 82
State and City Bonds.....76,467 00
Real Estate.....291,760 20
Premium Notes on Policies in force $897,141 35
Less Notes given on account of Reinsurance.....2,593 10—894,545 25
Office Furniture.....6,617 45
Bills Receivable (secured).....7,779 64
Cash on hand and in Bank.....95,890 84
$6,043,370 01

ADDITIONAL ASSETS.

Interest Accrued.....$219,663 17
Premiums in course of collection
(less cost of collection).....65,879 76 Deferred Quarterly and Semi-Annual Premiums (less cost of collection).....99,212 38
Balances due from Agents.....10,042 10
$304,797 41
Deduct depreciation in value of
Stocks and Bonds.....16,390 38—$378,407 03
Gross Assets, Dec. 31st, 1876.....$6,421,777 04

LIABILITIES.

Reserve by Massachusetts standard, being present value of liabilities under all policies $5,600,262 00
Death Claims not adjusted and not due.....173,500 00
Unpaid dividends.....21,359 58
Premiums paid in advance.....1,721 15
$5,796,722 73
Surplus Dec. 31st, 1876.....$625,054 31
Surplus by New York Standard about.....$1,045,000 00
No. of Policies in force December 31st,
1876.....14,458
Amount insured thereby.....$33,803,463 00

OFFICERS.

E. W. BOND, President.
HENRY FULLER, Jr., Vice-President.
AVERY J. SMITH, Secretary.
OSCAR B. IRELAND, Actuary.
DAVID P. SMITH, M.D., Medical Examiner.
CHARLES P. KEMP, M.D., Ass't Med. Ex'r.

LAMAR

INSURANCE COMPANY,
OF NEW YORK.

Broadway, cor. John Street.

Capital, - - $200,000.

ASSETS, JANUARY 1, 1877.

Cash on hand and in Bank.....$10,414 77
U. S. Bonds, market value.....303,232 50
Loans on Call, Good Stocks Collateral.....13,200 00
Bonds and Mortgages on Brick Dwell-
ings.....56,400 00
Bills Receivable for Inland Premiums.....2,465 94
Premiums in course of collection.....8,830 43
New York Bank Stocks market value.....19,725 00
$411,268 64

Losses unadjusted estimated at $10,100 00

ISAAC R. ST. JOHN, President.
A. R. FROTHINGHAM, Vice Pres't.
WM. R. MACDIARMID, Sec'y.

HOME

Insurance Co. of New York,

Office No. 135 Broadway.

Forty-seventh Semi-Annual Statement,
Showing the condition of the Company on the first day of
January, 1877.

Cash Capital.....$3,000,000 00
Reserve for Re-Insurance.....1,858,464 68
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and
Dividends.....243,402 24
Net Surplus.....1,002,783 90
Total Assets - - - $6,104,650 82

SUMMARY OF ASSETS:

CASH IN BANKS.....$342,311 22
BONDS AND MORTGAGES, BEARING FIRST
LIEN ON REAL ESTATE WORTH $4,894,000 2,011,453 00
UNITED STATES STOCKS (MARKET VALUE) 2,517,625 00
BANK STOCKS (MARKET VALUE) 286,602 50
STATE AND CITY BONDS (MARKET VALUE) 185,433 00
LOANS ON STOCKS, PAYABLE ON DEMAND
(MARKET VALUE OF SECURITIES, $700,379) 519,681 35
INTEREST DUE ON 1st JANUARY, 1877 72,997 65
BALANCE IN HAND OF AGENTS 153,416 65
REAL ESTATE 8,800 19
PREMIUMS DUE AND UNCOLLECTED ON
POLICIES ISSUED AT THIS OFFICE 8,330 26

Total - - - $6,104,650 82

LIABILITIES.

CLAIMS FOR LOSSES OUTSTANDING ON 1st
JANUARY, 1877.....$212,027 24
DIVIDENDS UNPAID.....1,375 00

Total, - - - $243,402 24

CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.

J. H. WASHBURN, Secretary.

THE NEW JERSEY MUTUAL

LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.

J. H. STEDWELL, President.

C. H. BRINKERHOFF, Secretary.

J. H. CANNIFF, Cashier.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr.
Chase's Improved ($2.00) Receipt
Book." Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free.
STIMSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

Made of best material, in all sizes, for Adults and Children of both sexes; expands the chest, straight-
ens up stooped shoulders;
worth ten times its cost for
Children and Students.
Sold by the Trade and Cleveland Shoulder Brace
Co., Cleveland, Ohio. Send
$1.25 and clip measure.
Ask for Pratt's new Patent Brace.

ATLANTIC

MUTUAL INSURANCE CO

NEW YORK,

OFFICE 51 WALL ST.

ORGANIZED 1842.

INSURES AGAINST MARINE AND INLAND
NAVIGATION RISKS.

And will issue Policies making Loss payable
in England.

Its Assets for the Security of its Policies
are more than

TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured, are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated ing the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearin
terest until redeemed.

JOHN D. JONES, President.
CHARLES DENNIS, Vice-President.
W. H. H. MOORE, 2d Vice-President.
A. A. RAVEN, 3d Vice-President.
J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

P H E N I X

INSURANCE COMPANY,

OF BROOKLYN, N. Y.

January 1st, 1877.

Capital.....$1,000,000 00
Gross Surplus.....1,792,902 92
Gross Assets.....$2,792,902 92

OFFICES:

Western Union Telegraph Building, BROAD-
WAY, Cor. DEY St., New York.

Brooklyn Office, 12 & 14 Court St.
Brooklyn E. D. Office, 98 Broadway.

The benefits to be derived by the public from Insurance against loss by fire are so great and numerous,
when compared with its trifling cost, as to render it an imperative duty on every one to avail themselves of the protection afforded by the PHENIX INSURANCE COMPANY
against the destructive ravages of FIRE, which in a few moments may lay waste the fruits of a whole life of industry.

STEPHEN CROWELL, President.
PHILANDER SHAW, Vice President.
WILLIAM B. CROWELL, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED A. D. 1850.

THE MANHATTAN

LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

OF

NEW YORK,

has paid $6,500,000 Death Claims;
has paid $4,500,000 return premiums to Policy-holders; has a surplus of more than $1,000,000 over Liabilities; and a ratio of $120 Assets for every $100 Liabilities, by New York Standard of Valuation.
It gives the best Insurance on the best lives at the mos
favorable rates.

EXAMINE THE PLANS AND RATES OF THIS COM
PANY.

HENRY STOKES, C. Y. WEMPLE,
President. Vice-President.
J. L. HALSEY, S. N. STEBBINS,
Secretary. Actuary.

H. Y. WEMPLE, } Assistant Secretaries.
H. B. STOKES, }

$55 - $77 a Week to Agents. $10 Outfit Free.
P. O. VICKERY Augusta, Maine.

Miscellaneous.

Music Books for Sabbath Schools.

CHORAL PRAISE.

Fitted for the occasions of the "Episcopal" year, but is a book of great concrete beauty for any denomination. 100 good Songs, Tunes and (easy short) Anthems. By Rev. J. H. Waterbury. Price 25 cents.

GOOD NEWS.

A happy title for a beautiful Sabbath School Song Book, which disappoints nobody, and contains a large number of songs which will be universal favorites. By R. M. McIntosh. Price 35 cents.

SHINING RIVER.

The glittering title aptly indicates the character of the profusion of bright, pure songs of elevated sentiment, which fill the book with beauty. By H. S. & W. O. Perkins. Price 35 cents.

RIVER OF LIFE.

Containing songs contributed by a large number of well-known composers; it has an unusual variety, and everything is of the best quality. By H. S. Perkins and W. W. Bently. Price 35 cents.

LIVING WATERS.

Prepared for Camp Meetings, Revival Meetings, etc., this is also most appropriate for Sabbath School Work. No better collection is published. By D. F. Hodges. Price 50c.

Remember the ENCORE (75 cts.) is the book for Singing Schools.

Either book mailed, post-free, for Retail Price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

C. H. DITSON & CO.,
711 Broadway,
New York

J. E. DITSON & CO.,
Successors to Lee & Walker,
Philadelphia.

Simplest! Surest!! Best!!!

THE LIGHT RUNNING

"DOMESTIC"

SEWING MACHINE

the most satisfactory machine ever offered to families.

It makes a double-thread lock-stitch; has the Automatic, self-regulating Tension and Take-up, conical steel bearings, compensating journal, and is noiseless.

It does not fatigue the muscles or irritate the nerves; sews every fabric, and has never failed to give perfect satisfaction.

"DOMESTIC" SEWING MACHINE CO.,

Cor. Broadway and Fourteenth St.,

New York City.

THE BUTLER HEALTH

LIFT EXERCISE.

Commended by Highest Medical Authority.

A SCIENTIFIC SYSTEM of Concentrated Cumulative Exercise, adapted to the Preservation and Restoration of Health.

Principal Office, Spacious and well ventilated,
PARK BANK BUILDING, NO. 214 BROADWAY,
NEW YORK.

BROOKLYN: NO. 158 REMSEN STREET.

PARLORS FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN.

Call, or address

LEWIS G. JANES, Proprietor.

A Home and Farm

OF YOUR OWN

On the line of a GREAT RAILROAD, with good markets both EAST and WEST.

NOW IS THE TIME TO SECURE IT.

Mild Climate, Fertile Soil, Best Country for Stock Raising in the United States.

Books, Maps, Full information, also "THE PIONEER," sent free to all parts of the world.

Address,

O. F. DAVIS,

Land Commissioner, U. F. R. R.,

OMAHA, NEB.

Miscellaneous.

The Spanish Arched Instep Boot

Was first introduced and exclusively sold in our Shoe Department.

It gives the foot the appearance of being much smaller than it really is, yet no inconvenience is experienced by cramping the foot.

Ladies with enlarged joints and tender feet can be so fitted that they may at once enjoy both ease and elegance. A variety of ready-made Boots for ladies, misses and children, kept in widths to suit all kinds of feet, and at price to suit all kinds of people.

All orders by mail will be promptly attended to and should be addressed

MANAGER KINZEY'S SHOE DEPARTMENT,
Broadway and Ninth Sts., N. Y.

"The best Review in America for popular reading and instruction."

INTERNATIONAL REVIEW.

MARCH-APRIL, now ready.

I.—THE ADMINISTRATION OF PRESIDENT GRANT.—A review of the important Acts of the outgoing administration, with criticisms on its policy, its opportunities, and its influence at home and abroad, by an Independent Republican.

II.—THEORY AND PRACTICE IN ARCHITECTURE, by James C. Bayles of the Iron Age, discusses the means known to architectural science for producing safety in public buildings, including the methods of preventing and extinguishing fires; also, the difficulties in the way of putting in practice architectural theories.

III.—GERMAN COMIC PAPERS, by Julius Duboc, of Dresden, describes the comic journals published in the German language in Europe, and their effect upon German social and political affairs.

IV.—TWO NORSE SAGAS, by Professor Hjalmar H. Boyesen of Cornell University, is a review of the Norse stories recently translated by Professor Anderson, and serves to illustrate the Saga Civilization by them revived.

V.—RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT, by Van Buren Denslow, LL.D., of Union Law College, Chicago.

VI.—THE UNIVERSITY OF UPSALA, by Dr. Carl M. Thorden of Sweden, presents an account of the location, origin and academic constitution of this great University, with observations on the government and life of the students. This University celebrates its fourth centenary during the present year, and great preparations are being made for the event.

VII.—JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL AND MODERN LITERARY CRITICISM, by Ray Palmer, is an analysis of the critical powers of Lowell, with comments on the province and duties of criticism.

The Review also contains a sonnet, "Two Past Ages," by Charles (Tennyson) Turner of England; Mr. Hamerton's letter on Art in Europe; the usual scientific notes and comments on public events.

During 1877 the Review will devote space to European matters so far as they are likely to be interesting to Americans. It will introduce the most popular foreign authors to compete for favor with the best American writers. It will aim to be able, strong and practical in the character and style of its presentations. It is safe to say that no other magazine in the world can supply its place in the libraries of Americans who love to consider the progress of events throughout the world, and to know their bearing upon the interests of the United States.

It is not known that there is any reason why copies of the Review should not be found in every household. It has already the largest circulation of any secular Review, because of its popular attractions. These attractions will be developed gradually, and increase as their need is made manifest.

For sale by Newsdealers and Booksellers.

Price, $1 a Number. $5 a Year (Six Numbers).

A. S. BARNES & CO., Publishers,
111 & 113 William St., N. Y.

$12 a day at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine.

MISFIT CARPETS.

English Brussels, Three Ply and Ingrain; also, Stair Carpets, Velvet Rugs, Crumb Cloths, etc., very cheap, AT THE OLD PLACE.

112 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

Carpets carefully packed and sent to any part of the United States free of charge.

SEND FOR PRICE LIST.

Miscellaneous.

OVINGTON BROTHERS,

246, 248, 250 and 252 Fulton Street,

BROOKLYN.

Fine China, Glass, Clocks, Bronzes, etc., etc.

Just Received Invoices of

COPENHAGEN VASES,
LIMOGES FAIENCE VASES,
AND DOULTON WARE.

Lectures and Sermons,

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

FIRST SERIES.

The Education of Conscience.

Self Respect.

The Higher Reverence.

God on our Side.

Man and the Bible.

The Best Use of Sunday.

SECOND SERIES.

The Essential Piety of Modern Science.

A Rational Church.

Economy and Waste.

Immortal Life.

Also, WAY, TRUTH AND LIFE, a Biography of N. A. Staples, with sermons, price, $1.00.

For sale by CHARLES P. SOMERBY, 139 Eighth St., New York. Copies sent by mail at the rate of five cents each and postage.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.

Established in 1837.

Superior Bells of Copper and Tin, mounted with the best Rotary Hangings, for Churches, Schools, Farms, Factories, Court-houses, Fire Alarms, Tower Clocks, etc. Fully Warranted. Illustrated Catalogue sent Free.

VANDUSEN & TURT, 102 E. 2d St., Cincinnati.

10 PER CENT NET.

Kansas, Missouri and Iowa Improved Farm First Mortgage Coupon Bonds Guaranteed. We guarantee, as an assurance, that we loan not to exceed one third of the actual value. In over six years' business never lost a dollar; never delayed a day on interest or principal; no investor through us ever did or ever will get an acre of land under foreclosure. Send for particulars and references.

J. B. WATKINS & CO., LAWRENCE, KAN., or

HENRY DICKINSON, Manager, 30 Pine Street,

New York.

BALD HEADS

Can be covered with a piece exactly fitted to the Bald spot, so perfect, and with work so ingeniously contrived as to appear each hair just issuing from the skin, the hair being exactly of the same shade and texture as the growing hair; they are so perfect that they cannot be detected. Made only at BATCHELOR'S Celebrated Wig Factory, 16 Bond Street, N. Y.

HAIR DYE.

BATCHELOR'S CELEBRATED HAIR DYE is splendid. It never fails. The only true and perfect Dye. Harmless, reliable, instantaneous. No disappointment, no ridiculous tints; remedies the ill effects of bad dyes, leaves the hair soft and beautiful Black or Brown. Sold and properly applied at BATCHELOR'S Wig Factory, 16 Bond St., N. Y. Sold by all druggists.

W. A. Batchelor's Curative Ointment immediately cures Ring-Worm, Tetter, Itching of the Head, and all Eruptions of the Skin, Face or Body.

W. A. Batchelor's Alaska Seal Oil for the Hair. The best Hair Oil in use.

W. A. Batchelor's Dentifrice for beautifying and preserving the teeth and Gums and deodorizing the breath.

W. A. Batchelor's New Cosmetique, Black or Brown, for tinting the Hair, Whiskers or Moustaches without greasing them. Sold at factory, 16 Bond Street, New York, and by all druggists. Ask for them.

J. A. BENDALL.

THE INQUIRER.

VOL. XXXII.—NO. 14. }
WHOLE NO., 1584. }

NEW YORK, MARCH 8, 1877.

{ $3.00 PER ANNUM
{ 10 CENTS A COPY.

CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL NOTES:	329
LEADING ARTICLES:
A Hopeful Prospect.....	330
The Vice of Toleration.....	331
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE:
Boston Chit-Chat.....	332
LITERATURE:
Our Planet.....	333
Brief Notices.....	334
New Publications Received.....	335
BRIEF SELECTIONS:	335
HORTICULTURAL HALL LECTURES:
Jonathan Edwards.....	336
HEARTH AND HOME:
Farther on the Way.....	337
Three Centuries of Unitarianism in Transylvania and Hungary, (Concluded).....	337
OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE:
An Open Letter to Dr. Clarke.....	339
Rev. Dr. Bartol.....	340
Boston Liberal Ministers and Mr. Moody.....	341
JOTTINGS.....	341
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT.....	342

Last week by inadvertence the name of "John C. Kimball" appeared among contributors in place of "Frank E. Kittredge." Mr. Fretwell desires us to state that the eleventh line of the second column on the 221st page, should be read "sixty thousand Unitarians," instead of "sixty thousand Unitarian churches."

THE death on Tuesday last, of Chief Justice Moses, with the consequent demand for the appointment of a successor, produces a curious complication of the South Carolina position, the unravelling of which it is difficult to foresee.

THE demand for an investigation into the business management of St. John's Guild should be met in the fullest manner. No trifling with the contributing public on the part of the officers of any charitable organization, can be permitted for a moment.

GOLD has advanced a little within a day or two, probably on account of the postponement of Sherman's Funding Bill, the last quotation being about 105. Silver has been reasonably steady during the week. Money on call is rather higher and hopeful views are expressed by many business men, but the indications are as yet vague.

WE wish those who so vociferously claim that seven members of the Commission voted in a certain way on purely judicial grounds, and eight members voted in another way for purely partisan reasons, could for a moment have a view of themselves from outside. If they did not die with inextinguishable laughter, it would be because they have no sense of humor.

IN sending in his list of Cabinet nominations the President has shown the firmness for which his best friends gave him credit during the canvass. The names of Messrs. EVARTS, SHERMAN, McCRARY, THOMPSON, SCHURZ, KEY, and DEVENS, having been selected, he proposes that the Senate shall confirm or reject the appointments. It is evident from numerous Washington despatches that the conflict with "the machine" has begun. The struggle now will test the question whether reform under Republican auspices, is possible, and we believe the President will conquer. The conservative and really valuable opinion of the country is overwhelmingly in his favor. The pitiful position held by the "Senatorial group," is one which they were bound to occupy sooner or later, and every well-wisher of his country will pray for their discomfiture.

AMONG the numerous demands which will be made upon the new administration, is the presentation and enforcement of some comprehensive, consistent and effective plan for the government and civilization of the Indian tribes. We have—Heaven knows!—plenty of blots on our escutcheon, and of these the infamous management of our Indian relations is far from the least. That the Indians are savages is unquestionable; that we have ingeniously and for a series of years, contrived to make them the prey of the offscourings of civilization and to drive them from bad to worse, is just as sure. That our neighbors in Canada find that to be perfectly easy which our authorities hold to be impossible is well known, but we have been accustomed for so long a time to cry out that we could not compete with our neighbors unless we were propped up in some way, that we cannot feel sure that we can be shamed into decent management.

WE should feel a little more confidence in the early adoption of a proper system, did we not remember the great roar of execrations which were hurled at the Sioux a year or so ago for doing to General Custer and his party precisely what General Custer and his party were endeavoring to do to them, and recall the further fact that the arms with which the Sioux fought were placed in their hands by the whites, who then drove their savage neighbors into hostilities by the most flagrant violation of solemn treaties.

IT is a satisfaction to find that the following preposterous and blasphemous resolutions were passed by a minority only of the Ohio House of Representatives, which was not even a quorum of the House, at an irregular meeting, and in treacherous disregard of a promise of the faction that animated them, not to take advantage of the absence of members and pass any resolutions of the kind:

"WHEREAS, By fraud, perjury and the most despicable practices known even to pickpockets, R. B. Hayes has secured 185 electoral votes, thereby becoming the ruler of a disgraced nation; therefore Resolved, That we are sorry for it because it destroys our faith in the mercy, justice and beneficent goodness of Almighty God, whom we have been taught to believe was the defender and protector of right in this, that He has allowed villainy and moral perjury to triumph over truth, honesty and virtue."

THE indecency of the preamble is gross beyond example, but is less noticeable than the blasphemy of the resolution. The fool who offered them seems not to have had the remotest idea of the idiocy of his own language. What a concession to the Republican party is this, that they have actually got the Almighty on their side and responsible for their success! If God were clearly on the Republican side, one would suppose that must be the right side. But that God's honor and faithfulness are involved in the turns and twists, or the victories and defeats of political parties, is a sort of nonsense which only persons wholly ignorant of religion and wholly thoughtless of the nature of Providence, ever allow themselves to aver. We are not permitted to put off upon Almighty God the natural consequences of our own plans and efforts.

The man who can say that his faith in God's mercy, justice and beneficent goodness is destroyed by the results of an election can never have had any well founded faith in God. If faith in God is dependent upon the uniform success of virtue and the uniform defeat of vice, in the earthly happiness of the worthy and the earthly misery of the unworthy, it has a very precarious foundation. It is assailed by the general experience of society.

It is melancholy to think that one thoughtless booby can by mere recklessness of language, involve in the charge of blasphemy, so many careless but angry companions of his superficial petulancy, and so hand over a State Legislature to the scorn and laughter of all serious minds in the country.

An esteemed subscriber sends us a letter criticizing the position which we assumed last week regarding "The Count." Our space is too limited to allow us to enter into any lengthy debate on this subject, especially as we have hitherto from week to week expressed ourselves freely and as explicitly as possible: a few words must therefore suffice. In the first place, then, every one who is not a sheer partisan with judgment so clouded as to be worthless as a guide, must admit that the vote had been so vitiated by fraud or violence, on the part of both Democrats and Republicans, as to leave a doubt as to what was the actual will of the people, at the time of the Presidential election. In the second place, there were but two ways to extricate ourselves from this predicament, the way of force and the way of peace. To the fools who advocated force, we have nothing to say. In the third place a method of arbitration was adopted, in which both parties united. We regret to say for the honor of those with whom we have individually been associated, that the Republicans did not support the scheme as unanimously as the Democrats. Nevertheless, it was accepted by both, as we believe, in good faith. In the fourth place, no engagement was made in advance that the Commission should go into a general examination of the returns. It is simple folly to suppose that the Electoral bill could ever have been passed with such an understanding. This was indeed the principal point to be submitted to the Commission. Our correspondent, in common with many of his fellow partisans, in his zeal for a decision satisfactory to him in this emergency, seems to have wholly forgotten that there is such a document as the Constitution of the United States, and also that the United States Government is one of somewhat limited powers. From the time of the adoption of the Constitution down to the late contest, the Democratic party has stood firmly for States' rights, and, excepting that they once attempted to carry their doctrine to such an extreme as to make the general Government a practical nullity, in which effort they were happily and conclusively defeated, the Democrats have undoubtedly been right. That all at once they should have been willing to throw overboard their cardinal principle, and wholly centralize the Government at Washington for the purpose of gaining a temporary advantage, is a modern marvel, but happily they have been defeated in this also.

The question whether there was a constitutional right to go behind the returns having been submitted to the Commission, was decided in the negative. This decision may have been right, or it may have been wrong; it was, at least, the decision of the tribunal to which we had determined to leave the question, and we accept it as final, just as we should have accepted any other decision. We take it to be now the law of the land, and are perfectly free to say that those, who having agreed to abide by a peaceful arbitration of the questions at issue, now feel disposed to dance around in a tantrum and break things, simply because the decision does not square with their preconceived hopes, are guilty of the most ineffable folly. As to the question between Mr. Hoar and Mr. Hewitt, it is sufficient to say that Mr. Hewitt has in no way substantiated his reckless charge against Mr. Hoar, and the latter being a man of full age with a reasonable share of common sense, it is hardly fair to assume outright that he made a promise which he was wholly incompetent to make, and which the whole tenor of the Electoral bill itself and of the discussion at the time of its adoption, must show simultaneously to be utterly worthless.

A HOPEFUL PROSPECT.

The peaceful inauguration of President Hayes has taken place, and the nation breathes again in quiet satisfaction that a dreaded crisis has brought forth no revolutionary fruits. Both parties have behaved as well as could be expected. The irresponsible and futile malecontents of one wing have played off their antics to amuse the more vulgar and ignorant portion of their own party, and satisfy them that a vigorous resistance was made to a conclusion they well knew could not be escaped. If these fanatics or impostors had not known that the more sensible and patriotic portion of their own party were resolute and strong enough to keep order and maintain the contract on which the solution of the Presidential question depended, they would not have dared to enact the farce they performed in the House, with such frantic folly. Never was there a more transparent attempt than theirs to play upon the lowest passions of the lowest layers of the people! Perhaps the fustian and spangles of one of the New York City newspapers may equal it, with its sham mourning and its clownish capers, but from that precious sheet nobody expects anything except vulgarity and self-seeking.

The whole force of the Democratic address consists in its assumption that the object of the Electoral Commission was one which every candid man knows to have been an impossibility—the exhaustive examination of the local returns of the disputed States.

As to the Democracy, acting in their own character through their strongest men, nothing could be more creditable than the record they have made, and are still making. It is thoroughly sensible, natural and patriotic. We can only hope that the Republicans, who have the best and the worst portion of the people in their ranks—the best, for intelligence, patriotism and superiority to party—the worst, because a long lease of power has united to them the self-seeking, the panderers to place, and the conspirators in fraud—we can only hope that their use of their new opportunity may be governed by the inspiration of the upper end, and not the fermentation of the rotten end of their party.

President Hayes shows by his inaugural address that his purposes are nobly national and patriotic. His Cabinet, as reported is composed of honest, intelligent and high-toned men. We have to regret that the new Secretary of the Treasury is not a man of more accepted positiveness and scientific rigor in his financial views. We need a teacher, and not merely an echo in that Department. It is, under present circumstances, the most difficult and important station in the Cabinet, and the one demanding the most vigor and positiveness of conviction. For the real difference in the country as to finance, is really only one of ignorance and prejudice and personal interest misunderstood, on one side, and knowledge, absolute science and interest well understood, on the other. There is no room for compromise. What is wanted is courage to maintain the scientific and accepted truth in the management of the currency. We fear Mr. Sherman has not this force of will, and this clearness and positiveness of conviction. But he is upright, practiced and industrious, and should be given a fair chance.

The outgoings of the President in respect to Civil Service are perfectly satisfactory, and the selection of Carl Schurz as one of his constitutional advisers gives to them especial point. No such brave words have recently been uttered as those of the inaugural, denying the rights of Congressmen to control appointments. This is the precise sore that needs caustic. President Hayes has touched it squarely. Let him keep his hand just there until he burns out the cancer that for a long period has been eating into the national life. Courage to deal with this mortal sickness is courage for everything. If the President has nerve to carry out his purpose, he will be the greatest of benefactors. Even the Southern question is secondary to the civil service question. It is largely because the South has had reason to distrust the government appointments in its own and all other portions of the country, that it has been in a state of semi-rebellion. Let it know that no officers are appointed for their own sake, but all for the public good, and it will at once become as peaceable as any other section could be with its internal difficulties to manage. Those internal difficulties the late administration has increased by its military and Federal intermeddlings. It seems probable that the South is about to be called upon to settle its local troubles by its own methods, provided they do not grossly violate the fundamental provisions of the Constitution. The general Government has not made the observances of this law any more certain by its interposition.

We cannot expect a perfect obedience; the difficulties are too great. But we certainly can have the statesmanship not to interfere to correct errors and departures from law when we know that federal interposition will aggravate the evils we abhor. Such has been the effect thus far. It is proposed now to see what will come by favoring the policy of throwing the Southern States upon their own sense of their own local interests and their own power of self-government. We do not expect the same order, the same equality, the same peace which we have in States that are not torn with a conflict of races—but we expect something better than we have had since the war, and something that will steadily improve. It is only unreasoning people who think that all the forms of Republican government can be minutely exemplified in communities like Louisiana and South Carolina in their present circumstances. It is better to bear with them and trust them and encourage them to rely upon local self-government than to seize every occasion to vindicate the theory of the National Government at the expense of self-respect and State responsibility. This we hope and believe is President Hayes' policy. Let it be tried at least for a year. It cannot kill more negroes than the old policy has done! And we think it may promote the peace and happiness of the whole people.

THE Academy describes an enormous collection of imperial coins recently unearthed near Verona, and announces the extraordinary discovery of a colossal terra cotta vase under a Roman pavement near the Church of San Francesco, Bologna. This vase contained at least a ton and a half of bronzes, hatchets, daggers, swords, scythes, bits, saws, razors and shapeless pieces.

THE VICE OF TOLERATION.

We are living in a period of religious upheaval and theological displacement. The old lines of a uniform belief no longer lie straight and even before us, but the rock of our faith has been upturned by a mighty convulsion, and we are left to pick our way as best we can among the scattered debris of old and mutilated systems. Just how much of the old is worth preserving, either for its inherent value, or the charm of association which still clings to it, must be determined by each man for himself. Some curiosity seekers will spend half their days in picking up white and glittering pebbles, to which sunshine and the wash of the waves have given the appearance of precious gems. Others, who understand nature better, know that she does not strew her treasures about with so lavish a hand, but hides them away in secret nooks and crannies, which we must patiently search out, if we would possess the rich treasures within.

It is in the world of religion, as in that of external nature. The best thought is not found among the loosely strewn remnants of ancient creeds, and to be had for the taking. The glow of high aspiration and noble resolve can never come from fumbling among dead men's bones. There is no more ignoble waste of time than that spent in assorting our old rubbish; when we ponder gravely whether this worn-out garment may not still be made to serve some purpose, or whether that bit of broken china be not still too good to throw away.

To have to pass through life weighed down beneath the burden of rags of other people's making, is a melancholy fate, fitly equalled by that of making one's life work consist in one long endeavor to match one's opinions with others directly opposed to them.

In reading Mr. Frothingham's review of the biography of Dr. Arnold, published in a recent number of the INQUIRER, I was glad that in speaking of the "difference attitude makes in the estimation of men," he thought fit to allude to the action of some of the Boston Unitarian clergy, in accepting an invitation to partake of the sacrament in Trinity Church. Here the grace and dignity of attitude were not on the side of the liberals. As Mr. Frothingham said, it was not they who were then "looking forward," and whose "faces were bathed in light;" for, he proceeds, "two men may stand upon the same square yard of ground side by side, but if they are moving in opposite directions their momentary propinquity tells for nothing." The Index noticed this new departure of the reverend gentlemen with two or three sharply-worded items, the stinging sarcasm of which must have tingled rather unpleasantly about the ears of those to whom it was directed. Truly there be Unitarians, and Unitarians. There are those who apparently deem it no inconsistency to take part in church ceremonies which violate in spirit and letter every distinctive principle of their own creed; while others in the same city, like Mr. Savage, put a widely different interpretation on this same creed, by making one of the duties which it inculcates consist in a vigorous and well-sustained onslaught on Orthodoxy. James Freeman Clarke has expressed sympathy with the Tabernacle movement, and has thus led some of us to ask whether the author of "Ten Great Religions" has not become the exponent of at least two opposing systems of doctrine. I like better the kind of Unitarianism I find in an extract from a sermon on "Cheating the Devil," by a New York clergyman, whose style has been described as that of "hurling things right at you." Here are some of the hard truths he flings this time. "The prevalent idea of Christianity is that an elaborate trick is played on the Devil in the interests of its believers; that one may sell himself to the Devil, and take pay in the pleasures and prizes of the world, and when sick of the bargain escape from its obligations by repentance—buy the Devil's goods on a long credit, without paying a penny for them, and then take the benefit of the theological bankrupt act, and leave him to whistle for his recompense. The idea that a man can cheat and lie, until all virtue is squeezed out of his soul like the juice from a pressed orange, and then shuffle off all the effects by some process of spiritual legerdemain, and come out heroic, happy and holy, is an insult to intelligence." It is such straightforward talk as this that puts bone and sinew into liberalism, and prevents it from degenerating into a mere "mush of concession."

The question is simply this, whether, looking at it from the side of expediency alone, liberals can afford in these days of stormy discussion over the objects of religion to make of their principles nothing but fine sentiments. To-day, when theological demagogues have the floor, have rationalists performed their full duty, when through intellectual curiosity they have gone to listen once or twice, and come away to utter no more effective protest than is conveyed in a lifted eyebrow, or a shrug of the shoulders? Orthodoxy is making desperate effort to gain control of the strongholds of power, the State, the school and the home. We are confidently assured she can never accomplish this, because such an usurpation would be in direct conflict with the "spirit of the age," the "progress of the time," etc., as though this spirit and progress were not entirely dependent on the combined action of individuals; as though when a man shook off the shackles of mental superstition, he at the same time freed himself from moral obligation; and as if in becoming a liberal he ceased to be a responsible being.

There is no harm in concession provided the thing conceded be harmless. Amiability is a rather pleasing defect on the whole, except when there is cause for righteous indignation. The gushing sort of toleration which would mix and mingle its opinions with those of everybody else, is like the soft-hearted charity which gives to every beggar that asks, and in the end has only impoverished itself without enriching another. The wisest benevolence is that which says, "Thus far and no further," to all intruders, whether they come asking alms, or propagating opinions.

CELIA P. WOOLLEY.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

BOSTON CHIT-CHAT.

MY DEAR INQUIRER:

Since my last chat with you the weather has been simply delightful. I think it was Emerson who said it was fortunate for New England that the Pilgrims happened to land here first, for otherwise the country would never have been inhabited. But now, in spite of Emerson and Mark Twain, one can hardly see why this might not have been the original seat of the "Earthly Paradise."

Well, the Salvation Auctioneers have been the town sensation for a month. Mr. Moody came with the firm assurance—from the Lord—that he was to do a greater work in Boston than anywhere else. And the Rev. Joseph Cook expected to see the "haughty intellect of Boston" on its knees. But the haughty intellect has not yet seen fit to bow before the Tabernacle idol.

Our friend, John Weiss, spoke on the subject at the Parker Memorial the other Sunday. He said—"for substance of doctrine," which is Orthodox accuracy, "people have raised the question as to whether the revivalists had not insulted the intelligence of Boston. I think not. The intelligence of Boston has not been addressed as yet." That may be the reason the "haughty intellect" doesn't bow. The intellect hasn't been spoken to. Brains being, according to Moody, the special invention and pitfall of Satan, he has very prudently kept them at a distance.

It is hardly time to talk of success or failure. It is reported that Mr. Moody thinks a good beginning has been made, and that they are now ready to get down to solid work. But the financial outlook is not specially encouraging so far. Of the estimated total cost, $75,000, only about $30,000 has been raised. The attendance is chiefly church members and curiosity seekers—people who always go to see the latest show. It is perfectly safe to say that Boston—what New York or Chicago people mean when they use that word—has not yet been touched in the slightest degree. Mr. Hale told me the other day that he could not see that the revival had even crossed his track anywhere. It had not touched the range of thought in which he worked. I do not know of a single person of liberal tendencies or free thought on whom it has produced any effect, other than repugnance or disgust. No wonder Mr. Moody thinks "Doubt is the most damning of all sins;" for he cannot reach any intelligent thinker with his—"the only"—salvation.

And yet, nowhere has he been met, at the outset, with less of opposition. Nearly all the Unitarians met him with at least a qualified welcome. They hoped he might do good. They put the best possible construction on his utterances. They applauded his earnestness; and gave him credit for sincerity and good intentions. They have carried it so far, and have seemed so anxious to be on good terms with the evangelicals that—to me at least—it has almost savored of a lack of proper denominational self-respect. I hardly wonder that the "Elephantine Lectureship" thinks Unitarianism "played out;" and that "there is no scholarly skepticism in Boston."

Apropos of the Unitarian attitude, I feel like saying, friendliness and generosity are good things; but when white and black seek to be reconciled by trying to think there isn't much difference between them, it may show good will, but it shows still more plainly a lack of eye-sight or clear thought. By too much friendship for Mr. Moody's work, Unitarianism is in danger of confessing that it ought not to exist.

The daily papers are fairly saturated and dripping with piety. If the revival is to be encouraged, it is because it represents the truth. If it represents the truth the editors ought to embrace and practice it. If not, they ought not to patronize and help it on. Such, at least, is the way the logic looks to those who haven't anything to make or lose by it. But piety always looks more attractive when "there is money in it." Nearly every paper is patronizing the Tabernacle; and yet hardly a single one of the editors personally believes in Moody's salvation, or has the least idea of accepting it. Such righteousness has a most suspicious flavor of greenbacks.

At the recent dedication of the new Trinity Church—Phillips Brooks'—four or five Unitarian ministers partook of the elements at the communion. This was liberalism or inconsistency, according to the way in which you look at it.

Mr. Cook still flourishes at the Temple. One thing is noteworthy concerning the impression he has made here this winter. The points he has put with most force are just those that are not peculiar to Orthodoxy. When he has tried to uphold some special dogma it has resulted in his making himself ridiculous; as when he defended the virgin-birth of Jesus by comparing him to a drone bee. In this case, if he proved anything he took away the supernaturalism of Jesus, and so knocked away his own foundations. His great arguments for Theism and against Materialism were borrowed; and coupled with abuse of their authors. I soberly think it may be said of his course of lectures—leaving out the rhetoric—that "what is true in them is not new; and what is new is not true." But the Orthodox are so glad at last to get a scientific (?) defender, that they throw up their hats in ecstasy; and even applauded his proof of everlasting damnation.

The 28th Society at last has called a successor for Theodore Parker in the Rev. J. L. Dudley, of Detroit. From a conversation with him yesterday, I am inclined to think he will accept. I certainly hope so, for he is of the kind that there is no danger of having too many of anywhere. He is broad, clear, free. He has at least four sides to him; and a window opening out to each quarter of heaven. Most people have only one window, and that looks only into their own front yard; and sometimes the only view is up some narrow alley.

The other churches and ministers are pursuing the even tenor of their way. The air about your correspondent is exceedingly sunny, and he has at least as many friends and as much success as he deserves.

SILVUS.

FEBRUARY 27TH.

LITERATURE.

OUR PLANET.*

PROF. W. D. GUNNING is a lecturer on popular science, well known in the West. In the volume whose title is given below we probably have a condensation of several courses of his lectures. The scope of the work includes Geology, Paleontology and Ethnology; it is a history of the earth considered as an organism, and of life upon the earth viewed as an organic whole. To set forth so many and so difficult matters as these few words imply in a book of three hundred and fifty pages is no trifling task. The author has certainly succumbed to some of the temptations of such a subject; many of its difficulties are almost insuperable, and any attainable success is at best comparative. But Prof. Gunning has made a very readable book. It is one which, to many minds, will be far more entertaining than the last good novel. The volume is attractively gotten up, and recommends itself to the eye by its bright binding, its clear type and its numerous good outline drawings in white on a black background, which are from the hand of Mrs. Gunning. We have, however, noticed some typographical errors, which a more careful proof-reading should have prevented, and which are likely to be of special injury to a book bearing on its back "Science for the People."

For Prof. Gunning's work is one for the unscientific many, not for the scientifically-trained few. In its defects and in its excellences alike it would offer a good text for a sermon from a priest of science upon the Popularization of Scientific Knowledge. We want time and inclination here to enlarge upon the theme. But a few suggestions we cannot avoid making. Prof. Gunning has himself, he says, "no sympathy with much that is called 'popular science.' To read from pages addressed to the memory only, that the sun is so many miles from the earth; is so many miles in diameter, and is 'enveloped in whirlwinds of tempestuous fire,' may help the mind to astronomical facts and set it aglow with wonder, but it does not teach it astronomy." So far as our author condemns the barren detail of names and facts in science we sympathize with him; but assuredly we were not aware that "popular science," as it is called, has any dangerous tendency in this direction. Text-books for schools and colleges may, many of them, be bare and unphilosophical, but the conscious object of the greater portion of the popular scientific books of the day is to "set the mind aglow with wonder," while the true nature and methods of proper science are woefully misrepresented. Such works as Figuier's, to go no farther for example, so far from teaching the multitude what science is, are mainly useful to show what science is not. For science never arose from wonder alone, however little man may ever be able to cease wondering in this wondrous universe; and the amazement with which a large knowledge of nature must possess the modern mind is not superficial but deep. It is a marvelling at the constant forces working miracles every day about us. It is a rooted astonishment at the minuteness and the majesty of the Divine Legislation of the Universe. No disposition of the mind could be farther from the proper wonder and awed curiosity of the acute scientific intellect than the young-ladylike and patronizing admiration and ejaculation which Figuier and his kind seek to excite. To exclaim over isolated facts of nature, "awful," "lovely," "wonderful," "sublime," is a sign not of the mature and trained, but of the lax and callous mind.

Prof. Gunning has entirely escaped the dry detailing of facts without connection. We could wish that he were more free from appeals to the imagination of his readers. Not that he is for a moment to be classed with the writers to whom we have alluded. His personal acquaintance with the sciences which he treats is evidently large, and, so far as our reading makes us a judge, exact. He has embodied in his work the results of some of the latest labors of Cope, Marsh, Leidy, Tyndall and Bastian. His method is logical; his mind is philosophical, and not every man of note in the world of scientific investigation can claim such a character. He knows and emphasizes the value of laws and principles. "Facts," he says, "do not enlarge the mind unless they are fertilized by principles. Our aim in the preparation of this volume has been to conduct the reader through methods to results. His mind, it is hoped, will traverse the methods and make them its own." Prof. Gunning has to some extent succeeded, if we are to understand his aim to be the distinct statement of certain facts and of the inferences from those facts. He has, in several parts of the book, thus formally separated his premises and his conclusions. Besides this, he has well brought out the importance of the principle of "uniformity," of which Lyell made use in Geology, and which lies at the foundation of Darwinism. But, beyond this, we see very little in the "Life History of our Planet," to justify its author's claim. High as we are disposed to set it in the list of entertaining and instructive books for the people, we think it quite impossible to derive from the book a real knowledge of scientific methods.

Professor Gunning traverses, to use a favorite word of his, a great territory; he has not at times so far escaped a fragmentary and inconsecutive treatment as he might have done with more care of his style. And it is quite difficult enough a task here to give facts in order, without entering largely into the processes of reasoning by which their order has been established. The logical aim of the author evidently becomes more and more subordinate as he advances. He proceeds from the history of the rock strata to the history of vegetable and animal species, and is consequently on hotly-disputed ground in the latter portion of his work. But he does not show us by example, in dealing with the question of the origin of man, the true character of rigid scientific method. He gives us the results to which his reading and investigation have brought his own mind, and he sets forth many of the facts which go to justify his conclusions. Prof. Gunning is a thorough-going disciple of the Philosophy of Evolution, and we do not quarrel with his position; but we do not, for ourselves, find in his book a sufficient statement of the strong points of the Anti-Darwinians. We do not find all the explanations of which even the portion of the facts of the case which he gives is susceptible, examined and weighed.

We grant that the author would be quite unable to do this satisfactorily within his limits of space. But his language leads us to expect it. To appreciate the severe process of exact scientific reasoning, we must learn why every other possible explanation of a chain of facts is set aside, and one only is allowed to stand. The reader of this book will not, then, learn from it the rules of inductive logic. Prof. Jevons' little "Science Primer of Logic" is a better guide for him than any work dealing with the facts and results of science. Let him beware of thinking he gets a sufficient conception of scitific processes from Professor Gunning, however much in harmony with those processes his statements of results may be. But he may, in our judgment, place great confidence in the trustworthiness of the author's facts, and in the logical value of his conclusions.

*Life History of Our Planet. By William D. Gunning. Chicago: W. B. Keane, Cooke & Co., 1876.

The subject of the book is well stated—"How were things created? How did plants, and animals and man come to be? It is a problem with which the religious sentiment has nothing to do, and for whose solution the only requirement is a knowledge of facts and mental integrity in the use of them." The author's general position is thus put at an early stage of the discussion of the Mammals: "We have shown that this animal (the horse) was in process of creation through hundreds of thousands of years. When you press me with difficulties, and say that, although my theory holds good as to the horse, because I have not demonstrated it so clearly as to the ox, therefore it fails, and all other animals have come by miraculous and instantaneous creation, I must say to you: 'The difficulties you urge may be real and in the present state of science I may not be able to meet them; nevertheless, evolution is true and its application universal.'"

The facts of the earth's history, in rock and plant and animal, are set forth by Prof. Gunning from this standpoint. Students of this subject will find little, if anything, that is new to them; but we believe that the readers for whom the work is meant will derive much pleasure and profit from it. The story of the earth is always fascinating; and to those who have read it in standard works this treatment of it from a disciple of Darwin should be a welcome provocation to go over the ground again. We are much mistaken if the readers of such works as Principal Dawson's "Story of the Earth and Man," would not especially be profited by this "Life History of Our Planet." Indeed, we should advise the general reader to take them up together. But, agreeing as we do with Prof. Gunning, and not with Principal Dawson, we still feel moved to defend our author against himself in one important respect. In scientific treatises, addressed to students, no demands for excellence in style can rightly go beyond simplicity and clearness. Indeed, literary merit in the exposition of scientific discoveries is so rare among experts that it is a cause of suspicion to some extent. But in works on science intended for the people, the style in which the matter is put becomes of high consequence. All friends of science, all friends of popular enlightenment, must desire that the great facts and laws in which our knowledge of nature consists should be presented in a way to attract and fix the interest of a popular audience. The writers should seek all becoming ornament for the solid lesson they have to teach. But in simple fact we see that most writers of "Popular Science" over-embellish their matter, and thus give quite wrong impressions of the relative weight of scientific facts and laws.

The temptation to fine writing is very great. Prof. Gunning is evidently a man of reading and considerable cultivation. His mind is fresh, feeling and enthusiastic. His style shows him a lover of the poets. The motto from Tennyson on the title-page of "Our Planet," is very felicitous; and the quotations from Whittier, Wordsworth and Shakspere are always apt and pleasing. His treatment of Milton's account of the creation of animal species is very good. There is a verve and a buoyancy in his style quite rare in books of this degree of scientific merit. But it is always to be remembered that much of the ground gone over by our author is "debatable land," and, strong evolutionist as he is, he should be especially careful of his words. His opponents will be quick to reproach even his soundest reasoning if it is clothed in a dress too poetical or imaginative. The animation of Prof.

Gunning's style lays him open too often to such attacks. In the interest, then, of his own views, which we cordially receive, and to smooth the way for their more general acceptance, we think it to be regretted that he has not guarded his expressions more carefully, and been more cautious of overstepping the line between proper prose and poetry. "Wrathfully sweep the storms over sea and land," is not so bad in itself, but the enemy would on account of it, infer more of imagination in the argument than he would fairly be justified in doing. The passage at the close of the third chapter, concerning the "Sons of the Sun," inclines to bombast. The prophecy of the Mammal in the seventh chapter is much too fanciful and difficult. It is a vicious rhetoric which speaks of Creation, instead of Nature, weaving "the life that robes the earth to-day," or "travelling" along a certain path, and which so often personifies the elements and even the rocks. The designation of the drawing under the preface, "On the Way to a Bird," marks a frequent fault of the author, a straining after effect, which leads to over-statement of his case, and is of all vices most contrary to the modesty and caution of the ideal man of science. In a very few places we have noticed a lack of precision and necessary completeness of statement. On the fifteenth page some minerals are simply named, and their composition unnoticed; on the sixty-first page the author speaks of "an axis of drum-shaped bones—the segments hol-low at both ends," where a more precise word is needed. The explanation of Figure 8 seems not quite plain. The calculation on the ninety-first page, "ninety thousand feet—more than nineteen miles," can hardly be correct. On the one hundred and ninetyeth page "eastward" is twice used for "westward," while at the foot of the two hundred and forty-second page "fibula" is used for "tibia." The misery of the operatives of Massachusetts is decidedly exaggerated in a passage in the last chapter, and, finally the mock-modesty and scientific looseness, of writing "limbs" for "legs," on the two hundred and ninety-seventh page, and elsewhere, are evident. These are small points. In most essential matters Prof. Gunning's book is admirably fitted to do its work of telling the story of the earth according to the views of most of the younger scientific men of the day. The reader will find many of the strongest arguments for Darwin here put briefly and forcibly. As a general popular view of the development of the world and of man, we know no work superior to it, and but one or two which we should compare with it. To all but professed students of science, who do not need it, we can heartily recommend its perusal. Students of theology and preachers of religion may learn from it how much of hope and cheer for man lies in a philosophy which some foolishly call blank and discouraging. Prof. Gunning closes in a fit strain, "We are re-creating ourselves. We have worked the downward slant out of the bodily eye, and we are still working it out of the spiritual eye. We are still in the making. Behind us, unnumbered ages of preparation, within us unspeakable potencies, before us—

"The highest mounted mind
Still sees the sacred morning spread
The silent summits overhead."

N. P. G.

BRIEF NOTICES.

FRIEND FRITZ: A Tale of the Banks of the Lauter. Translated from the French of Erckmann-Chatrian. New York: Scribner, Armstrong & Co. 1877.

The Erckmann-Chatrian novels are all characterized by a freshness and simplicity which is very agreeable, and something more—very charming. The scenes are laid for the most part in Alsace-Lorraine or the vicinity, and, though the feelings of the joint authors are strongly Gallic, the life and incidents depicted by them seem to the foreign reader as strongly Teutonic. Rhine wine and beer play a large part in many cases, indeed their prominence distinguishes these stories so greatly from any life with which most of us are acquainted, that we have to predicate a new set of conditions for respectability, before we can become greatly interested in the characters who are introduced to us. This once done, however, we find it is the same old human nature that we have to deal with, the same joys and sorrows, and these are drawn with no unskillful hand.

"Friend Fritz" is not an exception among these bright tales, though we think it is not nearly so interesting as some others of the series. We are here really out of France, and the thread of the story only incidentally reveals the political attitude of the authors. It is practically a comedy, the salient points of which were told by our Paris correspondent in a letter which we published two or three weeks ago, describing the play which is founded upon the original work. We have not compared Scribner, Armstrong & Co.'s translation with the original, but in the English version it runs smoothly.

The latter fourth of this neat volume contains "The College Life of Maître Nablot," which is a severe criticism of the local French college of forty years ago, in narrative form, rather than a story.

FOURTEEN WEEKS IN ZOOLOGY. By J. Dorman Steele, Ph.D., F.G.S. New York: A. S. Barnes & Co. 1877.

Mr. Steele, in the series of which this is the seventh or eighth, seems to be travelling over a field of dangerous breadth for thorough work; but, so far as we have been able to judge from a cursory examination, this work is calculated to give a clear general idea of the leading relationships in the animal kingdom, with sufficient specific information to be of value in itself and to lead many students to make a closer and more systematic study of an exceedingly interesting branch of natural history. The general plan of classification is explained, typical specimens are described, with details of resemblances and peculiarities in structure, and the value of the book is greatly increased by very numerous illustrations, averaging, indeed, more than two to each page.

There are many busy people, who never expect to be able to learn many of the details of natural science, and for such as well as for most boys and girls, a work of this kind cannot fail to have interest. But we have only to imagine it put into the hands of a bright country boy, who has had little opportunity to browse among books, to appreciate it as placed "where it will do the most good."

SELECTIONS FROM THE WRITINGS OF LORD MACAULAY. Edited with occasional Notes, by George Otto Trevelyan. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1877.

In this handsome octavo volume, uniform with the "Life" recently published, Mr. Trevelyan has collected specimens from Macaulay's writings, in the following classes: "Historical Scenes," "Historical Portraits," "Historical Sketches," "Literary Criticism," "Poetry," and "Miscellaneous" fragments. It would be absurd for us to attempt an elaborate criticism of the eminent historian's style, the character of which is well known to every reader. All that is required of us is to say that the selections appear to have been made with good judgment; that they are so made that the fragments suffer as little as may be from the fact that they are excerpts and not generally essays complete in themselves; and that those who cannot supply themselves with the author's volumes as written, will not be led astray if they are led to purchase this compilation.

Mr. Trevelyan's notes are very brief, and are generally introduced to explain allusions which might not be clear to readers unfamiliar with the originals from which these extracts have been made.

WOOD'S ILLUSTRATED PLANT RECORD, AND GUIDE TO ANALYSIS. New York: A. S. Barnes & Co. 1877.

However nearly some of us may agree with Geo. Dawson in saying that we love flowers, but hate Botany, there are very few of us who would not be likely to love flowers more did they know accurately something more about them, and fewer still who would not be benefited by some attention given to their careful study. Recent investigations have added so greatly to the scientific knowledge of plants in some departments, that Botany has all the freshness of a newly developed science. And though the application of the dissecting knife and classification alone would leave the field comparatively untouched, yet one who is led so far can scarcely avoid going farther into the vital relations of plant life. Therefore we gladly welcome such facilities as are offered in the little book before us, for commencing personal investigations and for making the first steps in study systematic and profitable. It is,—in compact and handy shape,—the skeleton for a record of such facts of structure and habit as any one may learn regarding the plants which come under his observation, so arranged that the results may easily be collated; and is preceded by what appears a full and instructive illustrated glossary of the terms and characteristics most important in determining the position in the vegetable republic of any plant under examination.

To learn the interest in this study, it is not necessary to make an arduous business of it, and we think that even he or she whose leisure is most restricted may find it worth while now, at the opening of the season, to be provided with this aid to the pleasant employment of hours of recreation, and that having begun with it they will be induced to go farther without faring worse.

THE CHILDHOOD OF THE ENGLISH NATION; or, The Beginnings of English History. By Ella S. Armitage. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. 1877.

Mrs. Armitage has laid the English-speaking people under an obligation by preparing this handy little volume. She appears to have thoroughly studied her subject, and, relying upon the best authorities, to have put into compact shape the results of recent historical research from the earliest records down to the twelfth century. And she has done this with as little interruption as possible from barren dates, contenting herself for the most part with an orderly statement of the development of the nation and the character of the people's life, giving events in their regular sequence, and placing the most important dates in a brief table at the end of each chapter.

The last ten years have been fruitful of valuable works upon English history, but this is none the less welcome on that account. The Messrs. Putnam's reprint, though in rather small type, is as neat and tasteful a little volume as we have seen in many a day, the whole work being comprised in about two hundred and fifty 16mo pages.

NEW PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

BOOKS

- From Roberts Brothers, Boston.
THE GREAT MATCH, AND OTHER MATCHES. No Name Series.
From Harper & Brothers, New York.
THE APOLOGIES OF JUSTIN MARTIR. With an Introduction and Notes, by Basil L. Gilder sleeve, Ph.D., LL.D. Cloth, $1.75.
THE GOLDEN BUTTERFLY. A Novel. By the Author of "Ready Money Mortiboy." Paper, 75 cents.
CONTRIBUTIONS TO OPERATIVE SURGERY AND SURGICAL PATHOLOGY. By J. M. Carnochan, M.D. Parts I. and II. Paper, $1.
From J. R. Osgood & Co., Boston.
HARRIET MARTINEAU'S AUTOBIOGRAPHY. Edited by Maria Weston Chapman. Two vols. Cloth, $6.
RISE AND FALL OF THE SLAVE POWER IN AMERICA. By Henry Wilson. Vol. III. Cloth.
From Ginn & Heath, New York.
ESSENTIALS OF ENGLISH GRAMMAR. For the Use of Schools. By William D. Whitney. Cloth, 94 cents.
From the Authors' Publishing Co., New York.
CHRISTIAN CONCEPTION AND EXPERIENCE. By Rev. William I. Gill. Cloth, $1.
From A. S. Barnes & Co., New York.
WOOD'S ILLUSTRATED PLANT RECORD, AND GUIDE TO ANALYSIS. Cloth, 90 cents.
From the Free Religious Association, Boston.
HOW SHALL WE KEEP SUNDAY? Paper, 10 cents.

PERIODICALS.

- From the Leonard Scott Publishing Co., New York.
WESTMINSTER REVIEW. JANUARY.
LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW. JANUARY.
BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE. FEBRUARY.

BRIEF SELECTIONS.

EVERY man is immortal until his work is done.

WHERE there is much light the shadow is deep.—GOETHE.

CHARACTER is essentially the power of resisting temptation.—FREDERIC R. MARVIN.

WHAT martial music is to marching men, should song be to humanity.—ALEXANDER SMITH.

WHOSOEVER acquired knowledge, and did not practice it, resembled him who ploughed, but did not sow.—SAADI.

HE that does a base thing in zeal for his friend, burns the golden thread that ties their hearts together.—JEREMY TAYLOR.

WE should all keep a seat for ourselves in the parliament of pul.

lic opinion; a single vote may turn the scale some day.—EDWARD GARRETT.

THERE shall be less distress
Than heretofore,
When men make poetry less,
And live it more.
—Burr G. Hosmer.

ON parents' knees a naked, new-born child,
Weeping thou sat'st while all around thee smiled:
So live that, sinking in thy long last sleep,
Thou then mayest smile, while all around thee weep.
—Ali 'len Ahmed (Arabian.)

As an oft-told tale ceases at last to evoke our laughter or tears, so God changes the duties of society, that each age and each heart may be waked up by a new inspiration, and find the air full of hitherto unheard music. When the trumpet of war ceases, the trumpet of literature, or education, or character, should sound to new armies, a new march. The two vast streams, love to God and love to man, flow forever onward and carry toward heaven every heart that casts itself into their wave, but, like the stream that once flowed through Eden, they divide as they run and form new channels continually, so that by banks where once ran a rivulet, there now rolls a majestic flood.—PROF. DAVID SWING.

HORTICULTURAL HALL LECTURES.

Rev. Francis Tiffany on "Jonathan Edwards," reported in the Boston Globe.

ALTHOUGH we may think that the world has outgrown the old system of thought, of which Jonathan Edwards was king, it still lives and shows its strength in every new revival.

In considering the career of Edwards the lecturer cautioned his hearers against supposing that his system was a mere collection of abstractions spun from the finest conceits of the brain. The system had an emotional side, and without this emotion it could never have gained such power. Augustine, Pascal, Calvin and Edwards each made their system a matter of profound feeling. The young theologian was born in Windsor, Connecticut, Oct. 5, 1703. His father was the minister of the church there, and very naturally the lad fell under the influence of the prevailing system of religious thought. At ten years of age he wrote essays on profound metaphysical subjects, and thus early began to consider the great theological problems of his time. He could not accept the justness of the dogma that God elects whom he will save and chooses others to be eternally lost until he entered Yale, when thirteen years old. Here, all at once, a new light broke upon him. While walking one night and looking up to the stars, a sense of the profound majesty and greatness of the Creator of the universe came over him. From that moment his soul was possessed with a spirit of ecstatic devotion towards his God.

Leaving college, at the age of eighteen, he studied for the ministry, and early in life married a young girl for whom he always felt a most tender love. Called to his first charge at Northampton, at the age of twenty-three, young Edwards entered as no novice upon his pastoral work. His fame as a theologian was not small. With a perfect devotion he devoted his ministerial life toward unfolding the infinite purposes of God towards men. Thirteen hours a day he gave to most persistent brain study. His arguments on "God's sovereignty," at first without apparent effect on his congregation, soon came so fast and close that the barriers of coldness and opposition were broken down. In his parish began the "great awakening" which spread all over New England, and sent its waves of influence even to the shores of Scotland and England. The child of ten years and the reprobate of eighty bowed before him. The inevitable reaction from all such overstraining followed. Irregularities were observed among his parishioners, and Edwards read the names of the offenders from the pulpit, though some of them were sons of prominent members of his church. With his intense adoration for holiness as embodied in an all-sovereign God, there came its antipodal, absolute, hatred for sin. The highest heights of holiness implied to him the existence of the lowest depths of sin. Edwards, in his own confession, seemed to see his former self so terribly sinful as to cause his wonder that a holy God should suffer him to exist. That God, as absolutely sovereign, should rule the universe so that sin should be ever punished seemed to him a fundamental truth of religion.

Mr. Tiffany traced the history of the disagreement between Edwards and his Northampton church. Twenty years after his first settlement the church had grown cold, and the inflexible rectitude of Edwards could no longer be endured. Indeed, the presence of such a commanding intellect was oppressive to the souls of the common people with whom he had to do. And so Edwards was dismissed—poor and hardly knowing where to turn for bread—from Northampton, and went to the frontier parish of Stockbridge. Years after, a lawyer who was prominent in this hasty action published a confession in a Boston journal; others had repented long before. The settlers were widely scattered, but in this obscure missionary district Edwards was left free for contemplation. Here, quite removed from the world, he found time to devote himself to his work—those great works on the "freedom of the will," or God's plan in creating the world, the "end of creation," and on "true virtue." They are marvels of closest reasoning, in which every objection is met in turn and in turn overthrown. Deserts in the physical world, deserts in the mental and moral world—these were brought as proofs of his system. Yet, with all his hate for sin, Edwards, like Francis of Assisi, loved his ideal of God with a most ecstatic adoration. "Are you willing to be damned for the glory of God?" was his test of perfect adoration for a Being whose sovereignty he worshipped as all holy. As we think of the vast machine with which Edwards made God rule the universe we may shrink at the thought of allowing ourselves to be crushed for the Divine glory. But Edwards' devotion was like that of Spinoza, who thought that to love God it is not necessary that He should love us in return.

A few months before the death of Edwards he was requested to assume the office of President at Princeton College, N. J. He humbly urged his unfitness for such a responsible position, but at length accepted. He was inoculated for small-pox and died a month after his installation, at the age of fifty-four. He was a brave and comprehensive thinker, combining faith with reason. He remorselessly applied pure abstractions, and his denunciations appalled his hearers. His system was vitiated by the constant monotony of a self-asserting God. Though the sun might be for a time forgotten, His influence would transform the lake into a sea of gold and transfigure the mountains with rosy light. After this would come the startling thought that the sun behind the clouds had wrought it all.

CLEOPATRA'S NEEDLE.—An iron cylinder ninety-five feet long by fifteen feet in diameter is to be constructed around this obelisk, at Alexandria, in water-tight compartments. It is afterward to be rolled into the sea until it floats, and loaded with ballast to keep it steady. Having then been provided with keel and rudder, light spar deck, mast and lug sails, etc., it is expected to be ready to sail to any port in any weather. During the Summer it will be taken in this shape to London, where, having been placed upon the Thames Embankment, it will be raised to the proper position on its intended site by hydraulic power. It is thought that the whole cost of the transfer and erection will be $30,000, as against $400,000 expended on the obelisk at Paris.

HEARTH AND HOME.

[FOR THE INQUIRER.]
FARTHER ON THE WAY.

BY J. C. HAGEN.

- "You must be very old," I said
One day to Gaffer Gray.
"Not old, my friend," was his reply,
"But far upon the way."
- "We all are only trav'ling home,
Some with a step more strong;
But I am growing weary, for
The journey has been long."
- "They tell me I am going down,
As sinks the sun at even;
But every step is upward now,
And takes me nearer Heaven."
- "Many who numbered fewer years
Have passed me on the road,
And finishing their journey here,
Have reached their blessed abode."
- "And gentle ones there are, I know,
Who long have gone before;
With greetings kind, to welcome me,
They're waiting at the door."
- "Though time may change the outward form,
It cannot blast or blight
The trusting soul, and but bestows
A purer, clearer light."
- "No! though I feel my hold on earth
Grow feebler every day,
It is not that I'm older, but I'm farther on the way."

THREE CENTURIES OF UNITARIANISM IN TRANSYLVANIA AND HUNGARY.

▲ Lecture delivered at Philadelphia, June 6, 1876, by John Fretwell, Jr.

(Concluded.)

In 1453, Mahomet II. took Constantinople and put an end to the Greek Empire, and the Hungarians under John Hunyady did good service by keeping the Turks out of Germany. Matthew Corvinus, the son of John Hunyady, was the wisest and greatest of the Hungarian kings, and now came really the golden age of Transylvania. Meanwhile a great revolution was taking place in Western Europe. The thunder of Luther's mighty voice shook the rotten edifice of the Papacy to its very foundations, and cleared the moral atmosphere in which men breathed and lived. Even those lands over which it did not pass felt its purifying influence from afar, and sweeping at first in low murmurs only, across the plains, the reverberations grew stronger in the Carpathian hills, till the Transylvanians hearing them above the din of battle with the Turks, looked up and listened. The Lutheran doctrines were received with more quick response in Hungary than in any other country in the world. The Germans accepted mostly the Augsburg confession, the Magyars inclined to the teachings of Zwingli and Calvin, but they did not stop even here. Under John Zapolya's widow, Isabella, the three nations inhabiting Transylvania, the Germans, Szeklers and Magyars, made a league of union, placing the boy John Sigismund upon the throne.

Isabella was a princess of Poland, and had brought with her from her father's court an Italian physician, Georgio Blandrata of Saluzzo, one of the companions of Socinus. In the year 1553, Blandrata had left Italy in company with one of his fellow Anti-Trinitarians, Alciati, and taken refuge in Switzerland in the very year in which Servetus was burnt.

He visited Poland in 1555, but returning to Italy, he was arrested by the Inquisition and imprisoned at Pavia. He escaped and found refuge in Geneva. Here Calvin caused him to be arrested, and would probably have doomed him to the fate of Servetus had not Blandrata signed the Confession of Geneva. But mistrusting Calvin, he went, in 1558, to Poland, and two years later we find the Italian physician acting as Superintendent of the Calvinist church in Little Poland. He was an Anti-Trinitarian at heart, and by his courtly manners succeeded in gaining great influence over Prince Radzivil. Sent by the prince to the Synod of Pinczon, in 1563, he induced even the Orthodox Trinitarians, to pass a resolution that "All researches about the Trinity, Mediation, Incarnation, were to be abandoned; all expressions unknown to the primitive church were prohibited. The ministers were to preach the pure words of the gospel, unadulterated by any human explanations. The decisions of councils held after the Apostolic times were declared not binding." (Socinus the elder, Lelius, visited Poland in 1551 and in 1558.) At this very synod a letter from Calvin was read exhorting the ministers to beware of Blandrata. But both he and Socinus had learned caution by the fate of Servetus. Servetus was at once theologian and philosopher, and, more warmly attached to Jesus than any of his cotemporaries, he exposed himself more to persecution by his very truthfulness. He gave his thoughts always their natural expression unchecked by any idea of expediency. But others warned by his fate were careful to use only the language of Scripture, and so afforded their adversaries no means of attacking them. In 1563, Blandrata accompanied the Polish princess Isabella to Transylvania, and being a man of uncommon penetration and address he converted not only the prince, but the chief nobles of the country to his views.

A far nobler and purer apostle of Christianity in Transylvania was Francis David, a Transylvanian German, and rector of the High School at Klausenburg, and tutor to the young prince. One day when the market-place was crowded by people earnestly engaged in discussing the theological questions which then troubled men's minds, David, mounting a stone at the corner of the place, addressed the people with such persuasiveness in favor of the doctrines which he himself had embraced, that in a very short time all the Hungarian population became Unitarian, and in the year 1568, the name Unitarian was adopted as that of one of the four established churches of Transylvania. For ten years Blandrata and David worked steadily together for the restoration of primitive Christianity, but in 1578 David's researches in the Bible led him to believe that to address worship to Jesus was to disobey him, and was as little authorized by the Scriptures as the invocation of the Virgin Mary and the saints. He excited the enmity not only of Blandrata, but of Socinus, and was thrown into prison, where he died in 1579. Some say that Blandrata's enmity was caused, not by theological differences, but by that spirit of revenge which is, in Europe, so emphatically regarded as the besetting sin of Italians, that it is called peccatum italicum. Blandrata soon after returned to Poland, and having amassed much wealth was strangled for its sake by his nephew. David's name is still held in profound veneration by the Transylvanians and he is regarded as the real founder of the Unitarian faith there.

The very early organization of the Unitarian church in Transylvania had an important influence on its ecclesiastical form. It has maintained many usages which are strange to us, whose churches have grown out of Presbyterianism or Congregationalism. It is governed by a consistory; its chief pastor is a bishop. David himself was called Episcopus Uni- tariorum in Hungaria; but the bishop is simply the Superintendent of the early church, and in every respect different from the bishop of the Anglican or Roman Catholic Church. So long as Transylvania was independent the fortunes of Unitarianism prospered; it had 408 different churches and eleven high schools. But the princes soon became involved in intrigues with the courts of Paris and Vienna, and to serve the purposes of their policy, prince and nobles changed their confession and became now Catholic, now Calvinist, just as it suited their interests. If anything could reconcile us to the miserable state of the country at that time, it is the wonderful religious freedom enjoyed there during Turkish rule, so that one sees good ground for the statement made some years ago in Parliament by an English bishop, that if he had but the alternative of choice between residence in Turkey and Austria he would as a Protestant choose the first. The Jesuits had been introduced into Transylvania by Bishop Draskowitch, but had stirred up strife to such a degree that after a unanimous request of the States at the Diet, the king banished them in 1588. Soon after, the house of Hapsburg carried war into the country; the general, Basta, burned the Protestant clergy on a pile constructed of their own books, nay, in his barbarity, he even flayed some of them alive; and with the aid of a fanatical priesthood he brought Transylvania to such a terrible famine that even human corpses were not safe before the gnawing hunger. Can we wonder that the Calvinist prince of Transylvania, Stephen Bocskai, called in the aid of the Mohammedans to defend Hungary against men who blasphemed the name of the Christian's God by associating it with such villainies? And can we wonder that the Turk despised the Christians who forgot the common danger in sectarian animosities? Agreements were made again and again between the Protestant princes of Transylvania and the Catholic rulers of Austria, only to be broken by the latter, until it became a proverb in Hungary, "Ne hiđ neki mert Papista,"—"Trust him not, he is a Papist."

During all the years which followed under the reigns of the native princes, Bocskai, Sigismund, Rakoczis, Bathoris Bethlen and the Apaffis, the Calvinists, Unitarians, Catholics and Lutherans lived in peace side by side. But when, in 1690, Apaffy died, the land became an apanage of the Austrian crown, and though the Emperor Leopold by a solemn decree had sworn never to issue an edict by which the Protestants should be disturbed or hampered in the enjoyment of their religious rights and liberties, he was induced by the Jesuits to break his oath. This roused the Protestants to new rebellion under Rakoczy, and at the Diet of Onod (1707) Hungary was declared a republic, the four churches had equal rights restored to them, and the Jesuits were again banished. The war between Rakoczy and the Austrian Emperor Joseph I. was at last concluded by the peace of Szathmar (1711), in which England and Holland united in guaranteeing the liberties promised by Austria. But the Jesuits would not allow their prince, Charles VI., to keep faith with the Protestants. In the teeth of the Diploma of Leopold, the cathedral of Klausenburg which had since David's famous sermon, in 1568, belonged to the Unitarians, was forcibly taken from them in 1716 and given to the Catholics. Throughout all Transylvania the Unitarians were forcibly expelled from their churches. The land and houses with which the schools were endowed, not only by native princes, but also by charitable Unitarians were taken away; their printing press was closed, the publication of their books forbidden, and they were excluded from all share in government offices. The Jesuits were again introduced, and settled in Klausenburg, Udvarhely, Alba Carolina, Herrmannstadt and Kron-stadt, and so again it was proved that Christian liberty was safer under the rule of the Turk than under that of Austria.

If I were to recount to you the suffering endured by the Protestants under the reign of Charles the Sixth's daughter, Maria Theresa, the bare recital would fill volumes. When she made her son Joseph II. her partner in the government, this enlightened prince obtained through his Minister Kaunitz, a copy of a letter in Madrid, showing that the secrets imparted by Maria Theresa to her Father Confessor had been betrayed to the Queen's enemies.

Through all this persecution the little band of Unitarians in the Szekerland remain firm. Of them an old Hungarian chronicler had written that they were more severe in their morals than other Hungarians; and a Roman Catholic priest, writing to Vienna, was honest enough to confess that they possessed great economic virtues, were diligent, moral, orderly men, exemplary in the performance of their duties to the State. He however asked for their repression because their good lives were a recommendation of their detestable doctrines and a standing reproach to the impure lives of the Catholic priesthood. And he was wise in his generation. Men of pure heart and noble lives, energetic, united, seeking freedom less for its own sake than for the sake of doing God's work, they were sure to conquer the black brigade of the Pope in the long run. When Maria Theresa died and left her son, Joseph II., sole ruler in Hungary, he restored to the Protestants their rights, and although their property was still withheld from them, the self-denial and the generosity of some of their wealthier members, especially of Ladislaus Suki and of Paul Augustinovic, enabled them to rebuild their schools and churches.

It was not until 1821 that the Unitarians of England had any direct communication with their Eastern brethren, who then had one hundred and twenty churches, each with its pastor and schoolmaster, administered by a consistory of which half the members were laymen, with a bishop and seven arch-deacons. In 1831 one of their number, Alexander Farkas visited Boston and sent an account of the Unitarian churches of Massachusetts to those of Transylvania. Then came the years 1844-45, when the German Catholics and the Unitarian members of the Protestant church endeavored to institute a national German church with such apparent success at first that they were congratulated by the Unitarians of England. The waves of this movement touched also Hungary, but were lost in the din of the revolution, when for a moment it seemed that Hungary had cast off at once the yoke of the Jesuit and the Hapsburg ruler. But it was not to be. The Bund held the country for a year. The brutal hordes of Russia were called in by cowardly Austria; the savage Vlachs, who in eighteen centuries have hardly advanced beyond the savagery in which the legions of Aurelian had left them, like bloodhounds, burned and sacked and murdered right and left. The terrible story is well told by Charles Brace in his account of his visit to Hungary in 1851, when the whole country lay exhausted and weakened under the brutal heel of the conqueror. The Protestant churches on the plains were all closed; the Hungarians said there could be no God if such injustice were permitted.

But not so among the Unitarian churches of the Szekerland. Morning after morning, not on Sundays only, as in our fashionable churches of the West, but every day in the year for the last three hundred years, the service of prayer and praise had been carried on; and in these dark times, too, the grey-haired Szekler yeoman, worn out by grief for the loss of his patriot boys, who lay dead it may be under the sod of Vilajos or were pining on the banks of the Thames and the Missisissippi, could still pray: "Though Abraham turneth away his face from us and Israel acknowledge us not, Thou, Lord, art our Father, our Redeemer; that is Thy name from everlasting." While all the Protestant churches were objects of suspicion, these few Unitarian churches were especially feared as the altars at whose never-dying flame might be kindled and rekindled the sacred torch of liberty, no matter how often it might be quenched. In 1857 an attempt was made by the Austrian government to suppress their schools altogether by taking advantage of the great poverty of the Unitarians. The Szeklers made enormous sacrifices to save their schools, but could not obtain the required sum, till an Englishman, Mr. Paget, in 1857 made an appeal to London and Boston for it. Your financial crisis made American contributions impossible; the English raised enough to save the school, and in the nineteen years which have elapsed since then, some of the most promising students of that school have completed their studies at our expense in London. These people have since been visited by Rev. John James Tayler, of London, in 1868, by C. H. A. Dall, in the same year and by Morison, Steinthal and Hale. Last year they were represented by delegates at our jubilee in London, and I am glad to see among my audience to-night one Hungarian gentleman who was present at the International Unitarian Conference at Buda Pesth in 1873.

But the question may be put to me: What are these Unitarians now? Has their spiritual energy been petrified during their three hundred years of resistance to oppression, as in some other Protestant churches that we know, into mere ecclesiasticism; or is it still a vital inspiration in the nation's growth? Are these preachers merely representatives of some dead issue of a Socinian or anti-Trinitarian creed, or are they in vital relation with the living issues of to-day? I went to Hungary with these questions on my mind. That they merely call themselves Unitarians is no great matter, for I have seen some churches that for the honor of our name I would gladly see blotted out; but I found them to be for Hungary all that the Unitarian churches of Massachusetts have been for the last fifty years. A brave, thoughtful, energetic, temperate set of men, still worthy of the praise which the old Hungarian chronicler gave to their Szekler forefathers, that the Szeklers are stricter in their morals than other Hungarians; or the Catholic priest to the Unitarians of the Seventeenth Century, they send from their humble cottages in the mountain-land, and from their simple schools, men well qualified to lead their nation onward in its new career.

A Hungarian novelist, Moritz Jokai, who, when his works are translated into English, will be regarded as one of the greatest modern novelists, not only for his artistic power, but also for the direct influence of his writings on the thought and life of his people, gives in his latest novel, "There is a God; or, the People who Love but Once," a strong testimony to the influence of their simple and earnest faith on the Transylvanian Unitarians of to-day.

And they do not, though an organized church, stand in any sectarian isolation from the other churches. They exercise a direct influence upon Lutheran, Calvinist and Catholic, and it is through them that one of the leading Calvinistic professors has introduced the works of James Freeman Clarke even into his churches, thus not keeping up sectarian animosities, but reviving that spirit of the Master which appears in countless philanthropic enterprises, in deeds of love and in all charitable associations and institutions.

Since Mr. Hale's visit to Hungary we have resolved on supporting two professors at their admirable college in Klausenburg. We need only $1,250 each year for this purpose, and I would appeal to the charity of American Unitarians to raise this small sum. Now while America is bearing aloft the banner of a nobler humanity on the western way to the far East, the iron road built along the line of march of the old Crusaders has made these Eastern Unitarians also pioneers of Western thought on the way to their cradle lands in Asia, and I would ask you to help in hastening the coming of that day which will come "When years have past,

When the truth grows clear at last,
When from vast cathedral pile,
When from far off coral isle,
Rises one united prayer,
Ringing through the ringing air;
And that prayer the same the one
To the Father through the Son."

OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE.

AN OPEN REPLY TO DR. CLARKE.

MY DEAR AND HONORED FRIEND:—I reply to your letter, not because we do not understand one another, but because if I do not some will say that no reply was possible, and others that no reply was called for; partisans on one side choosing to regard my reference to your action in accepting Mr. Brooks' invitation as an indecent and cowardly attack; partisans on the other side choosing to consider your reply as a disingenuous evasion. It is unnecessary for me to disclaim any shadow of intention to impute to you an insincere motive or deed, to class you among trimmers, or to associate you with men who allow themselves to be placed by circumstances in a false position. The mental and moral integrity of James Freeman Clarke no reasonable being, friendly or otherwise, ever called in question. The situation was the only feature of the transaction that interested me, and in respect to that alone our opinions differ. Your letter tells me only what I knew before, in so far as it assures me that you acted in a generous spirit and in what to you was a broad sympathy of faith; but at the same time it furnishes firmer grounds than I had before as a basis for my own judgment.

Mr. Phillips Brooks is an Episcopal minister, manly, single-minded, honest and earnest. What he does is done with clear conviction. His prayer-book requires him to say to those approaching the altar of Communion: "Judge therefore yourselves, brethren, that ye be not judged of the Lord; repent ye truly for your sins past; have a lively and steadfast faith in Christ our Saviour; amend your lives, and be in perfect charity with all men: so shall ye be meet partakers of these holy Mysteries. And above all things ye must give most humble and hearty thanks to God the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, for the redemption of the world by the death and passion of our Saviour Christ, both God and man; who did humble himself even to the death upon the cross, for us miserable sinners, who lay in darkness and the shadow of death; that he might make us the children of God, and exalt us to everlasting life." The people, through the priest, afterwards say this "prayer": "Grant us, therefore, gracious Lord, so to eat the flesh of thy dear Son Jesus Christ, and to drink his blood, that our sinful bodies may be made clean by his body, and our souls washed through his most precious blood, and that we may evermore dwell in him and he in us." Then the priest says the "Prayer of Consecration," wherein occur these words: "Who made there (by his one oblation of himself once offered) a full, perfect and sufficient sacrifice, oblation and satisfaction for the sins of the whole world." "And we earnestly desire thy Fatherly goodness, mercifully to accept this our sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving; most humbly beseeching Thee to grant that by the merits and death of Thy Son Jesus Christ, and through faith in his blood, we, and all thy whole church, may obtain the remission of our sins and all other benefits of his passion." We will not quote further.

Now, that Mr. Brooks attaches definite and serious meaning to this language, and honestly believes the doctrine it conveys, is not to be questioned. As little is it to be questioned that he would ask nobody to join him in the sacramental act whom he did not suppose to be in essential concurrence in mind and feeling with him. I presume he did not invite Mr. M. J. Savage; he would not have invited Theodore Parker had he been living, or W. R. Alger had he been preaching in Boston, or John Weiss or Samuel Longfellow had they been settled ministers in his neighborhood. He displayed his liberality in disregarding the theological infirmity of those who questioned the doctrines of trinity, fall, deity of Christ, vicarious atonement, everlasting perdition to the unbelievers, but who did in some real sense hold to Christ as Redeemer and Saviour; and such, therefore, he generously bade to the spiritual feast. But would he have accepted an invitation from one of these gentlemen had they bidden him to their communion-table? Would he have gratefully responded to Mr. Clarke's invitation, especially if he knew, as we all know now, that in Mr. Clarke's apprehension, "bread and wine belong to the creed of nature," and "stand among all races as the natural signs of strength and joy?" I was born and reared a Unitarian; my father was a Unitarian minister in good standing; I was myself the pastor for several years of a Unitarian society of the old-fashioned, conservative kind. But there was never a time when it would have been possible for me to honestly partake of the Communion in a Trinitarian church of any denomination. The spirit of the Unitarianism in which I was nurtured was averse to it; the tendency of Unitarianism of all schools was pointing in the opposite direction, towards a simple reasonableness in thought and observance; the disposition to take plain, clear views of all matters pertaining to belief and practice was characteristic of both laity and clergy; there was even an anxiety to avoid complications with the theories and usages of the elder church. When, therefore, representatives of Unitarianism, the conspicuous representatives of it, acknowledged Christian fellowship with Episcopal clergy, on a very conspicuous occasion, and in a very conspicuous manner, my conclusion was that they were not pursuing the line of their tradition, but were relapsing, going back to the point which their precursors had abandoned. It was impossible to think that they acted inconsiderately or disingenuously, from policy or from sentimental good feeling. They were all clear-sighted, thoughtful, independent men, who acted as they did in full conviction that so to act was their duty. The spiritual validity of their conduct, otherwise, it is not my province to pronounce upon.

Whether the importance of preserving a temper of good will, charity, "brotherly kindness," sympathy, "unity of spirit," is so great as to call for or to warrant the species of fellowship illustrated at the consecration of Trinity Church is open to question. We have been so long accustomed to strange procedure on the part of the friends of "Christian unity" that this particular example of promiscuous intercourse does not surprise us; nor would it provoke comment did it happen under less signal circumstances. For my part, I am quite content and indeed entirely well pleased that people should go where they belong, and am satisfied quietly to note the classification. I am however unwilling that the classification should pass unnoticed, or that the extension of the Episcopal communion should be regarded as a triumph of the genius of free religion.

Heartily yours,

O. B. FROTHINGHAM.

REV. DR. BARTOL— WEST CHURCH CELEBRATION

WE were not among the favored ones who attended the morning service at the West Church last Sunday. But with a multitude of others who could not be there our heart was in sympathy with the happy occasion. We were not surprised to learn that notwithstanding the rain the church was filled as it had not been for years, and that the service was just what everybody knew it would be who knew him who completed on that day the fortieth year of his ministry. Forty years! how long to look forward to, how short to look back upon. There are many among us who have been in the ministry as long. One need not be very old to have accomplished that; but a forty years' ministry over one parish, that is rare.

Still rarer in quality than in quantity has the West Church ministry been. Sturdily refusing to be catalogued in any denominational year-book, or to be called by any party name, it has stood alone, and yet, not alone; for its independence of sect was not for isolation, but for a wider fellowship. It has welcomed to its pulpit such men as Bushnell, on the one hand, and Frothingham on the other, believing that Orthodox truth and Radical truth are just as good as Unitarian truth, and that all together are but a very small fragment of the eternal truth of God.

Unwilling that the anniversary should pass without a taste of its flavor, we stole away from our Sunday school in the afternoon and went up to the Communion service we knew was to be held. As we walked quietly in, the venerable old church, whose windows were made, not to exclude the light of heaven, but to let it in, smiled a sunny, cordial welcome. The sweet peace of the morning service still rested on walls and ceiling, on pulpit and pews, as the calm joy a mother feels in having her children gathered around her rests on her face after they are gone. The floral decorations were rich and tasteful. The dates "Thirty-seven" and "Seventy-seven," on the front of the pulpit, suggested the years which had passed since the now gray-haired man seated among the flowers, his white locks and serene face, so still, seeming a part of the decorations, came to give himself to the service of this ancient church of God. The organ struck a chord which seemed a part of the sunshine and the smile. We felt the sweet peace flowing into our soul. The place was full of it. There were not many present. We wondered there were so few. But we were glad to be there. It was a mount of vision. We thought of those who had come and gone between these two dates on the pulpit, some in childhood, others in their prime, others still in serene and good old age. We thought of the noble young men who went from this church to the great battle for freedom and came not back with the returning remnant of the regiment, but by the celestial route, transfigured and glorified. Were they all there—all the risen children of the church—at the morning service, taking no space, but giving a heavenly flavor to the celebration! And did they still linger round the table when their souls had been fed with living bread? We had never seen Dr. Lowell, and we wondered if it were he we saw in that empty chair, just where he sat, beside his young colleague, forty years before. Just then the organ ceased and the voice which has led the prayers of the church for all these years came out from the flowers saying, "Let us pray." The prayer was brief, very brief—a prayer not to be reported or ever forgotten. It was a breathing of the soul for the breath of God, and the answer came at once, not in a rushing wind, but in a fresh breath of spiritual life. Who will tell us why some most proper prayers, most properly expressed, do not move us at all, save to weariness, while others seem to unlock the very gates of heaven with the first word and let a flood of light and warmth into our souls?

The hymn which followed the prayer was so in harmony with it that it seemed a continuation of it:

"The saints on earth and those above
But one communion make."

* * * * *

"One family, we dwell in Him
One church above, beneath."

How rich with the treasures of faith the dear old hymn of Wesley seemed. When the last sound of voice and organ had ceased the pastor made an address. No, not an address. It was not a bit of an address. It was as far from that as possible. It was a continuation of the hymn—a solo, on the same pitch of faith. Making no allusion to the hymn, he went on to tell how the golden thread of its thought, “one family,” “one church,” “one communion,” “on earth and above,” was woven into the texture of our natures; how we all, at times, hold communion with an invisible company, welcoming to our fellowship of thought and affection our invisible loved ones who have gone on before, none the less, but all the more real, because seen, not with the outward and perishing, but with the inward and imperishable, vision. As he went on the audience increased. The shadows revealed to our inward sense at the beginning took on more distinctness, and we could understand what he meant when he said, “People speak to me sometimes of our thin church. I never preach to a thin church.” Only a little was said of Jesus. There was no attempt to show him, but only to show the reality of that spiritual way by which he and all glorified ones might come and show themselves to believing and receptive souls. And yet, somehow, the little that was said of the Master gave him his own place at the head of the table, among the upper chamber invisible guests.

Another hymn followed, “written for the occasion,” though the author knew it not, and the last words of the benediction were said. We say, the last words, for the whole service was a benediction, from beginning to end.

As we went away, with a full heart, we could but think that however full of blessing the morning service had been, the best wine had been kept for the close of the feast. We never know what the stone jars of our common life hold until they are touched by a Christ-like faith in the Invisible and Eternal.

And this is the man for whose Christian faith some have greatly feared. But the fear is subsiding. Still nobody knows where he belongs. Now he presides at a radical club or reads an essay before the Free Religious Association. Again you see him on the platform of the Tabernacle, where he would gladly speak if allowed. As that is wisely or shrewdly denied him, we next see him closeted with Mr. Moody, anxious to learn by a private interview with the revival prophet, what vision he may have had of the Eternal, closing his conference with an invitation to the Boston Association of Ministers, which we think Mr. Moody would have accepted had he known how much that highly-respectable body needs reviving. Wherever ideas are afloat, there you find him, no matter how rough the sea, out in his single scull picking them up, to work into some staunch building if sound, and to expose and throw away if rotten. Though a double and twisted idealist, believing that no one should venture to call himself a philosopher who hasn't doubted the existence of matter, he gives himself with enthusiasm to “Object Teaching” in his Sunday school, and to industrial schools for poor boys, where they may learn the art of shaping this phantom men call matter into various forms of beauty and use. Everywhere he is true to himself, and his last best thought, whether in dropping his radical salt into the theologico-scientific Monday noon dish, served by the popular Cook, at Tremont Temple, so spoiling his broth; or by his criticism of recent critics of Jesus, showing how signally, to his thought, they have failed in truly measuring that divinely-illuminated and God-inspired man of Nazareth.

So he walks, whither he will like the old Hebrew singer who said, “I will walk at liberty because I keep thy precepts.” There is no danger of liberty on that base.

Long may the honored minister of the West Church—never more truly or more widely honored than now—continue to “walk large” among us, helping us all to a yet richer experience of the “glorious liberty of the children of God.”

W. F. T.

BOSTON, March 5, 1877.

BOSTON LIBERAL MINISTERS AND MR. MOODY.

To The Editor of The Inquirer:

I READ with satisfaction the pleasant account in your last paper of my neighbor, Mr. Savage, and his preaching.

But one or two statements in the letter seem to deserve a word of comment. Mr. Savage is represented as saying (and as your correspondent has seen the phonographic report of the sermon in the Commonwealth, we may consider the statement to be correct) that, “if he believed as some Unitarian ministers seem to concerning Moody he would not occupy his pulpit another Sunday; for, if Mr. Moody is right in his doctrine, the Unitarian church has no right to exist.”

What Unitarian ministers are here referred to as believing theologically with Mr. Moody, I do not know. I am not myself acquainted with any such ministers, and cannot believe that there are any such, in Boston or elsewhere. Mr. Savage's criticism of Orthodoxy, with which he has been so long and so intimately acquainted, is no doubt entitled to much consideration. When he has had a longer acquaintance with the Unitarians his censure of them will be more valuable.

Mr. Savage is a recent convert from one system of theology to another; and we all know that new converts lay great stress on doctrinal differences. A new theological broom not only sweeps clean, but is very fond of sweeping. Some of us do not believe so much in the value of controversy, and do not engage in it, because we have other work to do, which seems to us to be more important. But it is a frequent experience that those who go great lengths in new directions imagine that those who do not accompany them in these excursions are restrained by cowardice rather than conviction.

Is it not just possible that some of us may believe Mr. Moody to be right in a part of his belief and wrong in another part? And if he lays most stress and expends most time on the part in which we think him right and very seldom alludes to the other, ought we not to feel sympathy with him? Since he has been in Boston he has devoted himself mostly to proving that all men have power to obey God and do right; and that, as soon as they are willing to do so God is ready to receive them. He has laid more stress on righteousness than religion, on love than on belief. No doubt he holds to a very old-fashioned Orthodox creed, but then his preaching goes, unconsciously to himself, quite astray from it. There is no Calvinism in nine-tenths of his sermons. I have, in fact, just received a printed circular from an Orthodox minister of the old school, who thinks Mr. Moody's revival preaching very dangerous and injurious to Christianity. But it is not because (as Mr. Savage thinks) Mr. Moody is too orthodox, but because he is not orthodox at all. This writer says that Moody is a heretic, and has wholly deserted the old Calvinistic ground which Nettleton and Beecher occupied, and that therefore this movement will bring only disaster and ruin to the churches which engage in it.

Your correspondent charges the Unitarian ministers of Boston with “timidity” and not “meeting the questions of the hour manfully and squarely,” etc. What opportunities he may have had for forming these opinions I am not informed. So far as I know, most of the Unitarian ministers of Boston have spoken as squarely and plainly about this revival as Mr. Savage has, though they have not all believed it as evil an influence as he supposes it to be. I send you my own sermon on the subject, preached February 4th, in which I have marked passages, some of which I should like to have you print in case you have room for them.

Very sincerely yours,

JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE.

BOSTON, March 3d, 1877.

[We regret that the demand upon our space is so great as to make it impossible for us to print this week the extracts enclosed by Dr. Clarke. We will endeavor to do so in an early number.—ED. INQUIRER.]

JOTTINGS.

MR. RALPH WALDO EMERSON says: “I think the [table] rappings a new test, like blue litmus or other chemical absorbents, to try catechisms with. It detects organic skepticism in the very heads of the Church.”

A VERY pleasant feature of Cambridge life this winter must have been the subscription concerts at Sander's Theatre. We notice that the last concert of the series was by the Thomas Orchestra and Mr. W. H. Sherwood. Mr. John K. Paine's Symphony was performed.

LAPEER, MICH.—The Universalists and other liberal Christians will hold a conference meeting at the Church of Our Saviour, Lapeer, Mich., commencing Tuesday evening, March 20, and continuing over Thursday evening. Strangers will please come directly to the church on their arrival.

B. Y. M. CHRISTIAN UNION.—The next in the course of sermons to young people will be given by the Rev. R. H. Neale, D. D.; subject, “Heart Religion.” Rev. J. F. W. Ware preached to a large audience last Sunday evening. His subject was “Bowing to Rimmon;” text, 2d Kings c. 5, v. 18.

AMONG the sculptures found at Olympia is the bust of a draped female figure, the head resting on the left hand, and the left elbow on the right hand, which is folded across the bosom. Three fragments—a veiled female head, a warrior's head, and a flying woman with exquisite drapery, are supposed to be from the chisel of Alcamenes, the pupil of Phidias.

HOWARD INSURANCE COMPANY,

OF NEW YORK.—OFFICE NO 66 WALL STREET.

Cash Capital $500,000.—Chartered 1825.

This Company insures property against loss or Damage by Fire and the risks of Inland Navigation and Transportation, on the most favorable terms.

SAM'L T. SKIDMORE, President.

HENRY A. OAKLEY, Vice-President.

DIRECTORS:

SAMUEL T. SKIDMORE, HEWLETT SCUDDER,
THOMAS W. GALE, CHARLES H. CLAYTON,
JOHN H. SWIFT, JOHN L. RIKER,
JAMES H. TAYLOR, GEORGE W. TALBOT,
HENRY J. SCUDDER, FREDERICK STURGES,
HENRY A. OAKLEY, JOHN J. WHITE,
CHARLES MALL, E. LENOX BELKNAP,
HENRY I. BARREY, JAMES C. CARTER,
WILLIAM H. WISNER, EDMUND PENFOLD,
ALEXANDER MITTLAND.

CHARLES A. HULL, Secretary.

RICHARD W. CLARK, Asst. Sec'y.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

For Diseases of the Throat and Lungs,
such as Coughs, Colds,
Whooping Cough,
Bronchitis, Asthma,
and Consumption.

The reputation it has attained, in consequence of the marvellous cures it has produced during the last half century, is a sufficient assurance to the public that it will continue to realize the happiest results that can be desired. In almost every section of country there are persons, publicly known, who have been restored from alarming and even desperate diseases of the lungs, by its use. All who have tried it, acknowledge its superiority; and where its virtues are known, no one hesitates as to what medicine to employ to relieve the distress and suffering peculiar to pulmonary affections. CHERRY PECTORAL always affords instant relief, and performs rapid cures of the milder varieties of bronchial disorder, as well as the more formidable diseases of the lungs.

As a safeguard to children, amid the distressing diseases which beset the Throat and Chest of Childhood, it is invaluable; for, by its timely use multitudes are rescued and restored to health.

This medicine gains friends at every trial, as the cures it is constantly producing are too remarkable to be forgotten. No family should be without it, and those who have once used it never will.

Eminent Physicians throughout the country prescribe it, and Clergymen often recommend it from their knowledge of its effects.

PREPARED BY

Dr. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass.,
Practical and Analytical Chemists.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

Madame Foy's
CORSET SKIRT SUPPORTER
INCREASES IN POPULARITY
EVERY YEAR.

And for HEALTH, COMFORT and STYLE, it is acknowledged the BEST ARTICLE of the kind ever made. For sale by all leading jobbers and retailers. Beware of imitations and infringements.

MANUFACTURED SOLELY BY
FOY & HARMON,
New Haven, Conn.

READY AT LAST!

LAMAR INSURANCE COMPANY,

OF NEW YORK.

Broadway, cor. John Street.

Capital, - - $200,000.

ASSETS, JANUARY 1, 1877.

Cash on hand and in Bank. . . . $10,414 77
U. S. Bonds, market value. . . . 304,232 50
Loans on Coll. Good Stocks Collateral. 13,200 00
Bonds and Mortgages on Brick Dwellings. . . . 56,400 00
Bills Receivable for Inland Prem's. . . 2,465 94
Premiums in course of collection. . . 8,830 43
New York Bank Stocks market value . 19,725 00
$411,268 64

Losses unadjusted estimated at $10,100 00

ISAAC R. ST. JOHN, President.

A. R. FROTHINGHAM, Vice Pres't.

WM. R. MACDIARMID, Sec'y.

HOME Insurance Co. of New York, Office No. 135 Broadway.

Forty-seventh Semi-Annual Statement,
Showing the condition of the Company on the first day of January, 1877.

Cash Capital $3,000,000 00
Reserve for Re-Insurance . . 1,858,464 68
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Dividends 243,402 24
Net Surplus 1,002,783 90
Total Assets - - - $6,104,650 82

SUMMARY OF ASSETS:

CASH IN BANKS. . . . $342,311 22
BONDS AND MORTGAGES FIRST
LIEN ON REAL ESTATE WORTH $4,894,000 2,011,413 00
UNITED STATES STOCKS (MARKET VALUE) 2,517,625 00
BANK STOCKS (MARKET VALUE) . . . 236,802 50
STATE AND CITY BONDS (MARKET VALUE) 155,433 00
LOANS ON STOCKS, PAYABLE ON DEMAND
(MARKET VALUE OF SECURITIES, $700,379) 519,681 35
INTEREST DUE ON 1st JANUARY, 1877. 72,307 63
BALANCE IN HAND OF AGENTS. . . 153,116 05
REAL ESTATE. . . . 6,830 19
PREMIUMS DUE AND UNCOLLECTED ON
POLICIES ISSUED AT THIS OFFICE. . . 8,330 25

Total - - - - $6,104,650 82

LIABILITIES.

CLAIMS FOR LOSSES OUTSTANDING ON 1st
JANUARY, 1877. . . . $212,027 24
DIVIDENDS UNPAID. . . . 1,375 00

Total, - - - - $243,402 24

CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.

J. H. WASHBURN, Secretary.

THE NEW JERSEY MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.

J. H. STEDWELL, President.

C. H. BEINKERHOFF, Secretary.

J. H. CANNIFF, Cashier.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr.
Chase's Improved ($2.00) Receipt
Book." Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Mich.

$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free.
Strinson & Co., Portland, Maine.

Made of best material, in all sizes, for Adults and Children of both sexes; expands the chest, straight-
ens up stooped shoulders;
costs ten times its cost for Children and Students.
Sold by the Trade and Cleveland Shoulder Brace
Co., Cleveland, Ohio. Send
$1.25 and chest measure.
Ask for Pratt's new Patent Brace.

ATLANTIC MUTUAL INSURANCE CO

NEW YORK,

OFFICE 51 WALL ST.

ORGANIZED 1842.

INSURES AGAINST MARINE AND INLAND
NAVIGATION RISKS.

And will issue Policies making Loss payable
in England.

Its Assets for the Security of its Policies
are more than

TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured,
are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated in the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearin
terest until redeemed.

JOHN D. JONES, President.
CHARLES DENNIS, Vice-President.
W. H. H. MOORE, 2d Vice-President.
A. A. RAVEN, 3d Vice-President.
J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

PHENIX

INSURANCE COMPANY,

OF BROOKLYN, N. Y.

January 1st, 1877.

Capital. $1,000,000 00
Gross Surplus. 1,792,902 92
Gross Assets. $2,792,902 92

OFFICES:

Western Union Telegraph Building, BROAD-
WAY, Cor. DEY St., New York.

Brooklyn Office. 12 & 14 Court St.
Brooklyn E. D. Office. 98 Broadway.

The benefits to be derived by the public from Insurance against loss by fire are so great and numerous, when compared with its trifling cost, as to render it an imperative duty on every one to avail themselves of the protection afforded by the PHENIX INSURANCE COMPANY
against the destructive ravages of FIRE, which in a few moments may lay waste the fruits of a whole life of industry.

STEPHEN CROWELL, President.
PHILANDER SHAW, Vice President.
WILLIAM E. CROWELL, Secretary.

ESTABLISHED A. D. 1850.

THE MANHATTAN

LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

OF

NEW YORK,

has paid $6,500,000 Death Claims:
has paid $1,560,000 return premiums to Policy-holders; has a surplus of more than $1,000,000 av. Liabilities; and a ratio of $120 Assets for every $10 Liabilities, by New York Standard of Valuation.
It gives the best Insurance on the best lives at the most favorable rates.

EXAMINE THE PLANS AND RATES OF THIS COM-PANY.

HENRY STOKES, C. Y. WEMPLE,
President. Vice-President.
J. L. HALSEY, S. N. STEBBINS,
Secretary. Actuary.

H. Y. WEMPLE, } Assistant Secretaries.
H. B. STOKES }

$55 - $77 a Week to Agents. $10 Outfit Free.
P. O. VICKERY Augusta, Maine.

Miscellaneous.

MUSIC BOOKS.

VOCAL.

WORLD OF SONG. — GEMS OF ENGLISH SONG.
 WREATH OF GEMS. — GEMS OF SCOTTISH SONG.
 SHOWER OF PEARLS. — GEMS OF GERMAN SONG.
 OPERATIC PEARLS. — GEMS OF SACRED SONG.
 SILVER WREATH. — MOORE'S IRISH MELODIES.

Quite unequalled Books of Bound Music, each with 200 to 250 pages, Sheet Music size. Best collections of Songs, Duets; Piano or Organ accompaniment.

INSTRUMENTAL.

GEMS OF STRAUSS. — GEMS OF THE DANCE.
 PIANIST'S ALBUM. — PIANOFORTE GEMS.
 HOME CIRCLE, VOL. 1. — HOME CIRCLE, VOL. 2.
 ORGAN AT HOME. — PIANO AT HOME.
 (REED ORGAN MUSIC.) (PIANO DUETS.)

Quite unequalled bound volumes of Sheet Music for Piano (or Organ) with 200 to 250 pages, filled with exceptionally good pieces.

Price of the above Books, each $2.50, in boards; $3.00 in cloth; $4 gilt.

SCHOOL MUSIC BOOKS. S. S. SONG BOOK.
 HIGH SCHOOL CHOIR, ($1.) — THE REWARD, (35 cts.)
 WHIFFPOORWILL, (50 cts.) — SHINING RIVERS, (35 cts.)
 CHEERFUL VOICES, (50 cts.) — GOOD NEWS, (35 cts.)

Either book mailed, post-free, for Retail Price.

OLIVER DITSON & CO., Boston.

G. E. DITSON & CO.,
 711 Broadway,
 New York

J. E. DITSON & CO.,
 Successors to Lee & Walker,
 Philadelphia.

Simplest! Surest!! Best!!!

THE LIGHT RUNNING

"DOMESTIC"

SEWING MACHINE

the most satisfactory machine ever offered to families.

It makes a double-thread lock-stitch; has the Automatic, self-regulating Tension and Take-up, conical steel bearings, compensating journal, and is noiseless.

It does not fatigue the muscles or irritate the nerves; sews every fabric, and has never failed to give perfect satisfaction.

"DOMESTIC" SEWING MACHINE CO.,

Cor. Broadway and Fourteenth St.,

New York City.

THE BUTLER HEALTH
LIFT EXERCISE.

Commended by Highest Medical Authority.

A SCIENTIFIC SYSTEM of Concentrated Cumulative Exercise, adapted to the Preservation and Restoration of Health.

Principal Office, Spacious and well ventilated,

PARK BANK BUILDING, NO. 214 BROADWAY,
 NEW YORK.

BROOKLYN: NO. 158 REMSEN STREET.

FARLORS FOR LADIES AND GENTLEMEN.

Call, or address

LEWIS G. JANES, Proprietor.

A Home and Farm

OF YOUR OWN

On the line of a GREAT RAILROAD, with good markets both EAST and WEST.

NOW IS THE TIME TO SECURE IT.
 Mild Climate, Fertile Soil, Best Country for Stock Raising in the United States.

Books, Maps, Full information, also "THE PIONEER," sent free to all parts of the world.

Address,

O. F. DAVIS,
 Land Commissioner, U. P. R. R.,
 OMAHA, NEB.

Miscellaneous.

The Spanish Arched Instep Boot

Was first introduced and exclusively sold in our Shoe Department.

It gives the foot the appearance of being much smaller than it really is, yet no inconvenience is experienced by cramping the foot.

Ladies with enlarged joints and tender feet can be so fitted that they may at once enjoy both ease and elegance. A variety of ready-made Boots for ladies, misses and children, kept in widths to suit all kinds of feet, and at price to suit all kinds of people.

All orders by mail will be promptly attended to and should be addressed

MANAGER KINZEY'S SHOE DEPARTMENT,
 Broadway and Ninth Sts., N. Y.

"The best Review in America for popular reading and instruction."

INTERNATIONAL REVIEW.

MARCH—APRIL, now ready.

I.—THE ADMINISTRATION OF PRESIDENT GRANT.—A review of the important Acts of the outgoing administration, with criticisms on its policy, its opportunities, and its influence at home and abroad, by an Independent Republican.

II.—THEORY AND PRACTICE IN ARCHITECTURE, by James C. Bayles of the Iron Age, discusses the means known to architectural science for producing safety in public buildings, including the methods of preventing and extinguishing fires; also, the difficulties in the way of putting in practice architectural theories.

III.—GERMAN COMIC PAPERS, by Julius Duboc, of Dresden, describes the comic journals published in the German language in Europe, and their effect upon German social and political affairs.

IV.—TWO NORSE SAGAS, by Professor Hjalmar H. Boyesen of Cornell University, is a review of the Norse stories recently translated by Professor Anderson, and serves to illustrate the Saga Civilization by them revived.

V.—RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENT, by Van Buren Denslow, LL.D., of Union Law College, Chicago.

VI.—THE UNIVERSITY OF UPSALA, by Dr. Carl M. Thorden of Sweden, presents an account of the location, origin and academic constitution of this great University, with observations on the government and life of the students. This University celebrates its fourth centenary during the present year, and great preparations are being made for the event.

VII.—JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL AND MODERN LITERARY CRITICISM, by Ray Palmer, is an analysis of the critical powers of Lowell, with comments on the province and duties of criticism.

The Review also contains a sonnet, "Two Past Ages," by Charles (Tennyson) Turner of England; Mr. Hamerton's letter on Art in Europe; the usual scientific notes and comments on public events.

During 1877 the Review will devote space to European matters so far as they are likely to be interesting to Americans. It will introduce the most popular foreign authors to compete for favor with the best American writers. It will aim to be able, strong and practical in the character and style of its presentations. It is safe to say that no other magazine in the world can supply its place in the libraries of Americans who love to consider the progress of events throughout the world, and to know their bearing upon the interests of the United States.

It is not known that there is any reason why copies of the Review should not be found in every household. It has already the largest circulation of any secular Review, because of its popular attractions. These attractions will be developed gradually, and increase as their need is made manifest.

For sale by Newsdealers and Booksellers.

Price, $1 a Number. $5 a Year (Six Numbers).

A. S. BARNES & CO., Publishers,

111 & 113 William St., N. Y.

$12 a day at home. Agents wanted. Outfit and terms free. TRUE & CO., Augusta, Maine.

MISFIT CARPETS.

English Brussels, Three Ply and Ingrain; also, Stair Carpets, Velvet Rugs, Crumb Cloths, etc., very cheap, AT THE OLD PLACE.

112 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

Carpets carefully packed and sent to any part of the United States free of charge.

SEND FOR PRICE LIST.

Miscellaneous.

OVINGTON BROTHERS,

246, 248, 250 and 252 Fulton Street,

BROOKLYN.

Fine China, Glass, Clocks,
 Bronzes, etc., etc.

Just Received Invoices of

COPENHAGEN VASES,
 LIMOGES FAIENCE VASES,
 AND DOULTON WARE.

Lectures and Sermons,

BY JOHN W. CHADWICK.

FIRST SERIES.

The Education of Conscience.

Self Respect.

The Higher Reverence.

God on our Side.

Man and the Bible.

The Best Use of Sunday.

SECOND SERIES.

The Essential Piety of Modern Science.

A Rational Church.

Economy and Waste.

Immortal Life.

Idealizing the Real.

Also, WAY, TRUTH AND LIFE, a Biography of N. A. Staples, with sermons, price, $1.00.

For sale by CHARLES P. SOMERBY, 139 Eighth St., New York. Copies sent by mail at the rate of five cents each and postage.

BUCKEYE BELL FOUNDRY.
 Established in 1897.

Superior Bells of Copper and Tin, mounted with the best Rotary Hangings, for Churches, Schools, Farms, Factories, Court-houses, Fire Alarms, Tower Clocks, etc. Fully Warranted. Illustrated Catalogue sent free.

VANDUSEN & TIFT, 102 E. 23 St., Cincinnati.

10 PER CENT NET.

Kansas, Missouri and Iowa Improved Farm First Mortgage Coupon Bonds Guaranteed. We guarantee, as an assurance, that we loan not to exceed one third of the actual value. In over six years' business never lost a dollar; never delayed a day on interest or principal; no investor through us ever did or ever will get an acre of land under foreclosure. Send for particulars and references.

J. B. WATKINS & CO., LAWRENCE, KAN., or
 HENRY DICKINSON, Manager, 30 Pine Street,
 New York

BALD HEADS

Can be covered with a piece exactly fitted to the Bald spot, so perfect, and with work so ingeniously contrived as to appear each hair just issuing from the skin, the hair being exactly of the same shade and texture as the growing hair; they are so perfect they cannot be detected. Made only at BATCHELOR'S Celebrated Wig Factory, 16 Bond Street, N. Y.

HAIR DYE.

BATCHELOR'S CELEBRATED HAIR DYE is splendid. It never fails. The only true and perfect Dye. Harmless, reliable, instantaneous. No disappointment, no ridiculous tints; remedies the ill effects of bad dyes, leaves the hair soft and beautiful Black or Brown. Sold and perfectly applied at BATCHELOR'S Wig Factory, 16 Bond St., N. Y. Sold by all druggists.

W. A. Batchelor's Curative Ointment
 Immediately cures Ring-Worm, Tetter, Itching of the Head, and all Eruptions of the Skin, Face or Body.

W. A. Batchelor's Alaska Seal Oil
 for the Hair. The best Hair Oil in use.

W. A. Batchelor's Dentifrice
 for beautifying and preserving the teeth and Gums and deodorizing the breath.

W. A. Batchelor's New Cosmétique,
 Black or Brown, for tinting the Hair, Whiskers or Moustaches without greasing them. Sold at factory, 16 Bond Street, New York, and by all druggists. Ask for them.

J. A. BENDALL.

THE INQUIRER.

VOL. XXXII.—NO. 15.
WHOLE NO., 1585.

NEW YORK, MARCH 15, 1877.

$3.00 PER ANNUM.
10 CENTS A COPY.

CONTENTS.

EDITORIAL NOTES.....	245
LEADING ARTICLES:
Civil Service Reform Begun.....	246
Rationalism and Christian Union.....	247
Duty and Joy.....	247
Morning Revelings.....	248
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE:
From England.....	248
From Chicago.....	249
LITERATURE:
Modern Literary Criticism.....	250
Brief Notices.....	251
New Publications Received.....	251
ART NOTES.....	251
HORTICULTURAL HALL LECTURES:
William Ellery Channing.....	252
OUR BOYS AND GIRLS:
All the Children.....	253
History of a Drop of Water. I.....	253
OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE:
From Italy.....	254
From Florida.....	254
From Indianapolis.....	255
EXTRACT FROM A SERMON BY JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE.....	255
JOTTINGS.....	256
PUBLISHER'S DEPARTMENT.....	258

Do his dependants feel proud of the man whom the Duke of Pennsylvania has chosen to succeed him?

PROBABLY one of the most astonished men in these latter days, is to be found in the person of the valiant young Senator from Maine.

SAMUEL BOWLES, of the Springfield Republican, seems to feel happy all over, but he will be unable to attain to the state of ecstasy earned by George William Curtis, God bless him!

THE inhabitants of Washington, permanent and temporary, in or out of Congress, seem to be scarcely able to tell whether they are upon head or heels. The idea that the Government is to be conducted upon purely honest, straightforward business principles, that principle not party is to be the test of policy, that efficiency is to be a qualification for office, and that a good officer will not be cashiered simply because somebody wants to succeed him, is something for which the capitol does not seem to have been prepared.

THE Commission appointed by Governor Tilden to devise a scheme for the better government of municipalities, has reported one which if adopted promises to do much toward placing city government upon a proper basis. It is intended, very properly, to be established by constitutional amendment, and such amendment cannot be made complete we believe except by adoption by the people and passage at two sessions of the Legislature. Meanwhile, the Hon. John Morrisey has brought in a new charter for New York, which embodies a number of the reforms proposed in the report of the Commission. It would be an exceptionally statesman-like act for this Legislature to amend the bill so as to bring it into accord with the terms of the constitutional amendment, and then pass it, thus bringing the City administration at once into substantial agreement with that which is proposed for the future.

THE effect upon the price of gold of the postponement of all action upon funding measures by Congress was very slight, the total rise having been about one per cent. The price has again receded to 104½ a 104¾. It is practically within the power of the Secretary of the Treasury to make a long stride in the direction of specie payments, and if so minded he can do this with greater ease in the absence than during the sitting of Congress. And that Secretary Sherman is so minded, we have no doubt. In the matter of finance during the past five years he has shown a teachableness in striking contrast to the disposition of some of his fellow members, and even upon the subject of a double standard, we hope to find that he has learned something before he is called upon for any overt act.

To the true currency patriot, silver is again becoming interesting, the price having suddenly fallen to 55d. in gold. Business men will not need a cold shower bath in the morning when they have sufficiently loaded themselves with such a "standard" as this.

ECCELESIASTICAL financiering is getting to have a somewhat unsavory reputation which is anything but calculated to strengthen the legitimate operations of ecclesiastical workers. The last case in point is that of the Church of the Puritans in Brooklyn, where the society erected a large structure, loading it with a debt of $90,000, and after using it until the price of real estate had fallen, quietly disband and leave the creditors of the enterprise to get back their money, or not, as best they can. In this a Congregational Council supports them, and the Christian Union asks, "Is there anything questionable in this course?" replying to itself, "Surely not. The debts were incurred on the credit of the church, and all the church has it gives up; what can it do more?" The question and answer form a curious commentary upon the state of financial ethics in good religious circles.

Is there any prospect of these good people learning that when one spends more money than he has, he is not relieved from responsibility simply because he acts jointly with two or three of his friends, instead of "going it alone?"

IN reply to an editorial note in a recent number of the INQUIRER the New Age says: "Is the evolution of a perfect, or more perfect, social condition, a process that goes on entirely independently of human agency? We ask this question, not only in quest of a clearer conception of the INQUIRER's meaning, but because of the position assumed by so many on social questions. Is it said that the wrongs of labor ought to be redressed: the answer is, "All this must be left to evolution; and the hand you look to see uplifted is folded, and the lips from which you crave an inspiring word are closed."

We are fully aware that convenient terms are frequently used to fill a place left vacant by want of thought, or to conceal a disposition to shrink from action. Feeling, however, some interest in the subject touched upon, and a strong sympathy with the New Age in its desire for "a new age," we do not wish to evade putting ourselves upon record, and we will respond as frankly as possible.

We do not think then that evolution in human society does go on "entirely independently of human agency." Believing heartily in the statement that "God helps those who help themselves," we claim that so far as we can see human agency is the principal factor in human development.

How far human progress may be due to a primary impulse we do not know, and do not see that we are called upon to know. We do see certain things, and among them for instance, that a community is prosperous and happy if its members are prosperous and happy; that a nation is honorable if its people are virtuous; that if the drift of public sentiment is in favor of honesty, justice and fair dealing, society will move towards the light.

We see, moreover, that ideas control events, and if our studies have not deceived us, we see that the development of ideas and especially of the ideas which underlie and determine social structure, is slow and by small degrees. If history shows us anything surely, it is that the ideas which produce great changes are themselves very gradually built up and elaborated, and that each degree is usually discounted as it were, by the idea permeating the civilized world, and entering vitally into its constitution, so preparing it for the steps which are to follow.

That this implies the fullest expression of his thought by every thinker, is a matter of course, otherwise the full voice of humanity would not be heard. But that there are thoughts of more and thoughts of less value the New Age will acknowledge as readily as we.

THE New Age asks these further questions: "Are cataclysms always and altogether disastrous, either in geological or human history? Is truth rooted in falsehood, and does it flower from it? Did freedom flower from slavery; or did it displace it by a cataclysm?" We feel strongly inclined to reply in the affirmative to both of its leading questions. We can see no reason for doubting that cataclysms are always and altogether disastrous in se. And by this our contemporaries will hardly claim that we imply that everything which follows a cataclysm is bad, or that things are always worse after than before one. We simply mean that the same results attained by regular and orderly progression (as they usually—if not always—can be) are attained at less cost and more healthfully, than when reached by violent means.

And the illustration which the Age places ready at our hand, is the strongest confirmation of this view. We suppose that no one, with the history of the United States for the last sixteen years fresh in his memory, with its bloody gulfs, its devastated fields, its loosened sense of financial honor, its lowered standard of private obligation and its rank growth of official corruption, will be likely to think that the method by which freedom supplanted slavery was a good thing in itself, however sure it may be that the cost was not too great, if it was the least which might be paid. That these evils might all have been avoided and freedom reached as surely by a peaceful road, many will claim.

Whether a certain method was necessary, we can often only tell after the fact; of this we are fully convinced, that the cataclysm is not in itself a good thing; that it is in itself a bad thing, and that the true business of reformers (and this brings us out where we started) is to so study the history of the past and the constitution of the present, and so adapt their improvements to the organism as now existing, as to assist in the development of society upon the true lines of growth, so letting the new feel strengthened through the roots of the old, and so guaranteeing it against the need or probability of cataclysms.

That in a certain proper sense, truth is rooted in falsehood, and does flower from it, is undeniable. Not that truth rests upon falsehood as a foundation stone, but that really, branching out from the error and misconception that preceded it, it ordinarily reaches men through a process of growth; the finer juices drawn from a rank and unhealthy soil, being by a slow process of elimination and concentration gradually transformed indeed into that perfect flower which we call truth.

CIVIL SERVICE REFORM BEGUN.

PRESIDENT HAYES may already be said to have won three substantial victories. The first in his inaugural address, which echoing bravely the lofty sentiments of his letter of acceptance, convinced the country that he is a man in earnest, whose words before the battle will not belie him in the hour of conflict. His second victory was in the selection of a Cabinet so fairly representative of the better political sentiment of the country in all parties that the selfish place-hunters in Congress were forced to yield to the pressure of public opinion demanding its immediate confirmation. The President's third and most important victory is in the practical illustration and enforcement of his ideas of civil service reform, which so many people have been pronouncing impracticable, but which he is already quietly and with remarkable tact converting into fact.

Let nobody be so hopeful as to predict uninterrupted smooth sailing for the President through this stormy and treacherous sea. The voyage is sure to be both long and tempestuous, with many vexations, disappointments and delays. But the President sets out with an admirable chart, with an experienced and harmonious "ship's company," and no croaker can at present safely predict serious disaster, much less complete failure. Nothing in the President is more striking or more admirable than his elegant and winsome way of saying No. Both Republicans and Democrats have all along been prophesying that this was the one thing that he could not do. It is already very plain that their wish was the only legitimate parent of this thought, and that it did not come from any want of back-bone in the object of their criticism. Mr. Hayes not only spends a large part of his time in politely refusing the requests of would-be servants of their country, but he possesses that marvellous and invaluable tact which knows how to make friends even in denying. The modest applicant for an important foreign mission retires from the presidential presence fully persuaded that raising cabbages in New Hampshire is his special mission, and the only one by which he can contribute much to Civil Service Reform. He straightway telegraphs to his friends, denying that he ever applied for the English or Russian mission, assuring them that he could not be induced to accept even the Presidency itself; that he heartily approves the President's Northern, Eastern, Western and Southern policy, whatever it may be, and wishes his friends, when a good opportunity offers, to buy for him seven more mules—to market his cabbages with.

A notorious general who a few days ago saw "four against us" in the cabinet, was on Tuesday last unable to discover anything against him anywhere. The unsuccessful nominee at Cincinnati favors new elections in Louisiana and South Carolina, to settle the disputed questions in those States; but he is highly indignant at the reporters who represented him as setting himself in opposition to the President last week. Didn't he play the agreeable at Mrs. Hayes' first reception last Saturday? Didn't he dine on Sunday with Secretaries Evarts and Schurz? How absurd then to thus misrepresent him!

These are simply two or three somewhat conspicuous instances among a hundred which may be more or less directly traced to the President's graceful and accomplished manner of saying No. This is the great secret of all successful diplomacy. It makes so little noise in working its wonders of reform. An angry No, a too decided No, an unreasonable No, worst of all an ungracious No, has rent governments in twain, made bitter enemies of dearest friends, robbed denial of all its virtue. But a gracious, timely, reasonable No, which looks and sounds precisely like itself, only rendered more attractive by some of the borrowed charms of Yes,—this is the No which is already enlisted and hard at work, rendering more civil service than the most complaisant official Yes of the corrupt era of patronage and spoils.

RATIONALISM AND CHRISTIAN UNION.

We hear from various sources that the discussion in our columns concerning the Liberals who stayed to Communion at Trinity Chapel has excited considerable interest. It will at least we trust, help to clear the somewhat hazy atmosphere which surrounds questions of this sort. Non-discussion is good, certainly better than most discussion; but persisted in too long, it is evil, and not good. It only thickens the fog which obscures the truth, while good-natured discussion tends to dispel, if it does not scatter it completely. The discussion in our columns on this topic has been not only good-natured, but luminous. It has shown clearly how the same thing looks when regarded from different points of view by different people. It has reminded our readers that if they recognize their personal obligation to work for the two great causes of Reason in Religion and Religion in Reason, they must not allow themselves to become so exclusively interested in the claims and interests of either as to forget or ignore the claims and interests of the other.

Two great movements, the one centripetal, the other centrifugal, may always be detected in the world of religion as elsewhere. The centripetal or "Christian Union," movement, so-called, has been specially noticeable during the last quarter century and has never been more rapid than it is to-day. Under its influence the lines which have separated religious sects are becoming obscured; and if as a natural consequence, the quiet forgetting and leaving alone of the old creeds is making a muddle of the old theology, there is evident on the other hand a new interest and activity in behalf of what rationalists have always regarded as most vital in religion—the actual religious life of mankind.

The centrifugal, or Reason-in-Religion movement has, perhaps, in the quiet way which is natural to it, been even more active the world over during the last twenty-five years than the Union movement, but its influence, if more searching and widespread, is for this very reason far less easily measured or appreciated.

Men and women of catholic and sympathetic minds, lovers of their race, understand and appreciate more or less well the necessity and importance of both these great movements, and so far as in them lies, are anxious to do all they can to further them both.

But practically, unless we abstain from organized work, we are all obliged to take sides with one party or another; and so to become identified in popular estimation with some one school of thought or system of opinions. For example, the Rationalist in Religion may sympathize warmly with ideas and feelings current among those not of his stripe of faith, though inconsistent with their avowed opinions or creeds. The question is, Is it in the interest of truth, for the sake of a little extension of formal fellowship to become a party to the ignoring of the plain and natural meaning of carefully written professions of faith, thus helping to make little of the obligation of fidelity to solemn statements of belief? We cannot believe that it is, and while it might not be easy to estimate the amount of harm done by individual violations of this principle, it seems to us clear that the aim of the Rationalist—we use the word in its general and not in its technical or historical sense—should be in every way and at all times to quicken rather than to make little of the popular sense of the claims of reason in religious creeds and forms of worship.

DUTY AND JOY.

ONE must do right in every circumstance however dark. Duty may seem barren but it is duty still and must be done, for nothing is more imperative.

But along with undeviating morality can there not be enthusiasm? In almost all cases is not duty one with joy? And should not this harmony be recognized? Mere morality is infinitely better than mere enthusiasm; but cannot moral purposes be so infused with feeling as to become vaster religious powers? And is not this something for which we should devoutly labor?

We can conceive the whole world doing right simply from a sense of duty, constantly acting in the dry light of reason and choosing the best. But is this the ideal world?—a world where along with right doing there shall be Art and Literature and Music, a manifold and richly flowing life?

To do one's duty exultingly, with bounding heart, with faith in God and man, with an onward and upward look,—is not this the kingdom of heaven for which Jesus toiled? Is not this the beauty of holiness, the joy of the Lord, the light of His countenance? While mere feeling should not be the law of one's life, while the judgment should sit serene, cannot the heart be still aglow, and help make duty attractive in that one does it for very gladness?

Is not the rationalist apt sometimes to overlook the divine quality of enthusiasm? To treat it as mere weakness, while it is essentially the power of God, an incoming and inspiration from the very heart of things, not to intrude upon the domain of the moral judgment, but to strengthen, refresh and illuminate its action? Out of the heart of man are the issues of life; with the heart man believeth unto righteousness; his hopes, his aspirations, his yearnings, his affections, do help him to a noble living. One must work in faith, with sun and sky, the smile of God and the breath of His Spirit. He must choose duty of course before happiness; but the fact is that duty and happiness are one, and we should make the most of this harmony and reveal its beautiful gospel.

It is thought that the conceptions of liberalism, while they tend to a finer morality, cannot produce so vast an enthusiasm as the old Orthodox conceptions. Why not? The conceptions of an ever-growing humanity; of a universal and inbreathing spirit; of the oneness of all life, so that the noblest is in the least; of continuous creation and revelation,—do not these surpass in splendor and delight the old Orthodox conception of heaven and hell and Christ? Do they not move upon the feeling? Do they not make poems and pictures and statues and joy and heroism? Surely the world is not advancing into a cold intellectual life! There is no discord between heart and brain; knowledge and faith are not at sword's point. Along with a finer morality there can be a sweeter enthusiasm, with keener perceptions a more radiant imagination, with sounder judgment a more flowing energy. Law is grander than miracle, and its majestic revealings touch the heart with fire. Larger beliefs involve nobler impulses; the more light, the more heat; the more we comprehend, the more we apprehend, and faith cannot cease its flight. Science is not a hedging, but an opening. It does not merely accumulate, it imagines. Are not men enthusiastic even in the study of a beetle's wing? Why should they not be so in the formation of character? Is moral truth any less brilliant than intellectual? Does it not have new horizons and expanses?

So the world will advance, not only to nobler moralities and more liberal conceptions, but to larger enthusiasms impetuositous, joys, faiths. The flame upon the altar will not go out. The priestly hand and sceptre may depart; but the worship, the love, the aspiration, will flow on; for with new insights, the mystery of the universe will be more inspiring. With stricter reasoning, there will be sublimer thought; with better logic, more fruitful affections.

S. P. PUTNAM.

[FOR THE INQUIRER.]
MORNING REVEALINGS.

BY W. H. SAVAGE.

By night the winter came out of the North,
And went through the silent land—
 All wrapped in shroud
 Of the dun gray cloud,
 Over forest and fell,
 Over field and hill,
(The wind was asleep and his step was still);—
Went he like a sower, and scattered forth
The snow from his spectral hand.

 It fell like a dream
 Over meadow and stream;—
Along the ways of the woodland glen,
Above the homes of sleeping men,
By the gray rocks of the ocean shore
Where mystery sleepeth evermore;
On the broad highway, on the foot-path small,
Fell the eddying whiteness enwrapping all.

Then the sun looked over the white world's rim,
And peered through the aisles of the woodlands dim;
 The forest and fell,
 The field and the hill,
The broad highway and the footpath small.—
The sun looked forth and beheld them all.

Then every deed of the vanished night
Lay plain to the eye of the risen Light;
Its story writ in the the tell-tale snow—
The hill-side fox that had prowled below,
The hungry wolf that had torn his prey,
The strange, wild creatures that fear the day,
The skulking thief with his booty fled,
Pale murder chased by fear of the dead,
The homeless turned from the rich man's door,
The mercy that sought out the suffering poor,
Each left his track where his foot did fall:
The Night remembered and told it all.

So, sooner or later, each hidden deed,
Wrought in a darkness where none can read,
But leaving its track on the ways of Time,
Shall stand confessed; for a light sublime
Will arise at last, when the night is done,
And Truth will shine as another sun:
For the elements all are in league with Right,
And they guard her cause with a tireless might;
"The earth is the Lord's," and whatever befall,
Will see, will remember, will publish all.

LEOMINSTER, MASS.

REV. DR. PARBOTT, formerly settled over an Orthodox Congregational church in Marshall, Mich., is at present supplying the pulpit of the Unitarian church in Jackson.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM ENGLAND.

How true is it that nothing happens except the impossible. If any one had ventured to say that for months our government had been writing despatches and conducting its negotiations with foreign powers in the manner which the Blue Book presented to Parliament proves they have been doing, the world would have said it was impossible. And yet we now find out that the Tory newspapers have all along been deceived as to the government proceedings, and that we have been warning Turkey not to rely upon any assistance from England should a war break out between her and Russia. Yet all the time the members of the Cabinet (and especially the Prime Minister) have in their public speeches been denouncing Mr. Gladstone and his friends for advocating this policy, and with a recklessness which seems almost criminal, have been weakening their own diplomatic efforts, as Turks and Russians, Servians and Montenegrins have never known whether they should trust to the written or to the spoken words. I suppose this is what we are to understand by "a spirited foreign policy," the absence of which when the liberals were in power has been so often deplored by conservative orators. No man has lost so much ground in the country by this conduct as Lord Beaconsfield, whose inconsiderate talk has been most noticeable. His celebrated Mansion-House speech, full of threatening against Russia, spoken with full knowledge of the peaceful and conciliatory language used only a few days previously by the Czar, has been excused by its being an "after-dinner speech," a phrase I suppose hardly understood in your Maine-Law country; but I am curious to see how his blundering utterances in the House of Lords will be apologized for by his supporters. A few nights ago he tried to apologize for the ignorance of the British government in regard to the Bulgarian atrocities by saying that when they drafted the Berlin Note Russia and Austria were in equal ignorance. He has been compelled to own in his place in the House that this apology will not hold water, as it was drafted several days before the outrages took place. He also tried to throw the blame of the government's being ill informed upon the liberal government, because it had done away with consular agencies in the localities where the outrages took place. He has been forced to confess that the consuls were withdrawn by a vote of the House of Commons, and not as the suggestion of the government, and even when thus making confessions of having spoken without sufficient information had, on being pressed, to own that he could not name a place from which a consul had actually been withdrawn! I wonder how long the Conservatives will allow themselves to be led by a man with so loose a sense of the responsibility of his position. The country is beginning to show its dissatisfaction with the present rule, and the bye-elections which are taking place show that the so-called Conservative reaction has spent its force and that the liberals are coming to the front again. Of course it takes a long time by accidental vacancies to destroy a majority of 80. But there are signs that the opposition is feeling more courage; men are not afraid as they seemed a session or two ago to hear the sound of their own voices, and the world is already calculating how long the present ministry can last, and speculating who will lead the next government.

The programme of the government, as laid before Parliament, is very weak; with the exception of the Prisons Bill and the Bill for reforming the universities, no proposals have been made which are likely to cause much debate, and even these will be more debated in committee where the details are discussed, than in the House where matters of principle are decided. The Prisons Bill meets with no small opposition, even in conservative circles, as it diminishes the power and influence of the magistrates, taking their authority for the central government, which desires to have uniformity of discipline and increased economy in the management of gaols. It has thrown out a bait to the country gentlemen to give up their authority by offering to pay the expenses of prison management out of the national funds instead of leaving them as a burden upon the local rates. But there are still some sturdy antagonists of centralization, who are not to be won over, and we shall no doubt see many a battle in committees before the bill becomes law. That it will do so ultimately is hardly to be doubted when the great government majority is remembered.

If the government has been very modest in its legislative products, there is no fear but that the Houses of Parliament will have plenty of work on hand. Private members have been even more active than usual, and all manner of measures of reform will have to be discussed. The question of extending household suffrage to the counties will cause a most valuable debate. It seems strange that a person living in the country should be deprived of a vote because he does not live in a £12 house, while if he lives in a borough, no question is asked about the value of his house. It requires a Tory mind to defend such a proposition; but the fact that under the present arrangement the counties are uniformly represented by Tories is an unanswerable argument to them.

The Drink question comes up before the House in more than half a dozen forms. There are bills for closing public houses on Sunday in Ireland (this bill has been read a second time by consent of the government); a similar measure is to be proposed for England. Mr. Cowan is to propose that licenses are to be granted by specially elected boards, instead of as at present by irresponsible magistrates appointed by the Crown. Mr. Chamberlain has a resolution on the books empowering municipalities to buy up all licenses and carry on the trade by the town councils somewhat according to the Swedish plan adopted in Gothenburg. A similar proposal is to be made for Scotland. In addition to a few others, which simply advocate reforms in licenses, Sir Wilfred Lawson brings on his bill again to give localities the power to prohibit the public sale of drink by a two-thirds majority of the rate-payers of any district. The poor drink-sellers will have an unpleasant time of it, for though they have so many friends that most likely none of these bills will become law this session, yet these annual assaults are anything but agreeable, and there is a growing feeling in the country that something must be done before long to stay the awful intemperance under which we suffer. We are annually spending more than one hundred and forty million pounds sterling upon drink, with results that can neither be described nor imagined. The last few years have seen an awakening among the churches on this question of a very striking nature. The teetotalers a few years ago could count teetotal clergyman upon two hands, while now their number is legion; and the Archbishop of Canterbury has been compelled by his clergy to get a committee of the House of Lords to investigate the subject. It will be interesting to see what new light the wisdom of the peers will obtain for us on this vexed question.

Our Manchester mission is over, and the general feeling in the city is, that it has done real and good service. The "missionaries," to use the ugly word which has been employed of late, have as a general rule been earnest religious men who have not troubled themselves much about doctrinal or ritualistic questions, but have preached with spiritual power, that it is needful for men to remember that this life is not given merely as an opportunity of making money, but that it should be specially devoted to the cultivation of the higher and enduring faculties of the soul. The Cathedral has been especially crowded by men of every class to hear Mr. Knox Little dwell on the importance of remembering that the soul is more precious than all the world's wealth, and that it lives by purity and love. The Evangelicals who protested against his appointment have nothing to say against his mission work, and thoughtful men of every kind of creed are loud in their recognitions of the good work he has done. I can only hear of one or two cases where auricular confession has been advocated, and the offensive prominence given to "the blood" by Messrs. Moody and Sankey when they were among us, has been conspicuously absent. Our good Bishop has reason to be pleased with the results of his work. He himself was indefatigable as ever in his exertions. He visited the theatres and spoke to actors and all engaged with manly straightforwardness, recognizing that the stage might be made a powerful agency for good, and encouraging his hearers to strive to make their profession a benefit to their fellow creatures. He visited the large factories and workshops, and everywhere spoke with equal good sense and liberality. He has a wonderful influence for good amongst us, and I think I am justified in saying that even amongst Non-Conformists there is not a more popular man than the Bishop of Manchester. The Church needs such men to keep it really alive. There are amongst its clergy so many whose folly is drawing down upon it contempt and scorn, that its disruption almost seems a matter of comparatively short time. Mr. Tooth has been set free from his imprisonment, but he cannot re-enter his old church; the law has shown itself to be his master, and we are now told that a strong society of men sympathizing with him has been established to promote a separation of Church and State. I suppose he and his friends wish to take with them into their separation, the ninety million pounds at which the Church property is estimated. They are modest enough in their demands forsooth, but I fancy the nation will have a word or two to say before they are permitted to turn national property to the uses of their Anglican sectarianism. There are a few more church scandals cropping up amongst us again, in the way of selling livings. I suppose you have no such things as advowsons, and next presentations to speculate in, on your side of the ocean. The Manchester Examiner and Times has been rousing the ire of the dealers in the cure of souls, by describing some bargains, which are to be had just now, and a neighboring rector has got himself into a difficulty, by denying the accuracy of the newspaper's statements, while the editor has documentary evidence to prove the correctness of his assertions. It will be amusing to see how he will wriggle out of his present unfortunate position, as it seems he has put forward as an attraction of his parish, that the wealthy Manchester merchants who reside in it are very hospitable. I wonder whether they thought their good dinners would be quoted in an ecclesiastical price current, to raise the cost of the living to a purchaser.

Our Unitarian world is busy lecturing just now. No doubt you see the Inquirer and the Herald, most likely the Christian Life also, and notice how all we ministers are hard at work in different ways proclaiming what we believe to be the truth. It is interesting work, but our brethren in the North of Ireland have more excitement in their labors. The strong Protestantism of Orange Ulster is up in arms against the Unitarian Propaganda, and not content with sermons two hours in length, in reply, with newspaper abuse and personal interruptions and denunciation, is having recourse to burning Cayenne pepper in the lecture rooms, in throwing volleys of peas, and in such manifestations of physical force that our brethren, the Revs. W. S. Smith, D. Matt and Professor Orr, have to be protected by posses of police, who escort them from the lecture rooms. There is indeed still a chance of our increasing the roll of the martyrs. It is a grandly Irish manner of upholding the Protestant right of private judgment. Londonderry has especially done itself great credit, by its special gift of religious rowdiness. Mobbing a Unitarian preacher is a conclusive argument in favor of the Trinity. It certainly is one which our friends cannot use in reply. I shall not however be surprised to hear that some sensible people will be led by these proceedings to look into the Unitarian controversy for themselves; and when sensible people begin to inquire, I do not think we need fear the result.

Yours, faithfully,

S. ALFRED STEINTHAL.

MANCHESTER, February 23d, 1877.

FROM CHICAGO.

THE two wings of the Episcopal church are flapping at each other lustily, and between the two, the body or the prayer-book is likely to suffer. One party charges that the party of the other part is likely to make future revisions of the book. But the party of the second part assures the world that up to the hundred and seventy-seventh centennial and beyond it shall continue to pray the same prayers, and that no possible changes are conceivable during generations to come for evermore. But in turn it charges that the first party is rapidly drifting in doctrine. The reformed wing is completely reformed. It is, in fact, all right, and now looks over to the other wing and ruffles its quills with disapproval. It cites Bishop McLaren, who has recently said that the church has sloughed off Calvinism and now considers baptismal regeneration as one of her brightest jewels. It cites the fact that of the eighteen regular Protestant Episcopal churches of Chicago only Trinity now remains evangelical, the rest having become ritualistic.

The Advance, in an admirable article, bemoans the revival of Second Adventism by Mr. Moody's special followers. It is a fact that Mr. Moody himself expects a second coming of Jesus in the flesh; his church here is in the hands of a Second Adventist; so also are several of the special efforts left in his wake. Supernaturalism, bloody sacrifices, substituted righteousness, then miracles, then the Lord in the clouds, and a grand theocracy over all the earth. Mr. Moody has this lesson to learn, that the intense study of a single book may render a man incapable of understanding that book. Mr. Moody studies only the Bible, until he literalizes its images and orientalisms, and meanwhile knows nothing of the facts about the Bible.

The Methodist paper is anxious to know if we are to have a Moody sect. It says emphatically that there is a tendency to throw aside church organizations. It is also getting tired of hearing about conversion as coming into the "ark;" or "being lifted into the life boat," or getting "a ticket on a through train." This is rather hypercritical, for Mr. Moody certainly did speak of being drawn up out of a lion's den, and made free use of the fireman's ladder.

The Times has indulged lately in several capital hits at so-called scientific lectures, and is doing good service. It is specially caustic in its strictures upon puffing life insurance and other business affairs from the pulpit.

Missionary work in the Northwest is of vital importance, and there is plenty to do. It needs men without "great expectations," if they can be found. There are liberals, or outsiders as the Orthodox call them, everywhere. These people are not often ready for organization. They need help in many ways. Most of them are dissenters only. They have only seen the folly of current creeds, the evils of the bondage of the soul to crude interpretations of the Hebrew Scriptures. The work must be very largely sowing on the waters. Pardee has started out to try his soul and grow patient. He reports considerable success along the line of the Northwestern.

A Methodist preacher was in the Third Church on Sunday, who has just been compelled to break the bonds and come out. He has been meditating the deed for about a year, and has been in correspondence with our secretary. He seems to be sincere, and will now have a chance to show his strength and tenacity.

A note full of good cheer comes in from Jones, whose genius for good nature makes the Orthodox take to him almost as readily as the Liberals. He has to speak in so many places at once—or ought to—that he thinks of establishing a radical telephone lecture bureau.

Forbush is placarding the city everywhere with Athenæum notes. If anybody can make the organization thrive, he will. He is putting his whole soul into it, and using common sense in his methods.

LITERATURE.

MODERN LITERARY CRITICISM.

MR. NADAL's article in the March Atlantic on newspaper book-reviewing, has justly attracted attention. When we consider how dependent the average reader is on the current reviews of books for his guidance—if not indeed his absolute acquaintance with the volumes in question—we see the importance of this branch of modern writing. There is also a higher phase of this department, from which we may safely say the average reader again takes his final impressions—this time not so much as to individual books as to authors. Great names shine in literature, and the busy man or woman seeks an interpreter of these writers. False or correct ideas are obtained, the difference arising from the capability or honesty of the medium critic; medium between the great author and the hurried reader. Therefore we hail with satisfaction so excellent a book as this.* It has been on the bookseller's counter some time, but it is not an ephemeral production. Mr. Hutton is the leading mind of the London Spectator, and has done much to elevate the tone and scholarship of newspaper criticism. These articles on Goethe, Clough, Matthew Arnold, Wordsworth, Hawthorne, George Eliot, are fine testimonies to the possibilities of this field. Many a student of the above-named authors can find in these thoughtful, conscientious chapters new light on old subjects. Here is a book, made up of newspaper contributions, that goes below surface features, and in a lucid manner reveals the tendencies, intellectual drifts, literary movements, of the times. Analysis has here a fine scope, and fills it.¹

But I wished to draw attention to the admirable preface which the author wrote for the American edition. In it are some noteworthy suggestions in regard to criticism—suggestions with avenues of application leading out, wide and inviting. I shall pursue but one or two, and those a short distance.

"It is folly," he says, "to suppose that because a critic stands far beneath the author he tries to interpret he must therefore be passing his true limits directly he begins to note deficiencies. It is the characteristic of all great authors to teach those who saturate themselves with their works, where those works fall beneath the standard which they themselves have set up." In this extract three valuable principles of high criticism are embodied, i. e., that every author sets his own standard by which another than himself, though inferior in ability, can best try his several productions: and next, that the work of a true critic is interpretation; not assault, not idolatry, but sympathetic translation. And at the heart of all one must pervade his mind with the work, the writings of the author in hand, to properly speak about him. Hutton says, "saturate," but I think of rags and benzine at that word. Can a reviewer with constantly accumulating work do this? Has he the time? That depends. No one man should undertake to conduct an entire literary journal. Such an attempt was made in Boston recently. The editor is now in an asylum, irrevocably robbed of reason. Division of labor, the assignment of certain classes of works to certain individuals, accomplishes the end as no other method can. For setting aside the over-labor, there is the utter inability on the part of one mind to interpret all authors. Moreover, "saturation" is impossible through lack of time.

*Hutton's Essays in Literary Criticism.

Let me quote another passage as indicative of what constitutes the higher newspaper criticism: "For myself, I heartily believe that when the great wave of self-questioning impulse which has unsettled our religious beliefs has spent its force, we shall find that it has not carried away, but established, that divine creed which it will certainly have transformed and transfigured. Nevertheless, in the meantime it is clear that a great literary school will have been produced by that self-questioning spirit, and a school whose members have endured much more of the pain of puzzling over the enigma of life than of the joy of solving it, though in Wordsworth they most of them found, and all of them might have found, some of that light which comes only in the most exalted moments of self-knowledge, but which then assures us that at bottom the conscience of man is the key to the science of the universe, and not the science of the universe the key to the conscience of man." This is a long sentence, but it contains for me a self-evident proposition. No man could write thus who had not a comprehensive and penetrating theory of modern literature and modern thought. Such a theory (plastic and improvable) every critic should have. It is a fundamental requirement of high criticism. Everything reviewed is then sure of location, relation—will not stand isolated. Judicious rank, proper allotments, will then more surely fall on each new work as it comes to the public with exaggerated claims (especially in science, theology and reform), and that fine sense of coherency and invovenness which is a product of our evolutionary instinct will prevail. Too much are our reviews of books dislocated theses; judgments estranged from a systematic testing of literature; erratic, half-hour guesses.

Hutton is a clearer, terser critic than Whipple, yet as profound. More varied, too, in approaches to his subject. Take this passage from the essay on "The Poetry of Matthew Arnold:" "The 'lyrical cry,' as he himself has finely designated the voice in which the true poetic exaltation of feeling expresses itself, is to be found in a multitude of places in his poems, but in him it neither utters the dejection of the wounded spirit nor the joy of the victorious spirit, but rather the calm of a steadfast equanimity in conflict with an unconquerable and yet also unconquering destiny—a firm mind without either deep shadows of despair or high lights of faith, only the lucid dusk of an intellectual twilight." I call that an admirable hit at the centre of Arnold's characteristics as a poet. Such criticism bears its marks, palpable to all, disclosing seriousness of purpose with fairness and frankness—interpretation, in fine, which cannot leave out the defects while it brings forth the excellencies. George Ripley wears deservedly many honors in the field of criticism, but like Curtis he has always preferred the title "genial critic," which never means the critic in his full functions and at his best. Mr. Howells, of the Atlantic, is a pleasant writer, and serves up many a dainty dish in the reviews, but he too often toys with words, and unduly carves some prettiness or expands some trifle until the substance vanishes into shadow. For a fine model, I repeat, of modern literary criticism, Richard Holt Hutton is ever commendable.

E. A. H.

BRIEF NOTICES.

EASTER HYMNS. Compiled by J. E. C. Chapman. Boston: Lockwood, Brooks & Co. For sale in New York by E. P. Dutton, 713 Broadway, and Pott & Amory.

As the great festival of Easter is near, devout minds in every communion will gladly welcome this admirably selected and beautiful little volume to their joyous and thankful meditations on the Resurrection of their Lord and Saviour. It contains hymns of the ancient and modern church; and readers of our own branch of it will find the revered and familiar names of Henry Ware, Jr., and E. H. Sears among the authors. The accomplished aditress was among the lambs of our lamented Gannett's flock, and the book opens with a graceful introduction from the pen of Rev. J. I. T. Coolidge, her uncle.

F. A. FARLEY.

BLACKWOOD'S FOR FEBRUARY.

The subject of voluntary relief to the sufferers in war is discussed by one who views the matter from the standpoint of a soldier, as well as a practical philanthropist. A suggestive paper on "The Situation in America," speaks of the Declaration of Independence as containing mischievous fallacies unperceived by the founders of the republic. It speaks thus of Washington, "It would be hard for any person to look upon his portrait and believe that he admitted the equality of many men, not to speak of all." The writer of the article speaks from the standpoint of a sympathizer with the late Confederate States of America. "The Woman Hater" is interesting as usual, and a new serial, entitled "Pauline," is commenced in this number.

NEW PUBLICATIONS RECEIVED.

BOOKS

From G. P. Putnam's Sons.

THE CRADLE OF THE CHRIST. A Study in Primitive Christianity. By Octavius Brooks Frothingham. Cloth, $1.75.

THE BEST READING. Edited by Frederic Beecher Perkins. Cloth, $1.75.

From Scribner, Armstrong & Co., New York.

THE LIFE AND WRITINGS OF ST. JOHN. By James M. Macdonald, D.D. With an Introduction by Dean Howson. Cloth, $5.

EPOCHS OF ANCIENT HISTORY. THE ROMAN TRIUMVIRATES. By Charles Merivale, D.D. Cloth, $1.

MAGAZINES.

BANKERS' MAGAZINE. March.
UNITARIAN REVIEW. March.
LIBRARY JOURNAL. February.

ART NOTES.

THOSE who admire Corot will find several fair examples of this master at Cottier's, 144 5th Ave., and besides these, a large Daubigny, in which the artist hardly appears at his best; several paintings by the Maris Brothers; a Constable that well illustrates his relation to French landscape; a Rousseau; and a water-color by Lessore of great breadth, to wit: about 10 feet.

THE painters of Florence, Rome, Parma and Venice painted for the pleasure it gave, just as at a later time in the same country singers sang for the love of it. The glory of the Italian schools is this: that without a system of doctrines and without unity of direction, but by the sole force of genius, they produced the greatest of masters and the greatest of works since the period of the Greeks. The honor of the French school—due in great measure to the influence of the Royal Academy—is that it represents thought and reason, sometimes severe, sometimes acute; and that it includes a great number of men, who, if not painters in the absolute sense, are at least picturesque moralists and judicious observers, whose pencils have served to move the heart or instruct the reason.—DELABORDE.

MR. WHISTLER has been decorating a dining-room. He terms his work, "Harmony in Blue and Gold—the Peacock Room." The color-scheme of the whole room, ceiling included, consists of blue on a gold, or gold on a blue ground; its forms are also elaborately varied with shelf and bracket-work for the holding and display of blue china. The eye of the peacock's feathers is the leading decorative multiple, lavishly varied with pattern-work from the breast and throat plumage. Beyond this, at the farther end of the room, there is a superb design, covering a space of about fourteen feet, of two peacocks combatting, the eye of one of them being supplied by a real emerald, that of the other by a diamond, and on the three shutters are other larger paintings of peacocks, blue on gold. All these are very fine works, Mr. Whistler having gone straight to nature for the study of the birds.—ACADEMY.

WINCKLEMAN and De Quincy have maintained that the object of the painter or the sculptor is to represent, not a particular man, but humanity. This is a confusion of the domain of metaphysics and that of art. The former rises from the particular to the general. It robs individuals of their proper characters, in order that it may consider only their common traits and the universal conditions of their existence. The process of art is entirely different. It regards, not abstract generality, but determinate perfection. If the painter, under the pretext of "the grand," eliminates from his figures everything particular, to what end will he come? To the academic style—cold, monotonous, almost mechanical, fatal to inspiration, rejected of all true artists. Consult the great masters. They will tell you that, first of all, the living human form is necessary, and in order that it may live, it must be individual and determinate. Leonardo, Michael Angelo and Poussin, by no means realists, were of this opinion.—SAISSET.

THE new school of artistic house-decoration, which is doing good service in many things but not in all, is absolutely intolerant of imitated woods, rejecting them utterly and universally. There is, however, something to be said on the other side. With regard to the moral difficulty, we venture to affirm that if we look it fairly in the face it will vanish utterly. It is argued that imitative woods are deceitful. The plain truth is that they are not deceitful at all. However deftly the graining may be done, there is always such an immense difference in surface texture between painted wood and wood bare as the plane left it, that the eye detects it at the first glance.

Passing from the moral to the artistic side of the matter, we venture to affirm that graining has certain artistic qualities which are not altogether nor in all circumstances to be despised. If excessive or obtrusive it is bad but if used reasonably it has the great merit of avoiding the dullness of a perfectly uniform surface, which is always wearisome to the eye and almost intolerable in large spaces; in fact the imitations of woods have some of the most important merits which belong to the real woods themselves, though not all. The imitation has the variety of the original and may come pretty close to its color, but cannot have its texture.—HAMERTON.

HORTICULTURAL HALL LECTURES.

Rev. Clay McCauley on "William Ellery Channing," reported in the Commonwealth.

FROM Jonathan Edwards we turn to William Ellery Channing, and in order that we may comprehend the views of the latter, let us first consider the man. The religious life of the household in which Channing's youth was spent was overshadowed by the theology of Calvin; but very early he began to assert his personal independence and dignity. As a schoolboy, gentle and fearless, his fellows acknowledged his superiority. At the age of thirteen the boy began what he afterwards called a slightly religious growth. In college the tendency of the thought of the time was toward skepticism, but he moved safely through these perilous years; his high moral nature and earnestness protected him from error. Humanity became the one object of his meditations and efforts. Thenceforth it was his conviction that he must do for mankind something worthy of his great faith, and he determined that this work could best be done in the Christian ministry. After a struggle, he made a formal consecration of himself to God, and with a calm purpose to do a noble work for his fellow-beings, and a clear mental vision, he became more and more conscious of the possession of inward power. He was a rare illustration of his own theory that man is what he becomes through an original personal power; that man is the artificer of his own fortune. His interest in his chosen work rapidly increased, and he became more and more self-reliant. His revolt from Calvinism came from his moral repulsion of the dogma of the original sinfulness of man; and in a Christ-like spirit he even sought to excuse his most violent assailants. In the full maturity of his manhood we see yet the same character we have followed from childhood, only freer, brighter, larger in his love, more buoyant in his hopes. He stands before us, a strong, self-personality, filled with a conviction of the dignity and the divinity of the human soul. His utterances show him to be a recipient and channel for the new and best thought of his time. At first he studied with the utmost humility the Scriptures, and he was persuaded that the improvement of the heart was of infinitely more importance than the enlargement of the understanding. At the Federal street church he preached that man was God's free child, and that life was God's plan for training his children to be partakers of his holiness and divinity.

The lecturer quoted abundantly from Dr. Channing's sermons at the time of his Federal street pastorate to indicate the ground he occupied at that period. "Let us beware," he preached, "lest we take a less than Jesus for our guide."

If there was ever a lover of personal liberty, it was William Ellery Channing, and consequently in 1812 he said he could not speak of God and the Father in the language which the Calvinistic system suggested; and in 1815 he took the leadership in what is known as the Unitarian controversy, declaring that wherever true piety and love existed there was real Christianity. In a famous discourse at Baltimore he said human reason must be the interpreter of the Bible, and moreover we must look beyond the letter to the spirit. "We know that God is morally perfect," he asserted; "hence the doctrines of the popular religion concerning God's relations towards man are not true." He followed this line of argument up with the moral argument against the old system, declaring that Calvinism was not true because reason forbade us to believe in a Deity who failed to possess moral excellence. He recognized the inner monitor as the present voice of God, and proclaimed the divinity of human nature. "In the soul is the fountain of all divine truth," he said. The power of Christ lay in his moral perfection, and the grand miracle was in the character of Jesus. Dr. Channing had one last grand trial. It was the attack of Theodore Parker and the transcendentalists on the supernatural character of the faith he had preached. But serene in the possession of his own faith, he beheld in vision the final accomplishment of the work he had begun.

In moral dignity Dr. Channing was perhaps never surpassed. For himself he seemed to have made real his conviction, that "man must start believing there is something greater within him than in the whole material creation; than in all worlds which press on the eye or ear." His character seemed to confirm his faith that "of all discoveries man needs to make is that of the self-forming power within, in which there is more of divinity than in the force which impels the outward universe." Through this moral exaltation Dr. Channing has become immortal in human memory, and takes a place of permanent importance in the development of religious thought. Personal emancipation, so necessary to all growth, is made whenever his testimony to individual worth is heard. Faithfulness to the highest truth is gained, and longing for yet better knowledge is awakened whenever he is taken for a guide. Truth, beauty and goodness become objects of present desire whenever he is met as teacher. His character confirmed his faith and was a grand witness to the possible moral attainments of men. His life was not only a personal aspiration, but a ministry to his fellow beings. To make men conscious of their divine birthright, to aid them to gain the eternal witness of childship to God, to arouse in them determination to be their own masters, supreme as souls over their bodies, representing in life that which was purest and most lovely in thought—to accomplish these things he labored with all his strength. He saw in every human being a spiritual brother, and therefore for the poor, for the vicious, for the wretched and suffering, he felt an earnest solicitude. All grades of human condition had part in his prayers and purposes. His supreme desire was that all men should become happier and better, and his importance was in the impulse he gave to religious thought. Through him religious thought made its most successful struggle in New England for emancipation. We are now mentally free largely because he labored to make us free. Never had the right of the human mind to untrammelled action in religious inquiry a more valiant champion than was he. To-day there is between us and him a half century of intellectual activity, and we are forced to admit that there are many things which seemed to be truths to him, which we cannot all accept; yet his image appears to us to-day sublime in moral grandeur and radiant in his love for mankind.

THE PLACE WHERE THE SUN JUMPS A DAY.—Chatham Island, lying off the coast of New Zealand, in the South Pacific Ocean, is just in the line of demarkation between dates. There at high 12 Sunday noon Monday begins. Sunday comes into a man's house on the east side, and becomes Monday by the time it passes out the western door. A man sits down to his noonday dinner on Sunday, and it is Monday noon before he finishes it. There Saturday is Sunday, and Sunday is Monday, and Monday becomes suddenly transferred into Tuesday. It is a good place for people who have lost much time, for by taking an early start they can always get ahead on Chatham Island.

OUR BOYS AND GIRLS.

ALL THE CHILDREN.

I SUPPOSE if all the children
Who have lived through ages long,
Were collected and inspected,
They would make a wondrous throng.
Oh, the babble of the Babel!
Oh, the flutter of the fuss!
To begin with Cain and Abel,
And to finish up with us.

Think of all the men and women,
Who are now and who have been,
Every nation since creation,
That this world of ours has seen;
And of all them, not any
But was once a baby small;
While of children, oh, how many
Never have grown up at all!

Some have never laughed or spoken,
Never used their rosy feet;
Some have even flown to heaven
Ere they knew that earth was sweet.
And indeed, I wonder whether,
If we reckon ev'ry birth,
And bring such a flock together,
There is room for them on earth?

Who will wash their smiling faces?
Who their saucy ears will box?
Who will dress them, and caress them?
Who will darn their little socks?
Where are arms enough to hold them?
Hands to pat each shining head?
Who will praise them? who will scold them?
Who will pack them off to bed?

Little, happy Christian children,
Little savage children too,
In all stages of all ages
That our planet ever knew—
Little princes and princesses,
Little beggars wan and faint;
Some in very handsome dresses,
Naked some, bedaubed with paint.

Only think of the confusion
Such a motley crowd would make;
And the clatter of their chatter,
And the things that they would break!
Oh, the babble of the Babel!
Oh, the flutter of the fuss!
To begin with Cain and Abel,
And to finish off with us.

—Selected.

HISTORY OF A DROP OF WATER.

(Translated for THE INQUIRER, from the German of A. W. Grube.)

BY C. C. SHACKFORD.

FROM the lap of the great wide sea leaped up in the bright sunlight thousands and thousands of little drops, like playful children in the lap of their mother, and were tossed hither and thither by the wind. One little one of the innumerable Drop family was especially frolicsome and wished always to leap up the highest; but with his brothers he always fell back again into the mother's lap. Sometimes he got upon the fin of a dolphin and was carried a long distance, and with him skipped aloft; but he could never go higher than the fish itself, and when this fell down and dived under, then must he too follow. He was drawn back to the water as if he were tied to it by a string. But when he looked upwards to the clear blue sky, which like another ocean arched itself over the sea, and in which the beaming sun took its walk, a desire to travel took possession of him, an eager longing to mount up through the air to the clouds, and to sail with these through the blue etherial sea, and to look down upon the earth from above. Then the little drop offered a prayer to the sun that he would draw him up to himself and take him with him in his great journey around the earth. The courageous heart of the little fellow pleased the dear sun and he granted his prayer. Immediately he sent down some of his beams, and in an instant these went under the water in order to take up the little drop with them into the air. They also took with them a great host of drops, so that the little drop might not want companions, but the traveller did not perceive this, for they were all changed by the sun into invisible vapor.

In swiftest flight they hastened up towards the sun, ascending higher and higher until they were very dizzy. When they had mounted sufficiently high they came to a current of air; for rivers are in the atmosphere as well as upon the earth, though there they are made of air. They sprang into this air current and were immediately borne by it over the sea towards the land. Like practised swimmers, they did not waste much time, but in one hour they had gone a hundred miles. That was a delight, so swiftly to sail through the ocean of air, much faster than fishes could swim or birds could fly. And how astonished were they when far beneath them an entirely new world disclosed itself. They looked down upon the green meadows and the waving cornfields, upon trees, bushes, cities and villages. Here a husbandman was ploughing the field with his yoke of oxen, there the horseman was mounted upon his spirited steed; here an eagle flew up towards the invisible company of drops as if he would greet them, and then shot down again like an arrow, there hopped about in the thick-leaved woods all sorts of beautiful birds and sang. All was new to them, for when they lay hidden in the lap of their mother sea they had never even dreamed of seeing anything like a city, a horse or a field.

In their great amazement and joy they had not observed that the sun had sunk lower and lower in the heavens; now it disappeared. Then it seemed to our little drop, who in the beginning had been in the highest spirits, not so pleasant a thing to be up in the high regions of air where it became every moment colder and colder. The poor drop looked about for some shelter, but there was no inn where to obtain a night's lodging in all these bare fields of air. He thought therefore that he would rather pass the night upon the earth which had smiled upon him in so friendly a manner with its meadows, trees and flowers. No sooner thought than done. Softly and unseen he came down, and the farther he came the denser he was. He felt himself changed from invisible vapor to a visible water-drop and fell faster and faster and at length reached a rose bush. A half-bloomed bud opened for him its hospitable doors and he slipped quickly in and found in the little house a fragrant bed all ready for him to sleep in for the night.

When the morning dawned and the sky grew red in the east, the little drop was also awake and saw with glad surprise how it had passed the night among the tender leaf-buds which glistened like the morning sunbeams. Fresh and joyful he came out of his fragrant bed and placed himself upon the outside of the petal. Here he awaited the coming of the dear sun, and when he, glorious and majestic, ascended the heavens like a king, he bid him good-morning. The sun rejoiced in the clear, bright drop, and mirrored in him his brightness, so that he shone brighter than a diamond. "Take me again to thyself, O dear sun, and let me again journey with thee far away over the earth." So spoke the little drop to the morning sun, and he heard his prayer. His beams drew him quickly up into the sky, and merrily he swept again over cities and countries, over mountain and valley,

But as the day became continually hotter and more sultry his strength left the presumptuous fellow and he wished to stop and rest. Yet there was in his path no spear of grass, no bush, no shade, for the tired wanderer. He could have cried out of mere weariness, and he cried out in his need to the good sun: "Let me go down to the earth, or to my mother the sea." When he had thus spoken he heard thousands and thousands of little voices above and around him, who all joined in his prayer, for they were his brothers who floated invisibly near him and who had faithfully accompanied the bold adventurer. Then the dear sun pitied them and sent a cool wind which collected all the little drops into a gray cloud, that became larger and larger as more drops assembled. At first in the thick mist the brothers did not know each other, crowding and squeezing among themselves, and they could not tell what was the matter until all at once they saw themselves changed into visible round water drops, when taking one another by the hand they hastened in swift course to the earth. What a rattling and spattering when the little troop reached the ground! Men said, "It rains." Our little hero with a part of the drop alighted upon a mountain. But the fall did him no harm; like a wide-awake and frisky fellow he sprang down the bare slope of the rock, and his little brothers after him like soldiers after their leader. Soon a whole band of them pressed together, and they stuck so close to one another that they formed a foaming brook, which boldly rushed along in the glad wantonness of youth. If they came to a sharp-cornered stone which lay right in their path as if to stop them, then it was who should first leap over it, and our little general always made the highest jump. Sometimes he hopped upon a strawberry-vine which grew along the margin of the brook, and he gladly nestled in the white flower or got upon the red berries, as if he would try how they tasted; or he scrambled upon the leaf of an overhanging alder, and rocked there so long that he got behind his companions in the brook, and then he strove lustily to catch up with them.

When they had thus hopped along together for some distance, always descending, they heard in the valley beyond something clapping, and when they came nearer they saw a house where were two great round hewn stones, and two mules which a man all covered with white dust was loading with sacks. Behind the house a great wheel turned and turned without stopping, over which the brook impetuously rushed.

It was a mill. The wheel turned mill-stones within as large as those lying on the ground faster than a boy whirls his top, and the stones worked diligently at grinding the corn. But what giant possessed the strength to turn the wheel so as to hurl those stones around and around so swiftly? No other than our little drops, which sprang by thousands over the wheel and trod upon it so strongly that it inclined itself before them. How little and insignificant is one water-drop by itself, in truth a poor drop! But when the little ones unite together, hold fast to one another like brothers, then they gain the strength of giants and are great. The little drop, with his brothers, who were behind him, made courageously the neck-breaking leap, and as he plunged down it seemed as if the foaming whirlpool under the wheel would prove his grave. But soon he came up again with good heart and swam on as quietly and contented as if nothing had happened to him. His course led to a pond into which the brook emptied itself. Ducks and geese were swimming in the pond. The frogs took up their abode on its margin, and while they sunned themselves they kept up lustily their croaking roundelay. Out of the muddy bottom the carp and pickerel swam up flapped and sprang upon the bright surface of the watery mirror as wantonly as if they had been dolphins of the sea. This afforded great sport to our little drop, and he concluded to remain for a while in this little world. He chose the ducks for his ships with which up to the brook and down the pond across and back he navigated around; the frogs were his ponies which he mounted boldly in order to leap over the grass and take rides in the meadow.

(To be Concluded.)

OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM ITALY.

THERE are quite too many desperate fighters for the means of subsistence in this fair Florence. Beggars are ubiquitous and most importunate. You cannot darken the doors of church or palace or leave a card at a hotel or a friend's house without being annoyed by their dolorous sing-song, and, not seldom, pulled by the sleeve. Once inside the Cascine or the Boboli, and you are safe for a season, but the moment you leave those sanctuaries, what between them and the ceaseless clamors and pursuit of the most diabolical hack-drivers on earth, the poor forestiere has all he can do to keep his feet from kicking, and his lips from cursing.

Florence does not seem to be in a very happy frame of mind, from the small boys up. Taxes are high, business wretchedly dull, not a hotel in town half full, vacant lodging-houses in all quarters, artists without orders, theatres deserted—in short, all the indications of decadence. The town they say has lost forty thousand inhabitants since the capitol was removed to Rome. Strangers too complain in turn of many things that have changed for the worse, especially of the habit of locking up, or drawing curtains before pictures once freely exhibited, and of charging unreasonable fees at the galleries. And indeed when John Bull or Brother Jonathan has his wife and half a dozen boys and girls in his train, frequent visits to the Uffizi or the Pitti at a franc a head per visit make in time a severe draft on a precarious income. The galleries too are wretchedly cold. Divine as Raphael's Madonnas are, blessed and lovely as are the angels of Fra Angelico, and noble the saints and prophets of Fra Bartolommeo, still the feeling that you are paying the added price of Bronchitis or Diphtheria for the privilege of enjoying such heavenly society is a sad deduction from the blessing. Too many of the finest pictures in Florence are in dark chapels, so that a very bright day and a peculiar time of day are essential to detect their beauties. This is of course an extra stimulus to the genuine lover and earnest student of art, but to the average hard-working time-fighting tourist it is a mere twisting of necks and wearing out of shoe leather and of optic nerves to no good end.

We find the climate of Florence on the whole much better for nerves and spirits than that of Stuttgart. We have had scarcely any severe weather, and have managed by a judicious mixture of coke with our wood to keep our little parlor comfortable.

FLORENCE, February, 1877.

F. T.

FROM FLORIDA.

To the Editor of the Inquirer:

In obedience to your request I send you this:

The political condition of the country could hardly be more chaotic, short of actual revolution, or a bloody attempt at change of dynasty. We are here on a broad scale presented with the old impressive truth, "Nothing without an equivalent." The higher conditions of the animal world and democratic civilization with the rest are experimentally evolved from struggling inner essences and divine possibilities. Whatever we may think of the disturbers and the disturbing elements, there is, it is confidently believed, method and shape in the upheavals—a working out of political wisdom—a providence in the unfoldings and tendencies. In accordance with this view the general feeling happily is that amid the national rejoicings, we shall not go beyond the line of safety. Our institutions are nearer to their salvation from jealousies, corruption, sin against the Holy Ghost and the public treasury, than when we first believed in republicanism.

Though the human nature of the Republican and Unionist may, in the war, have differed very much from the human nature of democracy and secession in these parts, since that crisis the balance of moral character is, no doubt, practically restored between the two parties. In the matter of honesty, the claim to exclusiveness is not to be set up on either side. In this respect by the nature of things, the native whites in their political affiliations are the same on the one part and on the other, showing some integrity and a great deal of crookedness. That is too much of a labyrinth for the powers at Washington, and for the short thread of this communication. Equally good authorities here in Florida say, the one that Hayes gained the day, the other that Tilden conquered.

But there is in this State, a general agreement that the Northern Republican adventurer, supported by the ignorant negro vote, is the disturbing element and bane. Whoever comes among the blacks wanting to be governor and wearing the badge of their great deliver, Lincoln, has as a matter of course been their man. The dominion of such a person, particularly over his colored subordinates—blind and most arbitrary ruler alive, it is said—has been oppressive and disgusting. Hence enough white republicans with better informed blacks turned the scale in the late campaign in favor of Drew, the present Democratic governor. I have heard of no intimidation; only of some fraudulent voting, some annoyance from black inspectors of election.

Yours, truly,

W. M. B.

ROSEWOOD, FLORIDA, February, 1877.

FROM INDIANAPOLIS.

UNITY Church does its work as best it can with the means at its command. It is slowly and steadily growing in numbers and influence, and the prevailing sentiment seems to be that, practically, Unitarianism proper is stronger in Indianapolis now than ever before. Its advocates point to the settlement of men like Bartlett and Reed, by Evangelical churches, as a weighty evidence of wholesome respect for the work which Unity Church is doing. It is heavily burdened with debt, which its financially-weak membership find it very difficult to carry, and while this is the case, the problem of its permanence must remain unsolved.

A series of special meetings was held in Unity Church from February 16th to February 25th, inclusive. Revs. J. L. Jones, C. W. Wendte and J. H. Heywood took part in the work. The papers heralded it as a Unitarian revival, which indeed it was; conducted in Unitarian fashion, quietly, and, as we think, successfully. Wendte gave two grand sermons, on "The Royal Road to Happiness," and "What do Unitarians Believe?" Jones gave a week of hard work, speaking of "Religion: A Slow Growth, not a Sudden Gift;" "The Religious Lessons of Daniel Deronda;" "The Economies of Religion," and other topics equally good, while Bro. Heywood closed the series with two excellent discourses on "The Man Christ Jesus," and "Foregleams of Immortality."

There has been no great increase of nominal membership as the result of these meetings, but numbers have been attracted to the church who never came before, and who seem to find there what they were searching for, and a fresh inspiration for work and sacrifice has come to those already with us. The helpfulness of the work done is so evident that it will not be strange if the experiment is repeated annually.

INDIANAPOLIS.

EXTRACT FROM A SERMON PREACHED FEB. 4, 1877, BY REV. JAMES FREEMAN CLARKE.

[We publish at Mr. Clarke's request the following extract, which was crowded out last week.—ED. INQUIRER.]

"Something must certainly be wrong in the theology of our Boston churches, or in their methods of action, when with all our apparatus and appliances, our church members, ministers, Sunday services, prayer meetings and various methods, we have to get Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey to come from Chicago to show us how to preach and sing and pray in order to convert the people of Boston. As far as the Orthodox are concerned, the fault is not in the men, but in their theology; in a false view of man as naturally the child of the devil, and not naturally the child of God; in a false view of God as a being who must be appeased by the blood of his son before he can forgive sinners, and in a false view of the Holy Spirit, as one who 'visits as a transient guest,' instead of one who is very high us always, in our mouth and our heart, whenever we are willing to be led by him, and to be guided, inspired, purified, strengthened, comforted and lifted up. If the Unitarians, with a better theology, have not done much more, it is I think that we have thus far been too negative. We are satisfied in defending our position, and have not gone forward as we ought. We have not received the full realizing sense of the power and value of our belief on its affirmative side. We cannot then find fault with our Orthodox brethren, for if they build better than they know, we know better than we build.

"But since matters are thus let us be glad that we can have such a revival as this, for it must do a great deal of good. It is something to have the Orthodox churches of Boston united, if only temporarily, in their attack on the common enemy. It would be better if they would make a permanent league and a real union. If they were large enough to be able to take in all Christians, that would be better still. But we must not expect too much at once. They are trying to add to godliness brotherly kindness; some time or other they will take the last step, and add to brotherly kindness charity or universal love.

"I have heard Mr. Moody, and mean to hear him again as often as I am able. Thus far what strikes me most is this, that the best things he says are those which we Unitarians have been hearing for fifty years. He preaches the importance of work, and how every man must use his talent for God; he preaches that love is greater than knowledge or faith or profession; he preaches that love to man is the same sort of love as love to God; that charity and piety are one; he says that he would prefer less religion and more righteousness. This is no news to us, but it must be to a good many who hear him. Mr. Moody was born and brought up a Unitarian, and I cannot help thinking that if a man is to be an Orthodox revivalist it helps him a great deal to have a good foundation of Unitarian conviction to build upon. And I also willingly grant that a Unitarian minister is all the better for having a good Orthodox experience to build on. I think the Orthodox may learn something from us, but we also may learn a great deal from them. Instead of criticising their methods, let us try to be inspired by their zeal. It will be a good thing for the Unitarian churches in Boston to have this revival here. Some of the wave of enthusiasm may roll up into our little creeks and bays and help us too. And if to this enthusiasm is added faithful teaching of righteousness, of brotherly love, of fidelity to all duties large and small, of honesty in business, then we all shall bless God for it. If in consequence of this revival the new converts are found more trustworthy, if it is seen that Christians are more liberal with their means; if rich men give more freely than before of their abundance to all good objects; if men are made better in politics, in trade; if there is less scandal, less gossip, less intemperance; if mechanics are more faithful in their work; if henceforth there are no defalcations among church members; we shall think that salvation has really come to dwell in our land.

"There is no reason why any of us should oppose Mr. Moody and his methods unless we can show a better way. Let us be glad, as Paul was glad, that at any rate Christ is preached. If men are brought to God and Christ, if Christians are united in a common work to save souls, if they really go to seek those who are perishing in our midst for the want of friendly aid, this will be the revival we need and we must not oppose it. We have a right, no doubt, to criticise anything which we see amiss in it, if we also sympathize heartily with all that is good. Some of Mr. Moody's theology might be criticised. For example, I think that he speaks against duty in too sweeping a way. He speaks as if trying to do one's duty was rather opposed to the Gospel, and says he is tired of hearing about duty. I agree that duty and love are two different things. I should not wish to kiss my child from a sense of duty, or to give a Christmas present from a sense of duty. Duty is not love but it may be a help to it, a ladder by which we climb up to it. I think the man who faithfully does his duty is on his way upward toward God. Conscience is the preparation for love, and whatever you may urge against legalism, it is always true that 'the law is our school-master, to bring us to Christ.' Because a man has himself gone up into the heaven of love by the ladder of duty, that is no reason why he should throw down the ladder. He does not need it again himself perhaps; but others who have not yet got up may. He ought not to say, 'I am sitting in heavenly places with Christ Jesus, and my motive is love. I hate to hear about that ladder of duty.' When the wings of the higher nature are not yet unfolded, and we cannot fly up to God, a ladder may be a very good thing. Steps are very useful. Even the angels, in Jacob's dream, though they had wings and could fly, contented themselves with going up and down a ladder."

JOTTINGS.

REV. J. N. PARDEE is doing good missionary work in Wisconsin.

BOSTON.—Rev. S. J. Barrows delivered an interesting sermon on the inspiration of Scripture. His leading thought was that inspiration must be tested by effects.

"Getting Good from Every Source" was the subject of a very interesting and practical sermon by Rev. R. H. Neale, D.D., before the Boston Young Men's Christian Union, last Sunday evening. Next Sunday evening Rev. H. A. Cleveland, of the Winthrop Street Methodist church, will preach on "Wanting the Chief Place."

REV. DR. DUDLEY, having accepted the call extended to him by the 28th Congregational Society (Theodore Parker's) of Boston, has entered upon his duties. The congregations have largely increased of late and the Sunday school is reported to be in a flourishing condition.

A FIRM at Leominster, Mass., is engaged in manufacturing napoline, or imitation of coral, from cheese or curds. The curd is separated from the water by chemicals and drying; then it is subjected to a 40 tons pressure, and afterward it is cut into the shapes of flowers, etc., which are susceptible of receiving any color.

BROOKFIELD, MASS.—The Unitarian society is prospering under the ministrations of Rev. A. J. Rich. The congregation has largely increased during the past year, while the Sunday school has more than doubled. Another example of the good coming from a pastorate of a number of years. Rev. Mr. Rich was settled nearly seven years since.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—We are glad to learn that the pulpit of the Unitarian church is to be supplied for four months beginning next Sunday by Rev. Clay McCauley. Mr. McCauley is one of the ablest of the younger ministers of the Unitarian denomination, a quiet, thoughtful man and one well fitted for such a post during the new era into which we appear to be entering.

SHELBYVILLE, ILL.—The Western Unitarian Conference will meet here April 10th and continue over the 11th and 12th, instead of commencing on the 4th, as stated in your Chicago letter in THE INQUIRER for March 1. Please make the correction and say that we extend a cordial invitation to all the friends of a liberal faith, to aid us with their presence and speeches.

J. ELLIS.

HONOR TO WHOM HONOR IS DUE.—The Unity Sunday school at Louisville, Ky., under the pastoral care of Rev. J. H. Heywood, presented one of our mission schools with a nice library of books not long since, for which the little ones are thankful, and wish to express it in this public way.

We have two other mission Sunday schools, which are without libraries and not able to get them, and if some of our Eastern Sunday schools about to get new books should gather up their second-hand library and send it to us, they would be doing a good work. Direct to J. Ellis, Shelbyville, Shelby Co., Ill. Our schools are doing very finely in this mission-field.

J. ELLIS.

THE Island of Heligoland is reported to be less than a mile in superficial extent; in 1649 it was four miles in circumference; in 1800, forty-five miles; and, in 800, a hundred and twenty miles. The encroachment of the sea is effected almost entirely from the northeast, owing to the set of the currents and the direction of the prevailing winds.

It appears that two cases of antiquities sent from Cyprus to the Museum at Constantinople by General di Cesnola, never arrived there. They were traced as far as the Dardanelles, and it is now suggested that by some means they found their way into the hands of Dr. Schliemann's workmen at Hissarlik, and certain inscribed terra cotta disks among them were by them palmed off upon him as discovered in the excavations.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.—On Sunday evening Rev. Mr. Ager, of the Swedenborgian society, made a severe and rather personal attack upon Mr. Chadwick because of his recent lecture upon Emanuel Swedenborg. With a little more soundness of judgment and a little less bitterness of feeling Mr. Ager would probably have produced a greater effect.

NEW YORK AND HUDSON RIVER CONFERENCE.—The next meeting of the Conference will be held in the Church of the Saviour (Dr. Putnam's), Brooklyn, on the 27th and 28th of March. Rev. George L. Chaney, of Boston, will preach on Tuesday evening, and the usual business meeting of the Conference will be held on Wednesday. Reports from the churches and discussions will occupy the time on Wednesday. A cordial invitation is extended to all who may be interested. The church is on the corner of Pierrepont St. and Monroe Place. S. H. CAMP, Sec.

EXCAVATIONS made in Greece and Italy continue to furnish rich results. At Mykenæ the Greek Government is reported to have found rings of massive gold and of great value. The gold ornaments discovered by Dr. Schliemann are most of them said to be very thin, and experts in Athens report that they are probably of a much later date than he ascribes to them. His latest discovery is a ring having an intaglio representation of a group of women near a palm tree by the sea, with the sun and a crescent moon rising over the waters.

SOME peasants have opened a tomb on the walls of which were hung shields of bronze, lances, swords and daggers; on the floor was a sumptuous funereal couch of wood and bronze; at the head and feet of the royal skeleton were bronze tripods and silver vases beautifully wrought; exquisite pieces of furniture richly ornamented with ivory carved in low relief; gold cups and vases, and a head-piece of solid gold, 8 inches by 5, with 131 miniature statuettes of lions, horses and chimæras—the perfection of the goldsmith's craft. It is supposed to be the tomb of one of the allies of the Tarquins who fell at the battle of Lake Regillus.

SALEM, MASS.—Rev. Fielder Israel was installed as pastor of the First Congregational Church on the 8th inst., Mr. Batchelor making the opening prayer, Mr. Ware delivering the sermon, Dr. Bartol the charge to the pastor, Dr. Briggs that to the people, and Mr. Willson giving the right hand of fellowship. The society was organized Aug. 6, 1629, on the basis of the following covenant: "We covenant with the Lord and one with another; and do bind ourselves in the presence of God to walk together in all His ways, according as He is pleased to reveal Himself unto us in His blessed Word of Truth."

Le Christianisme au XIX. Siecle says that there exists in Paris a work of foreign origin, very interesting, though little known. It is the home started by Miss Leigh for the reception of English women or girls who, having come to Paris with the view of seeking situations as governesses or lady's maids, often find themselves suddenly without employment and in distressing pecuniary difficulties. This institution has already done good service and saved from misery and perhaps from despair foreigners who but for it would have found themselves alone, and, as it were, cast adrift in the great city. Thanks to a generous gift of M. Galignani, the refuge has been enlarged by the addition of an orphanage, destined for the reception of English children whom death or some other circumstance has deprived of their parents.

REV. GEORGE BATCHELOR, of Salem, Mass., preached at All Souls' Church on "Faith the substance of things hoped for," enlarging upon "faith as an instinct," "faith as a perception," and "faith as a prophecy." The substance of his thought was that faith is not purely intellectual. An able sermon.

REV. O. B. FROTHINGHAM preached on Sunday morning on "The Discord between Duty and Dreams." He dwelt at some length on the slow process of reform, on the great distance between the valley and the mountain top, between the glorified saint on the summit and the grovelling madman at the base. He concluded by saying that the law of kindness and love would make the individual invulnerable against temptation, vanity, hate and other sins. It would regulate his home, and going outside, would regulate the affairs of society. Prisons would be abolished, policemen dismissed, gallows taken down and penitentiaries removed. Let this law prevail, he said, and your perfect republic will be realized.

PROF. FELIX ADLER discoursed concerning "The Modern Priesthood." He shall be called, he said, a priest of the ideal who draws men away from the absorbing pursuit of the realities. We have that only which we are, but common judgment reasons differently; it tells you you are what you have. Good things are the scales on the ladder of life; but life is more than acres, equipage, etc. We spend too much time in seeming to be; we are governed by the rule of "They say." This corrupts the State and has made the churches sick, and by its evil potency men have rushed to their ruin and women waste their precious lives on the vainest shows. Give me one who is content to be himself and not to seem what he is not and I will show you a priest of the ideal. Happy ye will be if you labor through life and seek no recompense save the artist's recompense—the joy in his work—and that shall be your reward. Marriage is the foundation of all ethics. Its celebration does not end with the wedding-day. It is a perpetual celebration and intercommunication of two souls. It is the supreme festival of humanity. I use the term priest in no narrow or artificial sense. We shall all be priests. There is no order. The slumbering echo within you shall waken to the music of humanity. A priest of the ideal must have the gift of tongues and kingly words to utter kingly thoughts. His passport is freedom, his creed is boundless. The multitude would seek to compass the infinite and the boundless. They would have names even though they understood them not, but the ideal is infinity.

SIR JOHN LUBBOCK has added materially to our knowledge of the ants by his recent lecture at the London Institution. He confirms the opinion that those of one species keep slaves, without which they could not exist; that some seek aphides in the grass for food and keep them during the winter; that they are the hardest workers in the world, toiling without intermission from six in the morning till after ten at night. They show the capacity of discriminating between natives and strangers; they are subject themselves to little parasites; they had not intelligence enough to pull back a little paper, which would bridge a chasm between their nest and their food; nor were they able to supply the place of the leaders on a foraging party whom he destroyed, but fell into confusion at once. Not only did Moggridge report having seen ants storing up food for winter use, according to Solomon, but the missionary, Thompson, records the same fact as part of his experience in the East. Sir John thinks the ants deserve and will repay further study; the bees have been overvalued at their expense.

THIRTY-SECOND ANNUAL REPORT

-OF THE-

NEW YORK LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

OFFICE:
Nos. 346 and 348 Broadway.

JANUARY, 1st, 1877.

AMOUNT OF NET CASH ASSETS, JAN. 1, 1876, $30,166,902 69

REVENUE ACCOUNT.

Premiums.....	$5,910,540 87
Interest received and accrued.....	$2,164,080 81
Less amount accrued January 1, 1876.....	257,130 86—1,906,949 95— 7,817,790 82
Total.....	$37,984,693 51

DISBURSEMENT ACCOUNT.

Losses by death.....	$1,547,648 42
Dividends and returned premiums on cancelled policies.....	2,516,681 16
Life annuities, matured endowments, and re-insurances.....	234,230 22
Commissions, brokerages, agency expenses, and physician's fees.....	373,001 67
Taxes, office and law expenses, salaries, advertising, printing, etc.....	376,694 33
Reduction of premiums on United States stocks.....	140,232 32
On other stocks.....	65,307 19—$5,253,795 31
Total.....	$32,730,898 20

ASSETS.

Cash in Trust Company, in banks, and on hand.....	$1,427,933 18
Invested in United States, New York City, and other stocks, (market value $10,311,045 67).....	9,730,529 91
Real estate.....	2,541,576 46

This includes real estate purchased under foreclosure, amounting to $773,402 32, a recent appraisal of which by competent parties shows that, when sold, the company may reasonably expect to realize at least its cost.

Bonds and mortgages, first lien on real estate, (buildings thereon insured for $15,321,000, and the policies assigned to the company as additional collateral security).....	17,354,837 84
*Loans on existing policies, (the reserve held by the company on these policies amounts to $3,659,490).....	781,585 39
*Quarterly and semi-annual premiums on existing policies, due subsequent to Jan. 1, 1877.....	432,695 40
*Premiums on existing policies in course of transmission and collection, (estimated reserve on these policies $505,000 included in liabilities).....	125,027 15
Agents' balances.....	36,154 19
Accrued interest on investments to January 1, 1877.....	300,558 68—32,730,898 20

*A detailed schedule of these items will accompany the usual annual report filed with the Insurance Department of the State of New York.

Excess of market value of securities over cost.....	580,515 76
---	------------

CASH ASSETS, JAN. 1, 1877..... $33,311,413 96

Appropriated as follows:

Adjusted losses, due subsequent to Jan. 1, 1877.....	$314,440 98
Reported losses awaiting proof, etc.....	201,153 21
Reserved for re-insurance on existing policies; participating insurance at 4 per cent. Carlisle, net premium; non-participating at 5 per cent. Carlisle, net premium.....	29,634,461 61
Reserved for contingent liabilities to Tontine Dividend Fund, over and above a 4 per cent. reserve on existing policies of that class.....	517,504 84
Reserved for premiums paid in advance.....	17,038 32—30,684,597 96

Divisible surplus at 4 per cent.....	$2,626,816 00
--------------------------------------	----------------

Surplus, estimated by the New York State standard at 4 1-2 per cent., over $5,500,000 00

From the undivided surplus of $2,626,816 the Board of Trustees has declared a reversionary dividend available on settlement of next annual premium to participating policies proportionate to their contribution to surplus. The cash value of the reversion may be used in such settlement if the policy-holders so elect.

During the year 6,514 policies have been issued, insuring $20,062,111.

Number of policies in force January 1, 1876, 44,661.

Number of policies in force January 1, 1877, 45,421.

Amount at risk January 1, 1876.....	$126,132,119 00
-------------------------------------	------------------

Amount at risk January 1, 1877.....	127,713,473 00
-------------------------------------	----------------

TRUSTEES:

MORRIS FRANKLIN,
DANIEL S. MILLER,
ROBERT B. COLLINS,
CHARLES WRIGHT, M. D.,
J. F. SEYMOUR,
HENRY BOWERS,

DAVID DOWS,
JOHN MAIRS,
WILLIAM BARTON,
WILLIAM A. BOOTH,
C. R. BOGERT, M. D.,
EDWARD MARTIN,
WILLIAM H. BEERS.

ISAAC C. KENDALL,
WM. H. APPLETON,
LOOMIS L. WHITE,
H. B. CLAFLIN,
GEORGE A. OSGOOD,
JNO. M. FURMAN,

MORRIS FRANKLIN, President.

THEODORE M. BANTA, Cashier.

CORNELIUS R. BOGERT, M. D., CHARLES WRIGHT, M. D., Medical Examiners.

WILLIAM H. BEERS, Vice-President and Actuary.

D. ODELL, Superintendent of Agencies.

The Inquirer.

Published every Thursday, from the middle of September to the middle of July, in the Park Bank Building, 214 Broadway, New York.

To be in season for insertion the same week, communications intended for publication must be forwarded in time to reach this office not later than Tuesday. No attention is paid to anonymous communications. We require the name and address of every writer, not necessarily for publication, but as guarantees of good faith.

Communications relating to the editorial department of the paper should be addressed, "Editor of the Inquirer, P. O. Box 109, New York City;" all others to "Publisher," same address.

No person is authorized to collect money or make contracts for the Inquirer, who cannot show written authority from the Publisher.

The Inquirer of course is not responsible for any opinion expressed by its advertisers.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE.

Three Dollars per year, in advance. Clergymen, Two Dollars per year. Postage, Twenty Cents per year, in advance. Remittances should be made by Registered Letter or by Post-Office Money Order, or Draft on New York payable to Publisher of THE INQUIRER.

ADVERTISING RATES.

Six cents per agate line per week; outside page and pages next reading matter, ten cents per line. Special Notices twenty cents per line.

Discount on Five or more insertions will be given at similar rates to all parties.

Copy for Thursday's paper received until Tuesday afternoon.

Advertisements must be acceptable in every respect.

Office, PARK BANK BUILDING, 214 Broadway.

Address,

THE INQUIRER,

Box 109, New York.

Special Notices.

Protestant Leaders.

A COURSE OF LECTURES

BY

JOHN W. CHADWICK.

AT THE

Second Unitarian Church, Brooklyn,

Corner of Clinton and Congress Streets.

1876-77.

LECTURES:

VI. Murray and Universalism.

Sunday evening, March 4, 1877.

VII. Thomas Paine: His Relation to his own and later Times in Matters of Religion.

Sunday evening, April 1, 1877.

VIII. Channing and Unitarianism.

Sunday evening, April 15, 1877.

IX. Theodore Parker.

Sunday evening, May 6, 1877.

Hour of Lecture, HALF-PAST SEVEN.

Morning Service at 10:35 precisely. Vesper Service, Third Sunday Evening of each Month, with the above exceptions.

Please send me Subscriptions

FOR THE

VINELAND WEEKLY INDEPENDENT.

I am writing for it two columns each week on LIFE AND THOUGHT IN OUR TIME. These subscriptions will greatly assist my work in Southern New Jersey. $2 a year.

Address,

J. B. HARRISON,

VINELAND, New Jersey.

THE "BEST," Agents Wanted. A. H. Singer,

(33.50.)

WARRANTED. Sample by Mail. Philadelphia, Pa.

Special Notices.

An English gentleman who is about to establish an AMERICAN MANUFACTURERS' AGENCY

in England, and to undertake the representation of American Manufacturers at the Paris Exhibition of 1878, seeks an American partner with a capital of from 5,000 to 10,000 dollars. Address FIELD, care of James Littlejohn, Esq., P. O. Box 2703, New York City.

NEW YORK

Conservatory of Music.

New York Offices only at

No. 5 East 14th St., 2d door east of 5th Avenue.

(Incorporated 1865.)

This RENOWNED MUSIC SCHOOL and School of Elocution, Oratory, Modern Languages, Drawing and Painting open day and evening.

A SPECIAL TRAINING COURSE for Teachers.

TERMS:

CLASSES OF THREE PUPILS.....$10 per Quarter.

STRICTLY PRIVATE LESSONS.....15 " "

Subscription Books open from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M.

Pupils may begin at any time, the quarter commencing from dates of entrance.

THE

Childhood of the World.

A Simple Account of Man in Early Times, By EDWARD CLODD, F.R.A.S.

In Cloth, 75 cents.

Will be mailed, post free, on receipt of price. Address, Publisher INQUIRER, Box 109, New York.

A Complete File of the

NEW YORK NATION

For Sale.

Address Publisher INQUIRER, Box 109, New York.

"Sulphuret Oil of Roses."—An External Remedy, almost miraculous in its effect. By absorption it eradicates Rheumatic Pains, Neuralgia, Nervousness and Throat Diseases. Sufferers failing to give this remedy a trial do themselves positive injustice. Price, 1/2 oz., 50 cts.; 2 oz., $3.00. FLAVILLE, BRO. & CO., Proprietors, 30 Franklin St., Boston. N. B.—An Energetic Agent wanted in each Town.

COMMON SENSE
ROCKING CHAIRS.
Everybody's Favorite Rocker.

A GOOD EASY CHAIR

Is considered by many to be one of the desirable things of earth. Where one is rid of fatigue and weariness, and can bear with tedious visitors and commonplace remarks, and when left to his own reflections he finds himself amid a Society of Phantoms and Visions suited to his mind.

Those in need of such a Chair will please send stamp for Illustrated Circulars and Price List to

F. A. SINCLAIR, Mottville,

Onondaga Co., N. Y.

Be careful that the chairs are stamped with my name in full; others are imitations.

For sale by Furniture Dealers in New York and at 218 Fulton street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

McSHANE BELL FOUNDRY

Manufacture those celebrated Bells for CHURCHES, ACADEMIES, &c. Price List and Circulars sent free. HENRY McSHANE & CO., BALTIMORE, MD.

$66 a week in your own town. Terms and outfit $6 free. H. HALLETT & CO., Portland, Maine.

STEARNS & BEALE,

STATIONERS,

BLANK BOOK MANUFACTURERS,

PRINTING and LITHOGRAPHY,

147 FULTON STREET, NEW YORK.

(Between Broadway and Nassau Street)

JOEL W. STEARNS.

WM. P. BEALE.

STAINED GLASS

IN THE WORLD'S COMPETITION
AT PHILADELPHIA.

The MEDAL and DIPLOMA were awarded to

FITZPATRICK & CO.,

For the MOST ARTISTIC and Best Figure and Ornamental Church Windows, in all the various styles of this beautiful art.

Orders promptly executed. Designs, Prices, and all information on application to

FITZPATRICK & CO.,

STAPLETON, STATEN ISLAND, N. Y.

P. O. Box 62.

N.B.—THE PRIZE WINDOWS NOW FOR SALE.

GLOBE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.

PLINY FREEMAN, President.

JAS. F. BURNS, Sup't. Agents.

Nos. 345 and 347 BRQADWAY, N. Y.

Assets, Jan. 1, 1876. $4,981,573 73
Surplus to Policy-Holders. 523,652 69

All forms of Life and Endowment Policies issued.

A careful examination of the Reserve Dividend Plan of Insurance is invited. A new and peculiarly attractive feature.

Every reasonable advantage given to Policy-holders.

Premiums and Losses Paid in Cash.

No Restrictions on Travel in the United States and Europe.

Agents apply at the Home Office.

ROCHESTER COMMERCIAL

(Estab'd 1830.)

NURSERIES.

HARDY TREES and PLANTS—Per Doz., 100 and 1000. Spring Price List, FREE, includes SPECIALTIES AND NOVELTIES.

Ornamental Catalogue, illustrated, 10c.; Fruit, do., with Colored Plate, 5c. Free to customers.

Address W. S. LITTLE, Rochester, N. Y.

TO CONSUMPTIVES

Consumption, that scourge of humanity, is the great dread of the human family, in all civilized countries.

I feel confident that I am in possession of the only sure, infallible Remedy—now known to the profession—for the positive and speedy cure of that dread disease, and its unwelcome concomitants, viz., Catarrh, Asthma, Bronchitis, Nervous Debility, &c., &c. Twenty-eight years' experience, as a busy practitioner, in the best Consumption Hospitals of the Old and New World, has taught me the value of this Medicine in the cure of all Throat and Lung Complaints.

Those suffering with consumption or any of the above maladies, by addressing me, giving symptoms, they shall be put in possession of this great boon, without charge, and shall have the benefit of my experience in thousands of cases successfully treated. Full directions for preparation and use, and all necessary advice and instructions for successful treatment at your own home, will be received by you by return mail, free of charge, by addressing

DR. JOHN S. BURNETT,

167 Jefferson Street,

LOUISVILLE, KY.

HOWARD INSURANCE COMPANY,

OF NEW YORK.—OFFICE NO 66 WALL STREET.
Cash Capital $500,000.—Chartered 1825.
This Company insures property against loss or Damage by Fire and the risks of Inland Navigation and Transportation, on the most favorable terms.

SAM'L T. SKIDMORE, President.
HENRY A. OAKLEY, Vice-President.
DIRECTORS:
SAMUEL T. SKIDMORE, HEWLETT SCUDDER,
JOHN H. SWIFT, CHARLES H. CLAYTON,
JOHN L. RICE, GEORGE W. TALBOT,
JAMES R. TAYLOR, FREDERICK STURGES,
HENRY J. SCUDDER, JOHN J. WHITE,
CHARLES MALL, R. LENOX BELNAP,
HENRY I. BARREY, JAMES C. CARTER,
WILLIAM H. WINNER, EDMUND PENFOLD,
ALEXANDER MAITLAND.
CHARLES A. HULL, Secretary.
RICHARD W. CLARK, Asst. Sec'y.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

For Scrofula, and all scrofulous diseases, Erysipelas, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Eruptions and Eruptive diseases of the skin, Ulcerations of the Liver, Stomach, Kidneys, Lungs, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Blotches, Tumors, Tetter, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Ulcers, Sores, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Pain in the Bones, Side and Head, Female Weakness, Sterility, Leucorrhoea, arising from internal ulceration, and Uterine disease, Syphilitic and Mercurial diseases, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, General Debility, and for Purifying the Blood.

This Sarsaparilla is a combination of vegetable alteratives—Stillingia, Mandrake, Yellow Dock—with the Iodides of Potassium and Iron, and is the most efficacious medicine yet known for the diseases it is intended to cure.

Its ingredients are so skillfully combined, that the full alterative effect of each is assured, and while it is so mild as to be harmless even to children, it is still so effectual as to purge out from the system those impurities and corruptions which develop into loathsome disease.

The reputation it enjoys is derived from its cures, and the confidence which prominent physicians all over the country repose in it, prove their experience of its usefulness.

Certificates attesting its virtues have accumulated, and are constantly being received, and as many of these cases are publicly known, they furnish convincing evidence of the superiority of this Sarsaparilla over every other alterative medicine. So generally is its superiority to any other medicine known, that we need do no more than to assure the public that the best qualities it has ever possessed are strictly maintained.

PREPARED BY
Dr. J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass.,
Practical and Analytical Chemists.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

BABBITT'S TOILET SOAP.

Unrivalled for the toilet and the bath. No artificial and deceptive odors to cover common and deleterious ingredients. After years of scientific experiment the manufacturer of Babbitt's Best Soap has perfected and now offers to the public THE FINEST TOILET SOAP in the World. Only the purest vegetable oils used in its manufacture.

For Use in the Nursery it has No Equal. Worth ten times its cost to every mother and family in Christendom. Sample box containing 6 cakes of 6 ozs. each, sent free to any address on receipt of 15 cents.
Address B. T. Babbitt, New York City.
For Sale by all Druggists.

LAMAR INSURANCE COMPANY,

OF NEW YORK.
Broadway, cor. John Street.
Capital, - - $200,000.

ASSETS, JANUARY 1, 1877.
Cash on hand and in Bank. . . . $10,414 77
U. S. Bonds, market value. . . . 300,232 50
Loans on Call, Good Stocks Collateral. 13,280 00
Bonds and Mortgages on Brick Dwell- ings. . . . 56,400 00
Bills Receivable for Inland Prem's. . . 2,465 94
Premiums in course of collection. . . 8,890 43
New York Bank Stocks market value . 19,725 00
$411,268 64
Losses unadjusted estimated at $10,100 00

ISAAC R. ST. JOHN, President.
A. R. FROTHINGHAM, Vice Pres't.
WM. R. MACDIARMID, Sec'y.

HOME Insurance Co. of New York,

Office No. 135 Broadway.
Forty-seventh Semi-Annual Statement,
Showing the condition of the Company on the first day of January, 1877.

Cash Capital $3,000,000 00
Reserve for Re-Insurance . . . 1,858,464 68
Reserve for Unpaid Losses and Dividends 243,402 24
Net Surplus 1,002,783 90
Total Assets - - - $6,104,650 82

SUMMARY OF ASSETS:
CASH IN BANKS. . . . $342,311 22
BONDS AND MORTGAGES, BEING FIRST LIEN ON REAL ESTATE WORTH $4,894,000 2,011,453 00
UNITED STATES STOCKS (MARKET VALUE) 2,517,625 00
BANK STOCKS (MARKET VALUE). . . . 286,602 50
STATE AND CITY BONDS (MARKET VALUE) 185,455 00
LOANS ON STOCKS, PAYABLE ON DEMAND (MARKET VALUE OF SECURITIES, $700,379) 519,681 35
INTEREST DUE ON 1st JANUARY, 1877. . . 72,997 65
BALANCE IN HAND OF AGENTS. . . . 123,416 65
REAL ESTATE. . . . 6,800 19
PREMIUMS DUE AND UNCOLLECTED ON POLICIES ISSUED AT THIS OFFICE. . . . 8,330 26
Total - - - - $6,104,650 82

LIABILITIES.
CLAIMS FOR LOSSES OUTSTANDING ON 1st JANUARY, 1877. . . . $242,027 24
DIVIDENDS UNPAID. . . . 1,375 00
Total, - - - - $243,402 24

CHAS. J. MARTIN, President.
J. H. WASHBURN, Secretary.

THE NEW JERSEY MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

NEWARK, NEW JERSEY.

J. H. STEDWELL, President.
C. H. BRINKERHOFF, Secretary.
J. H. CANNIFF, Cashier.

AGENTS double their money selling "Dr. Chase's Improved" ($2.00) Receipt Book." Address Dr. Chase's Printing House, Ann Arbor, Me.
$5 to $20 per day at home. Samples worth $5 free. STINSON & Co., Portland, Maine.

Made of best material, in all sizes, for Adults and Children of both sexes; expands the chest, straightens up stooped shoulders; worth ten times its cost for Children and Students. Sold by the Trade and Cleveland Shoulder Brace Co., Cleveland, Ohio. Send $1.25 and chest measure. Ask for Pratt's new Patent Brace.

ATLANTIC MUTUAL INSURANCE CO

NEW YORK,
OFFICE 51 WALL ST.
ORGANIZED 1842.

INSURES AGAINST MARINE AND INLAND NAVIGATION RISKS.

And will issue Policies making Loss payable in England.

Its Assets for the Security of its Policies are more than
TEN MILLION DOLLARS.

The profits of the Company revert to the assured, are divided annually, upon the Premiums terminated in the year, Certificates for which are issued, bearing interest until redeemed.

JOHN D. JONES, President.
CHARLES DENNIS, Vice-President.
W. H. H. MOORE, 2d Vice-President.
A. A. RAVEN, 3d Vice-President.
J. H. CHAPMAN, Secretary.

PHENIX INSURANCE COMPANY,

OF BROOKLYN, N. Y.
January 1st, 1877.

Capital. $1,000,000 00
Gross Surplus. 1,792,902 92
Gross Assets. $2,792,902 92

OFFICES:
Western Union Telegraph Building, BROADWAY, Cor. DEY St., New York.
Brooklyn Office, 12 & 14 Court St.
Brooklyn E. D. Office, 98 Broadway.

The benefits to be derived by the public from Insurance against loss by fire are so great and numerous, when compared with its trifling cost, as to render it an imperative duty on every one to avail themselves of the protection afforded by the PHENIX INSURANCE COMPANY against the destructive ravages of FIRE, which in a few moments may lay waste the fruits of a whole life of industry.

STEPHEN CROWELL, President.
PHILANDER SHAW, Vice President.
WILLIAM R. CROWELL, Secretary.
ESTABLISHED A. D. 1850.

THE MANHATTAN LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

NEW YORK,
has paid $6,500,000 Death Claims;
has paid $4,500,000 return premiums to Policy-holders; has a surplus of more than $1,500,000 over Liabilities; and a ratio of $120 Assets for every $10 Liabilities, by New York Standard of Valuation. It gives the best Insurance on the best lives at the most favorable rates.
EXAMINE THE PLANS AND RATES OF THIS COMPANY.

HENRY STOKES, C. Y. WEMPLE,
President, Vice-President.
J. L. HALSEY, S. N. STEBBINS,
Secretary, Actuary.
H. Y. WEMPLE, } Assistant Secretaries.
H. B. STOKES }

$55 - $77 a Week to Agents. $10 Outfit Free. P. O. VIOCKEY Augusta, Maine.

Miscellaneous.

MUSIC BOOKS.

VOCAL.

WORLD OF SONG. — GEMS OF ENGLISH SONG.
 WREATH OF GEMS. — GEMS OF SCOTTISH SONG.
 SHOWER OF PEARLS. — GEMS OF GERMAN SONG.
 OPERATIC PEARLS. — GEMS OF SACRED SONG.
 SILVER WREATH. — MOORE'S IRISH MELODIES.

Quite unequalled Books of Bound Music, each with 200 to 250 pages, Sheet Music size. Best collections of Songs, Duets; Piano or Organ accompaniment.

INSTRUMENTAL.

GEMS OF STRAUSS — GEMS OF THE DANCE.
